

BERKELEY, CALIFORNIA

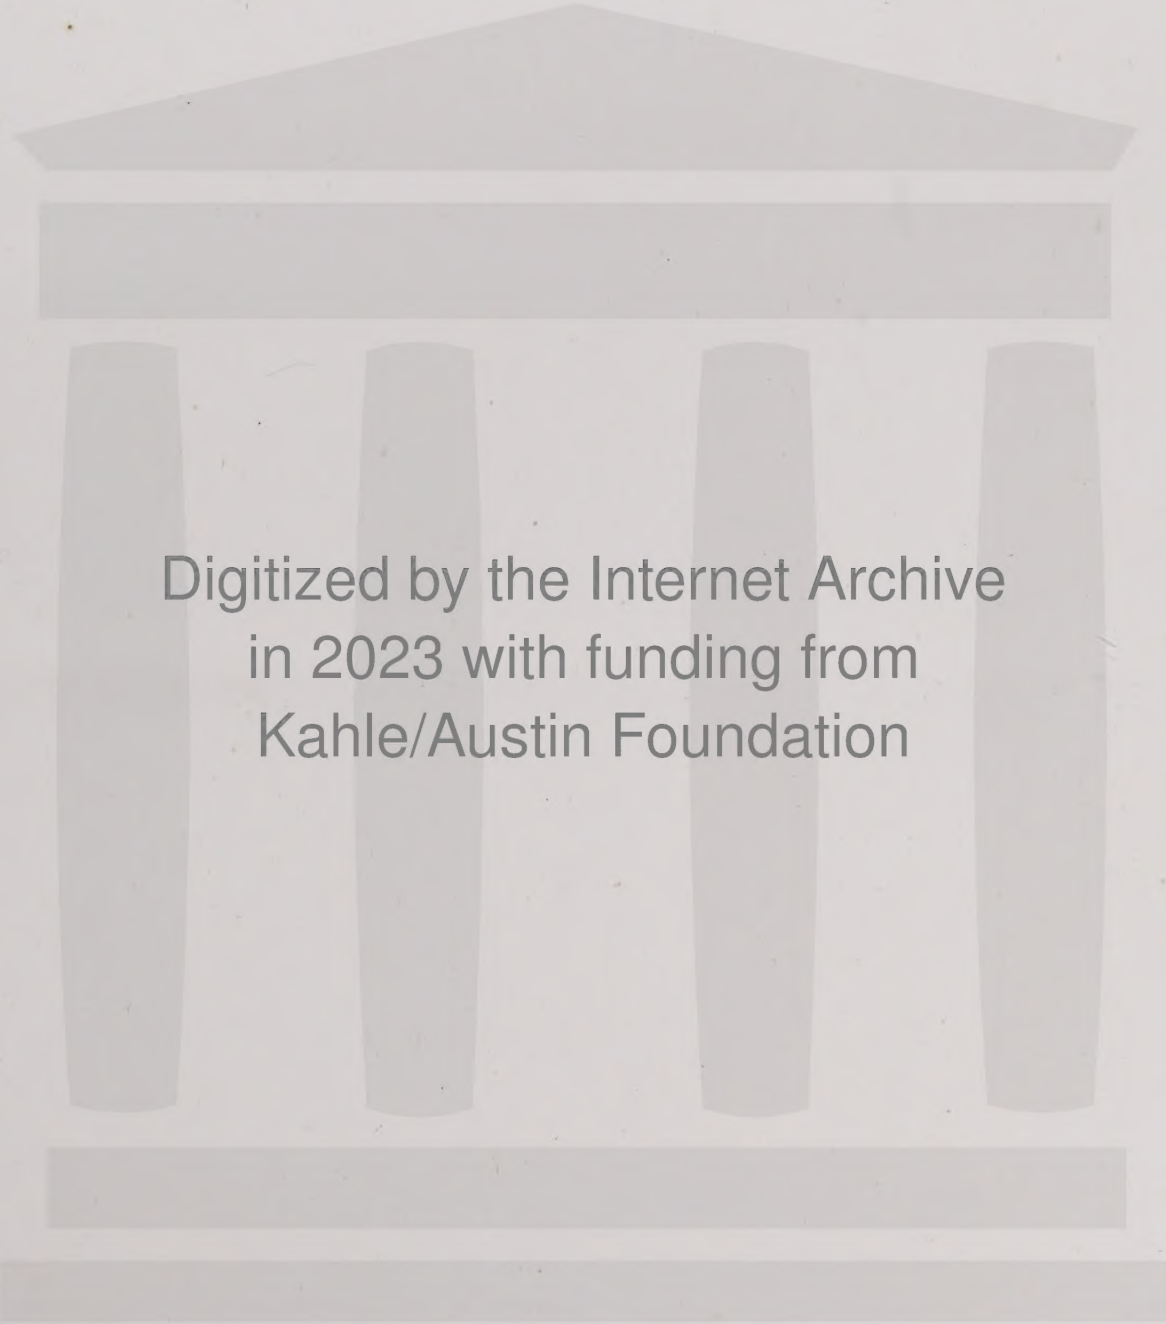

PURCHASED WITH THE INCOME OF THE FUND

GIVEN BY

FREDERICK MADGE

1820 - 1908

SON OF THE REV. THOS. MADGE, 1786-1870, OF
ESSEX STREET CHAPEL, LONDON, 1825-1859

Digitized by the Internet Archive in 2023 with funding from Kahle/Austin Foundation

THE UNITARIAN HERALD:

EDITED BY
REV. JAMES BLACK, M.A.,
AND
REV. S. FLETCHER WILLIAMS.

JANUARY TO DECEMBER, 1878.

MANCHESTER:
"UNITARIAN HERALD" OFFICE, 20, CANNON STREET.

UNITARIAN HERALD:

MANCHESTER:
PRINTED AT THE "UNITARIAN HERALD" OFFICE, 20, CANNON STREET.

REV. S. FLETCHER WILLIAMS

JANUARY TO DECEMBER, 1878

UNITARIAN HERALD OFFICE, 20, CANNON STREET

X288.41

u1

v.18

INDEX.

LEADING ARTICLES.

	PAGE.
Mr. Spurgeon on Modern Infidelity	4
Simplicity "in Excess"	4
Nonconformists and the War	4
Heresy in the "S. P. C. K."	4
Professor Challis and Eternal Punishment	5
The Curate in Charge	5
Last Words on Heresy	5
Death of the King of Italy	12
Theological Literature in 1877	12
Dr. Martineau on Religious Fellowship	12
Dr. Parker's Rhetoric	12
The Larger Hope	20
The Decline of Bibliolatry	20
More Orthodox Concessions	20
Annual Meetings of the M. N. C. and H. M. B.	28
Religious Census in Spain	28
Left to the Liberals	28
A Plain Word to Mutual Improvers	28
To the Laity	40
Free Teaching and Free Learning in Theology	48
The Ecclesiastical crisis in Berlin	48
Pius the Ninth	56
The Succession to the Papedom	56
The Prussian Ultramontanes and Education	56
Pope-Making	68
Going on to Rome	76
The Seen and the Unseen	84
Disestablishment in Scotland	84
University Reform	84
The Brahmo Somaj	85
Brooke Herford's Church	92
Conditional Immortality	100
Working Men's Clubs	108
Are Storms Brewing?	116
The Leicester Conference Principle in America	116
The Church of England and Future Punishment	116
The Right of Private Judgment	124
John Wesley's Liberalism	124
Virchow on Scientific Dogmatism	132
Heresy made Easy	132
The Marriage at Cuch Behar	132
Mr. Bright among the Sunday School Teachers	140
Dr. Arnold on Eternal Punishment	140
Cassandra to the Teachers	150
A Scottish Minister on Hell	158
The Congregational Union	166
Unitarians and Religious Liberty	166
The United Presbyterian Synod	174
The Duke of Westminster and Dissenters	175
Voltaire and Joan of Arc	175
Lord Roseberry and the Sunday Society	175
The Brahmo Marriage	175
Women and London University	175
Convocation in a Flutter	182
To our Readers	192
Canon Ryle's Discovery	192
Ecclesiastical Notes from Germany	192
Education in Tasmania	193
The Sunday Question in Australia	193
The British and Foreign Unitarian Association	204
The Pope's Liberal Policy	204
Principal Tulloch: Fancy and Fact	204
The Free Church Assembly	204
The French Reactionaries	205
Explorations in Midian	216
Liberal Triumph in Belgium	216
Memoirs of a Disciple of the Lord	216
The Provincial Assembly	288
Nonsubscription in the House of its Friends	288
Past and Future	288
Government and the Principality	288
Irish Intermediate Education	288
Anniversaries and After	288
Disestablishment in Scotland	288
The Duke of Richmond and Free Theological Teaching	288
Dr. Vance Smith on the Second Advent Question and the Church	288
Churches by the Sea	288
A Jewish Conference	288
The Purpose of Religion	288
God's Living Church	288
The Future Punishment Question	288
The Basis of Fellowship	288
Religious Communion	288
London out of Church	288
Professor Vance Smith on the Methodist Creed	288
International Arbitration	288
A Ministry of Fifty Years	288
The Hibbert Lectureship	288
Education in Holland	288
Miss Nightingale on the People of India	288
The Kirk in the Highlands	288
An Anti-Disestablishment Movement	288
Mr. McAlester on Nonsubscription	288
Sin Makes Hell	288
The Attitude of Receptiveness	288
Unitarianism in Milan	288
What is Christianity	288
The Rev. Robert Rodolph Suffield, on the Roman Church	288
The Wesleyans and Religious Liberty	288
A Religion for the People	288
Change and Growth	288
The Religion of the Future	288
Anthropology and Religion	288
The Aims and Means of Jesus	288
Middle Class Schools	288
The Protestant Verein	288
The Nottingham Debate	288
Mr. Gaskell's Jubilee	288
The Church Congress	288
The Saratoga Conference	288
Commemoration of Mr. Gaskell's Fifty Years' Ministry	288
The Liturgy Question	288
Orthodox Alarm	288
Mr. Knapton's Farewell	288
Independent Bondage	288
Orthodox Generosity	288
The "Quarterly Review" on Protestantism	288
Eternal Punishment in America	288
"Ideal Substitutes for God"	288
Mr. Freckleton at Bradford	288
Theologians and their Besetting Sin	288
Reaction in India	288
Duty of Churches in Times of Depression	288
Progress	288
True Worship	288
Christmas Day	288
Letter and Spirit	288
The "Jewish World" on Congregationalism and Unitarianism	288

LITERARY AND DOCTRINAL.

	PAGE.
American Notes	2, 10, 18, 26, 38, 48, 54, 66, 74, 98, 122, 148, 189, 200, 212, 276, 284, 300, 308, 325, 344, 352, 375, 393, 412, 420, 428, 436, 444
Atheism, The Natural History of	47
Abbey Lydiat	75
"A Layman's," Healthy Word	202
Amusements, "Week Evening	333, 345
Authorised Version, Revision of	385
Bishop Fraser's Confessions	48
Burials Question, The, Dean Stanley on	67
Bible, The, Dr. Vance Smith on	86
Blackpool Sunday Observance	332
British and Foreign Bible Society	397
Books and Authors	3, 10, 18, 26, 45, 54, 74, 86, 106, 114, 122, 130, 138, 156, 164, 172, 183, 189, 201, 249, 268, 278, 284, 292, 301, 346, 355, 372, 384, 392, 412, 420, 428, 437, 444
Brahmo Somaj, The Sadharan	460
Christ, Canon Farrar's Life of	447
College, The New Unitarian	27
Communion Service, The	61, 68, 98, 133, 175
"Contemporary Review," The, on the Gaskell Commemoration Meeting	447
Chicago, A Visit to	224
Chicago, Lessons from	269
Carlyle, Thomas, on Prayer	293
Church, A Unitarian	353
Church, The Trials of a State	357
Conference, The Saratoga	373
Church Extension in Large Towns	394
Conversions To and From Unitarianism	404
Chapter, A Secular	445
Doing and Saying	2, 10, 18, 26, 38, 46, 54, 66, 74, 82, 90, 106, 114, 122, 130, 148, 156, 172, 180, 188, 200, 212, 224, 236, 248, 260, 268, 276, 284, 292, 300, 308, 316, 324, 332, 344, 352, 364, 372, 384, 392, 404, 412, 428, 436, 444
Dutch Churches and Theology	13
De Quincey on the Atonement	202
Dutch Protestant Bond, The	431
Examinations in Sunday Schools	123
Election, An Episcopal	327
Faith, The Congregationalists Declaration of	164
Fellowship, The Basis of Religious	272
Giffell, Rev. Wm.'s, Fiftieth Anniversary Sermon	287
Gaskell, Rev. George, Dundee, Death of	304
Great Malvern, A Sunday in	317
God, Is it Reasonable to Worship?	327
Heretics, Heresy, and Fetishism, Rev. David Macrae on	48
Hibbert Lecture, The	93, 124, 140, 151, 159, 172, 180
Jesus Christ, The Nature and Claims of	114
Jottings	236, 253, 273, 285, 293, 309, 429
Khargiz, The	55
Leicester Conference, Congregational Debate on	180
Longfield Chapel: How they Did Business Fifty Years Ago	193
Lamentations, Unitarian	327
League, Anti-Vatican	327
Mayor of Leeds, Catholic Hospitality of	431
Macrae, Mr., Moves Again	446
Mellor Rev. Wm., and "The Rock"	453
Night's, Experience A	288
Not of Right but of Grace	108
Non-Subscription, Irish, What it Means	295
Our Sunday Schools	14, 18, 46, 61, 116, 190, 215, 236, 303, 317, 345, 355, 380, 384, 395, 421, 445
Outspokenness in Religion	364
Papacy, The, in Scotland	61
Portugal teaching England	61
Prophets and their Interpreters	93
Protestanten-Verein	151
Philochristus	311
Preaching on Appropriation	319
Prince, The Darkness of	311
Pulpit, Difficulties of the	335
Putnam, Reminiscences of the late Rev. George	353
Protestantstag at Hildesheim	415, 423, 429
Religion of Jesus Christ, The	27
Resignation of a Baptist Minister	131
Revision of the English Bible	164
Romans ix., 5, Dr. Vance Smith on	332, 370
Religion in Relation to Social Difficulties	439
Scottish Notes	2, 10, 18, 26, 38, 46, 54, 66, 74, 82, 90, 106, 114, 122, 138, 156, 176, 180, 248, 268, 276, 284, 301, 316, 344, 352, 372, 385, 392, 412, 420, 428, 436, 444
Sunday School Extension	3
Sunday Schools, Sir Chas. Read on	150
Service, The Communion	61
Singing, Congregational	61
Spirit of War and the Spirit of Christ	82
South Africa: Religion in Natal	193
Spurgeon, Mr., and his Congregation	319
Seashore, The Gospel at	525
Seaside, Stray Thoughts by the	332
Service, The Devotional	448
Thoughts on Religion	11, 55, 66, 75, 189, 201, 260, 284, 293, 308, 319, 324, 395, 412
Teachers, The Sunday School	47
Theologians Running Riot	150
Taste: Fitness of Words to Music	355
University of London	14, 347
Unitarianism, The Mission of	27, 107
University Reform	229
Unitarianism and Evangelical Christianity	397
View, A Layman's, on Mr. Knapton's Secession	413
Worship, Dr. Martineau on the Limits of	12
Washburn, Francis T.	131
Women as Students	142
What to Teach Our Daughters	437
Women, Education of	462
TALES AND SKETCHES.
Because She Loved Him	271
Confusion in the Workshop	62
Curiosities	11, 193, 202, 215, 226, 237, 261, 312, 321, 347, 350
Child, Power of a Little	394
Coffer, God's	367
Curtius	455
Christmas Gift, The First	461
Christmas Gifts	320
Dream, The German Student's	261
Eccentricities of Eminent Men	440, 448
Emperor's Error, The	354
Foxes, The Little	393
Fishing, I go a	311
Home, No Place Like	429
Independence and Authority	195
Little Nellie	195
Little Ones, The	215
Little Leaf, The	237
Legs, Lending a Pair of	215
Mahomedan, Hard to Convert a	215

	PAGE.
Norman Macleod at his Best	226
Pin Feathers and Quills	226
Rhubarb Pie Plan, The	285
Singing with the Understanding	202
Smother the Sparks	227
Story, The Workhouse Woman's	296
Smiles, The Value of	296
Sorry is not Enough	347
Silence, Eloquent	449
Trudie's Frock	202
Wise Men, Walking with	249
Willing to Live Honestly	354

POETRY.

Alone	132
Abandon	249
Advice	262
Adversity, Uses of	326
Applebloom and Apple	396
Alice, Princess of Great Britain	462
Blind, The, Who Will Not See	150
Battlefield, The	182
Best that I can, The	430
Baby	438
Charity	62
Childhood	202
Charlie's Story	260
Christmas, 1878	454
Dead, The Fellowship of the	108
Day, The Perfect	310
Discovery	446
Dismissal, The Old Pastor's	271
Epitaphs	386
Earth's Brighter Day	92
Faith and Works	422
Faith, The Coming	56
God, The Thought of	295
Growing Old Gracefully	59
Happy Fields of Summer	414
Hymn, Children's	448
Hope on, Hope Ever	40
Inspiration	100
Is it So?	116, 318
In Memoriam	4
January 1st, 1878	183
John, Earl Russell	336
Kiss and Make it Well Again	20
Light and Shadow	215
Light and Air v. Drugs	228
Little by Little	286
Life, The True Account of	393
Lines by an Invalid	434
Light, Into the	311
Meadow Talk	406
Mountaineer's Prayer	76
Only	192
Other Men Labour	166
Patience	174
Pyramids, The	294
Prayer for Peace, The Radical's	405
Quiet Work	85
Query	314
Rogues, Two Little	405
Religion	252
Saints, Old	54
Song, A Boy's	158
Song, The Shepherd's Sabbath	204
Sowing and Reaping	195
Spring, Life Laden	304
Stanzas	237
Sphinx, The Modern	28
Summer, Happy Fields of	376
Swallow, The	120
Things for which I Long	240
Things Beautiful	302
Time, 'Tis Wise in Man to Make a Note of	320
To-day	48
Touchstone, The	278
Truth and Duty	124
Two and One	75
Unum, E Pluribus	270
Unbelief	271
War	336
Whittier	356
What we Might Do
Wouldn't Water Lily, A Wait and See

CORRESPONDENCE.

Authority in Science and Theology	52
Anniversary Music, Interchange of	186
Appeal, An	434
Appeal, Bosnian	442
Bibles of Humanity, The	24, 35
Belfast Unitarian Society and Rev. Wm. Napier	87, 112
Brahmo Somaj	96
Bradford Congregation, The	426
Books for Sunday Schools	442
Church Livings	24
Chapel, A City Unitarian	64, 72
Carter Lane Chapel	154
Commission Street Bazaar	178
Crewkerne Sunday School	198
Colyton: Its Population and Schools	234, 266, 410
Correction, A	274
Colne: The New Free Christian Church	314, 322
Cardiff	362
Confession of Faith, The	402
Church, Free Christian, Whitchurch	410
Census, Welsh Unitarian	16, 24, 35
Distress in South Wales, The	178
Devonport Sunday School	382
Doctrinal Teaching, The Value of	44
Explanation, An	198, 321, 434
Ejection, The Lynn	64, 128
Explanation, An	72, 80
Fund, The Bosnian Fugitives' Relief	282, 290
Fraternal Recognition	322
Fellowship, The Basis of Religious	298
Faith and Natural Laws	170
Grave Side, The, Christian Intercourse at	350, 362
Huddersfield Musical Services	350
Hospitality, Unitarian	450
Irish Non-Subscribing Association	178, 274
Impostor, An	52
King's Lynn Church Debt	290, 298
Laity, To the Latham, Rev. Ebenezer, M.D.

22042

INDEX.

	PAGE.
Liturgy Question, The	390
Manchester, A Unitarian Requirement for	44, 64
Mutual Improvement Societies	44
Musical Performances, Use of Our Chapels for	80
Missionary Fund, A Sunday School	127
Missionary Work at Horncastle	178
Mission for our Sunday Schools, A	362
New Zealand, A Minister for	382
Nottingham Debate, The	382
Offer, An	250
Papacy, The	80, 88, 96, 112
Petition, The Women's	111
Pearl's Schools	314
Pleading for Christian Help	402
Prizes for Sunday Schools	450
Roman Catholic Chapels, The Members of	72
Romans IX., 5	370
Rome, A Unitarian Church for	418
Secularism and Unitarianism	52
Schools, Our Sunday	64
Secularism and Charity	64
Singing, Congregational	72, 79, 88, 96, 104, 127, 136
Spirit of War and Spirit of Christianity	96, 104
Service of Song	154
Schools in the Western District, The	186
Suggestions for the Beard Memorial Union	266
Sunday Schools as Reading Rooms	250
Superannuation Fund, Need of a	426
Schools for our Children	434, 442, 450, 458
Theology, Is a Science of Possible	266
Theism, Mr. Cuckson on	274
Teaching, Orthodox, at Boarding Schools	410, 418
Unitarian Progress in London	282
Unitarian Attitude, The	154
Unitarianism, The Great Aim of	282
Virchow on Scientific Dogmatism	186
Visitors to Paris	266
War in the East, The	35
Wesleys and the Rev. W. Impey, The	322
Young Men's Club, The	122
Young People of Our Sunday Schools	186

OBITUARIES.

Miss Yates, of Liverpool	5
Joseph Wood, of Roshdale	6
The Rev. Patrick Cannon	6
The Rev. Thomas Elford Poynting	76, 85, 92
The Rev. John Colston	100
Jabez Robinson, of Padiham	116
The Rev. W. B. Hughes	124
The Rev. Frederick Ashton, M.A.	132, 141
Anthony Martin, of Evesham	133
The Rev. Joseph Crompton	150
The Rev. William M'Cullough	158
Samuel Broadrick, of Dukinfield	154, 158
Mr. Edward George Handkirk	240
The Rev. David Griffith	262
The Rev. Robert Gibson	277
Ellen Jane Thompson	288
Mr. Samuel Ralls, of Yeovil	295, 314
Mr. B. P. Gundy	356
Mrs. Mason, of Hull	386
Mr. Benjamin Workman	386
The Rev. J. Gow, B.A.	430
Dr. Theodore Keim	431
Baron A. Baldacci	455

INTELLIGENCE.

Accrington	6, 51, 135, 169, 220, 280, 321, 341, 433
Aberdeen	15, 43, 152, 161, 233, 264, 306, 409
Ainsworth	15, 43, 71, 164, 177, 194, 298, 321, 369, 409, 425, 458
Aberdare	270, 389, 405
Astley	36, 185, 281
Appeal, An	51
Ardwick	95, 169, 298, 425, 441
Ashford	135
American Unitarian Ministers in England	274
Adelaide	280
Allostock	369
Ballymena	341
Barnard Castle	6, 321, 329
Blackpool	15, 251, 369, 388, 458, 461
Blackley	22, 63, 119, 175, 321, 341, 389
Belfast—Ulster Unitarian Christian Association	49
1st Congregation	161
2nd Congregation	70, 110, 119, 126, 169, 303, 465
York-street	23, 170, 306, 441
Unitarian Society	134, 138, 457
Depository	66
Hopeton-street	6, 102, 135, 313, 367, 450, 458
Mountpottinger	70, 79, 91, 107, 246, 381, 401, 450
Domestic Mission	34, 170, 280, 329
Free Congregational Union	161
Non-Subscribing Association	226
Unitarian Missionary Meeting	298
Missionary Association	304
Birmingham—Church of the Messiah	38, 44, 142, 433
Old Meeting	135, 433, 437
Newhall Hill	289
Free Christian Church	6, 145, 265, 389, 418
Hurst-street Mission	15, 51, 135, 450
Lawrence-street	110, 139, 245
Protestant Dissenting Ministers	433
Bedford	169, 241, 374
British and Foreign Unitarian Association	159
Beware	70, 110, 161, 239, 329
Bolton—Bank-street	334
District Unitarian Association	23, 79, 119, 126, 133, 152
Commission-street	15, 95, 109, 126
Free Christian Church	20, 205, 217
British and Foreign Unitarian Association	450
Bootle, near Liverpool	22, 44, 69, 135, 312, 389
Brighton	77, 156, 254, 400, 456
Beard Memorial Union	94, 145, 281, 388, 389, 409
Bradford	99, 103, 110, 433
Birkenhead	103
Bristol—Lewin's Mead Domestic Mission	298
Banbridge	239
Bettws	389
Billingshurst	6, 21, 42, 67, 131, 152, 209, 265, 418
Bury	107, 289, 380
Ballyclare	126
Belper	127
Bidport	154
Broadrick, The late Samuel	155, 263, 265, 334
Burnley	342
Buxton	381
Burglary at the house of the Rev. P. H. Wicksteed	153
Carmarthen	23
Cefncoed	289
Comber	6, 95
Chowth	281, 409
Chelmsford	5, 249
Chorley	409
Crybri	6, 44, 70, 389
Congleton	110
Capel-y-Fadfa

Crewkerne	6, 434
Crediton	15
Colne	22, 70, 86, 185, 263, 361, 409, 450
Coventry	271
Cheltenham	23, 44
Crieff	42
Cwmbach	51, 197, 341
Chatham	425, 441
Choppington	450
Cambridge	79, 153, 349, 434
Cornwall	79
Croft	103, 257, 409
Crewe	126
Chester	126
Coseley	79, 149, 281
Calcutta	161
Croydon	185, 418
Colyton	221
Conference of Liberal Thinkers	225
Chaddle, Staffordshire	233
Carrikerfurgus	238
Carmarthen Presbyterian College	251
Collyer, Rev. Robert	273, 349
Cardiff	306
Chesterfield	425
Consistory of the Hungarian Unitarians	457
Cirencester	139
Dundee	6, 15, 70, 162, 233, 281, 290, 330, 341, 417
Dudley	55, 107
Derby	79, 103, 145, 279, 382, 389
Dunfermline	95, 341, 350, 361, 370
Dob Lane	110, 160, 380
Dewsbury	126, 221, 361, 369, 465
Dowls	153
Doncaster	162, 265, 274
Devonport	86, 196, 281, 290, 401
Denton	261, 350
Dorchester	290
Dukinfield	349
East Cheshire Christian Union	40, 83, 90
Elland	103
Edrata	135, 264
Edinburgh	197, 265
Exeter	306, 425, 458
Eastern Unitarian Mission	399
Free Teaching and Free Learning in Theology	50, 157
Free Religious Association, U.S.A.	63
Forfar	71
Flowerly Field	153, 441, 456
Flag	289, 345
Frenchay	393
Fretwell, Mr., at the English Club	393
Faith, The Religious Value of Unitarianism	417
Gee Cross	7, 95, 139, 281, 362
Glasgow—St. Vincent-street	135, 313, 350, 369, 453
St. Mungo-street	23
Guildford	23
Gaskell, Daniel, Memorial of	34
General Baptists	95, 348
Gorton	126, 210
General Baptist Churches	203
Gloucester	63, 95, 120, 173, 205, 350
Gellioner	257
Glossop	362, 382, 457
General Ministry and Lectureship	425
Hanley	161
Horsham	34
Halifax	7, 63, 111, 170, 369, 370
Hale	42, 102, 126, 153, 417, 458
Heywood	7, 185, 265, 341, 408
Huddersfield	51, 157, 321, 401, 409, 418
Hanley	63
Hull	74, 86, 98, 103, 164, 265, 301, 401, 413, 441
Hindley	103, 257
Home Missionary Board	234, 241, 250, 334
Hastings	313
Hibbert Scholarship	438
Ilkeston	153, 341, 450
Kendal	15, 136, 227, 234, 409, 418
Kings Lynn	23, 127, 281, 298, 350, 442, 449
Kingswood, near Birmingham	282
Kent and Sussex Unitarian Association	296
Kidderminster	390
Knutsford	426
Keighley	35, 52, 76, 104, 191, 330, 361, 370
Kirkcaldy	7, 64, 153, 282, 327, 342, 370, 402, 445
Lancaster	15, 86, 145, 215
Larne	416
Leicester	15, 51, 210, 229, 341, 401, 442, 466
Free Christian Church	63, 71, 127, 136, 221, 290, 298, 317, 350, 382, 459, 434, 450
Domestic Mission	16
Lilwyn-rhyd-owen	63, 71
Longton	240, 274
Lye	261
Lewes	298
Loughborough	7
Liverpool—District Missionary Association	22
Hope-street	51, 246, 361
Sunday School Union	7, 103, 163, 210, 450
Renshaw-street	51, 63, 95, 221, 234, 370, 409, 434, 458
Kirkdale	51, 71, 79
Hospital Sunday	33, 34
Hamilton Road	7, 16, 34, 44, 63, 136, 145, 306, 381, 390
Wm. Rathbone	136
Beaufort-street	34, 39, 49, 69, 153, 177, 210, 265, 296, 298, 362
Domestic Mission	145, 170, 182
North End Mission	7, 14, 107, 127, 313, 370
London—Sunday School Association	177, 212
Unity Church	15, 185
Bible Reading Societies	265
Notting Hill, The Mall	162, 177
Carter Lane	7, 108, 321
Stamford-street	153, 390
Auxiliary Sunday School Association	246, 424, 432
Free Christian Church, Kentish Town	71, 95, 127, 145, 162, 210, 257, 265, 274, 297, 298, 341, 401
Rev. H. Haweis	177
Domestic Mission	409
Welcome to Mrs. Soule	289
Brixton	234
Newington Green	426
Avondale Road	23, 103, 290
Stratford	35, 63
Unitarianism and the People	409
Peckham	51
Stepney	103
District Unitarian Society	78, 119, 159, 176, 241, 374
Lydgate	7, 119, 197, 234, 389
Leeds—Mill Hill	63, 95, 127, 170, 282, 417, 426, 442, 450
Hunslet	51, 153, 177, 239, 409
Holbeck	368
Milton	19, 170, 362
Ministerial Appointments	14, 39, 70, 79, 119, 135, 139, 170, 181, 209, 233, 251, 264, 289, 313, 317, 329, 341, 409, 425, 441, 450
Manchester New College	29, 227, 243, 405
Midland Christian Union, The	94, 101, 289, 385
Mansfield	258, 362, 424
Middlesborough	7, 50, 177, 181, 410

Manchester—Cross-street Chapel	136, 281, 341, 466
Rev. Wm. Gaskell	362
District Sunday School Association	125, 143
Strangeways	71, 79, 127, 234, 330, 442
Memorial Hall	189
Upper Brook-street Chapel	7, 370
Miles Platting	23, 51, 119, 153, 162, 390, 466
Domestic Mission	117, 185, 457
Embsen-street	71, 265, 281, 313, 389, 417, 441, 450, 458
Distribution of Prizes	409
Home Missionary Board	29, 120, 221
Sunday School Union	34, 71, 119, 170, 209, 458, 257, 350, 390, 426, 433
District Unitarian Association	109
Lower Mosley-street Schools	111, 177, 362, 381
Mottram	71, 103, 170, 265, 424
Mossley	44, 127, 145, 258, 328, 350, 382, 426, 433
Middleton	51, 145, 153, 368, 461
Music in our Churches	86
Maidstone	86, 306, 413
Merthyr Tydfil	103, 111, 282
Moneys	111, 133, 265
Melbourne, Australia	136
Meltonhamstead	153, 364
Midland Unitarian Sunday Schools	167
Missionary Conference, The	244, 254
Madras	330
Monthly Meeting of Protestant Dissenting Ministers	340, 449
Ministerial Removals	389
Ministerial Resignation	401, 417
Ministers' Benevolent Society	405
Municipal Government in Japan	405
Monter	410
North Midland Sunday School Association	134, 138
North Cheshire Sunday School Union	34, 390
Norwich	16, 75, 153, 186, 298, 306, 342
Nottingham—High Pavement	23, 170, 178, 265, 387
Christ Church	426, 442
Newcastle-on-Tyne	51, 71, 86, 148, 162, 179, 210, 258, 390, 418
Northumberland and Durham Unitarian Association	91, 375
Newry	95, 197, 298, 342, 442
Newark	163, 176, 282, 390, 426
Newchurch	258
Newcastle (Staffordshire)	313
Nottingham Debate, The	337, 347, 357
New Zealand	382
North Midland Presbyterian and Unitarian Association	387
Northumberland and Durham Sunday School Association	442
Oldham	23, 27, 79, 95, 136, 157, 167, 177, 306, 362, 410, 450
Over Darwen	29, 104, 185, 306, 360, 442
Oxton	87
Oxford	146
Oakmoor	164
Open Religious Communion	465
Oadby	38, 76, 399, 410, 450
Paisley	10, 194, 390
Pepperhill	7, 186, 313, 341, 418, 432, 442
Pendleton	63, 95, 120, 173, 205, 350
Portsmouth—St. Thomas-street	63, 127, 153
High-street	342
Preston	71, 75, 153, 215, 370, 410, 458
Perth	95
Propagandist Lecturing	145
Plymouth	162
Potteries, The	191
Provincial Assembly, The	220, 231, 265
Pudsey	306
Padiham	350, 390, 458
Rademore	425
Rawtenstall	16, 79, 87, 127, 170, 258, 442
Reading	34, 111, 170, 274, 321, 350, 442, 447, 466
Ringwood	7
Rochdale—Blackwater-street	136, 362
Clover-street	7, 24
Rivington	16, 107, 186
Rotherham	16, 149, 162, 246, 269, 426
Saffron Walden	23, 146, 246, 290, 330
Sale	340
Scourbridge	104, 340, 350
Scottish Unitarian Christian Association	14
Sheffield	35, 52, 76, 104, 191, 330, 361, 370
South Shields	7, 64, 153, 282, 327, 342, 370, 402, 445
Southport	71
Stockport	79

The Unitarian Herald.

EDITED BY

REV. JAMES BLACK, M.A., & REV. S. FLETCHER WILLIAMS.

VOL. XVIII.—871.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 4, 1878.

PRICE 1d.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE.
Doings and Sayings	2
Scottish Notes	2
American Notes	2
Books and Authors	3
Sunday School Extension	3
Oldham: Farewell to the Rev. A. Chalmers	3
January 1st, 1878	4
Mr. Spurgeon on Modern Infidelity	4
Nonconformists and the War	4
Simplicity "In Excelsis"	4
Heresy in the S. P. C. K.	4
Professor Clifford and Eternal Punishment	5
The Curate in Charge	5
Last Words on Heresy	5
Miss Yates, Liverpool	5
Joseph Wood, Esq., Rochdale	6
The Rev. Patrick Cannon	6
News of our Churches	6

UNITARIAN LECTURES AT BOOTLE, LIVERPOOL.

The following COURSE of FOUR LECTURES will be delivered in the Town Hall, Merton Road, Bootle, near Liverpool, by the Rev. S. FLETCHER WILLIAMS, on the under-mentioned Tuesday Evenings in January, 1878:—
Tuesday, Jan. 8th.—"What do we mean by Unitarianism?"
" " 15th.—"What think ye of Christ?"
" " 22nd.—"What is the Great Salvation?"
" " 29th.—"Have we an Infallible Faith?"

EACH LECTURE TO BEGIN AT EIGHT O'CLOCK.

WHITCHURCH: FREE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

ANNIVERSARY MEETING, Tuesday, January 8th, 1878. Chairman, W. KATHBONE, Esq., M.P. for Liverpool. Speakers: Revs. Charles Beard, B.A., Liverpool; Joseph Wood, Leicester; T. Gasquoine, B.A., Oswestry; and R. C. Page, of Pontypool.

LIVERPOOL DISTRICT MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION.—The ANNUAL MEETING will be held in the Portland-street Church, Southport, on Thursday next, the 10th inst. Chair to be taken at seven o'clock by the President, the Rev. CHAS. BEARD, B.A.

MANCHESTER NEW COLLEGE, LONDON.

Notice is hereby given, that the ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING of Trustees, for the election of officers, and general business, will be held in Cross-street Chapel room, Manchester, on Thursday, the 17th January, 1878, at one o'clock precisely.
R. D. DARBISHIRE, } Secretaries.
CHARLES BEARD, }

LITTLE PORTLAND-STREET CHAPEL.

In consequence of the indisposition of the Rev. P. H. Wicksteed, M.A., the MORNING LECTURE WILL BE OMITTED on Sunday next, and the Sermon for Children, previously announced, will be Postponed. Service (including the Communion) will be conducted as usual at 11.15.

FREE-TRADE HALL MEETING of British and Foreign Unitarian Association.—Friends who have not yet sent in their PROMISES of NEW or ADDITIONAL SUBSCRIPTIONS or DONATIONS will oblige by forwarding them, as early as convenient, to Mr. HARRY RAWSON, local treasurer, Market-street, Manchester.

FREE PROTESTANT CHURCH, CAPE TOWN.

The members of the above Church have resolved to erect a Church of their own, after having for more than ten years assembled in a Public Hall. But being few in number and limited in means they are unable to do so without external aid. They appeal therefore to all who espouse the cause of free thought in theological matters, to all who wish to see a religion gain ground which rests not on miracles, not on baseless assumptions, not on antiquated traditions, but on scientific facts and ascertained truths, a religion which satisfies the human intellect no less than the human heart.

They who feel disposed to aid a Church which demands no confession of faith from its members, but declares only its conviction that true religion consists in love to God and love to man, are requested to send their contributions to the Rev. O. VOYSEY, Camden House, Dulwich, S.E.

STOURBRIDGE.—SUNDAY EVENING LECTURES

DATE.	LECTURER.	SUBJECT.
1878.
Jan. 13.—Geo. St. Clair, Esq., of Birmingham.		Agnosticism.
Jan. 20.—Rev. John Gordon, of Kenilworth.		Universal Redemption.
Jan. 27.—William Cochrane, of Netherland.		Personal Inquiry the Method of Forming Personal Belief.
Feb. 3.—W. E. Mellone, of Kidderminster.		Liberal Religion—What is it?
Feb. 10.—John Cuckson, of Birmingham.		Modern Materialism in its Relation to Religious Thought.
Feb. 17.—M. Gibson of Dudley.		The Name Emanuel (God with us) as applied to Christ.
Feb. 24.—T. B. Broadrick, of The Lyce.		The World Waiting for the Human Jesus.
Mar. 3.—D. Maginnis, of Stourbridge.		The Mythology of the Old Testament.
Mar. 10.—Charles Clarke, of Birmingham.		Man's Life on Earth; its Divine Purpose and End.
Mar. 17.—H. W. Crosskey, of Birmingham.		Modern Scientific Discoveries: How do they affect our Religion?

SERVICE WILL COMMENCE AT HALF PAST SIX O'CLOCK.

The attendance of Inquirers after Religious Truth, especially such as are unconnected with any church, is earnestly requested.
All Pews Free to Visitors.

A LADY residing in Yorkshire wishes to place her Two Girls, aged 11 and 9 years respectively, at a School where health and comfort are considered of primary importance.—Address, W. D. C., Unitarian Herald Office.

WANTED, an ORGANIST, for the First Presbyterian Church, Banbridge, Ireland; salary £40 per annum.—Apply to Hugh Glass, solicitor, Banbridge, Ireland.

THE Principal of a Ladies' School is desirous of meeting with a GOVERNESS thoroughly competent to teach French.—Address A. B., Unitarian Herald Office, Market-street, Manchester.

GOVERNESS.—SITUATION WANTED by a Young Lady (certificated): acquirements, English (thorough), French, music, and drawing: London or neighbourhood preferred.—Address R. H. G., 35, Eastlake Road, Cold Harbour Lane, London, S.E.

TO PARENTS AND GUARDIANS.—John Wild (successor to Louis Liebold) has a VACANCY for a Well-Educated Youth, about 16, as a PUPIL to the business of a Chemist and Druggist. Unusual facilities will be given for attending lectures, &c., to qualify for the respective examinations.—225, Oxford-street, Manchester.

HOLLY BANK SCHOOL, Birkdale, Southport, will RE-OPEN on Wednesday, January 23rd.
B. TEMPLAR, Principal.

BRIDPORT.—The Rev. JOHN DAVIES, M.A., Educates Six Pupils as Boarders in his house. Terms moderate. TWO VACANCIES.

SEASIDE EDUCATION FOR GIRLS DYSART HOUSE, CLEVEDON.—Miss E. MARTIN'S pupils will ASSEMBLE on Tuesday, January 22nd.

SOUTHPORT.—BOARDING SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.—Miss CURTIS will RE-OPEN her School Jan. 23rd, 1878. Prospectus on application.—Westbourne, Grosvenor Road, Birkdale.

KNUTSFORD.—MISS ARDERN'S Boarding-School for Girls will RE-OPEN after the Christmas holidays on January 21st. Terms and references will be sent on application.

KINDER GARTEN AND PESTALOZZIAN SCHOOL.—Miss LEWIN receives several Little Boys and Girls as Boarders. The next Quarter will begin January 22nd.—Shakespeare-street, Nottingham.

EDUCATION.—BATH.—Mrs. JEFFERY receives as BOARDERS Girls attending the Classes of the Bath High School. The NEXT TERM will COMMENCE January 22nd, 1878.—Address Mrs. JEFFERY, 9, Norfolk Crescent, Bath.

LANCASTER.—The Rev. D. DAVIES, B.A., will RE-OPEN School on Friday, January the 25th. A few VACANCIES either for juniors or seniors to join in preparation for the matriculation examination of the London University in 1879. Prospectus on application. Present address, "To the care of Mrs. Davis, Almswood, Evesham."

BROOK HOUSE, KNUTSFORD, CHESHIRE.—BOARDING SCHOOL for GIRLS, conducted by Mrs. FRANK SHAWCROSS, assisted by Resident English and Foreign Governesses. Teachers of eminence attend for instruction in Music, Singing, Harmony, Drawing, Dancing, &c. Prospectus and references forwarded on application. The NEXT TERM begins January 17.

MOUNT VERNON HIGH SCHOOL.

NOTTINGHAM.—Established 1864.
Mr. EDWIN SMITH, M.A., with competent assistance, thoroughly prepares Boys for College, the University Local Examinations, or for Business. For prospectus address Sandy Knoll, Forest Road, Nottingham.—SCHOOL RE-OPENS January 14th, 1878.

YORK: 26, HIGH PETER GATE.—Miss AMY HERRING begs to announce that she has OPENED, at the above address, a SCHOOL for the instruction of Young Ladies in all branches, comprising a first-class education with liberal views. Reference kindly permitted by the following:—Dr. G. Vance Smith, The Parade, Carnarthen; the Rev. C. Welbeloved, 38, Monkgate, York; Miss Swaine, 1, The Crescent, York.—Terms on application.

Pupils are prepared for the University Examinations, several having passed most successfully.—NEXT TERM commences January 14th.

NO. 1, ENVILLE VILLAS, STOURBRIDGE.

MIDDLE-CLASS GIRLS' SCHOOL, conducted by Miss MORGAN. There will be VACANCIES for TWO BOARDERS after the Christmas holidays. It is Miss Morgan's aim to provide her pupils with a comfortable and happy home, while supplying them with the intellectual advantages which are usually only to be obtained in the best high schools or colleges. Professors or Governesses attend for Arithmetic, Music (Vocal and Instrumental), Latin, French, Drawing, Dancing, and Calisthenics, and Plain Sewing. Terms, 40 guineas per annum. Unexceptionable references.

CHEAP ISSUE.—Paper 6d., post 7d., direct A. Hood, Devonport. "The Life and Teaching of Jesus Christ."

UNITARIAN MAGAZINE, Edited by FRANK W. WALTERS, Glasgow. Monthly, One Penny. Orders to be sent to Mr. PATERSON, 9, Pitt-street, Glasgow.

QUENDRYTH: A Legend of the Heptarchy. By EDWIN SIDNEY HARTLAND. Price 5s. London: Simpkin, Marshall and Co.

"A remarkable and beautiful drama."—Unitarian Herald.
Now Ready, 8vo. gilt edges, price 2s., post free, 2s. 2d.

A YEAR AT DRAYTON: A Story for Children. By Mrs. PAUL E. FISHER.
Charing Cross Publishing Company, Limited, 5, Friar-street, Broadway, London, E.C.

THE UNITARIAN POCKET ALMANAC and DIARY for 1878 IS NOW READY. In tuck and gilt edges, 1s., cloth, 6d. (a few without diary cloth, 6d.); paper, 4d. Orders should be sent at once to JOHN PHILLIPS, 55, Market-street, Manchester.

YOUNG DAYS (No. 25) for January, Now Ready. Price One Penny. Numerous Illustrations.

CONTENTS.—The Seasons—Ida Mayhew—Children of God—An Old Chelsea Pensioner—London Waifs—Wolf!—Hans Richter's Christmas Tree—Chinese Proverbs—The Giant "Can't help it"—Puzzles—A Charade for January.

Published by the Sunday School Association, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, London, W.C.

THE THEOLOGICAL REVIEW: a Quarterly Journal of Religious Thought and Life. Edited by CHARLES BEARD, B.A. Price 2s. 6d. Ten Shillings per annum, post free.

JANUARY, 1878.

1. On the Clementine Homilies. By G. P. Gould, M.A.
2. The Christianity of Christ. By J. Page Hopps.
3. The Origin of Legend in the Lives of the Buddha. By T. W. Rhys Davids.
4. Matthew Arnold as a Religious Teacher. By William Binns.
5. Renan on the Origin of the Gospels. By William Sanday, M.A.
6. Volition and Attention. By H. S. Solly, M.A.
7. The Ecclesiastical Crisis in Berlin. By Andrew Chalmers.
8. Summary of Ecclesiastical Events.
9. Notices of Books.

Williams and Norgate, 14, Henrietta-street, Covent Garden, London; and 20, South Frederick-street, Edinburgh.

CHRISTMAS AND NEW YEAR'S GIFTS.

YOUNG DAYS.

Vol. II. Profusely Illustrated. Price 1s. 6d.

PHIL'S MISTAKE.

By BEATRICE A. JOURDAN. With Illustrations by Miss M. E. EDWARDS. Price 1s. 6d.; gilt, 2s.

ROSY'S THREE HOMES.

By Mrs. HERBERT MARTIN. Frontispiece by Miss M. E. EDWARDS. Price 1s. 6d.; gilt, 2s.

THE DAISY ROOT.

By the same Author. With Illustrations by Miss C. PATERSON. Price 1s. 6d.; gilt, 2s.

SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, W.C.

CARDS FOR CHRISTMAS AND THE NEW YEAR.

A Packet, containing Twelve Beautifully Illustrated and Illuminated Cards, 1s. 6d.

REWARD CARDS

In packets, price 4d., 5d., 6d., 9d., 1s., 1s. 6d., and 2s. The SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, W.C.

Just published, cloth, 8s.

THE STORY OF RELIGION IN ENGLAND,

By BROOKE HERFORD.
The SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, W.C.

WORKS BY UNITARIAN AND OTHER

FREE CHRISTIAN WRITERS.

Kept in Stock or promptly procured to Order, by JOHNSON & RAWSON,

	s. d.
89, MARKET-STREET, MANCHESTER.
Dawson, George, M.A.—Sermons (just out)	6 0
Herford Brooke.—The Story of Religion in England	5 0
Dr. Channing.—Complete works	3 6
J. J. Tayler, B.A.—[Last series] Christian Aspects of Faith and Duty	7 6
J. J. Tayler, B.A.—Retrospect of Religious Life of England	7 6
G. Dawson, M.A.—Prayers	6 0
Dr. Martineau.—Endeavours after the Christian Life	7 6
Dr. Martineau.—Hours of Thought	7 6
Robert Collyer.—The Life that Now Is, and Nature and Life (1 volume)	4 0
Blanco White.—Heresy and Orthodoxy	2 0
Rev. C. Beard, B.A.—The Soul's Way to God	7 6
Theodore Parker.—Discourse on Religion	2 0
Theodore Parker.—Ten Sermons and Prayers	2 0
Theodore Parker.—Life and Writings	1 6
Dr. Vance Smith.—The Bible and Popular Theology	3 6
Dr. Vance Smith.—The Spirit and Word of Christ	2 0
Mary Carpenter.—Morning and Evening Meditations	5 0
Samuel Greg.—A Layman's Legacy	4 6
Knappert.—Religion of Israel (trans. R. A. Armstrong)	2 6
Whitworth.—Book of Natural Laws	1 6
F. W. Newman.—The Soul: its Sorrows, &c.	1 3
Phil's Mistake.—A Story for the Young. Cloth, 1s. 6d.; gilt	2 0
Rosy's Three Homes, cloth, 1s. 6d.; gilt,	2 0
Volume 4.—Bible for the Young	4 0
Volume 2.—Young Days	1 6

The Theological Review, 2s. 6d.; The Truthseeker, 3d.; Christian Freeman, 1d.; The Inquirer, 5d.; The Unitarian Herald, 1d.; The Christian Life, 2d.; The Free Word, 1d.; and all other Periodicals supplied.

1878 { DIARIES AND ALMANACKS, } 1878
CHRISTMAS & NEW YEAR'S CARDS.

LETTER-PRESS PRINTING IN ALL ITS BRANCHES.
Stationery, Account Books, and Binding.
Notepaper and Envelopes, stamped with Monogram, Crest, &c.

DOINGS AND SAYINGS.

History repeats itself. William Shakespeare has been indicted at the assizes of the Midland circuit for poaching.

A charitable lady established a home in London for women who had fallen victims to intemperance. In nine months the applications were 500, and of these 42 were from ladies of rank.

The London Turners' Company has done itself honour by receiving within its pale the venerable Dr. Moffat—the first missionary who has been a recipient of such distinctions as the civic companies can confer.

Considerable stir is made by the Milanese papers in consequence of the alleged kidnapping of Signor Capitelli, in Bologna, who had lately become a convert to the Free Protestant Church. Signor Capitelli was a young priest of marked ability.

The Rev. Donald Fraser, the Hon. and Rev. Mr. Bligh, and the Rev. William Arthur have just completed their mission of visiting the native Protestant Evangelical churches in Italy, with which they were entrusted by the Evangelical Alliance. Their report will shortly be published.

Queen's College, London, is to have a new head. This is the college for ladies in which Professor Maurice, and after him his brother-in-law, Professor Plumtre, always took so much interest. The latter now resigns his post, and is succeeded by a man of even more liberal views, Mr. Llewellyn Davies.

It may not be generally known that we are actually behind India in the matter of women's property. An Englishman living in India with his wife may give her a power of attorney to act for him in his pecuniary transactions; but, if she should come to live in England, she cannot be endowed with any such power.

Who would have supposed that Dr. McNeile would ever form a "guild?" Yet between his proposal for an association of united prayer meetings and the associations in which the Ritualists delight there is no essential difference. The ex-dean's proposal is quite as sectarian as theirs, for one of its main objects is to pray down all theological opponents.

It was stated by an authority on the question of "charities" a few days ago that one individual in every twelve in this country comes under the influence—whether good or bad—of charitable benefactions. What does this mean? It means that to every twelfth person in this realm an influence is extended, which may, if he be not otherwise moved, lower his self-respect and weaken his self-reliance.

During the past year two pupils of Newnham Hall, Cambridge, have been informally examined by the university tripos examiners—one in the papers of the mathematical tripos, and the other in those of the natural sciences tripos. The work of both was considered to have been sufficient to deserve honours, and one of the two ladies was pronounced to have reached a first-class standard.

Oxford has now two professors identified with the temperance cause. Professor Thorold Rogers is an old supporter of the Permissive Bill, and Mr. Thomas Hill Green, the newly-appointed Professor of Moral Philosophy, is chairman of the Oxford Auxiliary of the Alliance, and president of the Oxfordshire Band of Hope and Temperance Union. "Plain living and high thinking" seem to be on the increase in our most famous University.

The Rev. F. W. Holland, who has already done much valuable work in the peninsula of Mount Sinai, is contemplating a private expedition to that region, with the view of exploring and surveying some districts which are still unknown. The chief objects of his expedition will be to follow the suggested route of the Israelites from Janis to the Serbonian Lake, and thence south along the west side of the Tih plateau to Suez. Mr. Holland also proposes to explore the mining district which was worked by the ancient Egyptians.

In Mrs. Gilbert's Autobiography is an amusing story of Livingstone, when he was a student in course of training for a missionary. In 1842 he was sent from London, to preach, on Sunday afternoon, on an emergency, at the small chapel at Stanford Rivers, when his performance astonished the congregation. He gave out his text, and then, after a painful pause, descended the pulpit stairs, took up his hat, walked straight out of the chapel, and ran away. It could have been little foreseen that the "stickit minister" would one day find a grave in Westminster Abbey.

The election of Sir Henry Summer Maine to the mastership of Trinity Hall, Cambridge, is in every way admirable. Sir Henry is one of the most distinguished jurists we have, and fitly presides over a society strong in lawyers. At the same time one cannot help sympathising with Mr. Fawcett in his disappointment. One more vote would have secured him the election, and added another to the triumphs won by the blind in overcoming their misfortune. But the supporters of his rival, the Rev. Henry Latham, could not be induced to withdraw their candidate; and as neither side would yield, it was resolved to untie the knot in rather a Gordian fashion, by electing neither Mr. Fawcett nor Mr. Latham.

Rome, under its new régime, is strangely unlike what it used to be under the Popes. The streets are thronged by a lively and loquacious crowd, full of bustle and animation, in place of the apathy and listlessness of the Roman people formerly. Upon the Quirinal, in the vicinity of the royal palace, and near the railway station, quite a new town is springing up, and Americans are crowding there. A new American church—a handsome building—stands fearlessly, an unwonted sight in Rome in the midst of the new "Via Nazionale" (a sort of boulevard planted with trees), which by its very name commemorates the freedom of Rome, from papal usurpation, and its restored pre-eminence as the capital of Italy.

Mr. Brownlow Maitland has addressed a long letter to the Earl of Shaftesbury, complaining of his lordship's reported statement in a speech at Wimborne, in Dorset, regarding The Argument from Prophecy, of which Mr. Maitland is the author, and which has been published under the auspices of the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge. Lord Shaftesbury is reported to have said: "In that book it was argued that the twenty-sixth of Leviticus and the twenty-eighth chapter of Deuteronomy ought not to be received as the word of God." Mr. Maitland says this statement is "absolutely unfounded and erroneous;" and attributes it to a review of the work which his lordship may have read. In reply, Lord Shaftesbury simply refers the author to his letter to the Archbishop of Canterbury, withdrawing from the society on account of the criticised book. Dean Close retires from the society, because "by lending its venerable sanction to works even of a doubtful character, the mischief it may thus occasion far outweighs any good which it may do." Canon Miller, too, several weeks since requested that his name might be withdrawn from the Evidence Committee of the society. He says that an extreme pressure of duties had prevented him from reading the volume referred to by Lord Shaftesbury before publication; but that on reading the passages objected to he at once withdrew his name.

The Mayor of Leeds, Mr. Councillor Carbutt, has fallen under the ban of his spiritual betters. Because he has presided at a public meeting on disestablishment of the Leeds Nonconformist Union, three of the clergy of the Church of England have refused to receive tickets to be given to some old people at this festive time. The letter of Dr. Gott, vicar of Leeds, was to the effect that having seen the mayor's name posted on the walls "as an enemy of my Church," he could not accept a courtesy of that kind, and he expressed his regret "that the chief civic officer of Leeds should use his office in a party cause, about which public and private feeling is very deep and decided." The Rev. A. Williams, incumbent of St. Luke's, simply declined receiving the tickets "from one holding the views of the present Mayor of Leeds." The Rev. Cecil Hook, after remarking upon the fact that the mayor was announced to preside at a meeting having for its object the disestablishment and disendowment of our Church, which he would not discuss, said that out of respect for the office held by Mr. Carbutt, he could not refuse to distribute the tickets among his parishioners. The Leeds Express adds that Mr. Carbutt is a Nonconformist, and has descended from a family which has been distinguished by its Nonconformity for generations, and says that the conduct of the clergymen referred to has created considerable feeling throughout the borough. The Express has written a very smart leading article upon the conduct of the clergy, and this is all the more gratifying considering that its proprietor is a Churchman. The Tory papers condemn the mayor and uphold the clergy.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

It is no longer a secret that the students of the United Presbyterian Theological Hall are opposed to the Confession of Faith as it at present stands.

At the next meeting of the Greenock and Paisley Presbytery the Rev. David Macre is to be asked if he is still prepared to give an affirmative answer to the question in the formula for ordination, and other statements in the Confession of Faith.

We are glad to see that with Canon Farrar, the Rev. Samuel Cox, and many other devout men in our day, Professor Blackie earnestly disclaims that theory of eternal hopeless torment, which has done so much to dishonour God and to arrest the progress of Christianity.

The London correspondent of the Glasgow Herald, speaking of the tone of opinion in the metropolis on the Scottish disestablishment question, says that the general belief of politicians seems to be that the question will have to be honestly faced and conscientiously fought out at the next election, and that Lord Hartington will by stress of circumstances be compelled to give up his conditional attitude for one of direct aggression.

Much food for reflection, says the Glasgow Herald, is supplied by a comparison of the reference to disestablishment in Scotland made by Lord Hartington at Edinburgh with what is now happening in connection with the election at Greenock. The contest for the seat to be vacated by Mr. Grieve is the first that has taken place since the Liberal leader's speech was delivered, and already it is found that a hope which he expressed with great emphasis is being disappointed. "I hope," said his Lordship, "that you will have as few test questions as possible, and that you won't think it necessary to make this one of them." Now what is the state of matters at Greenock? That there is no really test question but one, and that is the very one which Lord Hartington did not desire to see raised. The question of disestablishment has, within a few weeks of the Edinburgh speech, and at the very first election held, become the test question, and who will say it will not remain the test question until the Church has fallen?

AMERICAN NOTES.

Rev. Dr. Forrester, the Universalist minister of Newark, N.J., says: "To teach Christianity in the nineteenth century from the Westminster Catechism is like carrying the trade of Liverpool and New York in vessels built on the pattern of Noah's ark."

An American edition of The Bible for Young People (Rev. P. H. Wicksteed's translation from the Dutch) will be brought out by Roberts Brothers, Boston, in three handsome volumes, of about six hundred pages each. The two volumes on the "Old Testament" will appear in February or March, and the volume on the "New Testament" in May.

The Unitarian Church at Ithaca, the seat of the Cornell University, has recently given a unanimous call to Rev. J. C. Kimball, of Newport, to become their minister, as successor of Rev. Dr. Stebbins. At its request it was unanimously voted by the directors of the American Unitarian Association to second its action by inviting Mr. Kimball to become the missionary of the Association at Ithaca.

The American Christian Union, edited by Mr. Beecher and Dr. Abbott, reproducing a portion of our report of Canon Farrar's sermons on Eternal Punishment, speaks of them as "the most gravely important foreign ecclesiastical news of the week," and adds: "The eminent personality of the speaker, the solemn importance of his theme, and the special interest it has at this juncture to American churches, combine to fix public attention on these discourses."

Rev. Samuel Longfellow is about to become the pastor of the Germantown Unitarian Society. The rejoicing over this piece of good news will not be confined to the parish. That Mr. Longfellow should resume the regular work of the ministry, bringing into it the rich fruits of his recent years of thought, study, and experience, and his broad catholicity of spirit, is an event to us all. And certainly he will find in the Germantown society a body of men and women who mean to respond to his best of words with their best of works.

A peculiarly graceful compliment has just been paid to the Unitarian poet Whittier on the occasion of his reaching his seventieth birthday, Longfellow, Oliver Wendell Holmes, Bayard Taylor, and Garrison having written poems in honour of the event. The most interesting prose contribution is from the pen of the venerable Richard H. Dana, who apologises for the brevity of his remarks on the ground "that in one's ninetieth year not much could be expected at a day's notice." It is worthy of remark that although Whittier may now be said to enjoy a wide reputation on this side of the Atlantic, he has never yet visited England. It is also a notable thing that the whole of these eminent Americans, with the exception of Garrison, are, we believe, of the Unitarian faith.

At the last monthly meeting of the Directors of the American Unitarian Association, the Committee on Publications reported continued applications for books. In response to applications, sets of publications were granted to Lane Theological Seminary at Cincinnati, and to North-Western University at Evanston, a suburb of Chicago. The Trustees of the Brookes' Fund at Meadville, Pa., for distributing books gratuitously to ministers of all denominations in the West, having recorded the applications as outrunning their resources, it was voted to appropriate to their use the sum of $200, to be paid in books. By recommendation of the same committee it was voted to print the series of discourses recently delivered at Music Hall, Boston, by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, on "Essentials and Non-essentials in Religion;" and the Secretary was authorised to issue two numbers of Word and Work, each containing one of the discourses, to be circulated in the pews of all the churches of the denomination. It was voted to continue, as last year, aid to the publication of the Unitarian Review, receiving in return three hundred copies for gratuitous distribution in libraries and reading-rooms.

BOOKS AND AUTHORS.

The sermon on "Operas and Theatres" by the Rev. J. J. Wright, which we noticed at the time of its delivery, has been printed for general circulation by E. Lamb, Granby Place, Leicester.

On December 21 Mr. T. H. Green, Fellow and Tutor of Balliol, was elected to the Whyte's Professorship of Moral Philosophy in the University of Oxford, vacated by the retirement of Professor Eaton. Mr. Green is known to the general public chiefly by the introductory essays prefixed to the edition of Hume's Philosophical Works edited jointly by himself and Mr. T. H. Grose. The debt his own college owes to him was recognised when, after his marriage, he was restored to his former Fellowship.

The Theological Review for January is instructive. It opens with an exhaustive article by George P. Gould, M.A., printed for the Hibbert Trustees, on that curious piece of old heresy which helps so effectively to prove the essentially heretical nature of "orthodoxy"—the Clementine Homilies. Mr. Hopps offers a timely vindication of "The Christianity of Christ" at a moment when the name of Christian is being claimed as the exclusive right of those whose doctrines are fundamentally different from those of Jesus, while it is repudiated by many whose deepest utterances are habitually expressed in the terms of the Parables and Gospel sermons. "The Origin of Legend in the Lives of the Buddha" is given compendiously, and with a clear judgment, by T. W. Rhys Davis. Mr. Binns follows with a sparkling and, as we think, very just criticism of "Matthew Arnold as a Religious Teacher." A single stone, bravely wrought, will show the workmanship of this article. Speaking of Mr. Arnold's attack on Bishop Colenso, our reviewer says:—

Mr. Arnold's evolution, so far as action is concerned, has been almost supernaturally slow, and the Bishop was going too fast for him, and also carried too much of the ancient lumber in his mind, such as a personal God, and what not. Instead of awarding praise or qualified sympathy, or helpful and correcting criticism, he cursed the Bishop by all his literary and esoteric gods. It was a sight to wonder at, to see Apollo descending from the serene abodes where he had been piping to his brother deities, and to hear him cry, "It is Marsyas murdering melody on a stolen flute; let him be flayed alive." And all because shepherds and shepherdesses liked Marsyas's music. It was a forgone conclusion that his prate should gain nothing. The honest Bishop grew in fame, and Mr. Arnold's plea for letting orthodoxy alone was not trusted by the orthodox. Was he himself a spirit of health or a goblin-damned? Plainly, the latter. The smell of brimstone could not be disguised, perfumes of Araby would not drown it, and men believed the evidence of their nostrils. The licentiousness of this assault on Bishop Colenso cannot be excused. It must remain as an example, if not of deliberate going over to the enemy, at least of deserting friends in need, and mocking their earnestness with bitter taunts.

We wish we had space to further characterise the remaining articles than by recommending them as each able and interesting in its department. They are "M. Renan on the Origin of the Gospels," by W. Sanday, M.A.; "Volition and Attention," by Henry Shaen Solly, M.A.; "The Ecclesiastical Crisis in Berlin," by Andrew Chalmers; "Summary of Ecclesiastical Events," by the editor; and a repertory of more than usual extent and interest of New Book Notices. A Theological Review is nothing if not occupied with theology; but as this one aims to be a journal of "Religious Life" as well as "Religious Thought," we are always glad when it has somewhat more of the former element than the present number affords. It is an excellent number notwithstanding.

SUNDAY SCHOOL EXTENSION.

THE Sunday school, speaking at least for England, requires to be extended both ways—up and down. It should be extended upwards—that is, towards the congregation, until it includes all the young people connected with the church. It should be extended downwards—that is, towards the street, until it includes all the little roughs and nomads, who are perhaps cared for by the school inspector on week-days, but still want the home-consecration of school and church on Sundays.

To include all the children of the congregation, it may be advisable to modify the ordinary school-system. We lately quoted an American definition of the Sunday school, that it was "the church in study." We believe that attempts have been made by some of our ministers to carry out the idea implied in this definition, and hope they will let us know how they succeed. A plan which has been recommended is—to gather all the children both from school and congregation into the church about half-an-hour before the opening of morning service (where there is not an afternoon service specially adapted for children), when the minister or a teacher should deliver a general lesson on some topic of a distinctively religious bearing. A short prayer and one or two hymns complete the service, but reading is not appropriate. It occupies too much of the short time at disposal, and it is not wanted as the children will either have been reading in school previously, or will remain to the devotional service of the congregation, of which reading forms an important part. Where this plan is adopted, it would be well to let the children who have been at school in the morning be dismissed from the church, say during the singing of a hymn at the close of the devotional service. They have already had their sermon, and to detain them while another sermon is preached to their elders would be a hard trial of their young patience.

The work of seeking out children for a ragged Sunday school would be a godly mission. We think we hear their little voices calling from the gutters, "Come and help us." The little newspaper boys and girls have no trade to ply on Sunday. There is nothing but mischief for their idle little hands to do. Will some of the young ladies and young gentlemen who have not found the common Sunday school interesting enough take up this mission? It will be full of excitement, if that is needed to spur them on. And it will show early fruit, if they are anxious to see the reward of their labours. The Dorcas ladies will have to lend their aid, and a Sunday soup-kitchen will be an almost inevitable consequence. To take them in charge at all is to assume a great deal of responsibility; but the want is too pressing. The poor little creatures want home and fatherly and motherly care. The natural place for them on Sunday would be in a comfortable school. We are quite aware of the risks—the rivalries of sect—the indiscretions of charity, and all the ills that follow upon good as surely as good is educed out of evil. But we would risk them, and provide against them when they come. Perhaps they might be prevented by a little forethought. It would be sad, for such difficulties, to forego doing the good that lies to our hand, and to incur the retribution of the lady's dream:—

The wounds I might have healed!
The human sorrow and smart!
And yet it never was in my soul
To play so ill a part:
But evil is wrought by want of Thought,
As well as want of Heart.

OLDHAM.

FAREWELL PARTY TO THE REV. A. CHALMERS.

On Sunday, December 23rd, the special services in connection with the opening of Lord-street Chapel were brought to a close by the Rev. A. Chalmers, who preached in the morning on "The Development of Unitarianism in England," and in the evening on "The Observance of Christmas." On the evening of Christmas Day Mr. Chalmers attended a large gathering in the principal schoolroom, as the invited guest of the congregation. The chair was occupied by JOHN TAYLOR, Esq., J.P., who soon after the opening of the meeting, called upon Councillor Ashton to propose the resolution of the evening. He also announced that on that morning Mr. Chalmers had received a donation of £20 for the building fund from Samuel Sharpe, Esq., of London, chiefly as a mark of his approval of the manner in which the new chapel was adapted to modern requirements: and he need scarcely say that the committee were not only grateful for that handsome gift, but proud that they had secured the favourable notice and approbation of one so highly honoured in Unitarian circles.

Councillor ASHTON then proposed the following resolution:—"That the members of the Oldham Unitarian congregation, and the teachers and scholars of the Sunday School, in bidding farewell to the Rev. A. Chalmers, hereby express their high appreciation of his great abilities and culture, his sincere and earnest efforts to improve the condition of their church and the efficiency and usefulness of the school, and the deep interest he has manifested in the cause of Unitarianism in the Manchester district and elsewhere during his five and a half years ministry in Oldham. They also desire to express their gratitude for the great skill, energy, and self-denial displayed by him in connection with the designing and erection of the new chapel, and in the alteration and re-arrangement of the old chapel and school, and their adaptation to the larger educational requirements of the young, and the various needs of the congregation. Further, while rejoicing in the honour conferred upon him by his appointment to the responsible position of building up a new congregation at Cambridge, they record their deep sense of the loss they sustain by his removal, and their earnest wish and prayer that his future may be successful and happy." In proposing this resolution Mr. Ashton spoke in very high terms of the services which Mr. Chalmers had rendered to the congregation and school. His pulpit work had been ably and faithfully done, his sermons, as a rule, having given what was needed most at the present time, namely, the positive result of a careful study of religious subjects, and a stimulus to the performance of Christian duty and good works. As superintendent of the Sunday-school for a large part of his ministry he had watched over its interests with great care, and maintained it in a healthy and efficient state at a time when Sunday-schools are apt to decline. And as regards his work in connection with the chapel and school buildings, it was not necessary to point out that every part of them bore traces of his careful superintendence and his architectural skill and taste. He therefore bespoke their hearty acceptance of the resolution he had proposed.

Councillor OGDEN having seconded the resolution in similar appreciative terms, it was unanimously carried, and the chairman then presented Mr. Chalmers with a silver inkstand, with a suitable inscription, on behalf of the congregation.

The Rev. A. CHALMERS, in responding, thanked those who had spoken and all who had so heartily passed the resolution for their favourable estimate of his efforts and his worth, and accepted their testimonial as a keepsake he would always value. The presents he had already received from the young people of the congregation were very precious in his eyes, for they would always be to him the memorials of a relationship which had gradually grown into close friendship and mutual affection and esteem. The gift he had now received would need more careful hands than his own to keep it in proper order, and its possession might ultimately lead him into grave responsibilities. But at all events it would be scrupulously preserved, that in after years it might help to tell the story of the building of Lord-street Chapel. That story in its full details was known but to a very few, for only those who had been closely connected with the work were aware of the difficulties that had to be overcome. It had cost him many a toilsome day and many a sleepless night before the walls rose above the level of the ground. It was begun at a time when the "British workman" was master of the situation, and finished when he was struggling desperately for continued supremacy. The delicate work to be done in connection with the foundations, the scarcity of workmen in the summer of 1876, when about thirty new mills were building in Oldham, the extremely wet winter that followed, and then the joiners' strike, were a few of the obstacles he had had to overcome. These and other difficulties had been surmounted, though not without injury to his health, perhaps to his temper, and not without a serious drain upon his own means for expenses which he scarcely felt justified in charging to the building fund. He did not, however, anticipate any serious or lasting inconvenience from these circumstances. The more genial climate of Cambridge would, he hoped, soon re-instate him in health and vigour and buoyancy of spirits. And as for the financial matter, it had been pressed upon him by friends in the congregation and outside of it that he should accept a grant from the Building Fund to cover at least the larger part of his own personal expenditure. This he had consented to do, and he could do it with a good conscience. As he had saved them over £300 (besides the subscriptions he had secured) by relieving them of more than half the architect's fee and a clerk of work's wages, and by cutting down two or three of the contracts, and various other economies, he would, even after being partly recouped for his own outlay, be still in one sense the largest contributor to Lord-street Chapel. He was glad to say that the amount which had still to be raised was not so large as many had anticipated, and the remainder of the grant from the British and Foreign Association would in all likelihood be secured. A well-worked system of congregational finance would not only provide for current expenses, but speedily sweep off the small debt that would remain on the old buildings and the organ. And if they secured an able and energetic minister they would soon be able to do what they had never yet done on any larger scale, to undertake some useful Christianising work amongst the weak and degraded multitudes around them, to whom religion was as a tale told in an unknown tongue. One can hardly pass through the street of any of our great manufacturing centres without hearing and seeing many things which make us instinctively ask where is the remedy to be found for the social maladies of the time. To this question different answers are given by the representatives of all the great movements of the day. The Ritualist on the one hand and the Secularist on the other alike claim to have found the panacea for our manifold ailments. But it will be found that these are not of a kind to be cured by any revival of medieval ceremonies or by any salve or tonic of a sacramental nature. And the disease has gone far too deep for secularism to effect a radical cure. This may improve the outward order of society, and greatly add to individual welfare and comfort but will, when virulent evil has to be faced, most frequently fail to uplift and redeem. Our free Christianity with all that it may bring—knowledge, brotherly help and sympathy, the filling up of the gulf between class and class, the elevation of the fallen by Christian effort and love, the formation of the characters of the young, and the gradual upholding of a nobler life in the home and in the church, this, the speaker believed, would be soon recognised as the divine power which is needed to remove the sore troubles and widely-prevailing vices which turn our glory into shame. The inspiration which had sustained him in his efforts to provide for them a more fitting house of prayer had come from belief and hope. And he trusted that its doors would ever be open to the poor, the penitent, and the friendless, and as warm a welcome given to those as to the fortunate and proud and well-to-do. So would their new religious home do something more than minister to their own comfort and enjoyment, and become a true Church of Christ, where the poorest and the loneliest may rest and be strengthened for the toilsome journey of a hard and careworn life.

The latter part of the evening's proceedings consisted chiefly of a selection of music rendered by the choir. At the close the usual votes of thanks were passed, and the benediction pronounced by Mr. Chalmers.

JANUARY 1st, 1878.

ANOTHER year this day begins;
 What shall its record be?
 Crowded with follies, blurred with sins,
 Or fair and bright to see?

Should life be spared, each passing day
 Lessons divine will give;
 Shall they on us be thrown away,
 Or teach us how to live?

Talents to us of priceless worth
 God's goodness will confide;
 Shall they be buried in the earth,
 Or wisely multiplied?

Openings along our path will lie,
 For ministries of love;
 Shall we them heedlessly pass by,
 Or faithfully improve?

Trials we may be called to bear
 That bow us to the dust;
 Shall we give way to dark despair,
 Or still make God our trust?

O may we, while the boon is given,
 From life true lessons reap,
 And lie down, with the hope of heaven,
 In peace to our last sleep.

I. A.

The Unitarian Herald.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 4, 1878.

MR. SPURGEON ON MODERN INFIDELITY.

Mr. Spurgeon has suffered from a severe illness, and has only partially recovered, so that he found himself unable to preach in the evening after conducting the morning service at the Metropolitan Tabernacle on Sunday. With much sympathy for a deservedly honoured labourer in the Master's vineyard during a time of weakness brought on by excessive toil, we must say that it seems, to say the least, inconsiderate in him to pass judgment on movements of the time which require minute study of specific literature and a thorough understanding of the latest position to review with any propriety. In his morning sermon, as is reported, he deplored the prevailing infidelity of the age. On this point we do not question Mr. Spurgeon's ability to judge with reasonable accuracy. But when he went on to give, as a proof of the prevailing infidelity, "that clergymen were not afraid to profess principles which formerly only the most daring Atheists had the temerity to avow," we must ask, What clergymen and what principles? Of clergymen who might be glanced at the most prominent is Canon Farrar. His principles, when he deals with the interpretation of the Scriptures, are those of scholarly exegesis, and his temerity lies in denying the doctrine of Everlasting Punishment. Mr. Spurgeon may think it the work of an Atheist to undermine Pandemonium. It would assuredly be a work for demons of the blackest or reddest order to confound the qualities of good and evil. But does the evangelical preacher really believe that there can be no abhorrence of sin without faith in an everlasting Hell? Does he judge of his fellows so grossly as to couple the most loving with the most wicked—those who desire all sinners to be saved with those who should wish sin to triumph everlastingly? And, to descend to the humble means by which Churchmen and Evangelicals determine matters affecting everlasting life, does Mr. Spurgeon regard Canon Farrar as a sort of Mephistophiles, a veritable Diabolos or Satanas, because he differs (for reasons amply given) from him (Mr. S.) in his exposition of New Testament phraseology? Is the mere Biblical question between the Canon and his critic, after all, the equivalent of one between an Atheist and a believer and lover of God? If Mr. Spurgeon intends that his peculiar hearers and the world at large should so understand his language on Sunday, we can but regret that it should still be as it was when a good Judge Hale passed sentence of imprisonment on a good John Bunyan, or as in much older times when gods of the worshippers south of the Himalayas were devils to the people on the north.

NONCONFORMISTS AND THE WAR.

On several occasions Mr. Gladstone has frankly and fully recognised the services which Nonconformists have rendered to the policy of justice, freedom, and humanity on the Eastern Question—services which he has declared will be recorded to their honour in the history of the movement. He may be assured that his righteous denunciation of any policy that would land this country in the most iniquitous and immoral war of which it is possible to conceive, will be echoed by all the Nonconformists throughout the land. Mystery still surrounds the intentions of the Cabinet. We can scarcely believe that they are capable of plunging us into war in support of a system of cruelty and corruption. Still, the proclivities of Lord Beaconsfield are so well known that it is necessary to be watchful, and to use every available opportunity for protest and remonstrance, that the Government may be made perfectly acquainted with the mind of the country. We rejoice, therefore, that the Nottinghamshire Nonconformist Association has led the way in decidedly declaring against the beginning of any line of action which would involve the country in war for the pretended maintenance of British interests that are not imperilled, and for the real maintenance of a barbarous and dying despotism. The Association earnestly calls upon all Nonconformist societies "throughout the land to be prepared at a moment's notice to give their most uncompromised resistance to any measure by which a single English life may be hazarded, or a single shilling spent which would directly or indirectly help to prolong the existence of Turkish rule in Europe or Asia." We note that several Congregational churches in various parts of the country have this week spoken out firmly against England being committed to war to bolster up a dying despotism; and we would urge upon the Committees of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, and of the Unitarian Associations throughout Great Britain, the imperative need there is for making their influence felt against the wickedness of such a policy.

SIMPLICITY "IN EXCELSIS."

THE Scotch Establishment ministers in the Highlands must be singularly innocent of what is going on in Great Britain. They met at Inverness the other day to consider the changes which have been made in the ecclesiastical state of Scotland by the abolition of lay patronage in her National Church. They set to work in a truly primitive spirit. They condemned Voluntaryism as unscriptural and dangerous; protested against the alienation of ecclesiastical revenues for secular purposes; pointed out that State endowments are especially needful in the Highlands of Scotland; and declared their gladness that patronage had been abolished,—all of which must be a sweet-smelling savour to the Duke of Argyll. Then they proceeded to make their offering on the Argyll shrine a little less odorous, by calling upon the Legislature to remove "all remaining obstacles which present a righteous adjustment of existing difficulties in accordance with the claims and principles of the Free Church." That is, these gentlemen, good, simple souls, wish to eat their cake and have it too—they would have complete powers of self-government and State support. The Highland ministers, as the Times puts it, further claim that their Church shall not only be supreme in spiritual matters, but be allowed to say what things are spiritual and what are not. "Thus, the Church could widen the bounds of its jurisdiction at will, and practically it would be not only independent of the State, but above it. Besides all that tremendous power, the Highland Free Churchmen want State honours and State pay. They require the nation to give them pecuniary means of setting it at defiance. That is an old demand. It was the claim of Hildebrand, and is the claim of the present Pope; it was the claim of John Knox, and it is the claim of Mr. Tooth. Ultramontane, Ritualist, and Scottish Puritan meet on the common ground of pretensions to absolute ecclesiastical power. It is not likely that the demand of the Highland Free Churchmen will be granted in these days of secular Parliaments; but it is, nevertheless, an interesting instance of the pertinacity of a principle, and it ought to excite the profound sympathy and admiration of rebellious Ritualists."

HERESY IN THE "S.P.C.K."

That Lord Shaftesbury's assault on the Christian Knowledge Society should be regarded as a serious blow to that body proves the poverty of theological knowledge among the Evangelicals of this country. There are many persons who believe that his lordship's sterling philanthropy entitles him to authority on "soundness" in theology; and this reposing acquiescence in his judgment as a divine has actually been vindicated by the citation, as an eminently godly and salutary warning, of his criticism of Eccle Homo as "the vilest book ever vomited out of the mouth of hell." It is, therefore, no wonder that those who look up to Lord Shaftesbury as a master in Israel should become alarmed for the orthodoxy of the Society when he denounces some of its recent works as tending to spread "Romanism and Infidelity." The Romanism of the condemned publications is not specified in his lordship's letters. It is "the other thing" to which is meted out an elaborate protest. In two books unbelief manifests itself. The Society's Manual of Geology leads to "neological views of the first chapter of Genesis." The Rev. Brownlow Maitland's Argument from Prophecy admits that two chapters in the Pentateuch, Lev. xxvi. and Deut. xxviii., are assigned by modern critics, on historical and philological grounds, to a date previous to the fall of the kingdom of Israel, and urges that they are "rhetorical and minatory rather than predictive." These are the statements which Lord Shaftesbury brands as "crude speculations," "inconsistent with decency," and which have given him a "positive and active distrust" of the Society. His criticisms are challenged as unfair by Mr. Brownlow Maitland, who calls upon him to justify them, but he declines to withdraw them, or to engage in any controversy on the points in dispute. This is a prudent decision. Lord Shaftesbury's affirmation will carry weight where his word is powerful as long as its basis is not examined. It has induced Dean Close to retire from the Society; and probably many others who believe that Christianity is inseparably bound up with the Mosaic cosmogony, and with the Divine authorship of Leviticus and Deuteronomy, will do likewise. Meanwhile Lord Shaftesbury, in withdrawing from the Society, condemning the two books, and refusing to discuss his condemnation, is doing good service by calling attention to the orthodox conception of the Bible, and to the fact that some modification of it, in order to meet the undoubted facts of science and the results of modern Biblical criticism, is felt to be necessary by one of our most venerable Evangelical Associations.

PROFESSOR CHALLIS AND ETERNAL PUNISHMENT.

Professor Challis, of Cambridge, follows the example of Canon Farrar, and announces in a letter to the Guardian his disbelief in eternal punishment. The Professor does not, however, like the Canon, pour upon it the phials of an intense moral indignation. He confines himself to a calm and thoughtful exposition of certain passages of the New Testament. His contention is that "endless" and "eternal" are not convertible terms: "eternal" is significant of time as being derived from Ætas, while "endless" has per se no necessary relation to time. On this he maintains that no such epithet as endless is applied in Scripture to future punishment, and that the difference between it and "eternal" is important when taken with reference to the declaration that time itself has an end. He holds that Paul did not teach the endlessness of future punishment, and believes that the purpose of justice is fulfilled when the "great and final tribulation" has availed "for the purification and salvation of the condemned." Professor Challis promises to shortly publish a justification of his views "by arguments drawn at greater length from Scripture." In one way or another men are being constrained by higher conceptions of God to seek and find escape from this horrible doctrine, which only makes sad tender spirits whom God has not made sad. The strongest moral argument for it—that it deters from sin—does not, as Professor Challis says, stand the test of experience.

"THE CURATE IN CHARGE."

Bishop Fraser is not insensible to the evils of Church Patronage, but he still entertains grave objections against election by parishioners. He and those who wish to deal with that matter, as he does, in all seriousness, and so as to meet the real exigencies of the question, will not pass without consideration a case which Mrs. Oliphant might make use of, if she ever wished to historically annotate her touching "Curate" story, as did Mrs. Beecher Stowe her "Uncle Tom." Canon Garbett, of Surbiton, having been presented to the Crown living of Barcombe, Sussex, with an income of £719 a year, and a population of 1,006, the parishioners lately met under the presidency of Mr. Dodson, M.P., to present a testimonial to the Rev. A. Allen, who has been curate in charge nearly a quarter of a century, during which time the rector has been absent. Mr. Allen said that the answer to the question, "Why are you going away?" was short and not very sweet. He was going because he could not help it. He wished not to utter a single word that would lead them not to welcome their new rector, and hoped they would receive him most heartily. Still he should have been glad if the appointment had not been made so hastily, and before the Lord Chancellor had had time to consider the claims which were advanced in his behalf.

LAST WORDS ON HERESY.

Let no man now say who is Orthodox. Perhaps in the East, where people are still antiquated enough to go to war and put bayonets and bullets into one another—as Hindoos of the old school used to thrust knives into themselves—for the sake of religion, it may be in place to claim Orthodoxy for the Church of the country. In England of the 19th century all that is changed thoroughly. Witness some "Plain Talk" by Hugh Stowell Brown, of which the following may serve as sample:—

It is strange that men do not observe how the heresy of one age is the orthodoxy of the next; how both opinions and practices, not long since deemed false and dangerous, are now admitted to be true and harmless. There are doctrines which our fathers held to be of vital importance, of which we make but little account; and many good Christians do on the Lord's Day things which fifty years ago would have been pronounced really awful in their wickedness; and yet there is more religion, and better religion among Christians now than there was in those more straight-laced times. . . . A man is not good for much unless there be something of the heretic in him; unless he has a mind so independent, honest, and courageous as to think for himself and choose his own opinions; and to the man who would not be a heretic our advice is—Sir, give up your right of private judgment, give up your mental freedom, give up your intellect and moral manhood, shut your eyes, open your mouth, and take and swallow whatever priests and other parsons may give you.

Miss Yates, Liverpool.

On Sunday morning, the Rev. Charles Wicksteed, B.A., preached a sermon at Hope-street Church, Liverpool, having special reference to the late Miss Yates, of the Dingle, whose death we announced last week. Mr. Wicksteed took his text from Ecclesiastes i., 4: "One generation passeth away and another generation cometh; but the earth abideth for ever." After some introductory remarks, he said:—On Thursday the tomb closed over the remains of a dear old friend, beloved and venerated by this congregation, and by a very large circle of acquaintances and friends, whose labours as philanthropists or as confessors of truth she had efficiently aided by her sympathy and support, whose needs she had generously relieved, whose education she had assisted, or whose interests in various ways she had opportunely promoted. In all ages, and throughout all nations, the lives of the saints have formed a popular branch of literature or theme of discourse; and I never knew any just reason why the series of such lives should be confined to those who had only been distinguished by a fanatical asceticism or fanatical enthusiasm, by supposed or real gifts of miracle, or by the foundation of convents, churches, or orders. I never knew why those should not be reckoned saints, and honoured and recorded as such, who lived this common human life of ours, and lived it remarkably well. It is surely as instructive in its way to hear and know of some near our own doors, living our own life, gifted with no particular powers above our own, getting up each morning with a day of ordinary duty before them, and serenely closing it every evening in rest, who have yet done their duty so very regularly, so very conscientiously, so very exactly; with such an amount of unselfishness; with so much effort and industry, and perpetual self-denial; with so much care for others; with so much anxiety for the poor, the sick, the sinning; with such simplicity and unpretendingness, and considerate thought; with so much piety towards God, and so much love for man; that if such lives could in varying form but essential resemblance be led by all of us, the reign of Christ would have begun on earth, and his kingdom established among us. The grave has closed on one who may, though not literally, yet in a very true and well-defined sense, be called "The last of the Yateses." For though Miss Yates has left behind her a large number of collateral descendants, some still bearing her name, yet she was the last surviving child of her father, the last surviving member of her own generation, and the last occupant of a home in that romantic glen, the Dingle, so long identified with the name of her family. In her closest that special line of character and action, of custom and habit, of daily life and occupation, of aim, purpose, principle, and confession, which has marked two generations of citizens not undistinguished in the annals of Liverpool. Her father, the Rev. John Yates, came at a very early age to settle in this town as the minister of the congregation of Paradise-street Chapel—of the congregation whose successors assemble here. With no external advantages except those of character and education, he soon won for himself a position of great weight and influence. His grace and power as a preacher, his assiduousness and diligence as a pastor, his character as a scholar, his cheerful, kindly manners in society, his consummate business tact and knowledge—all these attributes combined to make him a very significant member of society. And when I add that Mr. Yates spared no pains in fostering and supporting all those institutions, literary, benevolent, and social, which promote the well-being, culture, and happiness of the community, you have before you a picture of a man who was brimful of energy, and work, and hope, and who was successful in almost everything he undertook. Few men in the middle social life of England could be found more clearly marked out to found a family; and when this power is shown in a minister, I have observed that certain special qualities follow, which I find present in this case too—a certain purity of character and conduct, created by the early and serious atmosphere of the home; habits of industry and self-denial, often a matter at first of indispensable necessity, and then becoming a matter of habit and choice; intellectual tastes and general culture; a recognition of the claims of charity, and a consideration of the demands of our fellow-creatures upon our help and sympathy; a reverence for religion, and a regular attendance on and respect for its ordinances and services. These were certainly, with of course differences of degree and character, the results of their early training in the members of this family. And Roscoe in his knowledge and culture, Shepherd in his classical superiority, Rathbone in his sturdy benevolence and patriotism, found in them appreciators, and in some instances very warm supporters and admirers. Joseph Brook Yates, the elder son, was a successful merchant, bearing, as all the family did, a proportionate share in the benevolences and charities of the town, and carrying with him through life the traces of the scholarly tastes and habits he had inherited from his father. He was for many years president of the Literary and Philosophical Society, and showed in his library and in much curious learning the traces of his training under his father and Dr. Shepherd, and of the time spent at Eton. John Ashton Yates was distinguished amongst his fellow-merchants by his knowledge of what might be called commercial science and the laws that regulate trade. He was the only one amongst the brothers who took any active part in imperial politics. He was invited to stand for Bolton in the first reformed Parliament. Though high on the poll, he was not successful; but he was afterwards returned for Carlisle, in Ireland. The memory of Richard Vaughan Yates will long remain green in the bosom of every person who lifts or shall hereafter lift his hat in passing by the obelisk in Prince's Park, or enters the doors of the Harrington Schools, which his father founded, and remembers the years he, day after day, and Sunday after Sunday, laboured there. With not the same talents as his brothers, none of them had a warmer heart or more earnest desire to do good and to be good. James Yates, the youngest brother, was par excellence, the scholar of the family. A respectable preacher and pastor during many years of his life, he conscientiously discharged the duties of his profession. He often created profound impressions, but the absence of popular qualities prevented his exciting any frequent or permanent enthusiasm; and afterwards, his health giving way, he lived the life of a student and scholar. As a sign of his larger sympathies, united with strength of theological determination, I may mention that he was, and I think for a time almost contemporaneously, secretary of the Unitarian Association and of the British Association for the promotion of science. His celebrated controversy with Dr. Wardlaw gave his father the impulse to deliver some lectures at Paradise-street Chapel, in which he broke through the reserve of the old English Presbyterian latitude—or, perhaps, platitude—in theology, and drew, we may be sure with caution and moderation, but pretty distinctly, the line between the Calvinism of the Presbyterian body north of the Tweed, and the more humane, simple, and, as he thought, evangelical theology beginning to prevail amongst their English namesakes in the south. One of the results of the lectures was to open the eyes of some of his congregation, who, coming from Scotland, had not been quite aware of what, in the theological nick-name of the period, would be called the decidedly Socinian proclivities of the pastor. They left his ministry, and found their religious instruction elsewhere. Mr. Yates could not long regret this concession to the necessities of the hour and the requirements of honest thought and speech; and he was proud of the manly and conscientious, and the scholarly and impregnable position so bravely taken by his son. And now we must pass away from the father and the brothers of this family to the two daughters and sisters. Their gentle and pious lives—their kindly and charitable hearts—their culture and intelligence—belonged, indeed, properly to the region of private life; but these qualities were so extensively known, and so long exemplified, so many good causes had been benefited, so many individuals and households had been blessed by them, that in course of time their names were scarcely less known by the public than those of their brothers. Those who know that house in its earlier and brighter, as well as in its later and quieter days, will never fail to look back with a tender reverence for the life that was led within it. At the beginning of the nearly half-century of its occupation, the two sisters, bound to each other by the ties of a never-interrupted affection, were distinguished by an ample and graceful hospitality, which assembled in their own as well as their brothers' adjoining house very many persons from various parts of England, America, the Continent of Europe, and even sometimes more distant regions still, to create by the warmth of some distinguished philanthropy, the nobleness of some patriotic struggle, the reverence of some deep piety, the research of some far-reaching science, or the culture of some rare study, a bright intelligent communion of minds and hearts. When the elder sister, slowly and unwillingly as it were, dropped away from the side of the younger, and left her at first in irrepressible grief and a sense of desolation (for the sister who was gone had not only a most loving heart for her younger sister, but a most helpful, practical knowledge and judgment), it was touching to see how bravely she, the bereaved survivor, applied herself to discharge all the old duties and keep up all the old habits. She was very grateful for all the blessings God had spread upon her path, and studied cheerfulness as a virtue. She liked people to be happy—she did not like to hear of them being ill, or discontented, or unprosperous; and, though with a most sympathising heart for all souls in sorrow, she still liked the general atmosphere of her life and intercourse to be cheerful, and was most pleased when she heard of most goodness, of most prosperity, of most success, and most health, and most happiness in other people. She would not hear (with patience, at least) a word said against Liverpool, its climate, its people, or anything that was its. Early hours, simple meals, hardy habits; these were her rules. Her personal economy and dislike of extravagance of any kind was, considering her means and position, almost incredible. She seemed as if she could not bear spending anything on herself. She determined to do good with her money while she lived. Though continuing the surroundings to which she had been accustomed so many years, and doubtless persevering in the old habits of safe proportionate accumulation, she yet denied herself a hundred things she might, consistently with her station and means, have indulged in, in order that she might give the amount so spared to others. She has gone away from us now. Though in different form and mould, the succession of good people shall not cease—for the earth endureth for ever. Though in different form and mould the mould and the eternal verities and the everlasting virtues shall not perish—for the earth endureth for ever.

Joseph Wood, Esq., Rochdale.

At the ripe age of 85 there passed away on Christmas Day at the Bank, the Butts, Rochdale, one of the best known commercial men of the town, Mr. Joseph Wood, the senior member of Blackwater-street congregation, and senior trustee of the chapel. Since January, 1872, Mr. Wood has been confined to his room, a paralytic stroke having rendered him incapable of attending to business. Up to 1872 he had enjoyed robust health, and had passed an active commercial career, and was highly esteemed by his fellow-townsmen for his diligent business habits, strict probity, and social usefulness.

In 1820 Mr. Wood removed from Halifax (where he is still remembered by some of the Northgate congregation) to Rochdale, being employed by the Messrs. Rawsons, bankers, who had a branch bank in Rochdale. This they disposed of to Mr. Clement Roysds, a local manufacturer. From 1827 Mr. Wood continued the management of the bank and eventually became a partner, the firm being styled Clement Roysds and Co. For fifty years he resided in the house adjoining the Bank, where he died. All his fellow-townsmen bear witness to the fact that he conducted the business with great tact, judgment, and skill, his success being a testimony to patient industry. A Conservative in politics, he was respected by all sections of the community.

In the midst of his commercial duties he found time to take an active part in the local government of the town—being a Commissioner in 1837 under the first Improvement Bill obtained for Rochdale. In 1850 he was elected Chief Constable, and when in 1856 the borough was incorporated, he was elected a town councillor, and in 1859 or 1860 made an alderman, which position he retained until 1865, when declining strength rendered it necessary that he should resign. Previously he had been offered the mayoral chair, but for the same reason declined the honour. He was a trustee, along with Alderman Heape and the Vicar of Rochdale, of the Moss School, an old unsectarian school, the majority of the trustees being Unitarian.

The funeral took place on Saturday last at the Rochdale Cemetery, the Rev. Thos. Carter officiating. Though it was strictly private, a large number of the leading inhabitants sent their carriages to join in the mournful procession.

On Sunday morning last the Rev. T. Carter preached a funeral sermon to a large congregation, from 2 Timothy, iv., 6, in the course of which he said:—The venerable relative and friend recently departed, ere the evil days came, made fitting preparation for the time of his departure; he fought a good fight, he kept the faith, and his end was peaceful,—an appropriate termination to a worthy and consistent life. May yours and mine, brethren, be in our measure like unto it! Our departed friend had lived some years beyond the usually allotted time of man's earthly probation; his latter years, for some all-wise and loving purpose, were years, more or less, of suffering and weariness, and so death came to him as a bright angel of mercy. His was indeed a happy release! And though his life to all seeming has gone from our midst, the remembrance of his inestimable qualities and many virtues cannot so depart. His character is worthy of being enshrined in the hearts of his family and fellow-worshippers. Our friend was singularly modest and retiring in his habits; free from the very appearance of ostentation and self-seeking pride. In his home he was most affectionate, unselfish, if it were possible, too considerate. His industry, aptitudes, and opportunities endowed him with a liberal share of this world's goods, but his increasing prosperity did not in the least lessen his strict truthfulness and consistency. He was a respected member of this church, delighting in its service, never absent morning or evening when able to attend, taking a great interest in all its concerns, contributing readily generous aid to all its movements. He was firm, very firm in his convictions of religious truth. He believed that what are called Unitarian views of God and man, of the present and future are what Christ taught and lived and died to establish. I do not think any influence could have tempted him to be unfaithful to his religious convictions. Yes, he proved himself faithful in the all-important and highest concerns of his being, he did so unto the end. In all the varied relations of life he was strictly upright; he was an unpretending and true Christian, and thus a notable example for us to follow. May we, one and all, cherish his memory long in our hearts. May we, like him, so pass our allotted time on earth, that we may be qualified to say when the time of our departure is at hand, I am ready to be offered, I have fought a good fight, I have kept the faith.

The Rev. Patrick Cannon.

ANOTHER venerable teacher of religion has yielded up his commission and gone to his account. Many of our preachers depart from us after having attained a noble age, as in the case of Mr. Cannon. The Rev. Patrick Cannon was born at Sheffield on the 10th of July, 1791. He died at The Ferns, Windermere, on the 20th of December, 1877, aged 86 years. He was educated at York College, at the same time as Dr. Hunter, who also came from Sheffield. He entered the ministry in his 26th year, and became preacher at Edinburgh, where he remained two years. The confinement of the regular pulpit was, however, from the first not acceptable to him, and he preferred supplying or taking temporary engagements. For the greater part of his life, however, he was occupied in tuition, having the care of the young people of several important families. He was a most painstaking and conscientious teacher, and several of his pupils have become men of mark in the world. For a few years Mr. Cannon became minister of the Westgate Chapel, Wakefield, in which town his relatives lived. On resigning he again engaged in tuition. At all times, however, he was ready for preaching work; and while unready to fix himself in any place, he was in reality a good missionary, and his long and eloquent sermons have been known in all the principal chapels of the kingdom. Until very lately he continued to preach. In the latter part of his life, although principally resident at Wakefield, he was very fond of travel, and after his 70th year first visited Switzerland. He was not only a man of considerable learning and a student to his last days, but also the possessor of great conversational power, and with a ready wit and pleasant recital of anecdote. He was beloved by his relatives and friends, and admired by all who knew him. For the last two years he lived at Windermere amid the lakes and mountains, which were very dear to him, and he gently died in his sleep with a smile, which death had not removed from his face.

G. B.

NEWS OF OUR CHURCHES.

ABERDEEN.—The scholars attending this school held their annual Christmas festival in the schoolroom last Saturday evening. The building, which was pretty well filled, presented a much finer appearance than usual; the walls and roof being festooned with evergreens. After tea, a varied programme, consisting of songs, readings, and recitations, by the scholars and some of their lady friends, was gone through in a highly creditable manner. The choir sung several select ones, which were accompanied on the harmonium. Brief but appropriate addresses to the scholars were also delivered. In the course of the evening, instead of the usual "Christmas Tree," one of the teachers dressed to represent "Santa Claus" distributed a number of useful and ornamental articles, the contributions of a few friends who take an interest in the school. The meeting was throughout of a very pleasant character, and was brought to a close soon after nine o'clock.

BARNARD CASTLE.—A Christmas tree was exhibited in the schoolroom of the Free Christian Church, on the 26th of December, and a sale of work held. Among the visitors, every sect in the town was well represented, and a good profit realised for the general expenses of the church.

BIRMINGHAM: HURST-STREET CHRISTMAS CELEBRATIONS.—The first of these took place on Sunday evening, the 23rd ult., when a service of sacred song for Christmas-time was given by the choir, consisting of a sacred cantata—"The Nativity," several anthems, and Christmas hymns. There was a large congregation present, and an offering was taken at the doors at the close of the service in aid of the poor's fund which amounted to £2.15s.—On Thursday, the 27th, the usual congregational tea meeting and entertainment took place, when nearly 300 were present. The room was decorated by the teachers for the occasion, and the entertainment consisted of songs, duets, glee, &c., by the choir, and the performance of a little drama.—On the following day the Sunday scholars had their Christmas treat, when they were supplied with plumcake, coffee, oranges, &c., after which an excellent entertainment followed, which gave great delight to the little folks. There were present, including the teachers, about 360.—These festivities were brought to a close on New Year's Eve by a private social soiree for all the workers of the institution, each being allowed to introduce one friend, the number present being about ninety. This meeting does not terminate until the New Year is ushered in, and, according to custom, the minister—the Rev. B. Wright—a few minutes before twelve o'clock delivered a short address upon the passing away of the old and the coming in of the new year, introducing on this occasion a reading of the two short and appropriate poems of Tennyson, "The death of the old year" and "Ring out, wild bells." All these meetings are self-paying.

BELFAST: HOPETON-STREET.—On Friday, 28th December, the annual congregational and school soiree took place; about 150 were present. The church was tastefully decorated with banners (some of which were exquisitely designed and executed by the lady teachers) and evergreens. A handsome Christmas tree was also provided. After tea, Robert McAlmont, Esq., showed his limelight views, with appropriate readings. The Rev. J. C. Street presided, and addresses were delivered by the Rev. R. Cowley Smith, Rev. J. Pollard, Mr. C. J. Street, B.A., of Manchester New College, Messrs. McCalmont, Kinnear, &c. The report for the past year showed a most gratifying state of the work that is going on in connection with the church and schools; especially may we refer to the cottage services conducted in the neighbourhood. These showed 75 meetings during the year, with an aggregate attendance of 1,950 people, thus presenting an average of 26 at each service. In addition to these cottage services, several out-door meetings had been held under most auspicious circumstances. Premiums were distributed to successful scholars, and the proceeds from the tree distributed. Vocal and instrumental music added to the interest of the evening. After the usual votes of thanks, the meeting was brought to a close by a hymn and the benediction.

BURY.—The annual scholars' party was held on New Year's Day, in the Bank-street Schools, when upwards of 60 persons were present. Mr. Thomas Holt presided. The programme consisted of the performance of a drama, entitled, "The Exile," and a farce, "All Fools' Day." The characters in both pieces were very well sustained. Messrs. John Shuttleworth and Robert Grundy kindly painted the scenery. The costumes, were very nicely got up.

CREWKERNE.—On Monday evening, December 31, a congregational tea meeting was held in Hermitage-street Chapel. In the course of the evening the minister of the congregation delivered a series of addresses on the formation of the crust of the earth, which were illustrated by a great number of large diagrams and several specimens of rocks and fossils. The addresses and some effective readings given by members of the congregation and friends were interspersed with selections of music by the choir. At half-past ten the meeting was closed with a hymn and prayer.

CONGLETON.—A Christmas Tree and sale of useful and fancy articles was held in the school on Wednesday week, Mrs. Knight and Miss H. Hollinshead presiding at the stalls, and there were a goodly number of purchasers during the afternoon and evening. Tea and coffee and other refreshments were provided under the superintendence of Mrs. Payne and Mrs. Robert Burslam, assisted by the Misses Payne. A very amusing feature of the proceedings was an exhibition of "Fine Arts, Pictures, and Curiosities," in the class-room, conducted by a sister Payne, which elicited roars of laughter, everyone acknowledging that it was well worth a visit. Mottoes expressive of the usual good wishes of the season, were suspended in various parts of the room, which was tastefully decorated by Messrs. H. Burslam, Mellor, Dutton, and Atkinson. Several part songs and glees were well rendered by the choir. At half-past nine the proceedings closed by the company singing some lines specially written for the occasion.

CHORLEY.—The annual Christmas party was held in the schoolroom on Christmas Day, and was well attended. A number of prizes were given to the children for punctual attendance and good conduct. A large Christmas tree was decorated and surrounded with a quantity of articles contributed by members of the congregation, to be sold to furnish funds for building a new class-room, &c. Nearly all the articles were disposed of. During the evening pieces were sung by the children, accompanied by the American organ. Readings and recitations were also given, and amusements entered into. Altogether a very pleasant evening was spent.

CHOWBENT.—On Christmas Day the usual service was held in the chapel in the forenoon, and the annual congregational tea party in the school room later in the day. The number of tickets for tea was limited to 300, but after the tables were removed another 150 members and friends were admitted to the subsequent proceedings. The room was beautifully decorated with the usual Christmas display of mottoes, streamers, and evergreens, and one special motto was added for the occasion across the front of the organ—"Health and happiness to our Minister and Family." After tea T. H. Hope, Esq., was called to the chair, and the company were entertained with music and singing, readings, and recitations, for which the chapel choir and others had made careful preparation. As it is now twenty-five years since the commencement of Mr. Frankland's connection with the congregation as minister, the society thought it a suitable occasion for presenting him with some evidence of their satisfaction and good will. In the course of the evening, with many kind words from the chairman and others, Miss Davis, the daughter of a former minister, and one of the oldest members of the congregation, presented Mr. Frankland, on the part of the society, with a beautifully carved box containing £133.

DUNDEE.—UNION CHRISTMAS SERVICE.—In order to connect the Union school with the congregation the institution of special union services may now be fairly said to have become established. Five of these are held in the course of the year. One of the regular services of the Church is set apart, and old and young are invited to attend, the ordinary Sunday school being discontinued for the day. For years it required a good deal of perseverance and patience in the few friends of the movement. The parents of the children and the regular members of the congregation were rather slow in seeing the merits of the institution; it is now, however, receiving much more attention, and last Sunday there was an attendance of nearly two hundred old and young at the Christmas service. The attention of the children, and their hearty singing of the hymns, was extremely gratifying. A pleasant feature of the occasion was the expression of a few words of appreciation from Mr. E. Solly Anthony, a student from St. Andrews, who had been recently engaged in Sunday school work in Leeds, and who was able to say, though he had never seen the friends before, he felt quite at home with them. These services do help both the school and the church. The annual New Year's party of the Sunday school teachers in connection with Dundee Unitarian Church was held in Tuesday last, when about 24 teachers and friends sat down to tea; after which Mr. Hodge, in the name of the teachers, presented Mr. Williamson with an easy chair. In the course of a few brief remarks Mr. Hodge said he had been a teacher since the commencement of the Sunday school, now nearly twelve years ago, and could bear testimony to Mr. Williamson's earnestness, zeal, and anxiety for the progress of the school and the efficiency of the teachers, the whole of whom with the exception of himself had been scholars before, and had been brought forward under Mr. Williamson's personal superintendence. Mr. Williamson feelingly replied, saying he had only two objects, and these were the success of his church and the progress of the Sunday school. He concluded by thanking the teachers for their kind consideration. The meeting terminated by the company singing "Auld lang Syne," and Mr. Williamson repeating the benediction.

GLASGOW.—ST. VINCENT-STREET CHURCH SUNDAY SCHOOL.—On Friday evening last the annual Christmas gathering was held in the Albert Hall. The meeting was arranged by the teachers of the Sunday school to give an evening's pleasure to the scholars, but a large number of friends showed their interest in the school by their presence. About 350 persons sat down to tea or were present during the proceedings. After tea the Rev. Frank W. Walters gave a short address, carols were sung by the children, and songs and recitations were given by several friends. Then came the crowning entertainment of the evening, the distribution of presents from a grand Christmas tree brilliantly lighted with candles. It was very pleasant to see the delight with which the young folk came forward to receive their gifts, and much amusement was created by the curious articles which had been directed to some of the older friends. Roars of laughter greeted them as the names of teachers in the school or well-known members of the congregation were called out that they might receive the singular presents provided by anonymous donors. The remainder of the evening was occupied by games for the children and dancing; and the meeting broke up with the unanimous verdict that the careful plans and vigorous labours of the teachers had resulted in a most delightful evening's enjoyment.

HEYWOOD.—The annual tea party and recital took place on Christmas Day. On account of the crowding in former years, the price of tickets was raised, and the number limited. Still the room was packed, and a considerable number of applications for tickets had to be refused. The Rev. J. Fox presided, and opened the meeting with a few appropriate remarks. An attractive programme was then gone through, and a most enjoyable evening was spent. The proceedings were brought to a close a little before ten o'clock.

HALIFAX.—The annual school and congregational tea party was held on the day after Christmas Day. There had been a heavy fall of snow and the evening was bad, but the attendance was good. One hundred and eighty sat down to tea, after which an interesting meeting was held. The choir sang anthems, and some of the children gave an amusing dialogue on Punctuality. The reports of secretary and treasurer showed a flourishing condition of things, the number of scholars having increased by 18 during the year, the number of elder scholars in regular attendance being above the average; and the institutions of the school—the elocution class (with 33 members), the teachers' class, the botanical class—being reported as in a promising condition, the exception being the recreation room, which had been closed. The Rev. R. Wilkinson, of Holbeck, gave a most valuable and suggestive speech, and various resolutions were spoken to by Messrs. Carr, Taylor, Nicholson, Foreman, Richardson, Councillor Pearson, Christie, Joseph Wadsworth, and Whitehead.

LOUGHBOROUGH.—The Rev. Francis H. Jones, who has been minister here for nearly seven years, has resigned.

LIVERPOOL: HAMILTON ROAD.—On Monday night, being New Year's Eve, a service of praise and prayer was held in the Hamilton Road Church, and was very well attended. Rather over an hour was spent, the service being brought to a close about a quarter-past twelve, when the friends exchanged the usual happy greetings and good wishes. The service was conducted by the Rev. S. Fletcher Williams, the minister.

LIVERPOOL.—On the 13th December the quarterly meeting of the Sunday School Teachers' Association was held at the Hamilton Road Church—the Rev. S. Fletcher Williams in the chair—when Rev. T. Summers introduced the subject, "Some means of increasing attendance at Sunday School," in an interesting speech, followed by discussion, in which several members and friends took part. The attendance was unfortunately small, only 33 being present.

LIVERPOOL: NORTH END MISSION.—A watch-night service was again held on New Year's Eve, commencing at 11.25 p.m., and lasting till 12.20. About 80 were present, including several strangers. The year was begun in silent prayer, and all seemed much impressed.

LYDGATE SUNDAY SCHOOL.—The Christmas tea party was held on the day after Christmas Day. An excellent tea was provided, and an excellent entertainment dramatic and musical after tea. Both were appreciated, for the schoolroom was packed to its utmost capacity, and many had to go away for want of room. About 230 were present.—Last Saturday the teachers had what amongst them has obtained the name of a "pleasant evening." Forty were present, and a very happy evening was spent with illustrated papers, singing, reciting, and playing games.

LONDON: CARTER LANE MISSION.—The Christmas meeting of the children was held on Monday evening last. The younger scholars assembled early, and after a tea which was much enjoyed, they adjourned to the upper room, where a pleasant surprise awaited them. A large

Christmas tree in the middle of the room was gaily lighted up with party coloured lamps, and tempting bon-bons and toys were hung on every branch. On either side was a table surrounded with heaps of oranges, and holding immense Christmas cakes decorated with figures of Old Father Christmas and the Old and New Year standing in the midst of crystallised fruits. After a dance round the tables costume bon-bons were dealt out, on the condition that the contents should be worn. This effected quite a transformation scene, and contributed greatly to the hilarity of the meeting. The elder scholars, who, in the meantime, had partaken of tea, now gave a pantomime, called "Dick Whittington," which was received with shouts of laughter by all. At the conclusion the cakes were cut up, the fruit and toys distributed, and the younger children sent home. The elder scholars and teachers remained, spending some time in games, &c. The whole proceedings were satisfactory in the highest degree. About 160 were present.

MIDDLESBOROUGH.—The Rev. W. L. Spencer, late of Keighley, has accepted the unanimous invitation of the congregation to become the minister of the church there, and he has already entered upon his duties.

MOTTRAM.—The Christmas tea party and entertainment was held on Christmas Day, a large company being present. An excellent tea was provided, of which 421 partook. Many old friends from a distance availed themselves of the holiday to visit once more the school and chapel where they had formerly spent so many happy days, and once more to enjoy, for an hour the society of those who had been fellow workers in the same good work. The Rev. N. Green presided at the entertainment, and Mr. John Sidebottom addressed some seasonable remarks to the audience. The programme, consisting of singing, recitations, and a reading, was brought to a close by the whole company singing a Christmas hymn.

MANCHESTER: UPPER BROOK-STREET SUNDAY SCHOOL.—On the 26th December, the annual party of the elder scholars, teachers, and friends took place in the chapel parlour. The secretary and treasurer's reports were read, the former showing an increase since last November of 20 in the number of scholars on the books. The average attendance each Sunday afternoon is now 80. The evening was spent in a representation of "The Cricket on the Hearth," the various characters being taken with one exception by the elder scholars. The entertainment gave great pleasure to those present. This year, owing to the much-felt want of accommodation for Sunday-school meetings, the younger children's party took place on Saturday the 29th ult. when a Christmas tree was illuminated in the chapel, and a present given to each scholar on the register. Father Christmas was taken by W. V. Heywood. The latter part of the evening was spent in a representation of "Little Bo Peep," which was very well acted by young children, and much enjoyed by those present. The room was crowded, and there was an attendance of about 180, principally young children. Much credit is due to W. V. Heywood and H. S. Golland for the trouble and care which they bestowed upon the preparation of the two pieces. Thanks are also due to many kind friends who have lent valuable aid in many ways, and altogether our friends may congratulate themselves upon the good work which is being carried on here, which is steadily increasing.

PEPPERHILL.—The annual tea meeting was held in the above place on Christmas Day. About 137 partook of tea, after which a meeting was held, presided over by Mr. John Pickles, of Bradford. The report was read by Mr. E. Lee, which showed the school to be in a satisfactory condition. During the year a new organ has been purchased and the place painted and beautified, at a cost of £102, towards which they have raised about £25, leaving a balance due to the treasurer of about £17. Addresses were delivered by the Rev. F. E. Milson and other friends from Halifax. Recitations and dialogues were given by the teachers and elder scholars, and a very pleasant evening was spent. After the usual vote of thanks, the meeting broke up about ten o'clock. On Wednesday evening the scholars were provided gratuitously with a good substantial tea, when a large number availed themselves of the treat, and spent a pleasant evening together.

PENDLETON.—On Christmas day the annual scholars' party was held, when the Rev. John McDowell presided and distributed 18 prizes for good attendance. There was a large attendance. On New Year's day the annual Congregation party was held in the Lecture Hall of the Liberal Club, when over 250 persons were present. In the absence of Richard Harwood, Esq., treasurer, Mr. John I. Phillips, treasurer of the special fund, stated that the total cost of the new chapel including £500 paid on account of the land, had been, as far as he could ascertain, £3,896. Of this £2,256 had been received from the sale of Ford-street chapel, and from subscriptions collected by the joint labours of the congregation and the Manchester District Association, the remaining £1,639 had been raised by efforts made by the congregation alone. He then placed the bank book balanced and the deeds of the chapel upon the table which were received by Mr. F. S. Phillips, chairman of the Committee and a trustee, on behalf of those bodies. The rest of the evening was spent in amusements.

RINGWOOD.—On Wednesday, the 26th of December, the usual Christmas Sunday school festival and tea meeting took place. The chapel and schoolroom were decorated, and the number of persons present large. After tea books were given to the teachers and scholars as prizes for regular attendance and good conduct; and addresses were delivered by the Rev. A. N. Blatchford, the Rev. W. Agar, and Mr. C. Conway. Mr. J. C. Conway was in the chair, and he presented Mr. Agar with an album from the teachers and some of the congregation as a token of their esteem for his services to the school and church progress made in the short time he was with them. Pieces were sung by the choir and children, and the proceedings terminated by the children drawing prizes from a Christmas tree, on which some very useful articles were suspended.

ROCHDALE: CLOVER-STREET.—On New Year's Day there was a Christmas tree and sale of work. Times being bad, not much was expected to be realised, but there was a good attendance, and the receipts amounted to £40. 11s. The room was gaily decorated, and a very pleasant interest was manifested by all present.

SOUTH SHIELDS.—On Wednesday, the 26th December, the Christmas tea meeting of the congregation of Unity Church took place as usual in the schoolroom, which was decorated for the occasion. Recitations, songs, some instrumental music, and Christmas games made the evening a very enjoyable one for all present.

STAND.—The scholars' annual party was held on Saturday last, Dec. 19th, and was well attended. The Rev. W. C. Squier was in the chair, and an excellent entertainment in the shape of songs, recitations, dialogues, and dramas, was provided. Nearly forty prizes were given to regular and punctual scholars. The proceedings were very interesting, and afforded much satisfaction to all present.

WALSALL.—At the soiree held here on New Year's Eve the attendance was such as to tax the limits of the school and chapel to the utmost, and it was felt that another year it would be desirable to make use of one of the local public halls. The Rev. P. Dean presided, and, along with Mr. Charles Lee, gave readings. Messrs. Hallier, and Scott gave recitations; and the choir, with Misses Lenworthy and Hodgkins, and Messrs. A. Homer, Hallier, and E. Scott as soloists, accompanied by Miss Sanders, and conducted by Mr. James Anderson, rendered excellent vocal assistance. Dancing in the school concluded the successful festival.

STOCKTON-ON-TEES.—On the 27th the Sunday-school children's Christmas festival was held in the school-room, which was decorated for the occasion. Many of the scholars recited poetry in such a simple, unaffected, childlike manner as gave much pleasure to all present. Through the kindness of a few friends a Christmas Tree had been provided, with a trifling present for each of the scholars. Besides the hymns sung by the children, various amusing and other songs were sung by the choir. The superintendent, Rev. W. Elliott, distributed rewards to fourteen of the scholars for regular and punctual attendance during the year. Two of the girls who attended Mr. Elliott's evening class had, without any suggestion from anyone, prepared a surprise for him, asking his acceptance of a letter rack and an inkstand as a small token of their respect for him. Mr. Elliott expressed his surprise, thanked them for their unexpected presents, and spoke of the great joy and hopefulness he felt in his efforts to instruct and bless the young.—Mr. R. C. Talintyre and Mr. J. J. Clephan had sent a liberal supply of oranges and nuts, which were distributed to the children as they left the school.

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Letters, articles of intelligence, &c., should be addressed to the Unitarian Herald Office, New Cannon Chambers, 53, Market-street, and not to the private addresses of the Editors.

No anonymous letters inserted: the writer of every letter must append his name for publication. No letter should be more than half a column.

Several paragraphs, just received, stand over a week.

COMING WEEK.

BOOTLE, NEAR LIVERPOOL.—On Tuesday evening, in the Town Hall, Merton Road, Bootle, Lecture by the Rev. B. Fletcher Williams, on "What do we mean by Unitarianism?" LONDON: LITTLE PORTLAND-STREET.—On Sunday the Morning Lecture will be omitted, but the usual Service at 11.15 will be held.

SOUTHPORT.—On Thursday next, annual meeting of the Liverpool District Association.

WHITCHURCH.—Anniversary meeting, on Tuesday next, W. Rathbone, Esq., M.P., in the chair.

BIRTH.

COOKE.—On the 2nd inst., at 2, Cromwell Terrace, Hulton-street, Moss Side West, Manchester, the wife of J. S. Cooke, of a daughter.

MARRIAGE.

LAWSON—WILLSON.—On the 1st inst., in the Church of the Divine Unity, Newcastle-on-Tyne, by the Rev. Alfred Payne, Matthew F. Lawson to Henrietta Willson, only daughter of Isaac Newmarch.

DEATHS.

ANDERTON.—On the 24th ult., at Albert-street, Padilham, Margaret, wife of Mr. Cornelius Anderton, in her 53rd year. CLARKSON.—On the 28th ult., aged 85, Elizabeth, widow of the late John Clarkson, of Liverpool.

HOLLAND.—On the 25th ult., aged 16 years, Arthur, youngest son of Thomas Holland, of Padilham.

JOHNSON.—On the 28th ult., at Rugby, after a short illness, Harold Paget, the beloved son of Thomas Fielding and Agnes Johnson, of Brookfield, Leicester, aged 12 years.

LITTLE.—On the 31st ult., suddenly, Sam, the second son of John and Anne Little, of 83, Brunswick-street, Chorlton-on-Medlock, Manchester. Friends will please accept this intimation.

WOOD.—On the 25th ult., at the Butts, Rochdale, Joseph Wood, banker, in his 87th year. Friends will please accept this intimation.

ARMSTRONG & RICHARDS, St. Ann's Place, Manchester.—BEST NOTTINGHAM HOSIERY, for Ladies and Children. PARIS SCARFS. SILK GLOVES, for dress, six-buttoned, &c. &c.

H. OGDEN & SON,
MANUFACTURERS OF USEFUL AND ARTISTIC FURNITURE.

ORIGINAL DESIGNS AND SOUND CONSTRUCTION AT MODERATE COST.

WAREHOUSE—128, DEANSGATE, } MANCHESTER.
MANUFACTORY—CORNBROOK, }

THE DINNER SHERRY. 24s. PER DOZEN.

The season of the year having arrived when light wines, so agreeable in warmer weather, give place to those of a more generous character, we beg to draw attention to the above wine. For years we have given great attention to keep up and improve its quality, and to those who require a delicate clean-flavoured sherry, free from spirit, we submit it with confidence, and ask comparison with wine usually sold at 30s.

A considerable saving can be made taking
Quarter-cask, 27 gallons, at £14. 5s. } cask included.
Octave, 13½ gallons, at £7. 5s. }

Samples can be tasted. Price list of 32 Sherries and other Wine free by post.

JAMES SMITH & COMPANY, Wine Merchants, 26, Market-street, Manchester; also at Liverpool and Birmingham.

BRITISH AND FOREIGN UNITARIAN ASSOCIATION.

LOCAL COMMITTEE FOR MANCHESTER AND THE DISTRICT:
W. GASKELL, M.A., Chairman.
C. T. POYNTING, B.A., Hon. Sec.
HARRY RAWSON, Local Treasurer.

MANCHESTER.

NEW SUBSCRIPTIONS.		£	s.	d.
Ashton, John		2	2	0
Ashton, John E.		1	1	0
Blackley, Dr.		1	0	0
Brown, Mrs.		1	1	0
Baker, Mrs.		1	1	0
*Brooks, Jas. Howard		1	1	0
Beard, J. Russell		1	1	0
Brothers, A.		1	1	0
Broome, Joseph		3	3	0
Brooks, Miss Mary		1	1	0
Clay, George		1	1	0
*Cushman, Rev. W. G.		0	5	0
Chorlton, John		1	1	0
Davidson, Mrs.		0	5	0
Denny, John		2	2	0
Denny, John, jun.		1	1	0
Dunkerley, C. C.		1	1	0
Dunkerley, A.		0	10	0
Duncan, John		0	10	0
Fretwell, Miss F. E.		1	1	0
Fletcher, Dr. Shepherd		1	1	0
Fletcher, John		1	1	0
Ferguson, John		1	1	0
Guthrie, Edwin		1	1	0
Houghton, Mrs. Jane		1	1	0
Hull, John		2	2	0
*Heald, Nicholas		1	1	0
*Hadfield, John		1	1	0
Harwood, Mrs.		1	1	0
Hewer, Miss		0	5	0
Hankinson, Miss E.		0	5	0
Howard, Thos.		1	1	0
Heys, John		0	2	6
Horrocks, Wm.		1	1	0
Holmes, James		1	1	0
Horrocks, Joseph		1	1	0
Heywood, Abel, jun.		0	10	6
Jones, T. P.		0	5	0
Jenkins, William John		0	10	0
Jordan, William		0	10	6
Jones, John		1	1	0
Knight, Robert		1	1	0
Kendall, John B. A.		1	1	0
Lawson, Mrs.		1	1	0
*Leigh, Henry		2	2	0
Lawton, Edward		0	5	0
Lindley, Samuel		5	0	0
Lind, Miss		0	10	0
Leigh, George H.		1	1	0
Milnes, C. B.		1	1	0
*Marriott, Rev. J. T.		1	1	0
Nicholson, J. Holme		1	1	0
Moss, William		1	1	0
Nicholson, Francis		2	2	0
Oliver, Royston		0	10	0
Oxden, Samuel		1	1	0
Ord, W. G. H.		3	3	0
Oliver, James		5	0	0
Peacock, John		1	1	0
Pickles, Mrs.		0	10	0
Pilcher, Albert		0	10	6
Pearson, N.		1	1	0
Perkins, Joseph		1	1	0
Pilcher, Robert S.		1	1	0
Renold, Hans		1	1	0
Rowley, Charles		1	1	0
Ramsay, P. J.		1	1	0
Schott, J. W.		2	2	0
Schwind, Mrs.		0	10	0
*Thomas, John		2	2	0
Talbot, W. H.		2	2	0
Tafel, C.		1	1	0
Thomas, Miss (Bowdon)		1	1	0
Wild, John		0	5	0
Wood, Charles		1	1	0
Wilcox, Joseph		1	1	0
Whitworth, William		1	1	0
Wilson, John		0	10	0
Wood, J. B.		1	1	0
Walsley, G. J.		1	1	0
Woolley, Hermann		1	1	0
Winterbottom, A.		1	1	0
Wadsworth, George, sen.		1	1	0
*Viner, Edwin		1	1	0
Wade, Richard		1	1	0
Wilkie, George		1	1	0
Wilkinson, Henry B.		1	1	0
Wood, John		0	10	6

Doth Lome.

*Allen, E.	0	2	6
*Allen, J. E.	0	2	6
*Archer, Thomas	0	2	6
*Branton, G.	0	2	6
*Branton, Miss	0	1	0
*Branton, W.	0	1	0
*Etchells, J.	0	2	6
*Eartington, John	0	1	0
*Follitt, Luke	0	2	6
*Robinson, T. G.	0	2	6
*Schiffeld, G.	0	5	0
*Thomas, Rev. H.	0	5	0
*Wolstencroft, G.	0	1	0

INCREASED SUBSCRIPTIONS.

Gaskell, Rev. W.	1	1	0
Johnson, John	0	5	0
Nicholson, Robert	1	1	0
Phillips, John	0	10	0
Pilcher, Jesse	1	0	0
Poynting, Rev. T. E.	0	5	0
Poynting, Rev. C. T.	0	5	0
Wells, Rev. G. H., M.A.	0	10	0

DONATIONS.

Aspland, Mrs.	2	0	0
A Friend	1	1	0
A Friend (Oxford)	0	2	0
Aspland, Mrs.	0	4	0
Brooks, Miss Mary	1	1	0
Fryer, Mr.	0	10	0
Field, S.	2	2	0
Hall, Miss Anne, Bowdon	5	0	0
*Hill, J., Manchester	1	1	0
Heywood, Alderman	5	0	0
Ingham, Wm.	0	5	0
Lindley, Samuel	5	0	0
Little, David A.	0	5	0
Lyons, Joseph	1	1	0
Milnes, Miss Lucy	1	1	0
Pearson, N.	1	0	0
Palmer, H. N.	0	10	6
*Scholes, Mrs., Manchester	1	0	0
Walden, Miss	1	1	0

EAST LANCASHIRE.

BOLTON.

NEW SUBSCRIPTIONS.

Bowman, C.	1	1	0
Bowman, Mrs. C.	1	1	0
Briggs, H.	0	10	6

Bromley, James	0	10	6
Cunliffe, G.	1	1	0
Cunliffe, Mrs., sen.	1	1	0
Garratt, Mrs.	1	1	0
Gerrard, Josh.	1	1	0
*Haslam, J. O.	1	1	0
Haslam, Percy	3	3	0
Haslam, Mrs.	1	1	0
Haslam, Miss	1	1	0
Haslam, R. E.	1	1	0
Haslam, Louis	1	1	0
Haslam, Mrs. W.	0	10	6
Hollins, J. C.	2	2	0
Heywood, Mrs.	1	1	0
*Heywood, R.	0	10	6
Harwood, Thos.	1	1	0
Haslam, Misses	1	1	0
Harwood, Mrs. sen.	1	1	0
Harwood, John	2	2	0
Haworth, Mr. and Mrs.	1	1	0
Wright, Caleb	1	1	0
Ingles, W.	1	1	0
Kay, Miss	1	1	0
Lazonby, Rev. A.	0	10	6
Potter, E. P.	1	1	0

INCREASED SUBSCRIPTIONS.

Bramley, A.	2	2	0
Crook, Joseph	3	3	0
Crook, Joshua	1	1	0

DONATIONS.

Greenhalgh, Miss M., Little Lever	0	10	0
Harwood, Mrs. R.	1	0	0
Wright, Caleb	2	0	0

LIFE MEMBER.

Greg, Arthur, Eagley, Bolton	10	10	0
------------------------------	----	----	---

BURY.

NEW SUBSCRIPTIONS.

Alcock, S. H.	1	1	0
Duckworth, John (Mayor of Bury)	5	0	0
*Grundy, John	5	0	0
*Grundy, Harry	0	7	6
Holt, Thomas	0	10	0
Hoff, Wm.	0	10	0
*Kay, Robert	0	7	6
Mercer, Wm.	1	1	0
Wrigley, Miss	1	1	0
Wrigley, Thomas	2	2	0

INCREASED SUBSCRIPTIONS.

Cartwright, Joshua	0	10	0
Walsley, Rev. D., from 5s. to	1	1	0

DONATIONS.

Ashton, David	1	1	0
Burrow, Joseph	2	0	0
Grundy, Miss	1	0	0
Lees, Wm.	1	0	0
Nuttall, Thomas	1	0	0
Nuttall, Miss	1	0	0
Riley, Thomas	0	5	0
Wrigley, Thomas	25	0	0

ROCHDALE.

NEW SUBSCRIPTIONS.

Ashworth, Miss S.	1	1	0
Barlow, T.	2	2	0
Clegg, James	0	10	6
Clegg, E.	1	1	0
Clegg, O.	0	10	6
Gudgeon, Mr.	0	5	0
Hawkins, Mr.	1	1	0
Heape, B., jun.	1	1	0
Heap, Miss	1	1	0
*Jackson, J.	1	1	0
Jones, Mr.	0	10	6
Leach, Mrs.	1	1	0
Leach, Miss	1	1	0
Lord, Mr.	0	10	6
New, P. P.	0	10	6
Shawcross, L.	0	10	6
Liddell, Mr.	0	10	6
Wood, Josh.	3	3	0
Wood, Josh, jun.	1	1	0

INCREASED SUBSCRIPTIONS.

Heape, R. T.	3	3	0
Shawcross, W. T.	2	2	0

DONATION.

Simpson, Alderman	0	10	6
-------------------	---	----	---

STAND.

NEW SUBSCRIPTIONS.

Roscow, F. C.	1	1	0
Clough, Edwin	0	10	6

DONATION.

Phillips, R. N., M.P.	25	0	0
Taylor, W. H.	0	10	0
Fletcher, Miss	1	0	0

EAST CHESHIRE.

GEE CROSS.

NEW SUBSCRIPTIONS.

Ashton, Miss	2	2	0
Alcock, J.	1	1	0
Ashworth, J.	0	5	0
Beard, James R.	1	1	0
Berry, W.	1	1	0
Barlow, Thomas	0	5	0
Barlow, H.	1	1	0
Booth, Mrs.	0	5	0
Booth, J.	0	2	6
Cheetham, J.	1	1	0
Cocker, B.	0	10	0
Cooke, Thomas	0	2	6
Cox, H. B.	0	5	0
Crook, J.	0	10	0
Edgill, W. N.	0	10	0
Fallows, John	0	10	0
*Hibbert, C.	1	1	0
Hibbert, F.	1	1	0
Hibbert, John	1	1	0
Hibbert, Joseph	1	1	0
Hibbert, Mrs. Joseph	1	1	0
Hibbert, O.	0	10	6
Hibbert, R.	1	1	0
Hibbert, W.	2	2	0
Hibbert, Mrs. T.	0	10	6
Higginbotham, James, Flowery Field	0	5	0
Hall, Joseph	0	5	0
Houghton, A.	1	1	0
Hopwood, Josh.	0	5	0
Leech, Mrs.	2	0	0
Middleton, H.	0	2	6
Oldham, Josh.	0	10	0
Oldham, Orlando	2	2	0
Oldham and Fogg	0	5	0
Platt, James	0	5	0
Platt, Mrs.	0	5	0
Platt, W.	0	5	0
Platt, A.	0	5	0
Robinson, Wm.	1	1	0
Robinson, Samuel	1	1	0
Shepley, Thos.	1	1	0
Shipman, Miss A.	1	1	0
Shipman, Miss E.	1	1	0
Smith, Z. B.	1	1	0
Smith, W.	0	10	6
Smith, W. jun.	0	10	6
Smith, John	1	1	0
Smith, Edmund	1	1	0

Swindells, G.	0	5	0
Taylor, J.	0	10	0
Taylor, W.	0	10	0
*Thornely, James	5	0	0
Thornely, F.	1	1	0
Thornely, John	1	1	0
Thornely, Miss	0	10	0
Thornely, Thos.	2	2	0
Whitworth, Elias	1	1	0
Woolley, Thomas	0	10	6

INCREASED SUBSCRIPTIONS.

Aspland, A. P., increased to	2	2	0
Hibbert, E., increased to	2	2	0

DONATIONS.

Hibbert, Walter	0	10	0
Hibbert, J. C.	0	10	0
Billinge, Mark	0	10	0
Smith, Z. B.	1	0	0

DUKINFIELD.

NEW SUBSCRIPTIONS.

An Ex-Mayor of Lancashire, per G. H. Vance	20	0	0
Broadrick, E. B., Lancashire, per G. H. Vance	0	5	0
Hyde, Edward	1	1	0
Harrop, Alfred	1	1	0
Harrop, Mrs.	0	5	0
Ingham, Miss	1	0	0
Rudcliffe, Jonathan	0	2	6
Wood, W. E.	0	5	0

DONATIONS.

Hyde, Frank	0	10	0
A Friend	0	10	0
A Friend	0	10	0

STALYBRIDGE.

Chorlton, Alfred	0	5	0
Heaton, James	0	10	6
Oliver, Joseph	1	1	0

STOCKPORT.

NEW SUBSCRIPTIONS.

*Heys, O. E.	0	10	6
Hulme, Miss	0	5	0
Hulme, Samuel	0	5	0
Johnson, Mrs.	1	1	0
*Marcus, Dr.	1	1	0
Marshall, Mrs.	2	2	0
Marshall, H. A.	1	1	0
Marshall, Herbert	1	1	0
Swan, Mr.	1	1	0
Turner, Henry, B.A.	2	2	0
Thomas, Mr.	0	5	0
Washington, Messrs.	1	1	0

INCREASED SUBSCRIPTIONS.

Colvert, W.	0	10
Chadwick, T.	1	1
Dickie, M.	1	1
Hyde, W.	1	1
Johnson, J. G.	1	1
Robinson, R.	1	1
Spedding, James	0	10
Thornely, A. W.	1	1

The Unitarian Herald.

EDITED BY

REV. JAMES BLACK, M.A., & REV. S. FLETCHER WILLIAMS.

VOL. XVIII.—872.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 11, 1878.

PRICE 1D.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE.
Doings and Sayings.....	10
American Notes.....	10
Scottish Notes.....	10
Books and Authors.....	10
Thoughts on Religion.....	11
Church Curiosities.....	11
'Tis Wise in Man to Make a Note of Time.....	12
Death of Victor Emmanuel.....	12
Dr. Martineau on Church Fellowship.....	12
Theological Literature.....	12
Dr. Parker's Rhetoric.....	12
Dr. Martineau on the Limits of Common Worship.....	13
Dutch Churches and their Theologies.....	13
Our Sunday Schools.....	14
University of London.....	14
Scottish Unitarian Association.....	14
Aberdeen: Welcome to Rev. G. T. Walters.....	15
News of our Churches.....	15

WALSALL.—ORGAN OPENING, Wednesday night next, at 7.30. Special Service, Preacher, Rev. J. P. HOPPS. Midland Unitarians cordially invited. Sunday, January 20th, the Minister (the Rev. P. Dean) and the Rev. John Harrison, will conduct special services.—Collections for the Organ Fund.

MANCHESTER UNITARIAN SUNDAY SCHOOL UNION.
The FIFTH MEETING of the Session will be held in Rochdale Road Schoolroom, Sunday afternoon, January 20th. Mr. CUTHBERT C. GRUNDY, F.L.S., of Bury, will give a paper, subject, "The Sunday School Teacher." Tea at four, fourpence each. Chairman, Mr. JOHN HEYS, President. Friends are invited. DAVID THOMPSON, Hon. Sec. 5, Clarence-street, Miles Platting.

UNITARIAN HOME MISSIONARY BOARD.
MEMORIAL HALL, MANCHESTER.

The ANNUAL BUSINESS MEETING will be held
On TUESDAY, January 22, 1878,
in
CROSS-STREET CHAPEL ROOM,
AT THREE O'CLOCK.
DAVID AINSWORTH, Esq., the Retiring President, in the Chair.

THE SOIREE
will take place the same evening in the Memorial Hall,
Mr. Alderman GRUNDY (Mayor of Manchester), the President, will take the chair at six o'clock.

The following gentlemen are also expected to be present and to take part in the proceedings:—Revs. John Page Hopps, Leicester; H. E. Dowson, B.A., Gee Cross; G. H. Wells, M.A., Gorton; and S. A. Steinthal, Manchester; Messrs. Henry Tate, Liverpool; George Buckton, Leeds; Richard Peacock, J.P., Gorton; Alderman Harwood, Salford; Herbert Burrows, Cambridge; Frank Taylor, Bolton; John Kendall, B.A.; Harry Rawson, and John Moore.

TEA WILL BE ON THE TABLES AT FIVE O'CLOCK.
The Musical Arrangements
Will be Conducted by Mr. THOS. RAWSON.

Tickets, One Shilling each, may be had at the Memorial Hall, or from Messrs. JOHNSON & RAWSON, Market-street.
H. E. DOWSON, Hon. Secs.
F. NICHOLSON, Hon. Secs.

MANCHESTER NEW COLLEGE, LONDON.
Notice is hereby given, that the ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING of Trustees, for the election of officers, and general business, will be held in Cross-street Chapel room, Manchester, on Thursday, the 17th January, 1878, at one o'clock precisely.
R. D. DARBISHIRE, Secretaries.
CHARLES BEARD.

MANCHESTER NEW COLLEGE.
COURSE OF LECTURES
ON
THE BASIS OF RELIGION IN THE MORAL AND
SPIRITUAL NATURE OF MAN,
BY
PROFESSOR THE REV. JAMES DRUMMOND, B.A.

The College adheres to its original principle of freely imparting Theological knowledge, without insisting on the adoption of particular Theological doctrines.

PART II.—THE SPIRITUAL NATURE.
SYNOPSIS.
I. The existence of a Primitive Religious Element in Man, an evidence of the existence of an Object answering to it.
II. The Needs of the Religious element a Criterion of Truth. Remarks on the method of examining the religious element.
III. Criticism of Schleiermacher's definition of Religion.
IV. Criticism of Theodore Parker's definition of Religion. Criticism of the statement that when religious truth is presented to the mind, we are conscious of its veracity. First step in a sound method.
V. Sources of Error. Spiritual qualifications of the Theologian.
VI. The Construction of Doctrines. Facts in Religious History confirmatory of the theory. Place for a Revelation.
The Lectures will be delivered on Wednesday, the 6th of February, and the five following Wednesdays, in University Hall, Gordon Square, at 8.30 p.m.
The Lectures will be open to the public, on payment of an admission fee of 1s. for each Lecture, or 5s. for the six.
Tickets for this course may be obtained at the Hall on admission to the first Lecture.
R. D. DARBISHIRE, Secretaries.
CHARLES BEARD.

EAST CHESHIRE CHRISTIAN UNION

FOR MISSIONARY PURPOSES.
The ANNUAL MEETING will be held in the Fitzalan-street Chapel, Glossop, on Saturday, January 26th.
The Business Meeting will begin at twelve o'clock noon.
At three o'clock a Religious Service will be held, when a Sermon will be preached by Rev. W. GASKELL, M.A. After the service, tea will be provided at a charge of sixpence.
A Public Meeting will be held at six o'clock. The presence of representatives of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, the Manchester District Unitarian Association, and the East Lancashire Unitarian Mission, and other friends is expected.

FREE-TRADE HALL MEETING of British and Foreign Unitarian Association.—Friends who have not yet sent in their PROMISES of NEW or ADDITIONAL SUBSCRIPTIONS or DONATIONS will oblige by forwarding them, as early as convenient, to Mr. HARRY RAWSON, local treasurer, Market-street, Manchester.

BRITISH AND FOREIGN UNITARIAN ASSOCIATION.

LOCAL COMMITTEE FOR MANCHESTER AND THE DISTRICT:
W. GASKELL, M.A., Chairman.
C. T. POYNTING, B.A., Hon. Sec.
HARRY RAWSON, Local Treasurer.

RECEIVED DURING THE PAST WEEK.

NEW SUBSCRIPTIONS.	£	s.	d.
A. O., Manchester.....	0	10	6
Bowes, J., Manchester.....	0	10	0
Golland, Smith, Manchester.....	1	1	0
Golland, Miss, Manchester.....	0	10	6
Golland, Miss Mary, Manchester.....	0	10	6
Kay, Robert H.....	2	2	0
Salomonson, Miss A., Manchester.....	1	1	0
Graham, John, Mossley.....	0	5	0
Firth, Mrs., Mossley.....	0	5	0
Heap, Joseph, Mossley.....	0	5	0
Lawton, Jon., N., Mossley.....	0	5	0
Barker, Philip, Nantwich.....	1	1	0

DONATIONS.
Tootill, John, Little Lever..... 0 10 0
Local Committee: Balance after defraying expenses of Free-trade Hall Meeting..... 3 13 4
HENRY TERNER, Secretary per Local Committee.
January 10th, 1878.

WANTED, an ORGANIST, for the First Presbyterian Church, Banbridge, Ireland; salary £40 per annum.—Apply to Hugh Glass, solicitor, Banbridge, Ireland.

WANTED, a Good HOUSE and SHOP near Manchester (bus or rail), suitable for Grocer and Confectioner, in neighbourhood of one of our churches, with good day schools.—Address J. PHILLIPS, Herald office.

WANTED, by a Young Lady, able to keep books, Situation to Manage or Assist in Confectioner's Shop: understands grocery: salary, with residence, £25 per year: references exchanged.—Address A 1, Herald office.

BROOKFIELD CHURCH, GORTON.—WANTED, a steady MARRIED MAN, with some knowledge of gardening, to devote the whole of his time in keeping the grounds in order, making graves, cleaning the Church and schools, and attendance on Sundays: wages, 25s., house, and sundry perquisites.—Address Rev. G. H. WELLS, Gorton.

TO PARENTS AND GUARDIANS.—John Wild (successor to Louis Siebold) has a VACANCY for a Well-Educated Youth, about 16, as a PUPIL to the business of a Chemist and Druggist. Unusual facilities will be given for attending lectures, &c., to qualify for the respective examinations.—225, Oxford-street, Manchester.

HOLLY BANK SCHOOL, Birkdale, Southport, will RE-OPEN on Wednesday, January 23rd.
B. TEMPLAR, Principal.

MR. LANCASTER, Organist of Mill Hill Chapel, Leeds, will be glad to receive his PUPILS on and after the 17th of January, 1878.—For terms, &c., apply as above.

BRIDPORT.—The Rev. JOHN DAVIES, M.A., Educates Six Pupils as Boarders in his house. Terms moderate. TWO VACANCIES.

SEASIDE EDUCATION FOR GIRLS DYSART HOUSE, CLEVEDON.—Miss E. MARTIN'S pupils will ASSEMBLE on Tuesday, January 22nd.

SOUTHPORT.—BOARDING SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.—Miss CURTIS will RE-OPEN her School Jan. 23rd, 1878. Prospectus on application.—Westbourne, Grosvenor Road, Birkdale.

KNUTSFORD.—MISS ARDERN'S Boarding-School for Girls will RE-OPEN after the Christmas holidays on January 21st. Terms and references will be sent on application.

CAMBRIDGE.—W. STODDART, B.A., of Gwydyr House School, can receive a Few BOARDERS at moderate terms. Young Gentlemen prepared for the Camb. Local Examinations and the University.

MRS. and Miss ARMSTRONG (formerly of Durham Park, Bristol), wish to receive Two or Three BOARDERS into their house at Nottingham, to attend the High School for Girls.—64, Forest Road West, Nottingham.

KINDER GARTEN and PESTALOZZIAN SCHOOL.—Miss LEWIN receives several Little Boys and Girls as Boarders. The next Quarter will begin January 22nd.—Shakespeare-street, Nottingham.

EDUCATION.—BATH.—Mrs. JEFFERY receives as BOARDERS Girls attending the Classes of the Bath High School. The NEXT TERM will COMMENCE January 22nd, 1878.—Address Mrs. JEFFERY, 9, Norfolk Crescent, Bath.

HOPE LEA, HEATON NORRIS, STOCKPORT.—HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.—Conducted by Dr. and Mrs. MARCUS, assisted by able masters. The majority of the Senior Girls who passed the last Oxford Examinations in the Manchester centre came from this school.—The NEXT TERM commences on Tuesday, January 15.

LANCASTER.—The Rev. D. DAVIES, B.A., will RE-OPEN School on Friday, January the 25th. A few VACANCIES either for juniors or seniors to join in preparation for the matriculation examination of the London University in 1879. Prospectus on application. Present address. "To the care of Mrs. Davis, Almswood, Evesham."

BROOK HOUSE, KNUTSFORD, CHESHIRE.—BOARDING SCHOOL for GIRLS, conducted by Mrs. FRANK SHAWCROSS, assisted by Resident English and Foreign Governesses. Teachers of eminence attend for instruction in Music, Singing, Harmony, Drawing, Dancng, &c. Prospectus and references forwarded on application. The NEXT TERM begins January 17.

MOUNT VERNON HIGH SCHOOL. NOTTINGHAM.—Established 1844.
Mr. EDWIN SMITH, M.A., with competent assistance, thoroughly prepares Boys for College, the University Local Examinations, or for Business. For prospectus address Sandy Knoll, Forest Road, Nottingham.—SCHOOL RE-OPENS January 14th, 1878.

EDUCATION IN GERMANY.
Miss M. WAGNER (17, Helenenstrasse, Wiesbaden, Germany), who has passed the Prussian State Examination, and possesses the experience of several first-class English schools, receives a limited number of YOUNG LADIES for Private Education, or to visit the excellent College of the town, with home assistance. Climate very healthy, with mild winter. Hot and other mineral springs. English and German references. For terms and further particulars address as above.

YORK: 26, HIGH PETER GATE.—Miss AMY HERRING begs to announce that she has OPENED, at the above address, a SCHOOL for the instruction of Young Ladies in all branches, comprising a first-class education with liberal views. Reference kindly permitted by the following:—Dr. G. Vance Smith, The Parade, Carmarthen; the Rev. C. Welbeloved, 38, Monkgate, York; Miss Swaine, 1, The Crescent, York.—Terms on application.

Pupils are prepared for the University Examinations, several having passed most successfully.—NEXT TERM commences January 14th.

NO. 1, ENVILLE VILLAS, STOURBRIDGE.

MIDDLE-CLASS GIRLS' SCHOOL, conducted by Miss MORGAN. There will be VACANCIES for TWO BOARDERS after the Christmas holidays. It is Miss Morgan's aim to provide her pupils with a comfortable and happy home, while supplying them with the intellectual advantages which are usually only to be obtained in the best high schools or colleges. Professors or Governesses attend for Arithmetic, Music (Vocal and Instrumental), Latin, French, Drawing, Dancing, and Calisthenics, and Plain Sewing. Terms, 40 guineas per annum. Unexceptionable references.

OPEN SCHOLARSHIPS WITHOUT EXAMINATION.

The Hibbert Trustees are prepared to grant at their meeting in June next One or Two Scholarships of £200 per annum each, for two years, to Graduates of any University in Great Britain and Ireland, between the ages of twenty-one and twenty-eight, to enable them to study Theology and Mental and Moral Philosophy at Universities in Germany, Holland, or Switzerland (or elsewhere), subject to the approval of the Trustees. Full particulars may be obtained of the Secretary, to whom applications for Scholarships must be forwarded before March 30, 1878.

PERCY LAWFORD, Secretary.
University Hall, Gordon Square, W.C.

HEATH BROW SCHOOL, HAMPSTEAD, LONDON, N.W.

Classics and English subjects: Rev. E. M. Geldart, M.A., Oxon. and Mr. Arch. Ballantyne. Mathematics and Natural Philosophy: John Bridge, M.A., London. French: Dr. Bouron des Clayes. French, examiner in: Professor Charles Cassal, L.L.D. German: Rev. E. M. Geldart, M.A., Oxon. Chemistry: Mr. H. Maiden, under the direction of Professor Bauff, M.A. Writing: C. F. King, B.A., London, Writing Master in University College School. Drawing: Mr. W. H. Fisk, Head Drawing Master in University College School. Gymnastics and Fencing: Mr. Winterbottom. There is a PREPARATORY CLASS for little Boys and Girls under ten years of age. The next Term begins on Thursday, January 24th, 1878.—Prospectus on application to Mrs. CASE.

ARMSTRONG & RICHARDS, St. Ann's Place, Manchester.—SHIRTS, of superior quality, made to order.

ARMSTRONG & RICHARDS, St. Ann's Place, Manchester.—BEST NOTTINGHAM Hosiery, for Ladies and Children. PARIS SCARFS. SILK GLOVES for dress, six-buttoned, &c. &c.

THE DINNER SHERRY.

21s. PER DOZEN.
The season of the year having arrived when light wines, so agreeable in warmer weather, give place to those of a more generous character, we beg to draw attention to the above wine. For years we have given great attention to keep up and improve its quality, and to those who require a delicate clean-flavoured sherry, free from spirit, we submit it with confidence, and ask comparison with wine usually sold at 30s.

A considerable saving can be made taking
Quarter-cask, 27 gallons, at £14. 5s. } cask included.
Octave, 13½ gallons, at £7. 5s. }

Samples can be tasted. Price list of 32 Sherries and other Wine free by post.

JAMES SMITH & COMPANY, Wine Merchants, 26, Market-street, Manchester; also at Liverpool and Birmingham.

DOINGS AND SAYINGS.

The Municipal Council of Cattowitz, in Germany, is composed of 17 Jews and 13 Christians.

The Grand Duchess of Hesse has given a donation of £50 to the projected memorial at Bristol to the late Miss Mary Carpenter.

In a recent auctioneer's catalogue the lots numbered from 203 to 210 were each described as "five cwt. of printed sermons." Those who bought them would very likely be "sold again!"

During the seven years that have passed since disestablishment, Irish Churchmen have raised for the support of their Church £2,306,000. Is there a single Churchman in Ireland to-day who feels one whit the poorer for what he has given?

The opening of a leader in the Jewish World is surely a sign of good times coming: "What have Jews to do with Low Churchism?" it may not unnaturally be asked. We may answer individually in the words of Terence: "I am a man, and I count nothing pertaining to humanity foreign to me."

Cardinal Manning—himself fixed upon as the next Pope by a small party—wishes to remove the next conclave to Malta, but the majority of the sacred college are unwilling to leave Rome, and are resolved, in their suspicion of a 'vert, on an Italian Pope, who will no longer regard the Vatican as a "prison," from which he shall not emerge.

Canon Farrar hits the nail on the head when he says that nobody can raise the working classes but themselves. If they would spend less at the public-house and more at home, and if they would only learn the lessons of temperance and thrift, their trade would recover by the same moral laws as those by which it had originally risen.

The Glasgow Presbytery of the Church of Scotland took cognisance on Wednesday of the proposed "presumptuous re-establishment of the Popish Roman Catholic hierarchy in Scotland," and appointed a committee comprising all the more prominent and influential members of the Court to inquire into and report on the whole matter.

Times are changed since actors and actresses were refused burial in consecrated ground. The Bishop of Manchester lately spoke in favour of players and theatres, and the Bishop of Melbourne, whom those in Bayswater knew under the name of Mr. Moorhouse, rector of Paddington, has been inviting Mr. Creswick, who is on a professional tour in Australia, to read Shakspeare's plays to the clergy and their families at the Bishop's own residence. What will ex-Bishop Perry say?

Mr. Froude, in some notes from his "South African Journal," gives the following, written at Trabauch:—"Two of the princes are Christians, and are anxious for their father's conversion. But he sticks to his heathenism. 'My sons,' he said, 'want me to be baptized. I say to them, Christians here,' pointing to the Wesleyan station, 'and Christians there,' pointing to the Anglican monks. 'Christians there won't speak to Christians here. When one of them has converted the other it will be time to come to me.' Is this an unnatural argument? With our own supercilious sectarianism at home, should not we ponder it?"

Though Christianity did not originate, it gave a quickening and strengthening influence to benevolence. Hence we quite coincide with the recent remark of the Lord Chancellor that one of the greatest triumphs of Christianity was that it cared for the sick and afflicted. The ancients had noble structures, grand theatres, forums, and public buildings, but the construction of hospitals, sanatoriums, and almshouses was unknown to them, and was reserved for the mild and beneficent sway of Christianity, which, following the example of its Great Master, addressed itself to the treatment, alleviation, and cure of disease.

At a meeting at Wigton, the other night, Sir Wilfrid Lawson said:—"With regard to the Burials Question, as the burial service was intended to benefit the living and not the dead, he had a plan to recommend to his State Church friends. Instead of burying Dissenters, let them, like malefactors, be hung on gibbets all round the churchyards. Then they could point out one as a desperate Methodist who infested the country for many years, and another as an abandoned Ranter." No doubt, some good Churchmen would not be indisposed to adopt Sir Wilfrid's plan; but, alas! the good old times are gone when such a plan would have been feasible.

Sir John Strachey calculates that the cost of the recent Indian famine was nine millions and a quarter sterling, and he estimates that the average annual amount to be provided for famine relief at a million and a half. The gaunt spectre that visits from time to time our Indian empire refuses to be bought off by an occasional loan: his claims must be met by increased taxation. An equalisation of the salt-tax, a low licence-tax on trades throughout India, and an increase in Northern India in the local rates on land, are the principal means to be employed for that purpose. A sense of intense relief has been universally experienced and expressed at the determination of the Government not to re-impose an income-tax as a last resource.

The Bishop of Exeter, in corresponding with a Captain Tolcher about the Confessional, lays it down that "it is for the people to judge themselves whether they will accept what is said by any minister;" and again, that "they are bound to exercise their own judgment, and accept only what their own consciences confirm." We do not quite see how his Lordship reconciles this with one of the Creeds which, we suppose, he sometimes recites, beginning "Whosoever will be saved, before all things it is necessary that he hold the Catholic faith, which faith except every one do keep whole and undefiled without doubt he shall perish everlastingly." This looks as if there might be cases in which it would be very dangerous for people to "exercise their own judgment and accept only what their own consciences confirm."

The election of Dr. John Henry Newman to an honorary fellowship in Trinity College, Oxford—the college from which he took his degree and of which he was a scholar before his election to Oriel—is an event in several respects remarkable. A theological revolution in his own mind severs his connection with Oxford and opens the way to his being for a time Rector of the Roman Catholic University of Dublin. Oxford is now on the brink of further changes; but it has already been sufficiently altered to allow Dr. Newman's partial resumption of former relations with it without any necessary loosening of the ties which bind him to them. He is probably the first Roman Catholic who has been Fellow of a College, honorary or otherwise, since mass was said in Magdalen Chapel nearly two hundred years ago.

AMERICAN NOTES.

A GREAT "CHURCH DEBT RAISER."

Mr. Edward Kimball, of New York, has gained for himself the title of "Church Debt Raiser" from his remarkable success in relieving churches of crushing burdens of debt. Recently he succeeded in leading the "Shepard Memorial Church," in Cambridge, Mass., to a victory over its debt, which amounted to $85,000. These are the details of his triumph:—

"At the usual time for beginning the sermon in the morning service the pastor announced that he would yield his place to Mr. Kimball. Thereupon Mr. Kimball took up the conduct of the meeting, and he did not abandon it before the subscriptions towards the payment of the debt equalled the debt itself. The meeting lasted eight long hours without intermission. The whole thing was entirely unexpected to the congregation. As the afternoon wore on, the neighbours improvised collations in their houses for the workers, who immediately returned to their labour. The Sunday-school could not be held because all the teachers were occupied. Members who thought themselves quite unable to give would go home, but soon return and subscribe as they were able. At last, at seven o'clock in the evening, the pastor declared that the grand work was accomplished."

It is stated that Miss Edith Longfellow, daughter of the poet, is to marry a grandson of R. H. Dana, of Boston.

At a Sunday-school Convention in Kansas, one of the speakers let drop a word which ought to be comfort to a great many of us who can only do a little good at a time: "With a very small glass, you can give drink to thousands, if you only keep dipping." Put this with a recent saying of Zion's Herald: "The greatest practical problem of the pastoral office, probably, is to know how to get all small talents of a church into activity."

SCOTTISH NOTES.

The Episcopal Church is resolved to be upside down with the Pope. The Bishops are agitating for the restoration of the office of Metropolitan. Since 1731 they have only had a Primus.

The Free Presbytery of Aberdeen have framed a cumulative libel against Professor Smith. The friends of religious freedom should keep their eyes on this case. It is by far the most important of the many cases of Scottish heresy now claiming attention.

A scheme is now on foot to raise £100,000 for church extension throughout Scotland, a measure which is declared to be absolutely necessary for the welfare of the Free Church. Glasgow has already subscribed £21,000, Edinburgh £9,000, and Dundee £4,000, with a promise of more.

Rev. George Gilfillan, speaking in Dundee, said he knew some of the members of the Confession Revision Committee. They were full of earnestness, and were determined that the revision should not be a sham but a reality. There was nothing to protect this age from atheistic attacks but the lifting up of the broad banner of the universal love of God. The narrow views in which some men indulged were sowing scepticism broadcast.

It is notable that nearly all the Professors in the Free Church are taking the side of the men that are being suspended and prosecuted for heresy. These men are admittedly among the ablest and most learned the Free Church possesses, and the task of dealing with them will tax both the wisdom and the generalship of that Church to the utmost. Suppose Professor Smith is deposed on the ground of alleged heresy, on what principle can such men as Professors Bruce and Candlish and Salmond, who have so fearlessly defended him, be allowed to remain? Then, again, should Mr. Smith be allowed to retain his position, how are the claims to superior orthodoxy, so loudly vaunted by certain parties in the Free Church, to be sustained? We wait with deep interest the solution of these problems.

Lecturing in Glasgow, the Rev. Fergus Ferguson, of Queen's Park Church, said that in the Church a majority had no right to say to a minority, "Because you do not agree with us you ought to leave the Church," for the simple reason that the Church belonged to no party, however powerful. The Pharisaic spirit which said, "Because you cannot believe with me in everything I separate myself from you," was as monstrous a spirit of intolerance as the sword itself. Such toleration, however, can only be where there are no well-defined creeds requiring subscriptions—as there are in the case of Mr. Ferguson's Church. Those who want to have such liberty to differ with their brethren should join a Church like the Unitarian, where such freedom is avowedly permitted.

BOOKS AND AUTHORS.

The Congregationalist, for January. London: Hodder and Stoughton.

THE number opens with an elaborate and powerful article by the Editor on "The Necessity of an Ethical Revival." Mr. Dale argues with great earnestness that the religious revival we ought to long, and pray, and work for is one that should affect the morals of the Churches as well as their religious sentiment, and ennoble the whole life of those who bear the Christian name. The Rev. T. C. Finlayson, of Manchester, supplies some comments, from the Evangelical point of view, on the "Golden Texts," selected for repetition in the Lessons of the Sunday School Union for 1878. Mrs. Reany's "English Girls at Home" is a capital paper, and a word in season. Some curious and out-of-the-way information is given by Mr. Frederick Hastings in his sketch of Spiridion, who is said to have stood stoutly against the Arians at the Council of Nice, and who has become not only the patron saint, but almost the supreme divinity of the Ionian Isles, his body having been preserved in Corfu. Mr. Matheson's sympathetic memoir of the late Professor Hubert, of Lancashire Independent College, we have read with great interest. The ecclesiastical topic of the month is that of Disestablishment in Scotland, and the consideration of the present condition of that movement in the north seems to us to be both fairer and more comprehensive than the Duke of Argyll's in the Contemporary.

The Expositor for January. London: Hodder and Stoughton.

We are glad to receive a copy of this excellent magazine, which is doing much needed service in Biblical exegesis. The editor, the Rev. T. Cox, of Nottingham, resumes his Commentary on the Book of Job, taking up his Second Colloquy that begins with chap. xv. Mr. Cox's annotations and interpretations are as usual thoughtful, suggestive, and liberal. Professor Plumptre enters into a careful examination of the Samaritan Element in the Gospels and Acts, and suggests at least a probable conclusion which adds much to the interest of the history of Stephen and Philip, as representing the first great expansion in the growth of the Apostolic Church. Canon Farrar, whose previous papers on the Talmud we have seen highly spoken of, lays before us this time a most interesting "Talmudic Cryptograph," in which appear a number of the leaders and teachers of the Rabbinic schools of Palestine and Babylonia, sketched in the canon's well-known graphic way. Professor Fairbairn, of Airedale College, who made a mark as an able and liberal theologian of the Leicester Congregational Union, and whose Studies in Religion and History attests his power as a philosophical thinker, opens what promises to be a valuable series of papers entitled "Studies in the Life of Christ." The number is full of interest for students of the Scriptures.

The Homiletic Quarterly, No. 5, January, 1878. London: R. D. Dickinson.

THIS is an astonishingly cheap publication. It numbers 144 double-column pages, crowded with a great variety of matter, all servicable to preachers and Sunday-school teachers of the Evangelical churches, and not unhelpful to those of unorthodox communities. We have been specially interested in "Biblical Science," by Dr. Duns, of Edinburgh; in the Exposition of the Book of Obadiah by Dr. Glasgow, of Belfast; in the Biblical Expositions by Dr. Alex. Bruce, of Glasgow, Canon Farrar, and others; and in the Commentary on James by Mr. W. Roberts. In all of these there are manifest conscientiousness of work and a regard for the spirit rather than the letter of the Scriptures. Dr. Duns, who devotes his article to Genesis, gives up the six days of creation; admits that the proofs of the earth's antiquity are abundant, unquestionable, and emphatic; maintains that Genesis takes no account of the geological history of the earth, and no account of the first introduction of living forms in time; contends that it is "the record of a series of readjustments to fit the earth to receive new forms of life, and a series of creations of new forms to answer the readjustments." He considers that this view effects "a great deliverance from all doubtful schemes of reconciliation." On the whole, we can give to the Homiletic Quarterly a cordial welcome, and we note that the character of future numbers is guaranteed by the fact that among the contributors to them will be Principal Tulloch, Canon Farrar, Professor Plumptre, Dr. Reynolds, A. M. Fairbairn, Dr. Kennedy, Dr. Enoch Mellor, and a number of other well-known divines.

University Magazine, January, 1878. Hurst and Blackett.

The old Dublin University claims, this new year, a larger constituency as the University Magazine. On the title page we are interested to note that among agencies at "Oxford," "Cambridge," and other Universities of the three Kingdoms, there is one for "Liverpool, Manchester, and Birmingham." Is this a hint that a new University for the great mercantile centres would most fitly name itself after the style of a railway company? The new number abounds with good articles. The Marquis de Nangis, reviewing Mr. Adolphus Trollope's Story of the Life of Pope Pius IX., thinks that only an Italian word can do justice to the pontificate. "It is the most complete fiasco in the history of the Papacy." The series of excellent photograph portraits is continued, the present subject being Mr. Matthew Arnold, about whom there is a paper of attractive gossip and criticism. Dr. Kenningale Cook contemplates "The Ideal University," starting, however, with an inquiry into word-lore, which furnishes an ominous item. The word "university" does not occur in the authorised version of the Bible, but it does in Wicliffe's (Jas. iii.), "Lo hou lilit fier brenneth a ful greet wood? and oure tunge is fier, the university of wickednesse." Here, of course, university means universe. Dr. Cook's Ideal is briefly this:—

When Catholics learn that private judgment would be the strength and glory of a real Church which would embrace every good aspiration, whether it took an ancient, a mediæval, or a modern doctrinal form; and when Protestants, still protesting against slavery of the reason through voluptuous ceremonial and narrow rules of faith, still further expand the growing tolerance, and exchange doctrinal and trifling disputes for a more truly catholic spirit and love, then may we hope for the ideal university on a grander level than ever. What would unite both would be the realisation of a present inspiration, in the light of which the authority of any Peter is put on a level with the authority of Shakespeare, that is, on his own merits, and not on prescription or inculcation. This disintegration of what is unreal is actually taking place. We see the signs of it day by day. Furthermore, the ideal of to-day is the hope of to-morrow, and the working clue of the years.

There is an able paper on Miracle by F. R. Conder, C.E., and an earnest and well-timed plea for the "Employment of [English] Capital in India." But the piece of the number is a view of the "Homestead of a Scientific Mind"—that of Dr. George Boole, by his widow. It is the man of science engaged with home-thoughts—about children's education and the religious interests of men—that is here presented. Of his sayings we can find room only for these:—

He used to say that a sufficient proof, if proof were needed, of the indifference of the religious world generally to everything but the keeping up of a certain routine of theories, would be afforded by the reception given by it to every earnest, pious man who tries to find out the truth. Instead of heartily accepting the man for the sake of what he is, and then assisting him in correcting what they suppose to be his mistakes, clergymen and religious laymen pounce upon errors in doctrine and think them a sufficient reason for excluding him from Church sympathy. He always seemed to think the belief in dogmas, rather than in relationships between men, the crying sin of the age.

Again:—He used often to say that men have no right to expect to be able to judge of what is true doctrine, till they have made their brains clear by some generations of observance of known moral and sanitary laws. This, adds his wife, is a scientific version of a saying that will probably occur to most of us—"If anyone desire to do God's will, he will know concerning doctrine."

Mr. Emerson has been elected a member of the French Academy of Moral Sciences.

Dr. S. Davidson and Dr. R. Willis propose to issue by subscription the Christianismi Restitutio of Michael Servetus.

The Final Authority in Matters of Religion, a sermon preached in Glasgow on the occasion of the last anniversary of the Scottish Unitarian Association by Rev. James C. Street, has been published at the request of the committee. The text should be enough to decide the matter, for Christians at least, "Why, even of yourselves judge ye not what is right?" But application, and explanation too, are still sadly wanted. Mr. Street's sermon is both opportune and effective.

THOUGHTS ON RELIGION.

DEMANDS OF THE AGE UPON THE CHURCH.

THE LATE GEORGE DAWSON.

LET us turn to the wants of the age in which we live. The first great necessity at this moment is that its Church should in nowise whatsoever limit, hinder, or make difficult full FREEDOM OF THOUGHT.

Now that so many are educated, and have begun to think for themselves, the variety in opinion is great—to some minds alarmingly great.

Remember there are three states which men will pass through. When all are very ignorant, the chances are that all will think very much alike, if they think at all; when all are partially educated, that no two will think alike; when all shall be fully educated, the probability is that all will think alike again. But confound not the first state with the third; mistake not the dull uniformity of ignorant men for the enlightened uniformity of sages. Mistake not the opinion of the world for this; confound not what it once thought of astronomy, for instance, when all thought was fettered, with the middle state of diversity of opinion, when men had begun to think about it; or with the third and full state, when from the fullness of knowledge all will think alike again. We are in the middle or transition state; our eyes are opened; we are becoming educated; we are beginning to think; and I expect that the multiplicity of opinions in the matter of theology will, for some years to come, greatly increase. Already there are scarcely two of you who think alike throughout. Careful pains are taken to make you think alike, or say that you do. But such is not the fact. We want, then, such a bond and form of Church government as will give you thorough freedom of thought; as shall suffer all to think as best they can and may concerning the great truths submitted to them.

Let us now pass on to another great want of our time, and that is UNITY. The heart of this modern age is sighing for oneness of spirit, for reconciliation and unity. Men of science are lifting up their prayer that the hostile distinctions between mind and matter, distinctions which degrade now spirit, now matter, may cease; that those weary philosophical battles between materialism and spiritualism, between material science and metaphysics, may be at an end. We see a struggling towards unity in the effort to connect and unite the sciences with religion. The great wish of thoughtful minds is to show how everything coming forth from One, tends again to unity, strives to complete the circle; and that this world, with its multifarious phenomena, and varied colours and forms, is but one great thought, spoken by One great God, "in whom there is no variableness, neither shadow of turning."

Again, in life, in matters of political life, is not the struggle the same? Are not men sick and weary of the old parties? Are they not sick to the soul of the watchwords, ribbons, badges, of one kind or another, by which men have been shut up from the full truth, in order that a narrow party spirit might prevail? If any man had to state the peculiar characteristic of the age, would he not proclaim it to be a struggle for unity—unity of the best men for the best end, notwithstanding minor and necessary differences? Is there not a struggle to reunite art with faith? Is there not a struggle of all great thinkers to preach the doctrines of reconciliation, not in religion only, but in art, in science, in politics, and in daily life?

There is a longing in the present age for freedom and for unity. I have carefully put the two things side by side, full freedom and unity, not arbitrarily, for they are inseparably linked and united. The beautiful spirit of unity comes forth out of freedom: in full freedom alone can true unity be gained.

The present age wants also a Church that shall teach the great doctrine of BROTHERHOOD and EQUALITY. None of you will mistake what I mean when I say equality. I mean not that absurd and wicked doctrine which demagogues have taught the people, when by evil envious passion and destructive means they seek an equality of having, independent of an equality of being—uniform wages without uniform work. Such theories should have corresponding outward symbols, and these teachers of equality should devise means for securing oneness of stature, uniformity of complexion, and sameness of obesity. Means, too, should be taken that the equality of to-day should not be lost in the renewed differences of to-morrow. May God grant that I sleep in my quiet grave before the world puts on the sickly garb of stiff and wearisome uniformity; before it is reduced to one dead, dull level; before the pleasant hills shall cease to raise their heads, and the godly fountains to flow, and all become one vast and sandy plain of dull and dreary mediocrity.

No such doctrine do wise men teach; to no such state does the Gospel of Christ point; but to a certain equality in the duty and rights of men—an equality of kindness, an equality of brotherhood, swallowing up all vain distinctions. The Church of Christ should not have ranks and grades of priests—all are priests; it should not have a proud hierarchy, to whom poor men dare not go; governors it may have, but no "lords over God's heritage." It should be a church not of clergy, but for and of the people, in which every man should be worth as much as any other man, if not for his acquirements, at least for his humanity; in which, however poor and ignorant a man might be, it should be remembered that he brought at least one precious offering to God's altar—a heart to be purified, a soul to be made devout, an intellect to be enlightened; that he brought one more worshipper for God and one more lover for man. We want, then, a church in which there should be freedom, unity, and Christian equality.

* From Sermons edited by his wife.

We want also an active, restless, and untiring Church, a Church of true propagandists; a Church striving to make cease the painful contrasts that we everywhere behold—here a house, over-luxurious, abounding in wealth and ease and voluptuous indulgence, and then a hovel, poor, dirty, and degraded, with inhabitants to correspond. We want a Church that all may enter; an approachable Church, a Church of refuge for the weary, of shelter for the poor, of solace for the sick, of help for the desolate, of tribuneship for the oppressed. We want it to be variable in its offices, to be adapted to each one's necessities; we want it to be an active, benevolent, philanthropic, physician-like Church, that never will rest or seek for ease until the last sinner becomes a saint, until "the kingdoms of this world" become the kingdoms of the Lord and of his Christ.

We want also a Church for the DOUBTERS. In nothing is there more necessity for reform than in this. Let me doubt now, and am I not damned? To doubt in the world religious—is it not to be condemned at once? To have one point of your creed shaken ever so little, is it not to find friendship changed into dislike? Is it not to break local connections and to change religious associations? Is it not to change the very guests that assemble in your own houses? Nay, is it not to alienate and to destroy the friendship and the attachments of a long life?

This we need: a Church where the doubter should be at home: wherein men may meet in peace and in communion, though they differ in opinion; a Church where they find no priest to condemn them if they believe not his creed: where no friends will desert them because they find themselves obliged to desert a point or two of their earlier opinions; a Church where, if a man say, "Scarce as yet do I believe anything," there shall be a warmer place found for him, a more lively sympathy felt for him, than if the circle on his belief were completed. What said Christ? "They that be whole need not a physician, but they that are sick." Too often do the Churches care most for those who are whole. The Church of the future (may God grant that it may be the Church of to-day!) will love the sick most, and heal them; will care most for those who are least able to care for themselves; a "good Samaritan" Church, dismounting from its beast of comfort in order to set the weary, lost, and wounded in its place, that they may ride to succour and to shelter.

CHURCH CURIOSITIES.

THE FUTURE OF MINISTERS.

An honest man of Perth, being met on Sunday morning going from the church by his minister, was exhorted by "O, John, do not tru' the kirk, there will be no preaching in hell." "Indeed," says John, "it'll nae be for want of ministers there!"

THE TEST OF ZEAL.

At a recent meeting, in which there was much religious interest, an old man gave expression to his joy by shouting, and continued it until it began to interrupt the services. Brother H— said to Brother W—, "Go and stop that old man's noise." He went to him and spoke a few words, and the shouting man at once became quiet. Brother H— asked Brother W—, "What did you say to the old man that quieted him so promptly?" Brother W— replied, "I asked him for a shilling for foreign missions."

A CURIOUS CUSTOM.

The Spectator recently had the following:—"We notice, as a curious instance of changed manners, that towards the close of the last century it was the custom of Manchester for the chief magistrate of the town, attended by the churchwarden and police officers, to go out of the church while the first lesson was being read, and to compel all persons found in the streets to come into the church or pay a fee, which in the case of persons of the lower class was fixed at one shilling, and for those of higher rank at half-a-crown."

A Cambridge theologian, when he told the story of the Good Samaritan, after reciting the benevolent man's promise to the host, "And when I come again I will repay thee," wound up with, "This he said, knowing that he should see his face no more."

"TIS WISE IN MAN TO MAKE A NOTE OF TIME."

ANOTHER year, with its days numbered, its history recorded.

Another year has fled;
Its fragrant roses, its sharp pointed thorns, all gathered;
Its dewdrops and its tears all shed,
The good old year is gathered to its Fathers, 'tis but a Memory—

But is it dead?

What think ye, friends, the good new year rung in,
So cheerily, so bright, so new;
Dead! all the kindly feeling, the priceless treasures of the heart

That round its pathways grew.

Dead! all the earnest work, the self-denying noble deeds, done

By the trusted, and the true.

Dead! all the narrow meanness, the selfishness

That led to evil deed;

Dead! fell revenge. Dead! the bitter heart-burnings that Jealousy and envy breed.

Dead! all gross abuse of earth-born passions. Dead!

That woeful heritage, its seed.

Would that these were dead, if dying means, all still and pale,

To sleep that sleep wherein

"No dreams may come," deep down, the darksome, stagnant,

Frozen caverns within,

Where cometh never Motion, Light, or Warmth, waking them back

To misery and sin.

Whate'er has swept the "thousand strings" with the sweet music of God's Love—His Law—His Peace,

Awakening, some harmony of human life—must vibrate on, till

The Earth's Life shall cease.

Whate'er has lit a taper for the firm—fair—feet of Truth, Must shine for ever, and increase.

And so—methinks, the old year is not dead; it has been aye,

And evermore must be,

A link of that great chain, binding the good old past unto the Nobler Future of Eternity.

A thread of that vast varied web, for ever weaving—The web of His Infinity.

I. H. G.

The Unitarian Herald.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 11, 1878.

DEATH OF THE KING OF ITALY.

King Victor Emmanuel, who, after a brief illness, has passed away in his fifty-seventh year, was not in himself a very extraordinary man, though he had qualities of sense and manliness fitting him to bear his royal part in the momentous events of his time. Of all his contemporaries, there is not one, not even the Pope himself, whose career, now regarded from its close, might call up emotions and reflections so various in their character. What memories, what feelings of profound agitation—if agitation remains possible for such years—should fill the mind of Pio Nono as he hears that the rival, to whom at last he sent a message of sympathy, is gone before him! In another quarter what conflicting thoughts may be passing through the mind of Garibaldi! With the Pope there is the Catholic community throughout the world, brought to a new sense of the vast change in Politics and Religion which was consummated and impressively symbolised in Victor Emmanuel, as King of Italy, making Rome his capital. France, Germany, Austria must feel to-day more than a stranger's interest over the dead King, in the making of whose dominion they had themselves so much to gain or lose; while Turkey, bewildered under her crushing defeat, will receive news of his decease with only a more bitter recollection of old alliances which have now failed her. England will be moved with sentiments belonging to a cordial friendship for the gallant Prince whom she was delighted to honour when he came to her shores, now more than twenty years ago—cheu fugaces!

Congratulations in London, triumphal entries into Turin, Naples, and Rome are a kind of pageantry in sad contrast with the chamber of death. Yet as to ceremonial honours, in the case of Victor Emmanuel, it can be said that their subject was more than a ceremony. His glory was that not of the Prince but the nation. Victor Emmanuel has not been the only sovereign of our time in whose personal career was involved the history of his country; but none has been so entirely, in his own heart and theirs, the people's King.

DR. MARTINEAU ON RELIGIOUS FELLOWSHIP.

We have great satisfaction in reproducing a letter addressed by Dr. Martineau to H. A. Bright, Esq., having special reference to certain remarks of Mr. Bright's which appeared in the Christian Life of December 22nd, the import of which may be gathered from Dr. Martineau's reply. But we place the letter before our readers because of the wider importance it has at the present moment when so many who take a leading part in our affairs seem to be forgetting who we are and what has been the history of the movement now committed to our trust.

In what Dr. Martineau says as to the impropriety of using the name "Unitarian" in so loose a fashion as to imply the free principles rather than the theological doctrine of our societies, we fully concur. While the name remains in popular use as designating these societies themselves, it will constantly be necessary to protest, as Dr. Martineau does, that the name is truly applicable only to the worshippers of to-day with their present belief, not to the succession of worshippers for whom our chapels, most of them at least, are held in trust. At the same time we are not so much impressed as some of our friends seem to be with the narrowness of the name. As referring to a single controversy and to a small body of religionists, its use may be limited and only for the time, but we are glad to think what a doctrine this is, or rather what a reality it is, which is thereby presented to us. The doctrine of the Trinity was not a mere flight of metaphysical speculation; it involved a doctrine of mediation, which the Christian world is now awaking to regard as one of the most baneful superstitions. In the passing away of that, in the attainment of what lay hid under the Unitarian controversy, in the full recognition of the One—the Father everlasting—there will also be attained the end of all religion, the reconciliation of man with his brother man. It is, however, for the good influence which we trust they may have in the present critical condition of our little community, that we earnestly commend Dr. Martineau's words to all our readers.

THEOLOGICAL LITERATURE IN 1877.

From the annual summary of the literature of foreign lands given in the Athenæum, it would seem that there has been a decrease in the production of works of theology. The disturbed political condition of the Continent, and the concentration of national energies on political movements and military measures of self-defence, are not favourable to the atmosphere in which theology produces its best fruits. It is quite possible that if England and the United States were included in the survey, the results would be different, and would afford data in support of the theory of a close connection between intellectual activity in the highest subjects and social advance. In Bohemia one of the most noteworthy works is a history by Schulz of the Bohemian Evangelical exiles of the 16th and 17th centuries, about whom the author writes:—"These exiles went forth, in fact, as teachers and benefactors. Poor themselves, they were the distributors of true riches; though degraded as to their own worldly position, they endeavoured to lift others up; and while they were still prisoners, they were able to spread widely a love of true freedom." Denmark displays some activity in the controversy between traditionalism and free thought, and the prevailing tone is distinctly on the side of the latter. There is everywhere a reaction against the enforced orthodoxy of a State creed. France is barren of orthodox literature—the small quantity brought out and distributed by the Protestant Tract Societies being principally derivative. Germany, so prolific in all things, especially in religious speculation, shows a relative falling off in theological works. No less than 13,356 separate works are reported as having been published in Germany during the year, but theology, which has generally had the first place, and which has been busily discussing Darwinism, falls into a subordinate position, having had to yield to schoolcraft and also to politics. Holland, on the contrary, puts theology in the first rank. "At almost every period of dated literary history the number of religious books has surpassed that of the works of fiction and poetry." Italy appears wholly given up to art and novels: her religious minds are looking towards the regeneration of Christian literature, but the time is not yet come. Mr. Mackenzie Wallace gives an unexpectedly favourable account of theological activity in the four academies devoted to this in Russia. The grounds of the differences between the Greek Church and the Catholics and Protestants are discussed, historically at least, and the questions between religion and philosophy are also treated of in publications approved by the Holy Synod, the censor. But, "as a rule, the educated Russian has no taste for the theological speculation or religious discussion." Spain adds to the list only a volume of Loyola's letters, and a devotional work by another Jesuit. But Protestant literature is now getting a footing in that priest-ridden kingdom, and, though so far it is chiefly of the Religious Tract Society sort, it will exercise a healthier influence than the trivialities which have marked the literature of Spain during the absolute reign of Romanism.

DR. PARKER'S RHETORIC.

Dr. Joseph Parker's tirade against the people of England was scarcely worth refuting—it was only the pastor of the City Temple, who is always letting it be known to the country that he is in the midst of it! But a good Baptist minister, the Rev. Richard Sampson, of St. Austell, has taken the trouble to test Dr. Parker's jeremiad, and to see what there really is in all this sound and fury. The upshot is that Dr. Parker heightens fact for effect. He asserted that England has more paupers in it than ever. Mr. Sampson quotes statistics which stamp this as a misstatement. It appears that although the population increases every year, the number of paupers in England and Wales is decreasing; so that on January 1st of 1877 there were 253,576 less paupers than on the same day of the year 1871. Dr. Parker affirmed that England has an unprecedented number of prisoners. Mr. Sampson gives us our gaol population. In 1870 there were 12,953 convictions in England and Wales, 2,400 in Scotland, and 3,084 in Ireland, giving a total for the United Kingdom of 18,437. The numbers for 1876 were: England and Wales, 12,195;

Scotland, 2,039; Ireland, 2,344; giving a total of 16,578, showing a decrease of 1,859. "With the very marked decrease in the number of paupers and criminals, let us remember the very large increase in the number of scholars attending our public elementary schools, and who are thus being taught habits of truthfulness and obedience"—and, we might say, industry—"that cannot fail to help them, and thus the country, in the future. The last report of the Committee of Council on Education shows that on August 31st, 1876, accommodation was provided for 3,426,318 scholars, and that 2,943,774 were on the school registers, being three times more than the numbers of fifteen years ago." These statistics effectually dispose of Dr. Parker's heedless charges; but the genius of the City Temple often soars above the dull level of things as they are.

DR. MARTINEAU ON THE LIMITS OF COMMON WORSHIP.

(From the Christian Life.)

WITH the sincerest respect for Mr. Henry A. Bright's desire [expressed in a previous number of the above] to determine the "Limits of Common Worship," I cannot accept the inference which he draws from certain words in the trust-deed of the "Ministers' Stipend Augmentation Fund." As applicants for grants from this fund, congregations are disqualified by the use of any test of religious doctrine, "unless it be the simple acknowledgment of the Scriptures of the Old and New Testament, as containing a record of Divine Revelation." Attributing these words to me, Mr. Bright infers that, in my opinion, the denomination for which the fund is designed cannot "be other than Christian."

This inference would have been warranted if the clause cited had been imperative—i.e., had insisted on the acknowledgment of the Scriptures as containing a record of Divine Revelation. It is, however, only permissive—i.e., it exempts the acknowledgment of Scripture from the disqualifying operation of all other tests, without in any way making it a condition. Accordingly, the benefits of the fund have been freely given, as Mr. Bright is aware, to congregations whose constitution embodies no such condition. Were the trustees to require the presence of such a test, they would be manifestly exceeding their powers.

On the general question which has called forth this argument, I find myself in partial agreement both with Mr. Bright and with his opponents. If I belonged to a "Unitarian Church" or denomination, I should be willing (as probably he is) that the name should stand on the front of every chapel, and that an anti-Trinitarian confession of faith should form part of every service and every trust-deed; and if I belonged to a "Unitarian Christian Church" or denomination, I should decline, as he does, all ecclesiastical identification with non-Christian Theists. I agree with him that both words ("Unitarian" and "Christian") are exact in their signification, the former denoting belief in One Personal God; the other, acceptance of the Religion of Christ; and that to make these words fluid, in order to divert or expand them, is both logically absurd and morally mischievous, introducing confusion alike into the literature of the past and into the conscience of the present.

On the other hand, I shrink, no less than Mr. Bright's opponents, from laying down these beliefs as the limiting conditions of possible union. The movements of religious sympathy are too free and subtle to obey any prior definition of ours, and the best secured theological foresight is continually baffled by the historical development of religion. Experience alone can pronounce what combination may become natural and vital. The feeling necessary for common worship is neither an absolute agreement in all its elements, nor a specified agreement in some one or more of them; but an average assent of heart to the devotions, the teaching, the interpretations of life and duty which make up its character as a whole. This average assent may hold numbers of persons in unbroken fellowship, so long as you let it settle unquestioned on its own basis. But if you insist on analysing its grounds, you will find them different in this group of members and in that, and had you prescribed beforehand a doctrinal position on which they should all stand, you would have prevented the fellowship altogether.

Many a Churchman, it is notorious, may be powerfully attracted by the prevailing tone of the religious services—say in Rosslyn Chapel, or Cross-street, or Renshaw-street—and feel that there is his true spiritual home, yet be unprepared to commit himself on such questions as the person of Christ, or the alleged numerical distinction within the unity of God. And many a Unitarian, in spite of his satisfaction upon these points, may, in other places of Unitarian worship, be prevailingly repelled by the general spirit and character of the services in which he is expected to join, and may find the springs of his higher life first touched and released by some Methodist or Independent worship to which, with a few special dissents, he yields a heartfelt response. Why set up agreement on one specified point as indispensable, and make nothing of all the other elements of a religious harmony? Is it because that point affects the object of worship, and commences a divergency of prayer in different directions? This is true in the case of old liturgical forms (like the Litany), which certainly make conformity impossible to a conscientious Unitarian. But it has long ceased to be true of Churches where prayer is free. For thirty years I have attended during three summer months the services of the most orthodox of Protestant communities, and to the best of my recollection I have never heard a prayer to Christ. It is evident that such prayers are no longer demanded by the current feeling of Christians, and that their absence from worship led by a Unitarian has ceased to constitute a practical distinction.

I am, therefore, in favour of leaving the natural sympathies to try their own experiment, without bespeaking its result. If Unitarians and Trinitarians cannot worship together, why then they won't; and the question settles itself without our meddling. If they can feel their way to a common ground, why should we tether them down to their old area of conflict? Those who make right relations with God contingent on correct opinions respecting Him, consistently lay down a framework of defined belief on which their Church shall stand, and which shall give a fixed type to their worship. But those who find the spiritual affinities of men by no means coincident with the intellectual, and see how kindred pieties rush to the embrace across the ruined formulas of old theologies, will never designate the sanctuary of God by the watchword of a school.

Here it is that I am compelled to separate myself from Mr. Bright's opponents, no less than from himself. They want all the latitude for which I plead, but they want it within the limits of the Unitarian name, and as the special glory of the "Unitarian Church." This is simply to affirm and to deny the same proposition in the same breath. It is the old ecclesiastical self-deception of talking catholicity and acting exclusiveness; of inviting the Gentiles, and then circumcising them. It is in vain. You cannot preach a universal gospel, which you shall keep all to yourself. If the Spirit of God is free and "bloweth where it listeth," it is neutral to your opinions as well as to others; and if to that Spirit you dedicate a sanctuary, you must not rail it off by the boundaries of your present belief.

"But must you not draw the line somewhere? Is Christianity itself to be an open question?" I reply, if you leave scope for the play of natural religious sympathies, the line will always draw itself somewhere; and the predominant type of worship and spiritual culture will hold some persons within, and leave others without, its range of attraction. But that any prior definition of ours can meet the exigencies of religious society more efficiently than this spontaneous adjustment, I see no reason to think. Time will disclose far better than we can foresee the direction, by no means constant, for the dividing line to take. The practical object of the institution—viz., the social maintenance of the life in God and for mankind—determines all that is needed. And this central essence of a Church is best secured when, instead of being guarded by rigid sentinels, it is enveloped in the fullest life of thought and affection, and permitted to exercise its own elective affinities.

Whether "Theism" pure and simple is to take the place of Christianity, I am willing to leave to the determination of experience. The change would not be greater than that which has already occurred in the communion to which I belong. My own deepest feeling and conviction are so wrapped up with the religion and the personal image of Jesus Christ, that it needs an effort for me to speak with calmness of parting with the Christian type and name. The reason assigned for it, however persuasive to persons emerging from orthodox notions of "authority," appear to me alike uncritical and unspiritual; nor do I suppose that I estimate very differently from Mr. Bright the probable effects on a religious society of cutting off the Christian inheritance. But when he asserts that "Christians would not worship in a Theistic chapel," and that union between the two elements would be impossible, I demur; nay, I own that I should think myself very unreasonable were I, as a Christian, to fulfil his prediction. What is it, after all, in the religion of Jesus which wins the reverent response of my heart? Is it not that tender "Theism" of his, that inward union with God, that passage through sacred sorrow into the embrace of Divine Love, which also lives in the hearts and breathes from the pages of prophets in our own age that yet forego his name? Is it not that sublime estimate of the human soul in its responsible trust and transcendent affections, that piercing glance through death, which saw how "all live unto God?" And have F. W. Newman, and F. P. Cobbe, and Keshub Chunder Sen nothing to say of these things? Before their eyes also does not life lie bathed in this same holy light? It is not that their religion is different, but that they assign it to a different source; and, for the union of hearts, is it the evidence that we must have in common, or is it the religion itself? I lament the divorce among Theists of the historical from the spiritual revelation of Divine Truth, and am convinced that only in their reciprocal action can piety gain substance, permanence, and unity through many minds. But I cannot forget that the outward sources are for the sake of the inward to which they appeal; and where I find these awake, and consecrating life with a light and energy that shame my own, it is useless to beckon me away; I can only stay and humbly ask the fellowship which Mr. Bright invites me to renounce.

A church is not a tenement on short lease. It is an institution dedicated to the highest wants of an indefinite number of generations, which, resting therefore upon the durable elements of religion,—the unchanging conscious relations between the human spirit and the Divine. In the passage from generation to generation, these relations assume different aspects and are expressed in different terms of thought, in the moulding of which the reason, the conscience, the imagination, and the affections try their skill by turns. These are the temporary conceptual dress of the permanent and transcendent truth within; but we are always mistaking them for the imperishable essence, till a sympathetic study of history rids us of the illusion. For such illusion there is no excuse in a religious body which, without breach of continuity, has had several successive theologies, Calvinistic, Arminian, Arian, Unitarian. These terms express the separable accidents only of our Church; and its representatives for the time being cannot fasten upon it any one of them without a gross breach of historical trust. What should we have thought of our predecessors if at a previous stage they had argued thus?—"We are all Arminians here; if any one believes in irreversible decrees, he must go out from among us. We are all Trinitarians; if any one becomes a Socinian, we disown his fellowship." Yet Mr. Bright does precisely the same thing when he sets up the name "Unitarian," and extracts from it an argument for the exclusion of those who do not satisfy its conditions. To me the procedure appears a direct repudiation of our noblest inherited principle; nor can I distinguish the argument from the reasoning of the orthodox minority at the Saker's Hall assembly in 1719.

In short, the choice has to be made. You may devote a Church to the enduring life of religion, which persists through changing theologies; or to a given theology, with such religion as in its day it can manage to hold. But you cannot combine both methods; since the trustful piety of the former consists in renouncing the comfortable securities of the latter. My own allegiance is unreservedly given to the former. With a "Unitarian Church" I can have nothing to do, any more than with a Universalist Church, or a Freewill Church, or a Church of the Spirit, or a Church of Immortality. In the doctrines denoted by these several phrases I profoundly believe. But to set up any or all of them as conditions of an organisation for worship and holy living would be only to narrow the kingdom of God by the by-laws of intellectual egotism.

JAMES MARTINEAU.

DUTCH CHURCHES AND THEOLOGIES.

(From the Christian World.)

Civil proscription, fine, imprisonment, and death were the penalties exacted in support of orthodoxy as declared by the Synod of Dort, in 1618. That famous Synod did its best to settle the controversy, which had then recently arisen, between Calvinism and Arminianism. The doctrines of the followers of Arminius, the Leyden theological professor who dared to question the Calvinistic teaching on predestination and its cognate theory of reprobation, were pronounced heretical and dangerous; and an attempt was made to purge the Dutch Church of these supposed elements of mischief. This outburst of intolerant zeal lasted for about seven years; but from that time a different policy has been pursued. The Remonstrants (as the Arminian seceders were called) have been allowed to follow their theological preferences in peace, or at least unrestricted by the civil power; and as the years have gone on they have won a considerable amount of confidence and respect from their brethren in the "Dutch National Church." The two bodies have long been accustomed to the "exchange of pulpits," and very recently a distinguished Remonstrant divine, Dr. C. P. Tiele, was appointed to a professorship of theology in the State University of Leyden. The Dutch Arminian theologians have always been remarkable for their boldness in speculation, and their "latitudinarianism" and "scepticism" have long been a bye-word in Europe. In fact, their lapses from the faith, their rationalistic methods of treating the Bible, and their abandonment of one theological landmark after another, have often been pointed out by Calvinistic theologians as illustrating the peril of relinquishing the "vital principles" of Evangelical orthodoxy. A movement which is now taking place in the "Dutch National Church," however, serves to show that, if the assertion of freedom from the trammels of orthodox theological systems is perilous, the maintenance of such systems by means of subscriptions and declarations, is no infallible preservative against the same dangers. "Advanced scepticism" has found a home within the National Church in spite of the protection afforded by the old Calvinistic dogmas. The clergy of that Church, although all subscribing to the same articles, preach very contradictory doctrines, and are "distinctly known and designated" as Orthodox and Modern according as they adhere to the theology to which their articles bind them, or depart from them along the line of a very far-reaching rationalism. From an interesting communication by "a Dutch Correspondent" of the Times, it appears that the Orthodox and Modern parties have for the last ten years been engaged in a very energetic and, indeed, bitter struggle, each striving for supremacy in the councils of the Church. From time to time, ministers of more or less distinction and fame have withdrawn from their official positions in consequence of the pressure of their theological convictions. The Synod some time ago decided that the formularies of belief must be put "literally" to candidates for Church membership—that is to say, that people claiming to be members or ministers of the Church must be held bound by the literal meaning of the creed to which they subscribe. A few weeks ago two influential ministers, brothers, resigned their ministry and have commenced a movement for the formation of a free Church, "independent of dogma or State supervision." They seem to have taken with them only 300 followers; but the movement has led to a protest, signed by 40,000 Church members, against the Synodal resolutions which compelled the withdrawal of this company of secessionists from the Church. These events will probably have important effects, both of an ecclesiastical and educational kind in Holland. Meantime, they afford another instructive example of the powerlessness of fixed formularies of theological belief to prevent the intellectual processes which they are often assumed to be able to control.

OUR SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

SYSTEMATIC RELIGIOUS TEACHING IN SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

THROUGH the kindness of the Editors, efforts were made in the last year's Unitarian Herald, running through some months, to lay down some first principles for "Systematic Religious Teaching in Sunday Schools." The suggestions began with the indisputable affirmations that "Religion must be the chief subject of our instruction in Sunday Schools. And if that instruction in religion is to command the respect of scholars and leave any abiding knowledge in the mind, it must also be systematic. It must begin with the simplest and most fundamental notions, and go on from these step by step to the more advanced ones, imitating the method followed in teaching reading, grammar, arithmetic, geography, history, &c., in day schools." And a number of lessons were offered as examples which did begin as the writer thinks with the simplest and most fundamental notions. These lessons were but an attempt to follow out, in the department of Religion, the lessons adopted in other departments in the Kinder Garten method, which is to bring children acquainted first with that which is nearest to them, and may be known to their own observation, and then to lead them on from what is known to that which was unknown.

Now the religious facts which are nearest to children, the facts which they may know by observation—if we may so apply the word—of their own experience, and the conduct of those about them, are the facts of moral experience—facts that were represented in various moral lessons given in the Unitarian Herald from June to December.

At a very early age a child can be induced to reflect that it often feels opposing impulses or desires, for example, an impulse to keep a toy or dainty all to itself and another impulse to share it with a companion; and then it can be further induced to reflect that it has a feeling telling it that one of these impulses is nobler than the other, and ought to be preferred. It can be taught to call that feeling Conscience. How this simple fact of moral experience or moral consciousness, so easily learnt by observation—observation of its own feelings and conduct, and which, whatever explanation some philosophers may give as to its origin in the mind, is most certainly and universally there,—this fact may be and ought to be made the primary fact in religious teaching. To call attention to this fact should be our first step on the known and near, and this we should make very secure and familiar before we pass from it to the less known and more remote. The purpose of most of the moral lessons of the last six months, then, has been to get the child to observe this fundamental fact of moral experience, on its various sides, to feel by sympathy with some other mind various opposing impulses, and to feel in each case the moral consciousness, or Conscience declare that one was nobler than the other and ought to be obeyed. Now, it is to be feared from past experience that many teachers will have been too apt to be tired of the various illustrations of this primary lesson, and to want to pass beyond it, even if they have ever condescended to adopt it. They might take a lesson from the wise teachers in our "Kinder Gartens," and notice how long they lead their little ones to dwell on the primary steps; how they assure themselves that their children are perfectly familiar by observation with the primary facts and qualities of the objects set before them ere they pass on to higher steps. The Sunday-school teacher must try to understand that his work is not so much to communicate knowledge to his scholar as to train him to use his own observation or attention, and discover or realise the great facts of moral experience for himself. If our Sunday-school teachers would but have patience and humility to devote themselves to this primary step in religious education until they had really brought their scholars to become acquainted by their own observation—their own consciousness—with the fundamental fact of moral experience in its many-sided manifestations, they would lay the foundation of a moral and religious reformation—of a work of building up noble and beautiful character, whose importance could scarcely be overestimated. It is sad to see our Sunday-school teachers wrangling about the dogmatic instruction, that is, as the word dogmatic seems to be used, about the instruction in our differential or controversial theology, to be given in our school when there is primary training so vast and so important wanting to be done. If our teachers could but be got to look at this first work, they would find that it would occupy so large a part of their time—at least with many scholars—little opportunity would remain for this dogmatic teaching. Still more, they would find that whatever teaching in theological doctrine is desirable for children would naturally follow from the primary lessons in moral experience. The great want in all our religious education, both in school and church, is more of ethical training. Men, as well as children, need to have their moral natures awakened and to be trained through self observation to feel for themselves that right is right not wrong. Christendom has had its conscience drugged by having the attention drawn away almost entirely and constantly to theological dogmas which, not having grown out of the moral consciousness, do not reflect or help it. In our scheme of theology all the theological doctrines presented for belief grow out of the moral consciousness, and therefore do reflect and help it. But the moral consciousness must come first, or nothing can come from it. In future lessons we shall endeavour to show how, from consciousness of the first great moral facts of his nature, the child may be led on to consciousness of God. T.E.P.

UNIVERSITY OF LONDON.

We understand that the meeting of Convocation called for Tuesday is likely to be one of the highest moment. The senate will offer for the acceptance of the graduates a new charter embodying provisions for the granting of degrees in all faculties to successful candidates without restriction of sex. The principle thus practically carried out has been already approved by Convocation. But there is danger lest, by raising side issues, the opponents of this movement should defeat the object of the senate, and that narrow professional prejudice should triumph. It is therefore of the utmost importance that all graduates who have at heart the interests of enlightened Liberalism should make a point of rallying to their alma mater, and keeping her still in the vanguard of true progress.

MINISTERIAL APPOINTMENT.—The Rev. T. Lloyd Jones, who finished his studies at Manchester New College, London, in June last, has accepted a cordial invitation to become the minister at Hale Chapel, Cheshire.

LIVERPOOL: NORTH END MISSION.—During Christmas and New Year's weeks four tea parties were held with great success. Twenty of the oldest class boys clubbed and invited the teachers and senior girls to tea on Christmas Eve, numbering 60. On the 27th December, 60 of the Sunday scholars under ten years of age had tea and a magic lantern exhibition, with costume crackers and oranges to finish. On 3rd January the congregational soirée was held, when about 70 were present; and on the 4th over 90 of the elder scholars and teachers had their party. On both nights a charade was acted, creating great fun. On the 24th ult., the Lodge of Good Temp'ars meeting at the Mission presented the missionary, Mr. H. W. Hawkes, with an illuminated address and a handsome inkstand, as a mark of esteem.

SCOTTISH UNITARIAN CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

THE report of this Association for the year 1876-77 has just been issued, prefaced by the able and eloquent anniversary sermon preached by the Rev. J. C. Street, in St. Vincent-street Church, Glasgow, on 6th of November. The subject, "The Final Authority in Matters of Religion," is treated in Mr. Street's most vigorous and effective manner. From the report itself we take the following extracts:—

The Executive Committee during the past year have been able to carry on the regular work of your Association, but it has been with some difficulty. They have had to work with diminished resources, principally in consequence of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association lessening the amounts of the grants made to them. The operations contemplated by the committee, some of which had to be abandoned, demanded additional outlay, consequently the work has been somewhat crippled by paucity of means. In the present theological fermentation in Scotland, your committee believe that, if they were furnished with the funds necessary to do the work which presents itself ready to their hand, they could advance the cause they have in their keeping very considerably. In these circumstances, the committee have issued an appeal for funds, which has been sent far and wide throughout Britain. No very great response has, as yet, been received, which we attribute partially to the depression of trade. We trust that as generous a response will be given by our regular subscribers and the Unitarian public in Scotland as their means will allow.

The church in South St. Mungo-street has been doing good work during the past year. In spite of deaths, migration, and dull trade, the congregation and Sunday school have been making steady progress.

The resignation of the Rev. D. Scott, after a twelve months' pastorate, left the Aberdeen church without a minister. Since this has been written, the Rev. G. T. Walters, late of Burnley, has become the minister [see report of his inauguration in our present number]. The committee cannot but record the pleasure they feel in the evidence of a growing spirit of earnestness in the congregation in their determination not only to maintain their position, but also to make progress in spite of all the difficulties which beset them. This has been shown in their raising more funds this year than in any year in their previous history, and their resolve to form a closer working union than in the past.

Mr. Bennett has been doing good work in Paisley during the past year; for though no large increase of numbers has been won by his labours, yet he has laid a good foundation for building on in the immediate future. He has drawn that kind of respectful attention to our principles which is ever the precursor of conviction. Unfortunately, at a most interesting period of the year, Mr. Bennett was struck down by illness, and was unable for some weeks to fulfil his engagements. During this time his place was filled on Sundays most efficiently by Mr. A. Macdonald, of Glasgow, and the Mr. E. C. Jones, a student at the University, to whom the thanks of the committee are due for their services. The committee would commend the fact to their successors that we have laymen among us who are able to do such work, and would recommend that they be utilised. The committee are sorry to record the fact that, from circumstances over which they had no control, the cause in Dunfermline has ceased to exist.

During the past winter many lectures were given in different parts of Scotland, under the direction of the Jubilee Fund Committee. Your committee are sorry to record the fact that they are not to be continued during the coming winter, and that they have not the means of carrying them out themselves. The Rev. W. Bennett lectured in Kilmarnock, Johnstone, and Barrhead; the Rev. R. B. Drummond, B.A., in Galashiels and Falkirk; the Rev. William Mitchell in Ayr, Port-Glasgow, Greenock, Barrhead, Johnstone, and Kilmarnock. Mr. Mitchell had also made arrangements to lecture in Kilsyth, but at the last moment the hall was refused to him. He intended addressing an outdoor meeting there during the summer, but at the suggestion of the friends of our cause there, who are most kindly and helpful to it, he has for the present postponed his visit. Each of the lecturers is satisfied from the facts presented to them in the several localities they visited that a great amount of good has been done, and that some seed has been sown which will produce fruits which others will reap in happier days.

The committee have the sad task of recording the loss by death of George Hope, Esq., for years the President of this Association. He was well known throughout the whole country as the open adherent of liberal Christianity, and the friend and helper of every social and political principle that tends to elevate man and promote his best interests. He belonged to that rare class of men who possess moral courage; and in consequence he did not wait till a movement was borne on the rising wave of popularity to the light of success before he joined it. Hence, his help was all the more valuable. Your committee also are sorry to have to report the loss of another friend, both able and willing to lend assistance to your cause—Mr. W. Teacher, who for many years was a steady adherent of the Association.

In closing the report, the committee cannot but express their conviction that never did events call for more energetic action on the part of Unitarian Christians, and liberal religionists of all classes in Scotland, than at the present time—whether they consider the sad removal by death of good friends, the theological conditions which surround them. They would therefore urge increased zeal on the subscribers; both in the furnishing of funds to their successors, and in the spread of their principles, which are greatly needed at the present hour among the multitudes, who have lost their faith in the old orthodoxies, and are wandering off into the dreary land of indifference, or into the land of negation of all spiritual life whatever. The committee would impress this fact upon the Unitarians of Scotland, that God in His providence seldom or never realises lukewarm hopes for men, but that He ever rewards earnest, conscientious labours and self-sacrifice with success to those who love the truth. With this faith they look forward to the future with trustful confidence.

ABERDEEN:

WELCOME TO THE REV. G. T. WALTERS.

THE ministry of the Rev. G. T. Walters, late of Burnley, Lancashire, in the above church was inaugurated on Sunday, the services being conducted both morning and evening by his brother, the Rev. F. W. Walters, of Glasgow. The subject in the morning was "The Church—the Sacrament of Humanity." In the evening Mr. Walters delivered an able discourse which he entitled "A Plea for Religious Rationalism." He commenced by asking the question how was it that Unitarians could not find a religious home in any of the popular and well accredited churches of Christendom? They knew something of all the Churches, and they were obliged to confess that other creeds were repugnant to their intellectual convictions, that their worship gave no inspiration to their souls, and that their sacraments failed to bring the promised grace. These were the negative reasons for the dissent of Unitarians. But they had likewise positive reasons for their isolated position. They believed that though the popular creeds had met certain conditions of men's minds, yet the human soul was slowly growing out of these into larger and freer conditions. By their teaching and their worship they were doing the little that lay in their power to prepare for the new demands of the developed consciousness. Mr. Walters then went on to notice a great source of disappointment and apparent failure in their work, and proceeded to vindicate their position by considering the objections that thoughtful people sometimes brought against their work. Mr. Walters concluded as follows:—The circumstances of this day's services give me an interest in the noble effort you are making in the cause of free religion in Aberdeen. Do not be afraid of going too far and moving too fast. There is no danger lest the world should move too fast along these lines of progress. Social position, wealth, popularity, all these are on the side of ancient faith, and in opposition to these we must exercise a boundless enthusiasm that knows not the meaning of "disappointment," and has blotted "failure" out of its vocabulary! You cannot be too earnest in season and out of season in serving the cause of free inquiry and spiritual religion. Take one fact. I am told that 1,300 livings of the Church of England are in the hands of the House of Lords, representing an annual income of two millions. And all this is no doubt a golden bribe to stand by orthodox opinion which requires much moral courage to resist. I am not complaining that these advantages are on the side of Conservatism; it always has been so, and I suppose always must be so. I am only saying that we need not slack our efforts through fear lest the world should move too fast. Rather let us show by persevering endeavour our firm belief that no material bribes, no social influences, can for ever withstand the advance of human thought and spiritual freedom. Tell men that you know a higher form of religion. Tell men that before they can get a satisfactory religion they must bring sincerity into it. It must no longer be a thing of speculation but of fact, not of doctrine but of life, not of fables and fictions but of daily experience. It must no longer be a religion of sensation and sentiment and gushing emotion, but it must be a religion built up of conscience and reason, it must be crowned by thought and aspiration, it must be a service of love and a constant growth in a manly character.

There was a good attendance at both services. The following (Monday) evening a social meeting was held in the schoolroom adjoining the church. About 230 partook of tea, and at the meeting which followed the room was crowded to overflowing. Mr. JAMES SHEPHERD presided, and in a few appropriate words welcomed Mr. George T. Walters into their midst, assuring him of the intention of the congregation to support him in his difficult task. The Rev. GEORGE THOMAS WALTERS, who was very warmly received, said that when he was leaving Burnley for Aberdeen some of his friends wished to know if he was going upon a new Polar expedition. His late church in Burnley was noted somewhat for being Radical, and he also was considered rather advanced. But he believed that both he and the Burnley church had won respect in that town, because they had consistently stood to their guns, and had not expressed extreme opinions one day and tried to wash them down another day. (Hear.) He should continue as he had begun. (Cheers.) He never wished to hurt people's feelings unnecessarily, but he should have the greatest pleasure upon every possible occasion in hurting their prejudices. (Applause.) Feelings might be good; prejudices were bad. With reference to vestments and sacraments, he did not intend to dress himself up when he had to go upon their platform. (Hear.) He would not don a black robe to make himself look dismal, nor should he alter the kind of necktie that he wore during the week. When he was walking in the street he felt himself, and appeared to others, as an ordinary human being; and when he conducted their Sunday services, he would be still an ordinary human being, a man like themselves, and therefore he would not distinguish himself by any special clerical garb. (Cheers.) They had begun a great work together, and if they were only united and harmonious, they must feel confident of future success. Let them go forward boldly in their noble cause,—for a brighter day was dawning on the religious world, and they had a responsible position to maintain as humble pioneers of modern thought and liberal faith. (Loud cheers.)

Mr. ROBERT ADAMS made some amusing references to men whom he had known, who privately professed Unitarianism, but from reasons of business and policy never would join their society. He proposed a hearty vote of thanks to Mr. Frank W. Walters, for his two eloquent sermons of the previous day. The motion was carried with enthusiasm.

The Rev. FRANK W. WALTERS (Glasgow) thanked them for the kind manner in which they had received his services. If any one had told him a year ago that within twelve months he would be called upon to assist in the inauguration of his brother to Aberdeen, he would have said that the man who made such a prediction was neither a prophet nor the son of a prophet. He thought he had travelled a long way north when he came to Glasgow, but his brother (as younger brothers sometimes would) had outstripped him by travelling to a yet nearer point to the North Pole. (Laughter and cheers.) He could only hope that their new minister might be as happy with them as he (the speaker) had been during the last few months in a sister Scottish congregation. (Cheers.) Scotch climate might be cold, but he had proved that Scotch hearts were very warm; and the genial human atmosphere amply compensated for the bleakness of Nature. (Cheers.) He was glad of the opportunity of becoming personally acquainted with their Church—(hear),—and he confessed that he was greatly surprised and encouraged by their strong, healthy, and hopeful condition. (Cheers.) He hoped they would keep up the enthusiasm of that meeting. And if minister and people loyally supported one another in their difficult but noble enterprise, he was sure that, in time, all empty pews would be filled with men and women who came to rejoice in that glorious gospel which it was the high vocation of Unitarianism to proclaim to the world. (Loud and continued applause.)

Mr. JAMES MANSON delivered an excellent address upon man's co-operation with nature and Divinity.

A number of songs, glees, recitations, &c., carried the meeting till after ten o'clock, when the room was cleared for dancing. All were pleased at the successful termination of the best meeting ever held in connection with the church.

NEWS OF OUR CHURCHES.

AINSWORTH.—The New Year festivities were successful. New Year's Day was devoted to the children, and they appeared to enjoy themselves immensely. The annual meeting took place on January 2nd, the Rev. Ephraim Turland presiding. There was a large attendance. As usual, it had been found necessary to strictly limit the number of tickets so as to prevent overcrowding. After the company had partaken of tea, a full and varied programme was presented, consisting of dramas, songs, duets, glees, band selections, readings, and recitations, together with short and seasonable addresses by the Revs. W. C. Squier (of Stand), C. H. Osler (of Darwen), and R. Cowley Smith (of Belfast).

BIRMINGHAM: LAURENCE-STREET.—Last Sunday week the evening service was conducted by Rev. J. Allsop, who preached a forcible address on the unity of God. Monday was devoted to the repaying of members in the savings club.—As is usual here on Christmas Day, service was held; the Rev. F. Summers conducted it, and preached an appropriate address.—On Wednesday the congregational social meeting was held; about 200 friends were present, amongst whom were Dr. Russell and Mrs. Russell, Miss Russ II., Mr. R. Wills and Mrs. Wills, R. v. F. Summers and Mrs. Summers, the Rev. J. Wilson and Mrs. Wilson. After tea, Dr. Russell presided, and in a short address expressed sympathy with the objects of the mission and congratulated the members on the success that had attended their efforts during the past year. The meeting was also addressed by Mr. Wills, Mr. Cudwallader, Mr. T. H. Russell, and Rev. F. Summers. The pastor, Rev. J. Wilson, stated that the congregation had increased to a large extent, and after thanking the various speakers for the kind feelings expressed towards himself and family, he moved a vote of thanks to Dr. Russell, the president, and other friends for the help given. The speeches were interspersed with an anthem and glees from the choir. The rest of the evening was taken up by a few members of the Teachers' Association, who played in an admirable manner a piece entitled "Family Jars."—On Thursday, the Good Templars' Christmas Tea was held.—On Friday, the Teachers' Association gave a concert, when upwards of 200 were present. The weather being very unfavourable prevented many friends coming. A good programme was provided, which was concluded with a laughable sketch entitled "Turn Him Out," which was greeted with great applause.—On Saturday, a busy and enjoyable week was brought to an end by the Benevolent Society's Christmas Tea. The chapel was tastefully decorated with mottoes and evergreens.

BOLTON: FREE CHRISTIAN CHURCH SUNDAY SCHOOL.—On Wednesday evening, January 2nd, a very interesting tea party was held in the Lark-street Temperance Hall. There were nearly three hundred present. The Rev. A.

B. Camm presided. In addition to a varied and very well executed programme of pieces and music by the children, songs by Mrs. Camm, Miss Battersby, and Mr. Wilson were enthusiastically applauded. A feature of great interest in the evening was the presentation of a harmonium to Mr. Clarkson, the retiring choir-master. Mrs. Winkworth, in making the presentation, spoke very graceful and appreciative terms of the services rendered by Mr. Clarkson to the Free Christian Church, and more especially in the training of the young people connected with the Sunday school. Mr. Clarkson, after acknowledging the handsome gift, stated his reasons for retiring from the position he had so long held, and rejoiced in the appointment of an efficient successor in Mr. Battersby. Mr. Keddish, at the close of the meeting, stated that the school was in a very prosperous condition.

BLACKBOL.—On Wednesday evening, January 2nd, the annual congregational soiree took place. There were about 100 persons present. The little chapel was beautifully decorated by Messrs. Marsden and Helm. Around the walls were hung some very fine oil paintings and engravings, kindly lent by Mr. Wilkinson. Mr. Marsden lent some interesting photographs of Paris, Rouen, &c. Mr. John Chew presided. The programme of the evening was well carried out and thoroughly appreciated. The soiree was the most successful the congregation have ever had. (Our friends think it desirable that they should ere long have a resident minister in their midst.)

CREDITON.—A social meeting of the members and friends of the Lowden Hill Chapel was held on New Year's Day. After tea, to which about 100 persons sat down, the Rev. E. H. Bolland presided. Readings were given by the minister and the members of the Mutual Improvement Society, and songs by the members of the newly-formed choir. The party was the most successful one the Crediton congregation has had for years.

DUNDEE: NEW YEAR'S FESTIVAL.—The annual New Year's festival was held in connection with the Sunday School, on Wednesday, January 2. Over 230 persons were present, showing a considerable increase on previous years. Tea was provided in the schoolroom; afterwards the whole company adjourned to the church, where a Christmas tree had been set up and covered with presents. In most cases the gifts were from parents to their children, and from friends to friends, the teachers having distinctly intimated that only such could be expected, as they had no funds to provide presents, and objected on principle to the practice of encouraging children to expect such gifts. The distribution from the tree took nearly three hours. An old scholar, now living at the foot of the Rocky Mountains, in Colorado, sent some tokens of remembrance which were much appreciated.

HYDE CHAPEL SUNDAY SCHOOL, GEE CROSS.—The annual Christmas parties were held on Monday, December 31st, and Tuesday, January 1st. On the first day about 500 sat down to tea, and on the second 160 old people were provided with tea, of whom more than 100 were present at the school, their ages varying from 86 to 60. There were about five above 80, about 25 from 70 to 80, and about 70 from 60 to 70 years of age. The entertainment on each occasion was the Christmas Pantomime "Cinderella," and the laughable farce "Turn Him Out." The entertainment was unquestionably the best ever produced at the school. The acting, the singing, the scenery, and the dresses, were all excellent; and the way the pantomime was rendered did special credit to the stage manager, Mr. Joseph Linker, and the leader of the singing class, Mr. William Woolley.

KENDAL.—On Thursday, the 3rd, the school party was held in the Mechanics' Hall, where the teachers and scholars (100) and their friends, in all numbering 140, sat down to tea, other friends joining during the evening. Games, magic lantern, and music were thoroughly enjoyed. Eight prizes were given to those who had not been absent at the roll call more than eight times during the year.

LONDON: UNITY CHURCH, ISLINGTON.—The past week has been devoted to the festivities by the various agencies connected with this church. The first of these meetings was held on New Year's Eve, when those parents and friends of the school children who attend the fortnightly Penny Readings came in large numbers to a tea and social gathering. The schoolroom had been previously most tastefully decorated by the young people of the congregation, and when the tea was over the tables were spread with illustrated books, sketches, stereoscopes, other objects of interest, and a fine microscope. At one end of the room was a galvanic battery, and at the other an impromptu-made telephone, both of which afforded amusement. Instrumental music, singing, a personation of some scenes from "Lord Dundearry," and speeches from the Rev. T. W. Freckleton, Mr. Wade, and Mr. Hall, varied the entertainment, and all seemed thoroughly to enjoy the unrestrained intercourse and renewal of old friendships. Out of this meeting, it is hoped a young men's mutual improvement class may arise, under the presidency of the minister. We may mention that all the penny readings have been well attended and self-supporting. On Thursday, the 3rd inst., the elder scholars of the Sunday and day schools came to their annual tea and entertainment, about 100 being present. After the tea the young people sang glees and recited. These were followed by tableaux taken from well-known fairy tales, the groups being formed of the children, and extracts from the tales to illustrate them being read by members of the School Committee. They were exceedingly pretty and well done. A distribution of cracker bon-bons, by two little children dressed to represent the New Year, closed this truly happy and merry evening. On the next day fifty of the younger children met for tea, games, and the magic lantern, when there was a repetition of similar happy faces as on the two previous evenings.

LEICESTER: THE GREAT MEETING.—The Rev. J. Page Hopps is now giving special Sunday Evening Lectures. Last Sunday evening Mr. Hopps addressed a discourse to young men on "Strength, and How to use it Nobly." Next Sunday evening he will take up Canon Farrar's recent sermon on "Hell." The succeeding lectures will be devoted to "Finding one's life through Losing it," and "The Ideal Church of the Future." The cordial invitation given to strangers is being heartily responded to.

LANCASTER.—A meeting of the members and friends of the St. Nicholas-street congregation was held in the schoolroom on New Year's Day. About a hundred sat down to tea, and the room was quite filled during the meeting which followed. The Rev. W. M. Ainsworth presided, and the meeting was addressed by the Rev. J. G. Evans, of Preston, the Rev. T. Lloyd Jones, and other speakers. A varied programme, consisting of songs, readings, and recitations was also gone through, all the pieces being performed in a highly creditable manner. Two anthems were also sung by the choir; and a very pleasant evening was spent by all present.

LEICESTER DOMESTIC MISSION.—The minister in charge of the Mission, the Rev. H. T. Basford, has issued a programme of work down to April, 1878. Every evening in the week is taken up with classes and meetings of various kinds, instruction and recreation being healthily mixed. Each Saturday evening a popular lecture or entertainment is given in the Lecture Hall of the Great Meeting Schools. The second course began last Saturday evening, when the Rev. J. P. Hopps gave a lecture on "Leicester Amusements." To-morrow (Saturday) evening Mr. T. Adcock lectures on "Our Boys," and the lecturers to follow are the Rev. J. E. Radcliffe, Mr. H. Major, B.A., Mr. H. T. Basford, Mr. J. Fletcher, Mr. A. H. Paget, Revs. J. J. Wright, Joseph Wood, James Thew, and J. P. Hopps. We hope to hear that the Saturday evening movement receives the earnest support of the class of people for whom it is intended, and that it thus shows the way of counteracting the demoralising by presenting elevating social and intellectual influences.

LIVERPOOL: HAMILTON ROAD.—On Tuesday evening, January 8, 1878, the first of a course of four lectures was delivered in the Town Hall, Merton Road, Bootle, by the Rev. S. Fletcher Williams, minister of the Hamilton Road Unitarian Church, Everton, Liverpool. Subject, "What do we mean by Unitarianism?" There was an audience of sixty-eight adults. Great interest was manifested all through the lecture, and an earnest desire to possess copies of our monthly calendar, which were distributed at the close of the meeting.

MACCLESFIELD: PARSONAGE-STREET.—The annual tea-party took place in the school in Parsonage-street on New Year's Day, when about 300 persons sat down to an excellent tea. The walls of the schoolroom were prettily decorated, near the platform being the strange motto "Macclesfield Races, Tea-cup Day, January 1st, 1878." The Rev. John Russell presided, and in a few pertinent remarks introduced a lengthy programme of glees by the choir, duets, songs, recitations, and dialogues. There were two representations which created much amusement, one entitled "Louders' Mistake" (in eight characters), and "My Wife's Second Floor" (in seven characters). A very pleasant evening was brought to a close about 10.30 p.m. with the usual vote of thanks.

NORWICH.—The people at the Octagon, some of whom never grow weary of well-doing, have just closed a very busy season with the usual district tea meeting, when the boys' schoolroom was crowded by the more active members of the congregation and their poorer brethren. The old scholars' party has been as enjoyable as ever. The teachers, too, met at Mr. Dowson's on New Year's Eve, when the Christmas basket went round, and literary contributions of various interest were offered to the assembled company. The congregational institutions appear to be in good working order, and a brightening prospect opens before the minister who has recently entered upon this important charge. Mr. Perris is about to commence a weekly meeting for teachers and religious inquirers, and the new "notes" will be partly adopted for class instruction. A course of Sunday evening lectures on "God," "Man," "Nature," "Evil," "Christ," and "Destiny" is also announced. The e and other signs indicate life and growth amongst our friends in the eastern metropolis.

RAVENSTHALL.—The annual festival in connection with our chapel here was held on Christmas Day in the large room of the Co-operative Hall. About 480 sat down to tea. The subsequent meeting was increased to at least 600. It was presided over by the minister, Rev. H. Hill. A long and varied programme of recitations, songs, glees, piano solos, &c., was admirably gone through by the Sunday-schoolers and choir, after which the teachers performed in very capital style the drama of "Jessy Lee, or the Return of the Wanderer." A most interesting and enjoyable evening was spent.

RIVINGTON.—On Monday, December 21, there was the usual Christmas Tree, which was on this occasion loaded with presents for the children of the Day and Sunday Schools. The number of presents was over 70, 14 of them being prizes for progress and punctual attendance. On the Wednesday following there was the Congregational Christmas Tea, at which, in spite of the stormy weather, more than 100 were present.

ROTHERHAM.—On Friday last a social tea and Christmas tree was held by the congregation at the Temperance Hall, when there was an attendance of over 130. It was a successful affair. In the course of the evening the Rev. W. Blayney, B.A., made a statement showing the present position of their new church building fund. They proposed to raise £3,000. Rotherham answered for £1,100; Sheffield, £500; British and Foreign, £400; Leeds, £159. 5s.; London, £152. 2s. 6d.; Halifax, £12; Wakefield, £14. 17s. 6d.; Bradford, £17. 15s.; Mansfield, £21. 18s.; Chesterfield, £16. 15s. 6d.; York, £30. 5s.; and with other towns and individual subscriptions, the promises now amounted to close upon £2,500. It was expected that the stone would be laid early in the present year. The evening's sale of work would go to the Pazaar Fund. During the evening, Rev. J. B. Gardner, Mr. Armitage, of Sheffield, and other friends addressed the meeting. Music and singing occupied most of the programme. Votes of thanks to the ladies of the stall singers were given. The proceeds, including trays given, realised about £25.

SWINTON.—The Christmas Congregational tea party was held here on Christmas Day, the schoolroom being quite filled with a delighted audience. The room was tastefully decorated with mottoes and evergreens. The Rev. W. Harrison presided, and delivered a short address on "Christmas." The remainder of the evening was given up to amusement, consisting of anthems, readings, and recitations, and the following dialogues and dramas: "Wanted a Servant," "Petty Muggins and the Scotchman," "The Three Graces," and "A Happy Pair." The parts were filled in a very creditable manner by the teachers and elder scholars. On New Year's Day the scholars' party was held, and was also largely attended by parents. The Rev. W. Harrison again presided.

Prizes were awarded to eleven scholars for good conduct and regular attendance. The three youngest children in the school received the usual present from the minister of a fancy box filled with sweets. A large number of the children gave recitations, all of them of an instructive and many of an amusing character. During Christmas week a Christmas tree was held for the purpose of raising funds for re-flooring the school, which was found to be eaten away with dry rot. Although trade is bad at Swinton, many of the people only working short time, yet after paying all expenses the sum of £16. 8s. 9d. was realised.

TODMORDEX.—The annual Christmas party of the congregation was held in the schoolroom on Saturday evening week, when there was a large attendance. Reports were read on the affairs of the congregation and school, and short addresses were delivered by the minister the Rev. Lindsey Taplin, Revs. F. E. Millson and Jas. Plack, and Mr. John Chadwick. Besides the singing of the choir and the music of the stringed band, there was the special attraction of bellringing by a company recently formed in connection with the school. The scholars' party had been held on the previous Saturday.

TENTERDEN.—The annual distribution of prizes took place on Wednesday evening week. There was a large attendance of parents and members of the congregation. The chair was taken by the Mayor (Edgar Winsor, Esq.), who distributed the prizes. A report was read by the secretary, J. E. Mace, jun., Esq. Addresses were delivered by the Mayor, J. Munn, Esq., W. G. Mace, Esq., and the Rev. R. C. Dendy, and carols were sung by the children. At the conclusion of the proceedings in the chapel, a Christmas tree was exhibited in the schoolroom loaded with presents for scholars and visitors. A very pleasant evening was closed by a vote of thanks to Mr. and Mrs. Dendy and the teachers.

WIGAN: PARK LANE.—The annual congregational party was held here on New Year's Eve. The schoolroom was tastefully decorated, and a bountiful tea provided. Mr. John Lowe took the chair, and addresses were given by Mr. Baker, Mr. Brittain, and the Rev. George Fox. Excellent singing was provided by the choir, and several dramatic sketches were well performed by some of the young people. Mrs. Baker presided at a fruit and confectionery stall, at which New Year's cards were also sold. These cards, purchased by persons present for their friends in the room, were afterwards delivered by Mr. Prescott, as the postman, and proved a very interesting feature in the evening's proceedings. The meeting, which was protracted till a late hour, was an exceedingly pleasant one, and was closed with the benediction.

WHITCHURCH.—The members of the Free Christian Church at Whitchurch celebrated their first anniversary on Tuesday evening by a tea meeting and a public meeting and entertainment. The public meeting and entertainment was held in the Assembly Room at the Town Hall, under the presidency of Mr. William Rathbone, M.P. for Liverpool. There were also on the platform the Rev. C. Beard, Liverpool; the Rev. T. Gasquoine, B.A., Oswestry; the Rev. J. Wood, Leicester; the Rev. R. C. Page, the Rev. W. Carey Walters, Whitchurch, and Mr. J. Gresty, and there was a very large attendance. The proceedings commenced with the singing of the hymn, "The year has gone beyond recall." The accounts read at the meeting showed a balance of £4 in hand. After speeches by the Chairman (William Rathbone, Esq., M.P.), the Revs. T. Gasquoine, C. Beard, B.A., W. Carey Walters, Mr. John Gresty, and others, votes of thanks terminated the meeting, a report of which we hold over for next week.

CORRESPONDENCE.

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"Our Sunday Schools," the "Mission of Unitarianism," and several articles in type stand over through press of matter.

THE DISTRESS IN SOUTH WALES.

To the Editors.—May I through your columns ask assistance towards alleviating the distress now prevailing in South Wales? Where there is a scarcity of food, there is no money to buy clothes, and this is one way in which women can especially help. With donations already received I have bought some material, which will be made up as quickly as possible into frocks, &c. Further money or material would be acceptable; in the latter case I should give some out to workwomen here, and so effect a further good by helping those nearer home. Any old clothing also, if plain and warm, would be useful for those who are totally unprovided against the cold weather. I am glad to find the funds are being distributed in no sectarian spirit, and one of our own ministers in the district tells me to direct all parcels to the rector of Merthyr. All contributions sent to my address will be thankfully received by yours truly,

ALICE BARTRAM.

34, Douglas Road, Canonbury, N., Jan. 8.

To the Editors.—The tales of the distress in South Wales are heartrending. Many of our Sunday scholars would, no doubt, be glad to help to feed the starving children of Merthyr and the neighbourhood. Before afternoon school on Sunday I read aloud the letter which appeared in the Daily News of the previous day, descriptive of the feeding of 2,000 hungry children with soup and bread. I suggested to the teachers and scholars that they should make a collection next Sunday. But they urged that they should like to do something at once. A collection was accordingly made, and though the school was quite unprepared, 17s. was raised, which I have sent to one of our ministers, the Rev. R. J. Jones, M.A., Myrtle Cottage, Aberdare, who has undertaken to receive subscriptions for the distressed people in his neighbourhood. My school will also repeat their Christmas entertainments, and devote the proceeds to the South Wales Relief Fund. I write in the hope that the example of Stand School will be widely followed.

WILLIAM CROKE SQUIER.

Stand, Jan. 8, 1878.

[We hope many friends and Sunday Schools will follow the good example thus set, and will be glad to make known the result.—ED. U. H.]

COMING WEEK.

BOOTLE, NEAR LIVERPOOL.—On Tuesday evening, in the Town Hall, Merton Road, Bootle, Lecture by the Rev. S. Fletcher Williams, on "What think ye of Christ?"
MOTTRAM.—On Sunday evening, lecture by the Rev. Alex. Ashworth, on "Little Sins."
STOURBRIDGE.—On Sunday evening, a lecture by Geo. St. Clair, Esq., on "Agnosticism."
WALSALL.—On Wednesday night, special service, preacher, Rev. J. Page Hopps.

MARRIAGE.

TAIT-PATERSON.—On the 2nd inst., at 3, Mackie Place, Aberdeen, by the Rev. David Scott, late minister of George-street Unitarian Church, Aberdeen, James Tait, Glasgow, to Eliza, youngest daughter of the late James Paterson, leather merchant, Aberdeen. No cards.

DEATHS.

ASHTON.—On the 6th inst., aged three, John Edward, eldest son of John Edward Ashton, at 3, St. Luke's Terrace, Cheetham.
HAWORTH.—On the 9th inst., at his residence, 29, Broadfield, Rochdale, Doctor Haworth, aged 64 years.
SHAEN.—On the 5th inst., at West Cottage, Royston, Herts, Janet, wife of the Rev. Richard Shaen, in her 70th year.

CHEAP ISSUE.—Paper 6d., post 7d., direct A. Hood, Devonport. "The Life and Teaching of Jesus Christ."

UNITARIAN MAGAZINE. Edited by FRANK W. WALTERS, Glasgow. Monthly, One Penny. Orders to be sent to Mr. PATERSON, 9, Pitt-street, Glasgow.

THE CHILDREN'S SERVICES in use at the Free Christian Church Sunday School, Bolton, are now Reprinted for Sale. A specimen copy may be had for four stamps, of the Rev. A. B. CAMM, Arkwright-street, Bolton.

QUENDRYTH: A Legend of the Heptarchy. By EDWIN SIDNEY HARTLAND. Price 5s. London: Simpkin, Marshall and Co. "A remarkable and beautiful drama."—Unitarian Herald.

Now Ready, 8vo, gilt edges, price 2s., post free, 2s. 2d.
A YEAR AT DRAYTON: A Story for Children. By Mrs. PAUL E. FISHER.

Charing Cross Publishing Company, Limited, 5, Friar-street, Broadway, London, E.C.

THE UNITARIAN POCKET ALMANAC and DIARY for 1878 IS NOW READY. In tuck and gilt edges, 1s.; cloth, 6d. (a few without diary cloth, 6d.); paper, 4d. Orders should be sent at once to JOHN PHILLIPS, 55, Market-street, Manchester.

YOUNG DAYS (No. 25) for January, Now Ready. Price One Penny. Numerous Illustrations. CONTENTS.—The Seasons—Ida Mayhew—Children of God—An Old Chelsea Pensioner—London Waifs—Wolf!—Hans Richter's Christmas Tree—Chinese Proverbs—The Giant "Can't help it"—Puzzles—A Charade for January. Published by the Sunday School Association, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, London, W.C.

WORKS BY UNITARIAN AND OTHER

FREE CHRISTIAN WRITERS.

Kept in Stock or promptly procured to Order, by
JOHNSON & RAWSON,
89, MARKET-STREET, MANCHESTER.
Dawson, George, M.A.—Sermons (just out).....	6 0
Herford Brooke.—The Story of Religion in England.....	5 0
Dr. Channing.—Complete works.....	3 6
J. J. Tayler, B.A.—[Last series] Christian Aspects of Faith and Duty.....	7 6
J. J. Tayler, B.A.—Retrospect of Religious Life of England.....	7 6
G. Dawson, M.A.—Prayers.....	6 0
Dr. Martineau.—Endeavours after the Christian Life.....	7 6
Dr. Martineau.—Hours of Thought.....	7 6
Robert Collyer.—The Life that Now Is, and Nature and Life (1 volume).....	4 0
Blanco White.—Heresy and Orthodoxy.....	2 0
Rev. C. Beard, B.A.—The Soul's Way to God.....	7 6
Theodore Parker.—Discourse on Religion.....	2 0
Theodore Parker.—Ten Sermons and Prayers.....	2 0
Theodore Parker.—Life and Writings.....	1 6
Dr. Vance Smith.—The Bible and Popular Theology.....	3 6
Dr. Vance Smith.—The Spirit and Word of Christ.....	2 0
Mary Carpenter.—Morning and Evening Meditations.....	5 0
Samuel Greg.—A Layman's Legacy.....	4 6
Knappert.—Religion of Israel (trans. R. A. Armstrong).....	2 6
Whitworth.—Book of Natural Laws.....	1 6
F. W. Newman.—The Soul: its Sorrows, &c.....	1 3
Phil's Mistake.—A Story for the Young. Cloth, 1s. 6d.; gilt.....	2 0
rosy's Three Homes, cloth, 1s. 6d.; gilt.....	2 0
Volume 4.—Bible for the Young.....	4 0
Volume 2.—Young Days.....	1 6

The Theological Review, 2s. 6d.; The Truthseeker, 3d.; Christian Freeman, 1d.; The Inquirer, 5d.; The Unitarian Herald, 1d.; The Christian Life, 2d.; The Free Word, 1d.; and all other Periodicals supplied.

1878 { DIARIES AND ALMANACKS, } 1878

LETTER-PRESS PRINTING IN ALL ITS BRANCHES. Stationery, Account Books, and Binding. Note-paper and Envelopes, stamped with Monogram, Crest, &c.

LONDON: SHIRLEY'S TEMPERANCE HOTEL, 37, Queen's Square, Bloomsbury. Beds from 1s. 6d. Plain Breakfast or Tea, 1s. 3d.

RUPTURES.—Exhibition Prize Medal, 1862, was awarded to R. WESTBURY, inventor and sole maker of the IMPERCEPTIBLE CURATIVE TRUSS. Deformity Instruments, Artificial Limbs, Crutches, Elastic Stockings, and Ladies' Supporting Belts, Chest Expanders for round shoulders, &c., 26, Old Millgate, Manchester.

H. OGDEN & SON, MANUFACTURERS OF USEFUL AND ARTISTIC FURNITURE.

ORIGINAL DESIGNS AND SOUND CONSTRUCTION AT MODERATE COST.

WAREHOUSE—126, DEANSGATE, MANCHESTER.

Printed for the Proprietors, by WILLIAM EVANS, of Apsley Villa, 377, Waterloo Road, Cheetham Hill, at his Printing Offices, No. 3, Cross-street, Parish of Manchester; and Published by JOHN PHILLIPS, at New Cannon Chambers, 55, Market-street, in said Parish of Manchester.—London Agents: Messrs. Smart and Allen, 2, London-house Yard, Paternoster Row.—Friday, January 11 1878.

The Unitarian Herald.

EDITED BY

REV. JAMES BLACK, M.A., & REV. S. FLETCHER WILLIAMS.

VOL. XVIII.—873.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 18, 1878.

PRICE 1D.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE.
Doings and Sayings.....	18
Scottish Notes	18
American Notes	18
Books and Authors	18
Our Sunday Schools	18
Malton: Re-opening of the Chapel	19
Light and Shadow	20
The Larger Hope	20
The Decline of Bibliolatry	20
More Orthodox Concessions.....	20
British and Foreign Unitarian Association.....	20
Whitchurch: Free Christian Church	21
Liverpool.....	22
News of our Churches.....	22

Post-office orders to be made payable to Mr. JOHN PHILLIPS, 55, Market-street, Manchester, to whom all orders and business communications should be addressed.

STRANGEWAYS UNITARIAN FREE CHURCH.

On Sunday the Rev. J. T. MARRIOTT will preach, morning and evening. There will be Communion after morning service.

CROSS-STREET CHAPEL.

On Sunday morning, January 20th, a Collection will be made on behalf of the Chapel Library. Preacher, Rev. WM. GASKELL, M.A. Divine service begins at 10.30 a.m.

LITTLE PORTLAND-STREET CHAPEL.

Sunday, January 20th, a LECTURE in Vindication of the Personal Jesus of the Gospels from Certain Modern Objections, by Rev. CHARLES WICKSTEED, B.A. Service at 11.15.

UNITARIAN HOME MISSIONARY BOARD.

MEMORIAL HALL, MANCHESTER.

The ANNUAL BUSINESS MEETING will be held

On TUESDAY, January 22, 1878,

in CROSS-STREET CHAPEL ROOM,

AT THREE O'CLOCK.

DAVID AINSWORTH, Esq., the Retiring President, in the Chair.

The following motion will be submitted by Mr. REYNOLDS:—

“That as a memorial to Dr. Beard, the founder and late principal of the Unitarian Home Missionary Board, it is hereby resolved that the present collection of theological and other books, and all future additions thereto, shall be called the Beard Theological Library, and that the use of such library shall be freely granted to all persons interested therein, on condition that they give such security for the safe return of any book or books entrusted to them as the General Committee may require.”

THE SOIREE

will take place the same evening in the Memorial Hall,

Mr. Alderman GRUNDY (Mayor of Manchester), the President, will take the chair at six o'clock.

The following gentlemen are also expected to be present and to take part in the proceedings:—Revs. John Page Hopps, Leicester; H. E. Dowson, B.A., Gee Cross; G. H. Wells, M.A., Gorton; and S. A. Steinthal, Manchester; Messrs. Henry Tate, Liverpool; George Buckton, Leeds; Richard Peacock, J.P., Gorton; Alderman Harwood, Salford; Herbert Burrows, Cambridge; Frank Taylor, Bolton; John Kendall, B.A.; Harry Rawson, and John Moore.

TEA WILL BE ON THE TABLES AT FIVE O'CLOCK.

The Musical Arrangements

Will be Conducted by Mr. THOS. RAWSON.

Tickets, One Shilling each, may be had at the Memorial Hall, or from Messrs. JOHNSON & RAWSON, Market-street.

H. E. DOWSON, { Hon. Secs.
F. NICHOLSON, }

HALE CHAPEL, CHESHIRE.—Introduction

of the Rev. T. LLOYD JONES to the Ministry on Friday the 25th inst. The Rev. James Drummond, B.A., professor in Manchester New College, London; Rev. Charles Beard, B.A., of Liverpool; Rev. E. S. Howse, B.A., of Altrincham, and others, will take part in the proceedings. Tea (one shilling) in the Chapel Schoolroom at half-past five. Service at seven.

Hale Chapel is two and a half miles from the Bowdon Station. Frequent trains from the Oxford Road Station, Manchester, between 4.40 and 6.; return trains leave Bowdon at 9.35 and 10.20.

HAMILTON ROAD FREE CHURCH, LIVERPOOL.

The Church ANNIVERSARY SERMONS will be preached on Sunday, January 27th, 1878, in the morning, at 11 o'clock, by the Rev. J. H. THOM; in the evening, at 6.30, by the Rev. CHARLES BEARD, B.A., Collections at each service in aid of the Church Funds.

EAST CHESHIRE CHRISTIAN UNION

FOR MISSIONARY PURPOSES.

The ANNUAL MEETING will be held in the Fitzalan-street Chapel, Glossop, on Saturday, January 26th.

The Business Meeting will begin at twelve o'clock noon, after which lunch will be provided in the schoolroom for visitors from a distance.

At three o'clock a Religious Service will be held, when a Sermon will be preached by Rev. W. GASKELL, M.A. After the service, tea will be provided at a charge of sixpence.

A Public Meeting will be held at six o'clock; E. C. POTTER, Esq., in the chair. The presence of representatives of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, the Manchester District Unitarian Association, and the East Lancashire Unitarian Mission, and other friends is expected.

COMMISSION-STREET, BOLTON.

The BAZAAR will be held the second week in April.
A. LAZENBY, Secretary.

MANCHESTER NEW COLLEGE.

COURSE OF LECTURES

ON
THE BASIS OF RELIGION IN THE MORAL AND SPIRITUAL NATURE OF MAN,

BY
PROFESSOR THE REV. JAMES DRUMMOND, B.A.

The College adheres to its original principle of freely imparting Theological knowledge, without insisting on the adoption of particular Theological doctrines.

PART II.—THE SPIRITUAL NATURE.

SYNOPSIS.

I. The existence of a Primitive Religious Element in Man, an evidence of the existence of an Object answering to it.

II. The Needs of the Religious element a Criterion of Truth. Remarks on the method of examining the religious element.

III. Criticism of Schleiermacher's definition of Religion.

IV. Criticism of Theodore Parker's definition of Religion. Criticism of the statement that when religious truth is presented to the mind, we are conscious of its veracity. First step in a sound method.

V. Sources of Error. Spiritual qualifications of the Theologian.

VI. The Construction of Doctrines. Facts in Religious History confirmatory of the theory. Place for a Revelation.

The Lectures will be delivered on Wednesday, the 6th of February, and the five following Wednesdays, in University Hall, Gordon Square, at 8.30 p.m.

The Lectures will be open to the public, of either sex, on payment of an admission fee of 1s. for each Lecture, or 5s. for the six.

Tickets for this course may be obtained at the Hall on admission to the first Lecture.

R. D. DARBISHIRE, { Secretaries.
CHARLES BEARD, }

FREE-TRADE HALL MEETING of British and Foreign Unitarian Association.—Friends who have not yet sent in their PROMISES of NEW or ADDITIONAL SUBSCRIPTIONS or DONATIONS will oblige by forwarding them, as early as convenient, to Mr. HARRY RAWSON, local treasurer, Market-street, Manchester.

BRITISH AND FOREIGN UNITARIAN

ASSOCIATION.

LOCAL COMMITTEE FOR MANCHESTER AND THE DISTRICT:

W. GASKELL, M.A., Chairman.
C. T. POYNTING, B.A., Hon. Sec.
HARRY RAWSON, Local Treasurer.

NEW SUBSCRIPTIONS.

	£	s.	d.
A. O., Manchester	0	10	6
Bowes, J., Manchester	0	10	0
Golland, Smith, Manchester.....	1	1	0
Golland, Miss, Manchester	0	10	6
Golland, Miss Mary, Manchester	0	10	6
Kay, Robert H., Manchester	2	2	0
Salomonson, Miss A., Manchester	1	1	0
Graham, John, Mossley	0	5	0
Firth, Mrs., Mossley	0	5	0
Heap, Joseph, Mossley	0	5	0
Lawton, Jon., N., Mossley	0	5	0
Barker, Philip, Nantwich	1	1	0

DONATIONS.

Tootill, John, Little Lever	0	10	0
Local Committee: Balance after defraying expenses of Free-trade Hall Meeting.....	3	13	4

Received during the past week:— NEW SUBSCRIPTIONS.

Ewart, Henry, Manchester	2	2	0
Heywood, Charles, Manchester	1	1	0
McKie, R. A.,	0	10	0
Woolley, G. S., Manchester	1	1	0
Harrison, Rev. W., Swinton.....	0	5	0
Leigh, Mrs. Timperley	0	10	6
Oakes, Joseph, Macclesfield.....	0	5	0
Houghton, James, Macclesfield	0	2	0
Hammond, Edward, Macclesfield	0	10	0
Holland, Isaac, Macclesfield	0	2	6
Roberts, Joseph, Macclesfield	0	2	6
Worsley, Joseph, Macclesfield.....	0	5	0
Yates, J. W., Macclesfield	0	2	6

DONATIONS.

Ewart, Henry, Manchester	2	2	0
Vickers, Richard, Manchester.....	0	10	0
Brooklehurst, W. O., M.P., Macclesfield.....	5	0	0
Brooklehurst, T. U., Macclesfield	5	0	0
Brooklehurst, Charles, Macclesfield	10	0	0

HENRY IERSON, Secretary, per Local Treasurer.
January 17th, 1878.

THE WELSH DISTRESS FUND.

	£	s.	d.
X, Nottingham, per Rev. Robert Spears.....	0	10	0
A Friend in London, per Rev. Robert Spears.....	0	10	0
Mrs. T., per Rev. Robert Spears.....	0	10	0
Mrs. Samuel Smith and Miss Smith, Edgbaston.....	5	0	0
Mrs. Ellen Odgers, Bath.....	1	0	0
Rev. W. C. Squier, Stand, near Manchester.....	1	0	0
Aspland Squier (for children).....	0	4	0
Beatrice Squier do.....	0	4	0
Christabel Squier do.....	0	4	0
Dora Squier do.....	0	4	0
Egbert Squier do.....	0	4	0
Sunday Scholars, per Rev. W. C. Squier.....	2	2	0
Mr. Ellerbeck, per Rev. Robert Spears.....	0	10	0
Mrs. Ellerbeck, do.....	1	0	0
Mrs. Parslow, do.....	2	2	0
Mr. Henry Rutt.....	2	2	0
Mrs. Catherine Graves.....	2	2	0
R. W., Leicester.....	0	5	0
Mrs. Glover.....	1	0	0
Miss Simpson, Leicester.....	1	0	0
Mr. Ch. Huxham, per Rev. J. J. George.....	0	5	0

Jan. 16, 1878.
Any subscriptions sent to the Rev. J. JONES, Myrtle Cottage, Aberdare, will be distributed among our Churches—relieving the most needy cases of our people.

HOLLY BANK SCHOOL, Birkdale, Southport, will RE-OPEN on Wednesday, January 23rd.

B. TEMPLAR, Principal.

MR. LANCASTER, Organist of Mill Hill Chapel,

Leeds, will be glad to Receive his PUPILS on and after the 17th of January, 1878.—For terms, &c., apply as above.

BRIDPORT.—The Rev. JOHN DAVIES, M.A.,

Educates Six Pupils as Boarders in his house. Terms moderate. TWO VACANCIES.

SEASIDE EDUCATION FOR GIRLS

DYSART HOUSE, CLEVEDON.—Miss E. MARTIN'S pupils will ASSEMBLE on Tuesday, January 22nd.

SOUTHPORT.—BOARDING SCHOOL FOR

GIRLS.—Miss CURTIS will RE-OPEN her School, Jan. 23rd, 1878. Prospectus on application.—Westburne, Grosvenor Road, Birkdale.

KNUTSFORD.—MISS ARDERN'S Boarding

School for Girls will RE-OPEN after the Christmas holidays on January 21st. Terms and references will be sent on application.

POINT VIEW SCHOOL, HIGHER BROUGH-

TON, MANCHESTER.—Principals, Mr. and Mrs. RIGG. DUTIES RESUMED, Monday, January 21st. A small number of BOARDERS received; not more than six.

CAMBRIDGE.—W. STODDART, B.A., of Gwydyr House School, can Receive a Few BOARDERS at moderate terms. Young Gentlemen prepared for the Camb. Local Examinations and the University.

MRS. and Miss ARMSTRONG (formerly of Durham Park, Bristol), wish to receive Two or Three BOARDERS into their house at Nottingham, to attend the High School for Girls.—64, Forest Road West, Nottingham.

KINDER GARTEN and PESTALOZZIAN

SCHOOL.—Miss LEWIN Receives several Little Boys and Girls as Boarders. The next Quarter will begin January 22nd.—Shakespeare-street, Nottingham.

EDUCATION.—BATH.—Mrs. JEFFERY receives as BOARDERS Girls attending the Classes of the Bath High School. The NEXT TERM will COMMENCE January 22nd, 1878.—Address Mrs. JEFFERY, 9, Norfolk Crescent, Bath.

HOPE LEA, HEATON NORRIS, STOCK-

PORT.—HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.—Conducted by Dr. and Mrs. MARCUS, assisted by able masters. The majority of the Senior Girls who passed the last Oxford Examinations in the Manchester centre came from this school.—The NEXT TERM commences on Tuesday, January 15.

LANCASTER.—The Rev. D. DAVIES, B.A.,

will RE-OPEN School on Friday, January the 25th. A few VACANCIES either for juniors or seniors to join in preparation for the matriculation examination of the London University in 1879. Prospectus on application. Present address, “To the care of Mrs. Davis, Almswood, Evesham.”

BROOK HOUSE, KNUTSFORD, CHESHIRE.

BOARDING SCHOOL FOR GIRLS, conducted by Mrs. FRANK SHAWCROSS, assisted by Resident English and Foreign Governesses. Teachers of eminence attend for instruction in Music, Singing, Harmony, Drawing, Dancing, &c. Prospectus and references forwarded on application.

MOUNT VERNON HIGH SCHOOL,

NOTTINGHAM.—Established 1864.

Mr. EDWIN SMITH, M.A., with competent assistance, thoroughly prepares Boys for College, the University Local Examinations, or for Business. For prospectus address Sandy Knoll, Forest Road, Nottingham.

LINDOW GROVE SCHOOL, ALDERLEY

EDGE.—The premises have been erected for a First-class BOARDING SCHOOL, with extensive grounds for recreation, in a delightful country district. Every effort is made to educate the character, to have work done thoroughly, and to adapt it to the pupil's capacity, physical and mental. References and prospectus on application.

JAMES WOOD.

EDUCATION IN GERMANY.

Miss M. WAGNER (17, Helenenstrasse, Weisbaden, Germany), who has passed the Prussian State Examination, and possesses the experience of several first-class English schools, receives a limited number of YOUNG LADIES for Private Education, or to visit the excellent College of the town, with home assistance. Climate very healthy, with mild winter. Hot and other mineral springs. English and German references. For terms and further particulars address as above.

YORK: 26, HIGH PETER GATE.—Miss

AMY HERRING begs to announce that she has OPENED, at the above address, a SCHOOL for the instruction of Young Ladies in all branches, comprising a first-class education with liberal views. References kindly permitted by the following:—Dr. G. Vance Smith, The Parade, Carmarthen; the Rev. C. Welbeloved, 38, Monkgate, York; Miss Swaine, 1, The Crescent, York.—Terms on application.

Pupils are prepared for the University Examinations, several having passed most successfully.

HEATH BROW SCHOOL, HAMPSTEAD,

LONDON, N.W.

Classics and English subjects: Rev. E. M. Geldart, M.A., Oxon, and Mr. Arch. Ballantyne. Mathematics and Natural Philosophy: John Bridge, M.A., London. French: Dr. Bouron des Cleyes. French, examiner in: Professor Charles Cassal, LL.D. German: Rev. E. M. Geldart, M.A., Oxon. Chemistry: Mr. H. Maiden, under the direction of Professor Banfi, M.A. Writing: C. F. King, B.A., London. Writing Master in University College School. Drawing: Mr. W. H. Fisk, Head Drawing Master in University College School. Gymnastics and Fencing: Mr. Winterbottom. There is a PREPARATORY CLASS for little Boys and Girls under ten years of age. The NEXT TERM begins on Thursday, Jan. 24th, 1878.—Prospectus on application to Mrs. CASE.

DOINGS AND SAYINGS.

The Spectator draws attention to what constitutes a real scandal of the time—a wedding at which the bridesmaids' dresses were trimmed with robins!

In Liverpool 28 cocoa rooms have been set on foot, and have all proved a complete success. This is one of the most hopeful of modern efforts in the direction of social amelioration.

Mr. Forster's hopes of the Liberal leadership are well-nigh scattered to the winds by his Bradford speech. A man who "rocks" on such a question as disestablishment, who cannot tell how things may be situated in the next Parliament, or what may be his opinion in an altered state of circumstances, is certainly a most unfit pilot to take on board the State vessel in times like these.

The Council of the Church League for the Separation of Church and State recommend their members at the next general election to vote only for candidates who favour disestablishment, regardless of their opinions on other matters.

At the meeting of Convocation of London University on Tuesday night, a resolution proposed by Mr. Bompas, Q.C., for the adoption of a supplemental charter, which declares that all the existing powers and provisions relating to the granting of degrees and certificates shall apply to women equally as to men, was carried by 242 votes against 132.

Famine is raging awfully in the north-east of China. It extends over a district which includes at least 5,000 villages. It is within the mark to say 500 die daily, perhaps 1,000 may be within it. Thousands upon thousands have perished already. Houses are pulled down in every village to sell the timber and thatch, in order to get food. The people of Shansi are said to be living on the corpses of those who have died of starvation, and the strong are killing the weak for the sake of obtaining their flesh for food. The principal relief up till now has come from the Christian missionaries, the Chinese Government being almost helpless.

There are some Evangelical clergymen in the Church of England who are not inclined to follow the lead of Canon Ryle and the 14,000 of their brethren who signed the memorial condemning any alteration of the Burial Law. At Stanwick, Northamptonshire, the Baptist Church has lost, by death at the advanced age of 93, its senior deacon, and the founder of the Baptist interest in that place. The rector, Rev. G. Mansfield, LL.D., having been applied to, gave an impressive discourse in the parish church on the occasion of the funeral, and at the close of the burial service in the churchyard, courteously invited the Baptist minister, the Rev. Isaac Near, to deliver an address, an invitation which was readily complied with. We are glad to recognise this willingness to break down the narrow barriers of sectarianism at the grave, under the unrestrained impulses of a large-hearted Christianity.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

THE "TIMES" AND DISESTABLISHMENT IN SCOTLAND.

So critical—in spite of the Duke of Argyll's article in the Contemporary—do the conductors of the Times consider the position of the Church of Scotland that they are reported to be contemplating sending a special commissioner in the beginning of 1878 to collect reliable statistics and other facts relating to the various ecclesiastical organisations in Scotland. Hitherto it has been found impossible to say anything positive about the comparative strength of the Church and of its Dissenting rivals; and all that can be done is to hit the more or less happy mean between partisan pamphlets.

THE DUKE OF ARGYLL ON DISESTABLISHMENT.

Commenting on the article by the Duke of Argyll in this month's Contemporary, the Scotsman says:—

Taken as a whole, it is not unfair to describe it as a keen and even bitter pleading by a devoted Established Churchman for his own sectarian position in the disestablishment controversy. Of any one who has once entangled himself in such a contention, it is perhaps expecting too much that he should be able to rise to a thoroughly judicial and statesmanlike point of view, and it is only what may be looked for that he should say hard and unjustifiable things of those who come in his way, under the stimulus of what the Duke himself, when speaking reprovingly of some other people here calls "the subtle and powerful influences which make even men who are good and conscientious in all other matters, capable of any injustice to a Church to which they are opposed." . . . It is true that he exclaims in one place against the "complete vagueness, and uncertainty, and aimlessness of what is called modern thought," but he by-and-by makes up for this by conceding that "a reasonable liberty in theological belief is needed by the progress of knowledge and the well-considered development of religious thought," and by subjecting the Confession of Faith to a cavalier criticism worthy of the Rev. David Macrae. To the Duke the Westminster Divines seem to have been a body of bunglers. They have "ventured on some rash sayings." They stagger confusedly about from Calvinism to Arminianism and back again; and the Duke speaks of "the rawest Calvinism" with a contempt which would have procured him argumentative if not corporal punishment had he lived in the days and jurisdiction of the Genevese dogmatist. In the meantime, the discredited Standard is professedly, although the Duke cannot think really, believed by the clergy; and in order to provide the "reasonable liberty in belief" desired—which of course means liberty to disbelieve as much as the Duke of Argyll, and no more—he recommends a system of subscribing with "reservations," and of deliberate dereliction by the Church Courts of the duties involved in their establishment, which, when fully carried out, would probably end in making the Established Church the most dishonest and demoralising institution in the country.

In reply to a deputation from the Paisley Liberation Society, the Disestablishment Association, and the Religious Equalisation Society, Mr. W. Holms, M.P., for Paisley, said he was in favour of a Royal Commission to ascertain the feelings of the people of Scotland on the question of disestablishment of the Church of Scotland, and should a bill be brought before Parliament as the result of that Commission, he would certainly vote for it. The deputation contended that a Royal Commission was unnecessary, as the majority of the people were in favour of disestablishment.

AMERICAN NOTES.

CONGREGATIONALISM IN AMERICA.

The Watchman does not like the looks of things just now in the camp of Congregationalism:—It is evident that one of two things is certain: either there is to be another schism in the Congregational body, or it must be taken as settled that a belief in the doctrine of everlasting punishment is not prerequisite to admission into the Congregational ministry. If the latter alternative is to be the conclusion of the whole matter, the gulf that divided between the orthodox and liberal Congregationalists is filled up. Bushnellism has left the name of atonement emptied of its doctrinal significance, and that is the teaching of an increasing number of pulpits. When the doctrine of retribution is repudiated, the rest of the creed will soon drop away. The work of Griffin and Beecher half a century ago is crumbling down.

The munificence of the gift of the Lenox Library to the city of New York is described as astonishing. The value of the collection of bibles alone is estimated at half a million dollars. There is a superb copy of the Mazarin Bible. There is an excellent copy of the Coverdale Bible, believed to be the most nearly perfect in existence after the famous one at Castle Ashby. There is a facsimile of the fragment of Tyndale's Bible now in the British Museum. There is one of the five or six extant copies of John Eliot's Indian Bible, printed at Cambridge (Massachusetts), in 1661-63, a book which it is believed only one man now living can read, the language into which it was translated by the good missionary having utterly perished. The collection of rare editions of Shakespeare is even grander than was supposed. There are no fewer than six copies of the first folio, and there are several copies of the second, third, and fourth. The first edition of "Paradise Lost," two volumes that belonged to Milton, one containing his autograph, the other a sonnet in his fine handwriting; a copy of the "Bay State Psalm Book," almost the first book printed in America; a book printed in Mexico in 1545, nearly a century before the first press was set up in any part of what is now the United States—these are some of the other treasures of this splendid library.

BOOKS AND AUTHORS.

The Brahmô Year-Book for 1877. Brief records of life and work in the Theistic Churches of India. Edited by Sophia Dobson Collet. Williams and Norgate.

We heartily thank Miss Collet for her second year-book, which not only contains an account (more complete than that of the former year) of the progress made by the Brahmo Somaj in India, but also a description of the literature of the Somaj propagandist and expository, with selections, together with some examples of devotional services,—meditations, prayers, and hymns. The list of Somajes, or societies, numbers 107, for all India, 61 of which are in Bengal. The marriage statistics are peculiarly interesting. A table is given, showing that in nineteen months therein comprised, there were 18 Brahmin marriages, of which 10 were intermarriages between members of different castes, and four were widow marriages. The bridegrooms' ages range from 19 to 37 and the brides' from 14 to 26—"a glaring contrast to the usual routine of Hindoo espousals." The Bombay Association contributed generously to the Relief of the Famine both in Western India during the early part of 1877, and later in the more severely stricken South. The outlines of religious education would supply many useful suggestions for our teachers.

The Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge has in the press a new work by the Rev. Brownlow Maitland—Lord Shaftesbury's heretic—entitled Theism or Agnosticism.

Mr. H. H. A. J. Munro, the well-known editor of Lucretius, has in the press a critical volume on Catullus. In the space of 200 pages he examines a considerable number of the poems, and attempts to clear up the difficulties which have hitherto presented themselves to the critic or student.

In the forthcoming number of the Church Quarterly Review Mr. Gladstone—who was himself in office during a part of the time dealt with in it—reviews the third volume of the Prince Consort's life. Besides this the number will contain an article on English ordinations; one on the spiritual claims of the Church of England, as against dissent on the one hand and Rome on the other; and another on the burials question.

OUR SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

SYSTEMATIC RELIGIOUS TEACHING IN SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

EDUCATION in religion then, like education in other subjects, is to begin with fixing the attention of the child on the near and known, and thence proceeding to the more distant and less known. The nearest and most known in religious matters is the child's own moral experience, the experience that the moral consciousness or conscience makes him feel that one impulse is better than another, and ought to be obeyed, &c. We will suppose that the scholar has been well exercised in this first stage of religious knowledge; he has learnt by actual experience that impulses of sensual appetite, idleness, selfish fear, anger, vanity, pride, covetousness, are inferior to other feelings of justice, kindness, self-restraint, &c.; he has learnt by experience that when he yields to the lower and refuses to listen to the nobler, conscience fills his mind with shame and scorn and condemnation of himself; that when he has put down his lower impulses and thrown himself on the side of his higher, conscience has filled his mind with self-approval, joy, and peace; and now we would say that it is from this first stage of moral consciousness that the child can be led up to the next stage, God-consciousness, or consciousness of God. Observe, we do not say mere knowledge of God—i.e., knowledge of Him, it may be, by hearsay—but consciousness of God, an actual feeling of the presence and contact of God, a personal acquaintance with Him. In all probability, the child will have learnt something about God by hearsay before this time, though probably it would be better for himself if he has not, and if his first conception of God rise out of his moral experience. Some, no doubt, will think that our order is a complete reversal of the true order, and that belief in God should be first communicated, in order that he may be referred to for the sanction of all moral obligation. This I consider to be a great error in religious teaching, both in school and church. It is the building of the pyramid on its apex instead of on its base. It is building the more known upon the less known. The truth is, the sanction for moral duty and obligation comes from no theological idea, but from the very feeling of the sanction itself as an original instinct. The very conception of holiness and righteousness in God is put into Him from our previous feeling of holiness and righteousness in ourselves. As Dr. Martineau had said "A man is the image and glory of God," and truly, it is from our own human nature, from its deep experiences, and earnest affections, that we form our conception of Deity. Without the stirrings of divine qualities within us, without some consciousness of that which we ascribe to the All-perfect, the names and descriptions by which he is made known to us would be empty words, as idly sent to us, as treatises of sound to the deaf, or some "high discourse of reason" to the fool.

And we believe that to thousands of minds the teachings regarding God as the Holy and the Righteous are but empty words for want of the previously awakened moral consciousness to give them meaning. It is because the thought of God and faith in God has not grown out of the moral sense, and had every portion of it permeated by moral qualities, that it has been a tree to bear in many minds such poisonous fruits as cruelty, bigotry, hatred, pride. The truth is, a holy God is conceived of as the magnified reflection of Conscience; but if there is no conscience to be reflected there is no image seen. We will suppose, then, that the scholar has been led more and more to feel the sanction of goodness in his own consciousness—to feel, that is, that right is right and noble, and ought to be preferred because something in him, yet above him, and which he feels has a right to command him, tells him that it is right and noble and ought to be preferred—that wrong is wrong, and base and hateful, and ought to be shunned, because that same authoritative something tells him it is wrong and base and ought to be shunned—from this, we repeat, he can be best led to the Consciousness of God. It is only necessary to go back and repeat the moral lessons of the primary stage, calling particular attention in each instance to the decision of Conscience, making the scholar notice the authoritativeness, the solemnity of the decision, leading him especially to feel how independent the decision is of his own will, how unable he is to cut it up or put it away, how it is above his power, therefore above him though in him, and then to say, "Thus you feel that there is a Power acting on your mind above your power—a power which moves by its own laws like a wind blowing over you going on its own way. You feel, too, that this power claims to rule you, to rule all your life. It is the highest thing you know. It makes you feel that it has a right to command you. It makes you feel its authority. What is this Power, then? It is the touch on your mind of the Great Power that fills the Universe, and supports and carries on all things there—the great mind or spirit which we call God. It is He who touches your mind with himself, and seeks to rule you for the best, to make your life noble and beautiful, and as nearly as possible like His own. And now Conscience has opened into God, and in obeying Conscience you must henceforth try to feel that you are obeying God. We will offer an example of this method in the next. T. E. P.

MALTON.

RE-OPENING OF UNITARIAN CHAPEL.

It is with great satisfaction that we chronicle the re-opening, after a thorough renovation, of the Malton Unitarian Chapel, one of the oldest Dissenting places of worship in the town. The alterations are so complete that anyone accustomed to the dingy and uncomfortable appearance and character of the old place, who had not seen or heard of what has lately been going on there, would not be able to recognise the interior as that of the same building. At the exterior too, such improvements have been made that the whole neighbourhood is improved in appearance. Perhaps a sketch of the history of the chapel will not be out of place, and we give it in summary as recorded in the Malton Messenger by one of the oldest members of the congregation.

The building dates from the year 1715, and the original trust deed shows that it was erected on land given by Sir William Strickland, the fourth baronet, who was M.P. for the city of Carlisle, who was an ancestor of the present Sir Charles Strickland, Bart., of Hildenley, near Malton, and who died at Boynton, in 1735. The trust deed is essentially an "open trust," that is to say the trustees are not bound to maintain any particular doctrines, the deed expressly stating that the place is built as a "Protestant Dissenting Meeting House, for the worship of God, and for religious instruction." What special doctrines were taught at first is not quite clear, but the probability is that the congregation were Arians. Somewhere about the year 1750, however, a change occurred, and the place became known for a long time as the Presbyterian Chapel. Here we may state one reason why it is supposed the congregation were Arians at first. Soon after the change of views, a prayer was offered up in the chapel by Mr. Meldrum, thanking God that they had got the place out of the hands of the Arians. This prayer was preserved in the old Chapel Book, which was taken to Dr. Williams's Library, in London.

In 1783, the Rev. John Bartlett became the minister of the place. He was a most liberal-minded man, being very friendly with the clergy, as well as other ministers. About the beginning of this century he changed his views, and then there was a disruption in the congregation, some leaving and founding the Independent Chapel, and others staying at the old place. In 1784, the Presbyterian congregation made great improvements in the building, making it, in fact, in the form it remained up to the time of the alterations just made. The cost of the improvements in 1784 was about £400 of which £100 was raised in Malton, and the rest in different parts of the country. Of the £100 raised in the town, one gentleman (Mr. William Taylor, grocer and draper) gave £50, and it is said he gave it all in copper. The £300 was raised by the energy of Mr. Bartlett, who travelled all over the country getting subscriptions. He even went as far south as Exeter, and in the course of his wanderings he obtained money from both Churchmen and Dissenters. He obtained considerable assistance from the Unitarians at York, Wakefield, Leeds, Bradford, Sheffield, and Manchester. Mr. Bartlett's liberality is shown not only by the fact that he was intimate with, and respected by the clergy and other ministers, but about the time of the split in the congregation his case was brought under the notice of Lady Hewley's trustees, from whom he received part of his stipend, his opponents wishing the trustees to stop the supplies, but they decided that the charge made was very foolish, and continued the grant, expressing themselves well pleased that he was so liberal in his views.

Matters went on thus, with the diminished congregation, until 1828, when Mr. Bartlett's failing health caused him to require assistance. The chapel having now become fairly established as Unitarian, some of the students from the Manchester New College, York, came over occasionally and preached, and this was continued for some years after Mr. Bartlett's death, which occurred in 1830. Amongst the students who came here and preached about that time, who have since become known throughout the length and breadth of the land, were the late Dr. Beard, the Rev. Dr. Martineau, and the Rev. William Gaskell, M.A.

The next regular minister was a Mr. Cochrane, who only stayed a short time. After him came the Rev.

Marmaduke Charles Frankland, now of Chowbent, Lancashire, a gentleman who was very much respected throughout the town. The next was a Mr. Naylor, who only stayed two or three years, and then came Mr. Dunkerton, who died after being here but a very short time, and was buried in the chapel yard. He was succeeded in the ministry by the Rev. William Sutherland, who came in November, 1857, and remained till April, 1874, when he left for Topsham, near Exeter, where he still resides. During his stay of about fourteen years, Mr. Sutherland, who took a great interest in all public matters, gained the esteem of the whole town, being greatly respected even by many of those who differed widely from him in religious matters. After an interval of about a year, during which the pulpit was supplied by laymen from York, the present minister, the Rev. John Sutcliffe, came, which brings us down to the present time.

It may be mentioned that the Welburn Unitarian Chapel, which is now closed and is about to be sold, has had a long connection with the Malton Chapel. Being founded in 1824 by students at the College at York, it was supplied by them for several years, and was afterwards supplied by the resident minister at Malton. The congregation there having died out or removed, the chapel has been entirely closed for some time, and at the request of the trustees the Charity Commissioners have just made an order authorising its sale, and the application of the proceeds to the benefit of the Malton Chapel.

The proceedings connected with the re-opening of the chapel occurred on Wednesday week. The first item in the programme was

THE BAZAAR.

Which was opened in the Corn Exchange in the morning by E. H. Carbutt, Esq., mayor of Leeds, who was accompanied by Joseph Lupton, Esq., J.P., George Buckton, Esq., and Councillor Mathers, of Leeds (the latter gentleman being the chief promoter of the undertaking).

The Mayor said that when he heard from their very excellent friend Mr. Mathers that they were endeavouring to raise a fund to renovate their chapel, and that they wished the presence of some Leeds friends, they mustered a strong deputation to come, and they had with them three gentlemen who were well known in the body as very earnest Unitarians. He had accompanied them as Mayor of Leeds, it being understood by that he might by coming here add some little, not exactly to their popularity, but to give some little eddit to the proceedings by opening their bazaar. He understood they had spent between £330 and £350; that one of their congregation had done so handsomely as to give them a heating apparatus; and that they had raised altogether about £180, so that at the present time they wanted about £150; and he had no doubt that after the bazaar was cleared away they would have but a very small debt. His Worship then said a few general words on Unitarianism. They were not like many orthodox sects—they had no creeds to keep them together, the only thing was "The love of God constraineth us." They had no devil and no hell to frighten them, but considered they were here as children of God to work together for good. Their congregations were generally small, but of course they took in not only those just over the borders of Unitarianism, but those who hardly believed in a God, and those who were in doubt heard something to soothe their minds. They did not wish to proselytize, nor to upset any man's belief. But if their congregations were small, their principles were permeating society in every direction. He found three-fifths of the people he came in contact with nearly as good Unitarians as himself. They had given up eternal damnation, which was a great point gained. Being brought up in a Church of England school, and the only Unitarian there, he knew what it was to be a sort of black sheep, and some of them might feel the same position in this town, but he advised them not to be disheartened, for truth would prevail. After a few more words on the bazaar, the Mayor declared it open.

JOSEPH LUPTON, Esq., next addressed the company in cheering terms, after which a vote of thanks to the Mayor of Leeds was proposed by GEORGE BUCKTON, Esq., seconded by Mr. T. READ, supported by the Rev. J. SUTCLIFFE, and carried, and the Mayor replied.

The business of the bazaar was then proceeded with, and was continued on Thursday and Saturday.

THE RE-OPENING SERVICE

Was held in the chapel in the afternoon, and was fairly attended. The first part of the service was taken by the Rev. J. Sutcliffe, the minister, and the sermon was preached by the Rev. S. A. Steinthal, of Manchester, who discoursed most eloquently from Amos v. 4. After speaking of the danger lest familiar things should lose their power because of their familiarity, he referred to the fact of God being ever present, and the effect that should have upon us by leading us to a higher life. Then having showed that God could be worshipped in temples not made with hands, he showed the need of such places as they were then re-opening, and of special services with devout and grateful thanks to God. He spoke very strongly on the necessity of attaining a higher and holier life. The sermon was listened to with marked attention.

After tea in the Temperance Hall, a public meeting was held in the chapel at half-past six, and the place was well filled. The chair was taken by J. S. Mathers, Esq. who was supported by Joseph Lupton, Esq., the Rev. S. A. Steinthal, Manchester, the Rev. C. Well-beloved, York, the Rev. J. Sutcliffe, Malton, and others.

The CHAIRMAN first called on

Mr. JOSEPH LUPTON, who expressed his delight at seeing many there who were not members of the congregation. He congratulated Mr. Mathers on the near completion of that improved structure, and then spoke of Unitarianism, Disestablishment, education, &c. He denied that Unitarianism was dying out, even in Malton, and hoped they would branch out till they reached out into the front street. He said the greater portion of our fellow creatures were outside all churches, and it was amongst them that Unitarianism should work.

The Rev. S. A. STEINTHAL, spoke in a most cheering manner on the points of agreement between Unitarians and other sects, showing that there are a great many things for which all can work in common. He also spoke strongly against binding churches with creeds made generations ago.

The Rev. C. WELLBELOVED, of York, congratulated the congregation on the beauty and comfort of the chapel, and then spoke at some length on some of the points of difference between Unitarianism and orthodoxy. They were not only Protestants and Nonconformists, and opposed to a State Church, but were Unitarians, believing in the unity of God as opposed to the Trinity. The two great principles they should uphold were freedom of thought and fidelity to conviction. He claimed that Unitarian principles were making their way in the country.

The CHAIRMAN then addressed the meeting. He described how from a comparatively unknown man Mr. Carbutt, of Leeds, had been elected to the Town Council and then to the position of Mayor, and said they even looked forward to his representing the town of Leeds in Parliament. He congratulated the congregation on what had been accomplished in the chapel, but said that did not matter unless they went out into the world and tried to comfort the bereaved and afflicted ones, give pride and self-respect once more to the drunken and fallen ones. If a man's religion led him to do such things as these, whether he were Trinitarian or Unitarian, he would advise him to stick to it, but not else. Whilst ever there was such work to perform there was earnest, hard duty for them all. Still he was not indifferent to matters of theology, and he saw that creed-making had done an immense amount of mischief in the world. He impressed on them that that place was merely the A B C of what they had to do. He did not wonder that a large proportion of the people were beyond the pale of places of worship, and their work was to reclaim them. He then spoke a few words on Disestablishment, contending that the Church of England had lived her three-score years and ten, and must give way to broader and more advanced views.

The Rev. J. SUTCLIFFE said their alterations would cost about £330, of which they had secured £180, so that they still wanted £150, and he had no doubt they would get it. He contrasted the state of things now with the time when he came, and spoke hopefully of the future. He spoke against creeds as tending to cramp them; and then impressed on them the necessity of getting a more expanded view of things, and of relying simply on the teaching of Jesus. In conclusion he moved a vote of thanks to their friend the chairman, who had set the movement on foot the result of which they saw that night, for all he had done for them.

Mr. SPAVEN seconded the motion, which was carried by acclamation; and Mr. MATHERS having replied, the meeting was brought to a close.

The chapel choir sang effectively, both in the afternoon and evening. Collections were made both afternoon and evening towards the restoration fund, the two amounting to £5. 16s. 1d. The special services were continued on Sunday, when the Rev. W. Elliott, of Stockton-on-Tees, preached both morning and evening.

In continuation of the services in connection with the re-opening, two sermons were preached on Sunday by the Rev. W. Elliott, of Stockton-on-Tees. The bazaar in aid of the restoration fund, which was opened on Wednesday week by the Mayor of Leeds, was again opened on Thursday and also on Saturday. On the latter evening, the band of the First North York Rifles kindly gave their services, and played several selections of music in good style. The attendance in the evening was very good, and the sales progressed satisfactorily. On Monday last the bazaar was again opened in the afternoon, and in the evening Mr. T. Botterill sold most of the remaining goods by auction. The string band which played on the first and second days again very kindly gave their services on Monday. The attendance was good considering the bad state of the weather, which has been unfavourable nearly the whole time.

YORK.—The Sunday scholars in connection with St. Saviourgate Chapel had their annual Christmas treat on the 7th instant. About 120, young and old, sat down to an excellent tea. A very varied programme was provided. A temperance drama, entitled "The Trial of Dr. Drink," was admirably performed by some of the teachers and elder scholars; prizes were distributed for good conduct and regular attendance during the past year, and a special prize presented by a member of the congregation for the best essay on "Christmas," some excellent reading and recitations were given, and a pleasant evening closed with the performance of a very amusing charade.

LIGHT AND SHADOW.

I know not, friend, the mystery that hath bound us
For ever in sweet harmony, on earth;
But this I know, the light that beams around us
Gilds all the main,
And we attain
A heavenly birth.

Why should we hold our prayer as unavailing,
If we may gain the home where heroes dwell?
Eternal right and simple truth prevailing,
Here shall commence
Life's recompense,
And all be well.

I question not the God who made the shadows
To darken where betimes the sunshine falls;
My way is on, still, over scented meadows,
And I will trust
The Good—the Just—
Who alway calls,

And beckons us to higher slopes, and higher,
Where in meridian brightness all is fair,
And shadows flee, and footsteps never tire:—
"Thy kingdom come,
Thy will be done,"—
Our answered prayer!

H. V. M.

The Unitarian Herald.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 18, 1878.

THE LARGER HOPE.

Canon Farrar's denunciation of eternal torment has emboldened some kindred spirits to speak out. We have already referred to Professor Challis's disbelief in future endless woe, as expressed in the Guardian. Now the Rev. F. C. Barker, writing from Spelsbury Vicarage, argues against that doctrine of despair, and in favour of "the larger hope." Mr. Barker pleads for this hope on several grounds. First, he maintains, from passages where the word occurs, that aiônios is not equivalent to unending. Secondly, he holds that if "the torment is endless, whilst those who are enduring it are the vast majority of mankind, then surely the final victory is Satan's." Thus "we admit the dualistic principle, and the Church is Manichæan. . . . What the mind requires is the complete triumph of good over evil, and the bowing of every knee to Jesus. God must some day be all in all. Short of that, where can we stop?" This would seem to be an argument conclusive enough. But Mr. Barker adds others of a Scriptural character, the sum of which is that "the second death is the means of bringing about the newness of all things." Mr. Barker's arguments are exceedingly pithy, but they do not concern us so much as the fact that the faith which he seeks to establish by them, the faith in the final triumph of goodness and the consequent extinction of evil, is winning an increasingly powerful and widening hold over the minds of men.

THE DECLINE OF BIBLIOLATRY.

Bibliolatry is losing its ancient defenders. Lord Shaftesbury still guards it, but there seems a probability that he will soon be its solitary protector. The Guardian is clearly preparing to abandon it. Our contemporary puts in a strong word for the volume of Mr. Brownlow Maitland, which Lord Shaftesbury has branded in the absolute tone that gives some warrant to the description of him as a "lay Pope." The surprising thing is that it justifies the attitude of Mr. Maitland towards the Bible, and contends that Lord Shaftesbury's position is completely useless against the free thought of the day. It is "utterly hopeless" to arrest the "wide, deep, and destructive spread of scepticism" on "the basis of mere Bibliolatry." More emphatic still are its admissions on the untenability of the old view of the Mosaic cosmogony. Criticising Lord Shaftesbury's censorious condemnation of Mr. Bonney's Manual of Geology, it reminds him that Bishop Harold Browne, in the Speaker's Commentary, has conceded that the first appearance of the human race on this globe must be carried back to a far more remote period than was formerly imagined; and it warns him of the "desperate case" in which revealed religion is placed by attempts to "uphold the popular chronology of antediluvian ages as infallible." If Lord Shaftesbury, on reading this, did not regret that he had not followed the prudent principle of the least said the soonest mended, he must be a man of less good sense than we take him to be. He has but shown how his own notions of the Bible are being surrendered by the representatives of orthodoxy.

MORE ORTHODOX CONCESSIONS.

Is Wesleyanism relaxing the rigidity of its dogmas? Its organ, the London Quarterly, seems to be gently breaking the ice. In the current number is an article on "Atheism, Evolution, and Theology," which is an attempt to vindicate theology from the charges brought against it by some students of natural science, and show that its teachings may harmonise with the results ascertained by modern inquiry into nature. But in order to establish the latter conclusion the writer is compelled to make the sensible admission that "there is of necessity a human and tentative side to theology;" and, he adds, "it announces some things which are immutable, and which no vicissitudes of human experience can modify. But there are others—and the exact method of Divine procedure in creation is one—into any interpretation of which a human element must largely enter, and this will necessarily be controlled by the nature and amount of human knowledge." Unitarians have often said that theologians and scientists have both made mistakes, arising out of the dogmatic spirit they have each, and almost equally, shared. Theologians have been too fond of placing their own deductions, hypotheses, and interpretations among "the things which are immutable." Scientists have hastily concluded that because theology has been found to be in error on certain points of science, therefore none of its utterances on any point are of value. That there is a "human side" to theology, as the Wesleyan writer confesses, is not the whole truth. Theology, as a whole, is the human conception of divine things, and is liable even on matters of the greatest certainty to the influence of misconceptions and imperfect apprehensions. And, after all, science is subject to the same qualification. The conclusions of science, or what has passed for science, have been arrived at by slow degrees, and in the process opinions and deductions have had again and again to be modified, and even reversed. Once frankly admit that theology is capable of development—that the right of modifying its statements and extending its range of observation is undoubted, and the "quarrel" between science and theology will cease. It is not only no discredit, but an honour to theology to admit that it is not yet complete,—that it changes and advances as the mind grows. In fact, half the accusations brought in the name of science against theology, as in Tyndall's famous Belfast address, as in Dr. Draper's misnamed Conflict between Religion and Science, are directed against doctrines that have been either entirely exploded or greatly modified. In the London Quarterly article the writer represents a theological party which is approaching, cautiously and hesitatingly, but still approaching, truer principles of Biblical interpretation than those which have largely prevailed hitherto in Wesleyan theology. He fully recognises the need of modifying the conclusions which used to be based on the Biblical account of the creation; and he argues from this that the theory of evolution may ultimately turn out to be perfectly in harmony with the Biblical records. Here we differ completely from our author, and are disposed to put the matter exactly the other way—that the Biblical records, by some jugglery of their language, will be somehow made to harmonise with the facts. There is nothing more curious in history than the facility which orthodox theology has shown in reconciling itself with whatever, after a hard battle, it has found itself unable to overthrow. These reconciliations always, in the long run, damage theology, and hide the real worth of the Bible. At the most they are only provisional. Not one of the multitude of them that have been devised has held water, and not one of them ever will. Still, when orthodox theology resorts to them, we receive it as a hopeful sign that it cannot any longer hold out against the facts, but must square its old notions with them to continue on with some outward show of plausibility, and to claim for itself still a place in men's belief.

BRITISH AND FOREIGN UNITARIAN ASSOCIATION.

THE quarterly meeting of the Council of this Association was held on Wednesday, at the offices, No. 27, Norfolk-street, Strand, London. The PRESIDENT (Mr. Herbert New) occupied the chair, and among those present were Messrs. Edwin Lawrence, Joseph Lupton, J. T. Preston, S. S. Tayler, D. Martineau, Miss A. Swanwick, and the Revs. T. L. Marshall, J. Robberds, C. Wickstead, vice-presidents; the Revs. R. A. Armstrong, H. Austin, C. Howe, D. Maginnis, R. Shaen, J. Smith, and Mr. G. B. Dalby, home correspondents; Rev. H. S. Sally and Rev. C. T. Poynting, representatives of associations; and Mr. C. J. S. Eiloart, Rev. T. W. Freckleton, and Rev. J. Worthington, members of the Executive Committee. In the absence of Mr. H. New during the early part of the meeting, Mr. JAMES HOPGOOD temporarily occupied the chair.

The proceedings were commenced by the Secretary, Rev. HENRY IERSON, reading the minutes of the last meeting, which were duly confirmed as correct.

The report of the Executive Committee was then read as follows:—

REPORT.

The committee record with regret the decease of three valued members of the council, Mr. Charles Hill, one of their number; Miss Yates, late of Liverpool; and Mr. Edward Dixon, late of Wandsworth, both vice-presidents of the association. Mr. Hill having been a member of the committee, they adopted a resolution of sympathy, which has been communicated to Mrs. Hill and her family.

In accordance with the wish expressed by the last Council meeting that the association should be represented at the anniversary of the Protestantenbond of Holland in October last at the Hague, endeavours were made to secure the services of a deputation, but without success. A communication was forwarded, therefore, by the secretary, to be read to the meeting, expressing the sympathy of the association with the work of the Protestantenbond, with the hope that a deputation might be sent on a future occasion.

Deputations have been sent since the last Council Meeting to the anniversary of the Western Union at Bristol; to the opening of two churches towards the erection of which grants were made from the Jubilee Fund, at Oldham and Reading; and to the meeting in the Free-trade Hall, at Manchester. This meeting was held for the purpose of welcoming the Association under the auspices of the joint committees of the three local societies of Manchester, East Lancashire, and East Cheshire—taking the place of the usual provincial meeting of the Association. The meeting was a very large and very successful one, and at the breakfast to which the deputation were invited on the following day an influential committee was appointed with the view of helping forward the canvass of the several districts on behalf of the Association. This canvass has since been carried on with the co-operation of several members of the committee—Mr. T. C. Clarke, Rev. J. Worthington, and Mr. S. S. Tayler—with the most gratifying results. The consequent addition to the funds of the Association has been:—Donations, £107. 16s.; new and increased subscriptions, £272. 11s.

The committee have felt that special thanks were due to the united committees of the three societies, and to the local committees, for the cordial help which they have rendered to the association, and resolutions have been passed accordingly. In other districts also a canvass has been made,—as for example, in the west of England by the Rev. P. H. Wickstead, and by a lady, a member of the congregation, at Northampton—and the committee rejoice to state that the visits of their representatives have been most heartily welcomed, while every assistance has been given to them by the ministers of churches in the prosecution of their work. Several large towns remained to be canvassed, which at present it has not been thought advisable to visit. The committee trust that the work will be before long successfully completed.

The total increase in subscriptions for the year 1877 was £436. 14s. 6d. Besides this an increase of £211. 11s. 6d. has already been promised for the year 1878.

As instructed at the last council meeting, the committee have voted £25 towards the expense of the recent repairs of the Essex-street Chapel.

The distribution of the interest of the Bicentenary Fund has been made by grants of £8. 15s. each to five ministers to whom this help has proved most welcome.

Grants have been made for lectures to be given by Rev. A. Webster in his district and the Rev. S. Fletcher Williams at Bootle and Kirkdale.

Grants have been made to the congregation at Malton towards the chapel repairs, to Walsall for the supply of hymn books, and to Carmarthen in aid of services. The proposed schedule of mission votes will be laid before the council. The committee are glad to state that there appears no present need for making greater reductions in these votes than have been made, though it will probably require all the additional subscriptions they have received and some sale of stock during the year to maintain them as they are.

The committee are informed that Signor Bracciforti continues his services in another hall in Milan. Mr. H. S. Bicknell has kindly undertaken to take charge of a special subscription to aid him in his work.

The committee have received from Mr. W. Roberts, of Madras, an application for means of purchasing ground for a new cemetery at Salem. This matter, with the whole subject of aid to the Madras services, awaits further inquiry.

The Committee are gratified to report that the translation by the Rev. J. E. Odgers of the late M. Coquerel's work on Conscience and Faith having been completed, they have given orders for its printing and publication. It will be shortly issued at the low price of 2s. 6d.

They have also requested the Rev. E. Higginson to revise for reissue his tract on "Christ Imitable," and the Rev. H. S. Solly has undertaken to revise for publication in tract form his papers in the Truthseeker on the "Development of the Doctrine of the Deity of Jesus Christ."

The sale of books for the last quarter has been £296. 6s. 6d.; the sale of the same quarter in 1876 was £276. 2s. 1d.

Grants of books have been made to Rev. M. Jochumssen, to the free library at Stockton-on-Tees, to the library of the Spicer-street Mission, and to friends at Retford for lending. About 9,000 tracts have been recently sent to Glasgow, Cheadle, Ringwood, Retford, Warrenpoint, Portsmouth, Cambridge, Colchester, Malton, Stourbridge, and the West Riding.

A number of copies of Dr. Channing's works have been granted to students at Bristol, Brecon, and Manchester; as also copies of Parker's Discourse, of his Ten Sermons and Prayers, and of his life by Reville, at the special request of the students of one of the Congregational colleges.

The CHAIRMAN moved without comment that the report of the Executive Council be received and entered on the minutes.

Some conversation arose as to the character of the meeting recently held in Manchester, when it was explained that this gathering had been convened and got up wholly by parties distinct from this Association.

At this stage of the proceedings Mr. New entered the room and took the chair.

Mr. LUPTON having seconded the adoption of the report, the resolution was put and carried unanimously.

On the motion of Mr. J. HOPGOOD, seconded by Mr. WHITEFIELD, the secretary was instructed to forward a copy of the report to the newspapers.

The Secretary having intimated that since the last meeting two members, vice-presidents of the Association, Mr. Dickson, of Wanstead, and Miss Dickson, of Liverpool, had died, it was resolved, on the motion of Mr. HOPGOOD, seconded by the Rev. J. ROBERTS, that the secretary be instructed to communicate to the relatives of the deceased the Council's sincere expression of regret and sympathy. Similar letters of condolence were also authorised to be sent to the relatives of the late Mr. Hill, recently a member of the committee, and to those of a member of the Hungarian Church.

In regard to the preparation of a new trust deed, it was stated by the secretary that the solicitor of the Association had been instructed to draw up a draft deed which would come before the next committee meeting. Hereupon it was resolved that the draft when approved by the committee be printed for circulation among the members of the Council.

The SECRETARY stated that the Mission Committee recommended certain grants to be made to congregations and missions.

The TREASURER (Mr. Tayler) then read a report of the finances of the Association, on which a discussion took place.

Mr. W. SHAEN moved, and Mr. PRESTON seconded, that the Council give the Executive Committee power to expend £1,600 in mission grants for the current year.—This was approved of and carried unanimously by the Council.

After the business had been concluded, the next question proposed was as to who should preach the anniversary sermon. The Rev. Wm. Binn was proposed by the Rev. T. W. FRECKELTON, and seconded by the Rev. R. A. ARMSTRONG, as being eligible for the office. Mr. Armstrong was then suggested as one to assist in the service. Both of these gentlemen were unanimously approved of.

All the business on the agenda being then concluded, the Rev. C. HOWE referred to the Burials Bill and put his views in the form of a motion thus:—"That the Executive Committee take notice of the Burials Bill, and watch its progress during this critical time."

After a motion, proposed by Mr. ODGERS, and withdrawn, the meeting closed.

WHITCHURCH: FREE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

THE members of the Free Christian Church celebrated their first anniversary on Tuesday evening, January 8th, by a tea meeting, and a public meeting and entertainment, as we stated last week. The arrangements were very complete, and great praise is due to Mrs. Haines and the ladies who assisted her in the management.

The public meeting and entertainment were held in the Assembly Room, under the presidency of Mr. W. RATHBONE, M.P. for Liverpool. The proceedings commenced with the singing of a hymn, after which the Rev. CAREY WALTERS read letters of apology for non-attendance from the Revs. H. W. Crosskey, Birmingham, J. K. Montgomery, Chester, and his father.

He then proceeded to read the first annual report which referred to the commencement of the services in the Corn Exchange, the subsequent hiring of the Assembly Room, when the former place proved too small to accommodate the large congregations which assembled, and the opening of the church on August 7th, by the Rev. Baldwin Brown. The morning congregations had varied from 60 to 100, and the evening from 200 to 250 persons. As soon as the church was opened a Sunday School was opened, which now numbered 120 children, with an average attendance of 85. A Thursday evening service, a young men's class, two children's classes, and a teachers' preparation class were also carried on, and the "Free Christian Record," started in October in connection with the church had a circulation of about 200 copies monthly. Without much steady and patient help the work would have been impossible, and in closing the report the minister desired to bear testimony to the self-sacrificing efforts of some, especially of his congregation, who had encouraged him, and helped largely the furtherance of the cause. The accompanying abstract of accounts showed that the receipts, including grants in aid to the extent of £40, had amounted to £206. 17s. 5½d., and the expenditure to £202. 17s. 5½d., leaving a balance of £4 in hand. Mr. Walters concluded by calling upon the chairman to address them, at the same time thanking him for his kindness in attending.

The CHAIRMAN, after expressing his conviction that they must have listened with very great pleasure to the report they had just heard read, said he would rather have hesitated in coming there that night if he had not in so doing followed, as was his habit, the lead of his chief in those matters, Mr. Beard, for any deficiencies they might find in him (the speaker) would be fully made up by Mr. Beard. He had been delighted to hear from Mr. Walters that the church had not been entirely made up of those who came from other congregations, but was largely composed of those who came from outside, for there seemed to him to be a great field of work there before them. He thought that Nonconformist bodies, and especially free churches, had arrived at a very critical period of their existence, and that they had a noble work to do if they were able to do it, but they were threatened by a very great danger. He thought anyone who was at all attentive to the signs of the times must have seen that old religious beliefs and bodies have been of late very much shaken, and if they were to be a religious people at all, the religion of conviction must take the place of religion of law, and it was especially with the former that free churches had to do. The danger arose from their gradually increasing prosperity, and their immunity from persecution, which made their fathers the robust and vigorous men they were glad to have known them to have been. They might, perhaps, say they were not altogether free from disabilities, as they were denied the use of their national burial-grounds, unless they used services they disagreed with. Eighteen hundred years ago the priesthood had been as they were now, unable to read the signs of the times. But they must let them be blind leaders of the blind, and he thought the great work Nonconformists had to do was not to attack the Establishment. He advised them to let the Church do that for itself. It was doing it far more rapidly than Nonconformists could do it for them. They must do their own work, that when Disestablishment came they would be prepared for it, and prepared to supply its place by a much more vigorous life. The real question was, whether they were worthy of the great work set before them. He could not remember the exact words, but a great poet had once said that there were two roads on which man may strive forward to virtue; by endurance the suffering man might reach her; by action the happy. Blessed was he whom the Gods loving led on both. He trusted that such a happy consummation would they be able to claim, and that they would show themselves worthy of the great good before them. Before he concluded there was one matter he wished briefly to refer to. He meant the war which was going on in the East, and the attempt which was being made to enlist the sympathies and action of England in it, not on the side of freedom, which was the side on which this country had always hitherto been found, but on the side of tyranny and oppression. Mr. Rathbone, concluded by expressing his conviction that if we were led into war our success would prove more disastrous for the world than our failure, and his hope that we might be spared so great a calamity.

The Rev. T. GASQUOINE, B.A., Congregational minister, of Oswestry, said that he felt he had almost more right to rejoice on the present occasion than any minister present, for he had shared the anxiety of Mr.

Walters and his friends even before the commencement of this work, and all through its progress. He wished to say a word or two to the congregation on the power of a Christian life. A great deal had been said lately about the relations of creed and life, and a great many able things had been said on both sides of the question, but all, friends and foes of free religious communion, were agreed in this, that there was immense power in a truly godly life. Indeed, for all practical purposes, if Christian living was done away with there might as well have been no Christ on earth, for he could only be known as he was manifested in the hearts of his followers. Their mission was to hold up this ideal to the gaze of men so that those who were lost in the maze of theological doubt might at any rate be won by the Christ himself, and that those who were lost in sin might be won by the attractive power of holiness. He had been asked to present a testimonial to Mr. Walters, and had it not been that he felt it would be more fitting that it should be given by one of the congregation nothing could have given him greater pleasure for he yielded to none in his affection for Mr. Walters or his interest in the Free Christian Church. He would, however, break the ice, if such an expression were fitting about so warm-hearted an affair as this presentation, and make way for the gentleman who was to represent the congregation.

Mr. JOHN GRESTY said: It has been thought right and fitting that we should present our minister with some token of respect, and the duty of presenting it has fallen on me. We are grateful to God that we have had the privilege of keeping him with us, and much appreciate the manly spirit in which he has worked for our church during the past year. I trust we may commence this year in unison with one another as minister and people, each one doing our best to our fellow-men, putting our trust in God, and praying that we may all be brought to the knowledge of the love of Christ. We all know how much it adds to a minister's comfort if the congregation are earnest and united; and I hope that during this year we may be so more and more. The following is the address which we now present to him, and we add to it a handsome gold watch and a purse of gold:—

(To the Rev. W. Carey Walters.)

Dear Sir,—On behalf of the congregation worshipping in the Free Christian Church, Whitchurch, it is our pleasure to tender to you at this the first anniversary meeting of the congregation, our heartfelt thanks for your labours during the past year. We have reason to be deeply grateful to our Heavenly Father for the success with which he has crowned our labours, much of which success is due to your constant efforts on our behalf. We desire especially to remember the work of collecting for the building fund of our church, as one of great delicacy and calling for a large amount of perseverance and earnestness. It is our wish to testify to our affection for and confidence in you, and our steadfast adherence to the principles on which our Church is founded, by asking you to accept the accompanying gifts and by expressing our earnest desire that the year on which we have entered may be one of great prosperity and joy.—Signed on behalf of the congregation,

JOHN GRESTY.

Mr. WALTERS, in reply, said he thanked the congregation most heartily for the kind gift. He valued it because of its intrinsic worth, which was very great, but most of all because he knew that the motives which prompted it were pure and good. He believed his people had confidence in him, and felt towards him much kindness, for they had shown it during the past year. He knew how unworthy he was of such confidence, and how far he fell short of the ideal which he constantly held up to their gaze, but he could honestly say that the nearest thing to his heart was the church-work with which he was connected. In his best moments he could say with the Roman Catholic poet, Faber:—

O Lord, that I could waste my life for others,
With no ends of my own;
That I could pour myself into my brothers,
And live for them alone.

Mr. Gasquoine had spoken of the great loneliness of their position. True, it was lonely. It was hard when the hand of Christian brotherhood was held out only to be refused, when the word of kindly feeling was met with a sneer and a bitter rebuke, but with earnest, steadfast hearts around him he should feel no loneliness for

Not in solitude if Christ anear me
Waketh him workers for the great employ;
Not in solitude if souls that hear me
Catch from my joyance the surprise of joy.

The truest thanksgiving would be to know that by his preaching and work he had made any home happier, any hearts lighter, and helped ever so little to further the cause of that liberty where-with Christ had made us free. He felt increasingly that the essentials of religion were very few and very simple. It was his aim to preach these constantly, leaving the theological subtleties which are deemed so important by many to others, for he felt certain that any gospel which was to regenerate the world and be accepted by thoughtful men must be a gospel of eternal verities, about which there could be no dispute. To base our faith on anything else, on the tradition of a past age, on a doubtful reading or the disputed meaning of a Greek word was to build a temple of wondrous beauty on a sandy foundation liable at any moment to be swept away by the advancing tide of progress and truth; while to build it upon the eternal love and righteousness of God, the divinity of that Inner Light which lighteneth every man, and the supreme grandeur of the Christ-life was to build upon a foundation which no tempest could disturb. Once more he desired to thank his friends for their handsome gift, which would ever bring to mind one of the happiest though one of the most anxious years of his life.

A presentation of a gold watch to Miss Haines, who had ably presided at the harmonium during the year, was then made, and the chairman called on the Rev. Charles Beard, B.A., of Liverpool, to address the meeting.

The Rev. CHARLES BEARD said that, although Shropshire was not considered by the inhabitants of Liverpool to be the most advanced county in the kingdom, nor Whitechurch the leader in the van of progress, he rejoiced that they had been able to effect there a work which even Liverpool had not been able to carry out. He was surprised at the possibility of such a movement as had been inaugurated in Whitechurch, but it proved to him that wherever a brave and true man, with something of the prophet in him, had got brave and true words to speak, there people would be found to listen. He hoped Mr. Walters would stick to it, for though numerically the movement might be small, ecclesiastically the position which he held was of vast importance. The principle of free religious communion upon which the church was based was said by many to be impossible. He would reply in the words of the Latin proverb, Solvitur ambulandi—that is, if you want to know whether you can walk or not, try. Practically we all admitted the principle. Even in the English Church, where creeds and dogmas were expressed in most precise language, though the words used were the same, there was no guarantee that the same meaning was put upon them by the worshippers; in fact, we all knew that no two worshippers could be found together who meant by them exactly the same thing. Personally he had very often felt himself drawn much nearer to God by the worship of bodies which were as far from his views of truth as the East from the West, than he had sometimes in the worship of his own body. The gorgeous ceremonial of the Catholic Church, a church whose thought was the very antipodes of the views held by himself, had often soothed and comforted and blessed him infinitely more than the cold dead service of some church intellectually much nearer to him. He longed very intensely to hold out the right hand of Christian fellowship to all who were striving to do that which was right, both inside and outside the pale of Christianity. With the Roman Catholic priests who were doing such a good work among the Irish poor in his own town, on the one hand, and with the Theist in India who was endeavouring to reform his country's faith, on the other, he would strive to associate as far as was found possible. Wherever in fact there was obedience to the Will of God and allegiance to the Spirit of Christ, there he saw a Christian brother with whom he could worship and with whom he could work. He rejoiced therefore in this Free Christian Church, a church in which the worshipper was not asked to express his faith in dogmatic forms as a condition of communion, where Unitarian and Trinitarian could meet together as children of one God and servants of one Master, where the doubter would be welcomed and not shunned because of his doubts, and where religion could be taught not as the letter which killeth but as the Spirit which giveth life.

The Rev. JOSEPH WOOD, minister of Wycliffe Congregational Church and chairman of the Leicester School Board, after congratulating Mr. Walters upon the remarkable success which had attended his labours, said that without disrespect to the good people of Whitechurch, it did not seem likely that in the nature of things a movement for promoting freedom of religious expression and the broadening of religious sympathies should in a small country town bring forth such a sturdy one year old child as the Free Christian Church in Whitechurch. It was a sign that in the most remote parts of the country there was a latent feeling in favour of a more rational religion, and a freer church life, which only needed the cherishing care of able and earnest men like Mr. Walters to develop into vigorous life. Their church was not another organisation for separating men from each other, but for bringing all good men together, and bore witness to the principle that the religious life, while not independent of intellectual convictions, could manifest itself through most varied and even contradictory intellectual forms. They were sometimes twitted with their idea of the Church of the future, but certainly the Church of to-day was not that vision of beauty which might satisfy the aspirations of men. What was the condition of the Church? No one could be blind to the religious doubt and confusion of to-day. No one could deny that in the 19th century a serious breach had been made in the wall of that citadel, religion, and that the paths of faith were no longer smooth. No one could doubt that the intellectual difficulties in the way of religion were more serious to-day than at any time during the last 50 years. Doubts about the most vital subjects were in the air, and it was not possible to exclude them from the most guarded home, and no one could look at the growing alienation of the young and thoughtful from Christianity without desiring to stay the plague. This, then, was the mission of a free church—to be a "repairer of the breach and a restorer of the paths to dwell in." It was to show that religion was based, not on speculative theories and disputable traditions, but upon right reason and indisputable fact. At the basis of all true religion were these facts:—That we are here; that we did not come here of our own accord; that, being here, we hold relations to our fellows, which involve duty, honour, self-sacrifice, trust, truth, and purity; that we have, as part of our nature, an ineradicable sense of right and wrong; that right-doing and happiness, wrong-doing and misery are for ever associated as cause and effect; that the history of the human race can only be understood as it is looked at as a great whole; that there is an Eternal Power which makes for righteousness, and that the supreme revelation of that Power is manifest in Jesus Christ. These are not questions of probability; they are indisputable facts, which everyone can verify for himself. To show the sweet reasonableness of a religion which does ground itself upon indisputable facts is the way to repair the breach and restore the paths. The only reason why men do not accept the rich essentials of the New Testament is the theory of infallibility with which they have been taught they are identified; the great reason why men do not follow Christ as our leader and adore him as our king is the supernatural theory of His Person, without which they are told they cannot be His disciples. To show men the possibility of true religion apart from these doubtful theories was the mission of their church, and he wished them all success.

A vote of thanks was accorded by acclamation to all who in any way had helped to make the meeting successful, and especially to the Chairman, who, in responding, said that he should go back to Liverpool much cheered by the heartiness he had witnessed, and with very earnest desires for the continued success of the Free Christian Church.

The second part of the proceedings was devoted to music (vocal and instrumental) and readings. The meeting, which was attended by 400 persons representing every religious body in the town, terminated about ten o'clock with the singing of the National Anthem.

LIVERPOOL DISTRICT MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION.

THE annual meeting of this Association was held in the Portland-street Church, Southport, on Thursday last. In the absence of the Rev. Charles Beard, B.A., President of the Association, through indisposition, the chair was taken by the Rev. T. HOLLAND, B.A., and amongst those present were the Revs. James Harwood, B.A., secretary pro tem., Mr. J. H. Cook, treasurer, Revs. W. Binns, W. Mellor (Crewe), and S. Fletcher Williams.

The Chairman having opened the meeting with a brief speech, the Rev. J. HARWOOD read the ANNUAL REPORT.

The committee were glad to be able to state that both the congregations which received assistance from the funds entrusted to them, are in a more healthy and hopeful condition than has been the case for some time past. The settlements of the Rev. W. Mellor at Crewe, and of the Rev. S. Fletcher Williams at Hamilton Road, Liverpool, have begun, it may fairly be hoped, a new period of prosperity for the congregations under their charge. The committee have much pleasure in drawing attention to the evidence of congregational activity and harmony which is offered by the reports of those gentlemen, and in expressing their confident hope that this is only the beginning of even better things than have been yet achieved.

The committee then refer to the reports from Crewe and Hamilton Road.

CREWE FREE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The report states that the year ending March 31st, 1877, was on the whole successful. There was an increase of seven seat-holders, and of thirteen sittings let. The average attendance at the evening services improved very much during the winter months, and especially during the course of winter lectures. On the first Sunday of 1877, the morning service, which had been given up for years, was recommenced, but the attendance so far has been far from encouraging. During the year a special effort was made to clean and paint the chapel, and to effect certain necessary repairs. This involved an outlay of over £20, which was raised by the end of the year. A Literary and General Improvement Class was carried on during the whole of the winter, with very favourable results, both with regard to numbers and character. The Sunday school ended the year in a generally healthy and prosperous state, the number of scholars on the books being increased from 35 to 45, and the average attendance from 30 to 40.

HAMILTON ROAD FREE CHURCH, LIVERPOOL.

The report from here for the year which closed on September 30th, 1877, is a satisfactory statement of the present position and prospects of the church. The year began with the names of 40 members on the roll, holding 61 sittings. Since then 16 new members have joined and four old members rejoined. Against these accessions there is reported the loss of one member by death, three by sickness, three from removals, and three from causes unavoidable. The result is that the roll contains the names of 50 members, who hold 79 sittings, or a net increase of 10 members and 18 sittings on the number at the opening of the year. It should, however, be distinctly understood that the worshippers at the Sunday services include a large number who are not attached to the membership of the church, but from whom it is hoped and believed that the roll will be gradually increased. The condition of the financial affairs of the church is described as satisfactory; and, upon an earnest appeal from the minister, an effort is now being made to still further improve it by placing the bowl in the vestibule of the church at each service, after the plan so successfully adopted in the Presbyterian churches, to receive the free-will offerings of the worshippers. During the two months in which the system has been tried the results have exceeded expectation, and if the general support it has already received be heartily continued and enlarged the church will have taken a steady step forward towards self-support. Reference is then made to the substitution of Dr. Martineau's Hymns of Praise and Prayer for the Liturgy formerly used; to the Sunday school, and to the excellent cementing influence of the Social Union. The committee, in closing their report, state that they have found "a judicious adviser and friend in the minister. They are happy in being able to report that the services are now attended by larger numbers than ever before, and that the incoming year opens with brighter prospects than the year now closed did."

To this summary of the report the minister adds, that since it appeared a course of four lectures on Unitarian Christianity has been given in the Walton Institute, Walton. On each evening the weather was extremely unfavourable, and this circumstance, no doubt, tended to limit the attendance. The audience averaged 50, and included a fair proportion of strangers, some few of whom have since attended evening service at Hamilton Road Church. It is believed that the presentation of liberal religious views in Walton has not been without effect. The cost of these lectures was generally defrayed by private subscription among a few local friends of free thought in religion.

A course of lectures is now being given in the Town Hall, Bootle, and in the month of February a course will be given in the Masonic Hall, Westminster Road, Kirkdale. It is hoped that the simple and rational Christianity which the Church represents will be made known to a considerable proportion of the thoughtful, intelligent, and inquiring minds of these two districts. Whether the Church adds to its numbers by this proclamation of its faith or not, the Word will not be spoken in vain. Towards the cost of these lectures at Bootle and Kirkdale, the committee of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, at the appeal of the lecturer, Mr. Williams, has made a grant of £20; and Samuel Sharpe, Esq., of London, has also, with characteristic liberality, contributed the sum of £10.

The minister looks forward with hope to the attainment of the object which induced him to accept in November, 1876, out of several choices, the pastorate at Hamilton Road—the building up of a church, which, strong in faith and prayer, increasingly enriched by communion with God, and filled with His Holy Spirit, shall be an earnest doer of Christ's work, and a fountain of vital piety to the neighbourhood and community in which it is placed.

The committee proceed to say that for some time past the fact that the pulpits at Crewe and Hamilton Road have not been occupied at once by settled ministers has enabled the treasurer to preserve something like a reasonable balance between income and expenditure. This, however, is no longer the case; and the fact must be faced that the income of the Association needs considerable and immediate increase. Your committee are not without hope that the favourable report which they are able to present this year may of itself lead to some improvement in this direction. At the same time they recommend that increased efforts should be made to interest all the Free Christian Churches in the district in what is evidently their common work, and to secure, if possible, simultaneous collections in its support. They are greatly indebted to their treasurer for long and zealous service on behalf of the society, and think it only right to him that he should be put in a position to discharge his duties without anxiety.

The reports, together with the treasurer's statement of accounts, which showed a deficit of £10. 13s. 5d., were received and adopted, and brief addresses on the work of the Association, and the necessity of extended support, were given by the gentlemen already named and by several members of the Southport congregation.

NEWS OF OUR CHURCHES.

NOTICE.—Our friends would oblige if they would kindly send their news paragraphs so as to arrive never later than Wednesday morning, otherwise we are compelled to cut them down. Several articles again stand over this week.

ABERDARE.—The Sunday scholars connected with the English Unitarian Chapel had their Christmas treat on Friday week, in the new schoolroom. Nearly 120 persons were present, including a large number of the congregation. After the usual supply of cake, tea, and fruit, the young people were entertained with a magic lantern. Each new figure was received by shouts of delight by the young people. The lantern and slides were purchased for the occasion by Mr. T. Phillips, who also undertook the manipulation during the evening. The entertainment concluded with a selection of music.

BURY.—We are requested to state that the whole of the scenery used at the scholars party is the work of Mr. J. R. G. Grundy. The only part painted by Mr. John Shuttleworth and Mr. Robert Grundy was six side wings.

BLACKLEY.—The friends here have had a busy Christmas. On December 22nd the annual Recital took place. A large number of recitations were given by the children, followed by four short dramas—"Ne'er do Weel," "A Genuine Article," "Deaf as a Post," and "Silence under Difficulties." After these came the chief drama, "The Little Savage," given by the teachers. Glee and pieces were sung at intervals, and the evening passed over very pleasantly and successfully. On the following Saturday there was a Christmas tree and fancy fair, the object of which was to augment the fund at present being raised towards the erection of a new chapel. The sum cleared by the undertaking is over £52. On New Year's Eve the teachers', and on New Year's Day the children's party was held. Both were well attended, the latter somewhat inconveniently so. Great praise is due to the teachers and young people who have all worked with cheerful energy, and brought to a successful close the first instalment of the Christmas and New Year's programme. Another portion has still to come.

BRIGHTON FREE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.—On Sunday last, the Rev. T. R. Dobson delivered a lecture on "Opinions concerning the Soul and a Future Life," which was listened to with intense earnestness by a large number of people. The subject was dealt with in the true spirit of liberty of thought, showing a courteous deference for the views of the various thinkers of the day, whilst asserting earnestly the lecturer's own lack of sympathy with the theories advanced in the nineteenth century by Frederick Harrison. Those who were fortunate enough to be present on this occasion must have been greatly impressed by the happy combination of the broadest liberal thought with true spiritual fervour, by the comprehensive well-digested allusions to the recent discussions upon the future life, and the careful sifting of the matter, rendering it interesting and understandable to any thoughtful mind. The lecturer earnestly asserted his own faith in the soul's true immortality, in its preservation of its own personal character, in the real continuance of individual life hereafter, whilst he deplored the popular gross conceptions of the future life, which have brought about the doubts and denials which distinguish our day. The lecture was one of a series now being given by Mr. Dobson, all of which are marked by that deep thoughtfulness and reverence which characterise his teachings.

BELFAST: YORK-STREET NON-SUBSCRIBING CHURCH.—On January 4th a congregational soirée was held in the house of worship. The attendance was very good; the arrangements for tea, &c., most satisfactory; the musical part of the programme, under the superintendence of Mr. W. H. Quinn, even exceeding previous performances. The thorough success of the entertainment was evident in the delight of all present. The minister of the congregation (Rev. R. J. Orr) was in the chair, and Revs. John Jellie (Cairncastle), James Kennedy (Rademond), Professor Orr (Comber), D. Thompson (Mountpottinger), and J. Pollard (Stanhope-street), addressed the meeting in humorous and pithy speeches. The programme is too lengthy for insertion, eleven o'clock striking ere the proceedings closed with chanting the Lord's Prayer by the choir. A vote of thanks was given to the tea makers, Mrs. Andrews, and Mademoiselles McMillan, Sweeney, Jennings, Campbell, McDowell, McCune, Corbett, Gordon, Miss Pettigrew, Miss Mitchell, and Messrs. Mitchell, Shaw, Chambers, and Wm. Johnston, afforded great pleasure by their songs and recitations. The annual business meeting of the congregation took place on the succeeding Sunday, January 6th, after morning service. Rev. S. C. Nelson conducted worship, and preached an excellent discourse from Ecclesiastes vii. 10. Robt. W. Gordon, Esq., was made chairman, and the committee submitted their report. After some discussion and the passing of the report a new committee was elected, W. P. Jennings being appointed treasurer in place of H. Ferguson, resigned; R. M. Kennedy collector of stipend, and R. Thompson secretary. The regular attendants at worship seemed unanimous, and those interested in the proceedings, which did not terminate till after three o'clock, were numerous. On Tuesday, the 8th inst., the Sunday-school children's party was appointed. This though not the best attended of the gatherings, was perhaps the most fully enjoyed. The recitations of the youngsters were on the whole admirable, and singing by the choir, Miss Pettigrew, Miss Mitchell, and Miss McDowell's class most agreeably diversified the evening's entertainment. After a vote of thanks to the teachers, responded to by Mr. Robert Kennedy, the children were sent home with oranges, &c. A number of prizes for good attendance and class work were distributed.

BOLTON.—At Commission-street, on Sunday evening, after a sermon by the Rev. A. Lazenby, on "England's neutrality in the present war," the following resolution was carried, on the motion of Mr. Councillor Bromley, seconded by Mr. John Lancaster:—"The members of the church and congregation worshipping in the Commission-street Unitarian Chapel, Bolton, earnestly pray that Her Majesty's Government will maintain a strict neutrality in the present war between Russia and Turkey, being convinced that any departure from such a course would be opposed to the social and moral interests of humanity."

CEFNCOED: THE QUARTERLY MEETINGS.—The last meetings of the South Wales Unitarian Association were held in the Old Meeting House, Cefncoed, on Wednesday and Thursday, the 26th and 27th ult. These meetings were very interesting in many respects: First, they were rendered attractive as they formed a sort of an induction to the newly-appointed minister, the Rev. J. Hathren Davies, who came to settle here in the month of July of last year. They were also pleasant inasmuch as they were so well represented by ministers from all parts of Wales. When it will be remembered that Cefncoed is, as we may say, in the furthestmost part of Glamorgan-shire, and some eighty miles from the stronghold of Unitarianism—that is, Cardiganshire—it is a matter of no little surprise that no fewer than fourteen ministers collected together on the days of the meeting. Among those present may be mentioned the Revs. Thomas Thomas, Pantydeafid; E. W. Lloyd, Cwmbach; R. J. Jones, M.A., Aberdare; J. J. George, Aberdare; N. R. Williams, Merthyr Tydvil; R. C. Jones, Lampeter; John Davies, Allt-y-placca; John Evans, Gellionrhys; William James, B.A., Aberdare; William Davies, Penrhwi; William Rees, Rhydygwin; J. E. Manning, M.A., Swansea; and Jenkin William, Blaengwrach. On Wednesday evening services were held both at Dowlais and Cefncoed simultaneously. At the former place the Revs. Thomas Thomas and E. W. Lloyd officiated, and at the latter the Revs. Jenkin William, William Davies, and William Rees. On Thursday morning the introductory service was conducted by the Rev. T. Thomas, after which two eloquent sermons were delivered, the one in English by the Rev. J. E. Manning, M.A., the other, in Welsh, by the Rev. John Davies. At three o'clock in the afternoon a large and attentive audience again assembled in the chapel, when an interesting discussion took place on the subject put down for the Conference—"Would an authorised creed be of any service to us as a Unitarian body?" The subject was introduced by the Rev. R. C. Jones, Lampeter, who was followed by the Revs. John Davies, Thomas Thomas, J. E. Manning, and R. J. Jones, M.A. As far as we could glean from the different speeches, they all agreed in saying that such a creed would do more harm than good. At the evening service the Rev. R. C. Jones introduced, and the Revs. John Evans and Thomas Thomas delivered, two capital discourses, which were most attentively listened to by some hundreds of people of every denomination. It is only fair to state that during the evening service a splendid anthem was most successfully gone through by the Aberdare and Cefncoed choirs. It was decided that the next meetings should be held at Swansea. Thus were brought to a close the best meetings that were ever held in this chapel. Our hope is that these meetings will prove the means of giving a new life to this much-neglected congregation, which has bravely stood its ground, in spite of the storms and threats of the theological world, for nearly fourteen years, during which long period it has been without a settled minister. We hope also that, by God's aid, we shall be able to do something to promote the welfare of the human race, and establish the kingdom of God here on earth.

COLNE.—The Rev. Wm. Matthews is giving on Sunday evenings a series of six lectures on "Some of the World's Great Benefactors." On Sunday week the subject was "Luther as a Theologian and Reformer;" last Sunday, "Priestley as a Theologian and a Scientist." The subjects to follow are "Channing, and the Worth of Human Nature," "Parker and Free Religion," "Paul and the Demolition of Priestly Ritual," "Christ, and the Healing of the Woes of Human Life."

CHELTENHAM: UNITARIAN SUNDAY-SCHOOL CHRISTMAS ENTERTAINMENT.—On Sunday, the 23rd ult., the winter anniversary of this Sunday-school was held, sermons for the occasion being preached by the minister, the Rev. D. Griffith. The children of the school, under the guidance of Mr. Hailing, conducted the musical portion of the morning and evening services, singing a number of hymns with great sweetness and precision. Good collections were made towards the school funds. On the evening of Thursday, the 27th ult., the teachers and scholars' winter entertainment took place in the school-room, when (although their numbers were thinned by the illness prevalent) a goodly band of young people assembled. After tea had been disposed of and the tables removed, the scholars collected to listen to an address from the minister, and to receive from his hands their prizes (forty in number), each book being presented with a few encouraging remarks to the recipient. A varied entertainment then followed, into which the Sunday scholars entered with eager delight. Mr. Matthews kindly contributed his valuable help in the form of a very interesting magic-lantern exhibition, and another kind friend, Mr. Marks, gave them a most amusing and clever performance in ventriloquism. Singing by the scholars, and a distribution of oranges amongst them brought the evening to a pleasant conclusion.

GUILDFORD.—In connection with this place of worship there was held, in the Temperance Hall, Ward-street, on Wednesday evening, a most enjoyable conversation. The hall was tastefully decorated for the occasion, a number of flags and banners being hung round the room, and relieved by effective arrangements of evergreens, presenting a very pretty appearance. Mr. A. Angell, analyst for Southampton and the borough of Guildford, chose as his subject "Philosophy of Combustion," and sufficed it to say that in the hands of this gentleman the lecture was rendered highly attractive and interesting by a number and a variety of brilliant experiments. A novel feature in the programme was a lecture by a Mr. C. T. Kingzett, the discoverer of "Sanitas," or, as it is otherwise termed, "Nature's Hygiene." The Rev. W. A. Clarke proposed a vote of thanks to all who had lent their aid in enabling them to spend so pleasant an evening, and Mr. Edwin Ellis acknowledged the kind compliment paid.

KING'S LYNN.—On Thursday, the 10th inst., the choir of the Free Christian Church here, and others, thirty in all, were hospitably entertained by Mr. and Mrs. Edmund Green at their residence. The entertainment could not have been better nor more plentiful; everything showed that the wants and comfort of the guests had been most thoughtfully considered and anticipated. Indeed, nothing that willing hands could do, or generous hearts could dictate, seemed left out of the programme. This is the third annual gathering of this kind which has taken place under the roof of Mr. Green, and than which neither of the former was certainly a greater success. It would have been impossible perhaps to have crammed into the hours more of music, fun, and hearty fellowship than they contained; it was an evening the memory of which will be as music to the souls of those who were present, in the midst of the toils and sterner and harsher aspects of life throughout this year.

KING'S LYNN: FREE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.—The following resolution has been carried by the committee of the Free Christian Church of King's Lynn, and forwarded to the Secretary of Foreign Affairs:—"The committee of the Free Christian Church of King's Lynn, having faith in the declaration made by the Earl of Derby—viz., 'That the greatest of British interests is peace,' entreat the Government to still adhere to that policy, by observing in the future, as at present, a strict neutrality in relation to the war now raging in the East."

KIRKCALDY.—A lecture was delivered in the Public Buildings, on the 14th inst., by the Rev. Alex. Webster, Perth, on the ultimate authority in religion. The chair was taken by Mr. William Porter, late of the East End Congregation, Glasgow. Though the advertisement of the meeting most depended on was not inserted in the local papers through oversight, there was a full meeting. Clo attention was given to the lecture, and it was quite evident that the lecturer's views met the sympathies of most of those present. Pamphlets were eagerly sought for at the close. Kirkcaldy still offers a good field for our work, and some of the friends of our cause resident there are determined to try to organise a society.

LIVERPOOL: HOSPITAL SUNDAY.—Last Sunday was Hospital Sunday in this town. The collection at Renshaw-street Church heads the list with the magnificent sum of £475. 8s. The Rev. Charles Beard preached an able and suggestive sermon on the reform of medical charities. The collections at our other Unitarian churches in Liverpool have yet to be reported.

LONDON: AVONDALE ROAD CHAPEL, PREKHAM.—The approaches to this chapel are so bad, and interfere so seriously with attendance at worship, that the committee on Friday last convened a meeting of the inhabitants of the neighbourhood in order to secure united action. It was considered that nothing could be done by the authorities for six months at the least, and it was resolved to open a subscription list for the adoption of some means of making a temporary pathway. The estimated cost is £25, to which the chapel will of course be expected to make a liberal contribution.

MILES PLATING.—On Friday evening, January 4, Messrs. Burgess, Coleman, Howard, and Fielding gave an entertainment to the choir and to a number of old friends of Varley-street in the Conservative Hall, Harpurhey. The room was nicely decorated, and everything was got up in good taste, Mrs. Robert Fielding taking charge of the refreshments. The choir sang some choice pieces of music, and Mr. Ben Brierley gave a reading, and a most pleasant evening was spent by all present.

NOTTINGHAM.—The annual meeting of the teachers of the High Pavement Sunday-school was held on the 6th inst., the Rev. R. A. Armstrong in the chair. Reports were read from the committee, the secretaries of the penny bank, and the managers of the school library, and adopted, and at the close 34 of the teachers were kindly invited to take tea together, which they did. It appears that the average attendance of female teachers is, morning, 10 out of 11; afternoon, 14 out of 15; and of those in the morning 81 were present in time, and in the afternoon 101. In ten classes there are 290 girls, while in the boys' there are 115 scholars in thirteen classes.—On the 2nd, 3rd, and 4th inst., the wardens of the Church invited the members of the congregation to a series of parties. The whole suite of school-rooms on the level with the Pavement were adapted to the purpose by the removal of all the desks and the introduction of plentiful drapery, couches, chairs, and tables. The walls were covered with mirrors, paintings, engravings, and photographs, and the gallery in the infants' schoolroom was completely hidden with shrubs and virgin cork. Many of the members lent valuable plants and pictures, and some of the gentlemen kindly sent a telephone to amuse the guests, while others contributed vocal and instrumental music. The numbers actually present were, on the first night 136, on the second 143, and on the third 182 persons.

OLDHAM.—On Tuesday last the second of a series of public lectures, under the auspices of the Young Men's Mutual Improvement Class, was given in the schoolroom by the Rev. E. Armitage, Congregationalist, of Waterhead—subject, his Tour to Florence.—Mr. James Taylor in the chair. The lecturer gave an interesting description of the city of Florence, and a brief sketch of the wonderful, yet terrible, history of the Florentines. The hearty applause that greeted the lecturer at the close showed that the mastery manner in which he had delivered the lecture had been highly appreciated. The usual vote of thanks brought the meeting to a close.

SAFFRON WALDEN.—On Sunday week Mr. Brinkworth preached an able sermon suitable for the close of the year, from Ephesians v. 16—"Redeeming the time." Several persons have called upon him, and thanked him for it since Sunday. A Watch Night service was again held here on Old Year's night, commencing at 10.30 p.m. There were more present this year than there were last year. The service was varied with singing, prayer, and addresses. Master Brinkworth sang a piece prepared for the occasion: "One more year has gone," and an address was given by the pastor from Isaiah xxxviii. 15, "What shall I say?" The year 1877 was reviewed and its chief events summarised. The Old year died out and the New year commenced in silent prayer. It was brought to a close by singing "Come, welcome the New Year with Anthems of joy."

SUNDAY SCHOOL EXCURSIONS.—Mr. John Fox, of the High Pavement School, Nottingham, being much interested in this question, has recently addressed a letter of inquiry to several of the local clergy, ministers, and superintendents, and the result of the replies received seems to be that these excursions are almost universal; that school managers are afraid to give them up while others retain them; and that though a few are very strongly in favour of them, most persons of experience are but lukewarm in their praise, and doubtful of their good effect, while one or two think them decidedly mischievous.

STALYBRIDGE.—At the annual meeting of members of the Unitarian Church, Stalybridge, held January 9th, 1878, it was unanimously resolved, "That we the members of the Unitarian Church, Stalybridge, are of opinion that any departure from a strictly neutral policy by the British Government in the war between Russia and Turkey will be highly criminal. We, therefore, earnestly pray, that the Government will use its influence to keep the country from any armed interference in the Eastern struggle, and to oppose any increased expenditure on our armaments."

SUNDERLAND.—We take the following extract from the Sunderland Daily Echo of January 14th:—"We learn that the Rev. James MacDonald, minister of the Unitarian Church in this town, has accepted an invitation to the ministry of the Unitarian Church at Kendal, and will leave Sunderland in March. In his four years at Bridge-street Church Mr. MacDonald has largely increased the congregation and done a great deal in the town, apart from the results seen in the church, to spread free religious views. His going away will be to the regret of many in and out of the ordinary congregation who knew him not only as a minister, but as a friend, whose social qualities and literary and scientific knowledge made intercourse and friendship with him both valuable and pleasant." We are informed that Mr. MacDonald will enter upon his duties at Kendal on the first Sunday in April next.

TODMORDEN.—The annual teachers' party was held on Saturday last, when about 140 sat down to tea. Afterwards a meeting was held, and Mr. Thomas Lee was elected to preside as chairman. The Secretary (Mr. H. Davies) read an excellent report, which showed the school to be in a very flourishing condition. The chairman gave a short earnest address to the teachers, after which the evening was spent in a very enjoyable manner in dancing, games, songs, and recitations.

TAUNTON.—The tea party and prize distribution took place on Thursday, January 10. The scholars assembled in the upper schoolroom at five o'clock, and the meeting after tea was held in the lower schoolroom, where decorative mottoes met the eye, including "Welcome to the Children," "A Happy New Year," &c. The Rev. John Birks, pastor, presided over a crowded audience, and in his opening remarks congratulated the friends upon the increasing success of the schools, of which they had evidence before them that night. A programme of considerable length, consisting of recitations and music, was then gone through, and elicited much applause. The prizes of handsome and valuable books were then distributed by the chairman to those children who had been most punctual and regular in their attendance during the year, and the meeting closed with singing the hymn, "Nearer, my God, to Thee," and repeating the Lord's Prayer.

ROCHDALE: CLOVER-STREET.—On Sunday the annual meeting of the Sick and Burial Society was held in the Schoolroom, Mr. John Leach in the chair. The report showed that there were on the books 73 members paying 1d. per week, and 115 at 2d. per week, and that after paying all demands there was a gain on the year of £78. 7s. 1d., and a total balance in favour of the society of £1,070. 8s. 1d.

WALSALL.—Mr. Hopps' lately published book of "Hymns, Chants, and Anthems," has been adopted for regular use by the congregation.

YEOWIL.—The annual New Year's tea and entertainment took place on Monday. There was a goodly attendance. The entertainment was presided over by Mr. H. E. Bunce, of Frome; and the large programme of amusements was satisfactorily gone through. At the close a hearty vote of thanks was accorded those friends who provided the tea and assisted at the entertainment. The vocalists were accompanied on the piano by Miss A. J. Ralls and Miss Geard. Several of the pieces were loudly applauded and redemanded.

CORRESPONDENCE.

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE UNITARIAN POCKET ALMANAC.—The Editors of the "Unitarian Herald" beg to state that they are in no way connected with the preparation or publication of the above Almanac.

CHURCH LIVINGS.

To the Editors.—The Rev. Charles Wicksteed has called my attention to a passage in the report of my sermon at Aberdeen, stating that I had been informed that 1,300 livings of the Church of England were in the hands of the House of Lords, representing an annual income of two millions sterling. In reference to this, Mr. Wicksteed says: "No such amount can be credited to any 1,300 livings of the Church of England, whether in the hands of the House of Lords, the Crown, the Crown officers, or private patrons, or all put together." I am obliged to Mr. Wicksteed for calling my attention to an error, which indeed is so palpable as not likely to lead any one astray. The statement should be that 1,300 livings are in the hands of the House of Lords; and livings, representing an annual income of two millions sterling, are subject to private patronage.

FRANK W. WALTERS.

Glasgow, 16th January, 1878.

THE BIBLES OF HUMANITY.

To the Editors.—Mr. Dalby, in his letter of December 8th, thinks that when we regarded the Bible as, at least, a record of divine revelation, it was fitting that we should make exclusive use of it as a lectionary in our public religious services,—“whereas now, when we see in the Hebrew and Christian Scriptures only one of the great Bibles of humanity, there seems to be no reason why our readings and our texts should be derived only from the former.” I do not think that we are all agreed upon the question of the position of the Bible in the literature of the world; but I am quite sure of this: that in a purely comparative point of view we do well to make of the Bible, as a lectionary, that exclusive use which is characteristic of most of our services. Exclusive use of a thing may be justified by its comparative excellence and superiority, as well as by its isolated and unrelated origin or character. If a thing, while not standing absolutely alone, is yet demonstrably the best of its class, I contend that we do well to keep to that thing. In all departments we may well be content with the best which exists; and while possessing the best, it is certainly foolish to sigh for the inferior. Now, I want to say that in a comparative view of the world's sacred books, the Bible is in such a sense and to such an extent the best of all that we are right and wise in keeping to it as we do. Our action is justified by the facts. I believe that, as a rule, those who know very little about the ethnic scriptures are most inclined to praise them, while those who know those scriptures most intimately and accurately perceive most clearly their pitiable inferiority as compared with the Bible. For twenty years I have taken a deep interest in this question, and the more I have been able to learn of the ethnic scriptures the more clearly I have seen that there is comparatively very little in them which is worth the attention of Western religionists, and that we do well to prize and use the Bible as we do. If you take away from the Koran all which has been derived from the Bible you take away the best of it. Hindu books cannot be seriously compared with the Bible. It would be impossible for us to take many readings from the Persian and Chinese books. The innumerable volumes of the Buddhist Tripitaka must be the dreariest things in literature, containing scarcely anything worth reading publicly to intelligent Westerners. There is so much in the Bible which is good and noble; there is so little that is excellent in other sacred books. The gems of the ethnic scriptures are few; those of the Bible are innumerable. I know that we are apt to prize the rare and despise the common; but surely our present use of the Bible is justified by the fact that good things are common in it, instead of being very rare, as is the case in the other sacred books. Out of 140 Buddhist books you may find two or three, such as Khuddaka P'atha and Dhammapada, which are worth attention; the rest are well nigh worthless. Now, the peculiar glory of the Bible is that, on the contrary, it is generally good and uplifting, and that it contains a few books which are useless to us. Then, too, it should be known that the other Bibles of humanity have been flattered by their translation, whereas no translation of the Bible has been able to express anything like all its wonder and glory. Some fervent admirers of the ethnic scriptures are, perhaps, not aware that many of their finest gems are not theirs: they belong to the translation. Even the Sayatri loses its glory when Sir William Jones ceases to paraphrase, and when Wilson soberly translates. The Bible gains by profound study and intimate acquaintance, while the other scriptures lose. The more we really know about them the more we ought to prize the Bible. At the very utmost a few isolated sentences can be extracted from other sacred books. What is to prevent a minister from quoting such in his sermon? He may quote them, if he will. They may add impressiveness to what he says. But, as to our devotional services, no ethnic sacred book is fitted to stand side by side with the Bible. The Bible fully deserves its exceptional position. As to the charge of inconsistency brought against us by a few ex-orthodox people, I can only reply with the proverb—“One extreme begets another.” When men break away from orthodoxy they are very apt to go right away to the other extreme. But, as for us, we shall travel most safely if we keep to the middle of the road.

Ainsworth.

EPHRAIM TURLAND.

THE DISTRESS IN SOUTH WALES.

To the Editors.—You will be pleased to know, I think, that while Mr. Squier, of Stand, was reading to the children of his school the letter from the Daily News about the starving children in Wales, I was doing the same to our school here. I then told them that they might decide what use should be made of ten shillings, the greater part of the proceeds of our Christmas entertainment. I distributed blank papers, and each child wrote what he or she chose, quite without help from the teachers. With but two exceptions every paper with “soup” or “children” written on it. I had great pleasure in sending the money to Mr. Williams, our minister at Merthyr-Tydfil, who has very kindly written the children a long letter of thanks, which has quite repaid the children for their sacrifice. The money was intended for library books, and they quite understood that they must be content to read the old ones.—Yours, &c., SOPHIE R. SHARMAN.

Plymouth, 14th January, 1878.

To the Editors.—The distress in South Wales has become a household word. The places mostly figuring therewith are Merthyr and Aberdare. An impression seems to be widely spread that the assistance sent to the former place extends to the latter. This is not so. A mountain ridge separates the two valleys, and the relief committee on each side of the hill use the means of relief sent to them for the benefit of their immediate neighbours. The consequence of the misapprehension which I wish to correct is that Merthyr gets the lion's share. Aberdare is an iron and a coal district. A few years ago extensive ironworks were in full operation at Hirwaun, Llywcoed, Gadlys, Abernant, and Aberaman. These are all closed now, and the immense quantities of coal consumed in their operations are not in demand. The demand for coal for the export trade is reduced almost to a minimum. From these facts alone it is evident that great distress must exist among ironworkers and colliers. Sober men who in good times built or purchased cottages have had to sell them. Men who held positions of trust as overlookers are in poverty; their little stores in the bank have been withdrawn to feed their families. In fact widespread poverty prevails and much complete destitution. With your permission I would earnestly appeal to a generous public for assistance in alleviating the great and sad distress. Donations sent to the Rev. R. J. Jones, M.A., Myrtle Cottage, Clifton-street, Aberdare, will be distributed without regard to sect or creed. Real want will not be refused.—Yours, &c., J. JOSEPH GEORGE.

COMING WEEK.

BOOTLE, NEAR LIVERPOOL.—On Tuesday evening, in the Town Hall, Merton Road, Bootle, Lecture by the Rev. S. Fletcher Williams, on “What is the Great Salvation?”

GLOSSOP.—Saturday, the 26th inst., annual meeting of the East Cheshire Christian Union.

HALE.—On Friday next, Induction service.

LONDON: LITTLE PORTLAND-STREET.—On Sunday morning, the Rev. Charles Wicksteed, B.A., will lecture on “The Personal Jesus of the Gospels.”

MANCHESTER: MEMORIAL HALL.—On Tuesday, annual meeting and soiree of the Home Missionary Board.

MANCHESTER: STRANGEWAYS.—On Sunday, morning and evening, the Rev. J. T. Marriott will preach.

MANCHESTER: CROSS-STREET.—On Sunday morning, preacher, Rev. Wm. Gaskell, M.A. Collection in aid of the library.

MANCHESTER: ROCHDALE ROAD.—On Sunday, fifth meeting of the session of Sunday-school teachers.

MOTTRAM.—On Sunday evening, lecture by the Rev. G. H. Vance, B.D., on “Excuses.”

STOURBRIDGE.—On Sunday evening, a lecture by the Rev. John Gordon, on “Universal Redemption.”

WALSALL.—On Sunday, opening of the new organ. Preachers, Revs. Peter Deau and John Harrison.

DEATHS.

DUNKERKEY.—On the 10th inst, at Milton Villa, Heaton Moor, Manchester, after a brief illness, William Dunkerkey, aged, 36 years.

MAXWELL.—On the 10th inst., at 93, Tetlow-street, Walton road, Liverpool, aged 80, Alexander Maxwell, late gridiron master, Prince's Dock, Old Basin.

M'LAUGHLAN.—On the 31st ult. 1877, at Wales Bank, New-church, Rossendale, aged 33, William McLaughlan.

WANTED, a Good HOUSE and SHOP near Manchester, (bus or rail), suitable for Grocer and Confectioner, in neighbourhood of one of our churches, with good day schools.—Address J. PHILLIPS, Herald office.

WANTED, by a Young Lady, able to keep books, Situation to Manage or Assist in Confectioner's Shop: understands grocery: salary, with residence, £25 per year: references exchanged.—Address A 1, Herald office.

WANTED, a Lady, as GOVERNESS to young children, aged eleven, six, and four years: must be a good needlewoman, and willing to take entire charge.—Apply, enclosing photograph and copy of testimonials, under initials R. I. P., Post-office, Hollywood, near Belfast.

WANTED, a CERTIFICATED SCHOOL-MASTER, for the Underbank (Mixed) School, Stanington. Income: £20 from Trustees, the whole of Government Grant, and School Pence.—Apply to the Rev. W. BIRKS Stanington, near Sheffield.

CHEAP ISSUE.—Paper 6d., post 7d., direct C. A. Hood, Devonport. “The Life and Teaching of Jesus Christ.”

UNITARIAN MAGAZINE, Edited by FRANK W. WALTERS, Glasgow. Monthly, One Penny. Orders to be sent to Mr. PATERSON, 9, Pitt-street, Glasgow.

MR. FARRINGTON'S SERMONS, on Religious Organisation (printed chiefly for use in his own congregation). Nos. 1 and 2, 1d. each, for sale by Johnson & Rawson.

THE CHILDREN'S SERVICES in use at the Free Christian Church Sunday School, Bolton, are now reprinted for sale. A specimen copy may be had for four stamps, of the Rev. A. B. CAMM, Arkwright-street, Bolton.

QUENDRYTH: A Legend of the Heptarchy. By EDWIN SIDNEY HARTLAND. Price 5s. London: Simpkin, Marshall, and Co.

“A remarkable and beautiful drama.”—Unitarian Herald.

Now Ready, 8vo., gilt edges, price 2s., post free, 2s. 2d.

A YEAR AT DRAYTON: A Story for Children By Mrs. PAUL E. FISHER, Charing Cross Publishing Company, Limited, 5, Friar-street, Broadway, London, E.C.

THE UNITARIAN POCKET ALMANAC and DIARY for 1878 IS NOW READY. In tuck and gilt edges, 1s.; cloth, 6d. (a few without diary, cloth, 6d.); paper, 4d. Orders should be sent at once to JOHN PHILLIPS, 55, Market-street, Manchester.

THE CHILDHOOD OF RELIGIONS, embracing a simple account of the Birth and Growth of Myths and Legends.

By EDWARD CLODD, F.R.A.S.

A Cheap Edition of this work, price 1s. 6d., specially prepared for schools, can be had of THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL ASSOCIATION, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, W.C.

WORKS BY UNITARIAN AND OTHER FREE CHRISTIAN WRITERS.

Kept in Stock, or promptly procured to Order, by JOHNSON & RAWSON,

89, MARKET-STREET, MANCHESTER.	s. d.
Dawson, George, M.A.—Sermons (just out)	6 0
Herford Brooke.—The Story of Religion in England	5 0
Dr. Channing.—Complete works	3 6
J. J. Tayler, B.A.—[Last series] Christian Aspects of Faith and Duty	7 6
J. J. Tayler, B.A.—Retrospect of Religious Life of England	7 6
G. Dawson, M.A.—Prayers	6 0
Dr. Martineau.—Endeavours after the Christian Life	7 6
Dr. Martineau.—Hours of Thought	7 6
Robert Collyer.—The Life that Now Is, and Nature and Life (1 volume)	4 0
Blanco White.—Heresy and Orthodoxy	2 0
Rev. C. Beard, B.A.—The Soul's Way to God	7 6
Theodore Parker.—Discourse on Religion	2 0
Theodore Parker.—Ten Sermons and Prayers	2 0
Theodore Parker.—Life and Writings	1 6
Dr. Vance Smith.—The Bible and Popular Theology	3 6
Dr. Vance Smith.—The Spirit and Word of Christ	2 0
Mary Carpenter.—Morning and Evening Meditations	2 0
Samuel Greg.—A Layman's Legacy	4 6
Knappert.—Religion of Israel (trans. E. A. Armstrong)	2 6
Whitworth.—Book of Natural Laws	1 6
F. W. Newman.—The Soul: its Sorrows, &c.	1 3
Phil's Mistake.—A Story for the Young. Cloth, 1s. 6d.; gilt	2 0
Rosy's Three Homes, cloth, 1s. 6d.; gilt	2 0
Volume 4.—Bible for the Young	4 0
Volume 2.—Young Days	1 6

The Theological Review, 2s. 6d.; The Truthseeker, 3d.; Christian Freeman, 1d.; The Inquirer, 5d.; The Unitarian Herald, 1d.; The Christian Life, 2d.; The Free Word, 1d.; and all other Periodicals supplied.

1878 DIARIES AND ALMANACKS, 1878 CHRISTMAS & NEW YEAR'S CARDS.

LETTER-PRESS PRINTING IN ALL ITS BRANCHES. Stationery, Account Books, and Binding. Note-paper and Envelopes, stamped with Monogram, Crest, &c.

ARMSTRONG & RICHARDS, St. Ann's Place, Manchester.—SHIRTS, of superior quality, made to order.

ARMSTRONG & RICHARDS, St. Ann's Place, Manchester.—BEST NOTTINGHAM HOSIERY, for Ladies and Children. PARIS SCARFS. SILK GLOVES for dress, six-buttoned, &c., &c.

LONDON: SHIRLEY'S TEMPERANCE HOTEL, 37, Queen's Square, Bloomsbury. Beds from 1s. 6d. Plain Breakfast or Tea, 1s. 3d.

RUPTURES.—Exhibition Prize Medal, 1862, was awarded to R. WESTBURY, inventor and sole maker of the IMPERCEPTIBLE CURATIVE TRUSS. Deformity Instruments, Artificial Limbs, Crutches, Elastic Stockings, and Ladies' Supporting Belts, Chest Expanders for round shoulders, &c., 26, Old Millgate, Manchester.

TWENTY-ONE YEARS' EXPERIENCE. JOHN B. THWAITES, M.R.C.P., 16, CASTLE-STREET, LIVERPOOL, Translator, to Her Majesty's Government and various Foreign Governments, and formerly in the British, Italian, Spanish, and other Consular Services, Commercial, Legal, Technical, and Scientific TRANSLATOR of Danish, Dutch, French, German, Italian, Norwegian, Portuguese, Spanish, and Swedish. No assistants employed on confidential work. Letters, documents, and catalogues for translation, sent by post, punctually attended to.

H. OGDEN & SON, MANUFACTURERS OF USEFUL AND ARTISTIC FURNITURE.

ORIGINAL DESIGNS AND SOUND CONSTRUCTION AT MODERATE COST.

WAREHOUSE—126, DEANSGATE, MANCHESTER. MANUFACTORY—CORN BROOK, MANCHESTER.

THE DINNER SHERRY.

The season of the year having arrived when light wines, so agreeable in warmer weather, give place to those of a more generous character, we beg to draw attention to the above wine. For years we have given great attention to keep up and improve its quality, and those who require a delicate clean-flavoured sherry, free from spirit, we submit it with confidence, and ask comparison with wine usually sold at 30s.

A considerable saving can be made by taking Quarter-cask, 27 gallons, at 4s. 8d.; cask included. Octave, 13½ gallons, at 47s. 8d. Samples can be tasted. Price list of 32 Sherrys and other Wine free by post.

JAMES SMITH & COMPANY, Wine Merchants, 26, Market-street, Manchester; also at Liverpool and Birmingham.

Printed for the Proprietors by WILLIAM EVANS, of Apley Villa 377, Waterloo Road, Chesham Hill, at his Printing Offices, No. 3, Cross-street, Parish of Manchester; and Published by JOHN PHILLIPS, at New Cannon Chambers, 55, Market-street, in said Parish of Manchester.—London Agents: Messrs. Smart and Allen, 2, London-house Yard, Paternoster Row.—Friday, January 18, 1878.

REV. JAMES BLACK, M.A., & REV. S. FLETCHER WILLIAMS

PRICE 1D.

THE TRUTHSEEKER, Edited by the Rev. JOHN PAGE HOPPS, and published on the first of every month, is a free and unsectarian Review of all books and events relating to the development of religious life and liberty in the Christian Church. Every number contains original lectures and essays, together with reviews of present and permanent interest. Price Threepence.—London: Trubner and Co., 5, and 59, Ludgate Hill. Manchester: Johnson and Rawson, 89 Market-street; and John Heywood, Deansgate.

DOINGS AND SAYINGS.

The Bishop of Rochester seems to be well to do. He has just purchased Selsdon Park, which is larger than the Archbishop's place at Addington. There is a fine billiard-room in the house, and Bishop Thorold is going to convert it into a chapel.

As showing the need of funeral reform, the Rock states that at a recent funeral of a Ritualist clergyman in the diocese of Salisbury an embroidered velvet pall of so sumptuous a character was brought into requisition that before being used it had to be insured in the sum of £250.

Great interest is felt in the forthcoming proceedings in the Convocation of the province of York. The Bishop of Carlisle has given notice of a motion which calls attention to the state of the law as it affects the Church, and raises the whole question of Church and State—rather a remarkable step for a bishop to take.

The Herts Reporter mentions that at Basingstoke on Sunday week, between the hours of service, a football match was played on the Vicarage grounds. A large number of men and boys were in attendance. It is rumoured that a return match is to be played on Sunday afternoon next. Such proceedings make quite a ferment in the village. What will the end be?

Correspondents of the Church Times are much exercised upon the question whether Bishop Claughton, at a recent communion service at St. Andrew's, Bedford Square, London, laid his hand upon both chalice; in the event of such an omission one writer is aghast at the thought that "some of the communicants must really have received in one consecrated kind only."

It would seem that certain clergy of the Church of England are anxious to defend religious education against the "existing regulations of the Code and the provisions of the Education Acts," which they say are "practically disestablishing Christianity" by divorcing it from education. So the Rev. Wm. Stanyer, as secretary of the "Religious Education Defence Society," is asking Churchmen throughout the country to petition the Earl of Beaconsfield, "That regulations should be made providing for the teaching of the Holy Scriptures in all public elementary schools, and that encouragement be given thereto by examination report and annual grant." A bill, he says, is being drafted for introduction into Parliament to bring this about and to prevent our schools from becoming "nurseries for secularism." We would suggest to Mr. Stanyer that the defence of religious education would be better worked out by himself and brethren by diligent labour in the Sunday school.

The Birmingham Post announces that the State clergy, finding that they cannot overawe the School Board, are now retreating from their non possumus attitude, and consenting to take a share in the work of religious education after the example set them by Nonconformists. It is said that, under the direction of the Rev. E. I. Houghton, the diocesan inspector for religious teaching, arrangements have been made with the School Board for the use of four of the most important schools, and in these schools religious instruction in the principles of the Church of England will be given on Saturday mornings to children whose parents are willing to permit them to attend. It is not intended to rely upon voluntary teachers, but a staff of competent paid teachers will be provided—selected probably from the Church school teachers in the town—and the funds necessary for this purpose are, at least in part, provided by a grant obtained by the bishop from the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge.

We regret to hear that the distress in China, to which we lately referred, has assumed alarming proportions. Four large and populous provinces are now suffering from absolute famine. One province alone, that of Shansi, is as large as England, and contains a population nearly equal to one half of the entire population of Great Britain. Here the sufferings of the people are terrible beyond description. For three years little or no rain has fallen, and at last it has become impossible even to sow the seed from which a harvest might be reaped, the ground being utterly parched and dried up, and there being no means of irrigation. Added to this, the geographical situation of this province prevents grain being imported from other regions, except at an enormous cost. Surrounded on nearly all sides by ranges of high mountains, almost the only available means of transporting food is on the backs of donkeys and mules. The Chinese Government have voted various sums, amounting in all to more than a quarter of a million sterling, and have made grants in grain to the extent of about 12,000 tons. The Protestant missionaries have also appealed for aid, and are engaged in distributing food among the starving poor.

The Western Mail, of the 2nd inst., under the heading "Secularism and Charity," states that the Messrs. Hudson, of dry soap fame, have sent £500 into the Merthyr district to be given out in small quotas of goods or money by the agents for their article, namely, the various grocers of the town, but lay a restriction upon the disbursement of the gift. All ministers, it appears, are to have the privilege of aiding the apportionment of the money amongst the poor, to whom tickets are to be given that will be cashed by the grocers in money or goods, excepting to those of one religious denomination—the Unitarians! Upon this exception the Mail remarks "In a common calamity which has fallen grievously upon all the working classes, it would be idle to suppose that the Unitarian has been more exempt than his brother Baptist or his brother Methodist; yet, because he has chosen conscientiously to follow the religious convictions of his mind, he is to be debarred from the benefits extended to men who in many cases have not exercised their mind at all in the matter, but blindly followed in the rut chosen by their forerunners. Without raising the issue as to the superiority of any 'ism,' it does appear to us harsh in the extreme that one sect should have been singled out for opprobrious distinction, when if the wealthy soap firm had anti-Unitarian notions they might in the exercise of Christian charity have ignored their scruples in this action of benevolence, which, to be pure, should have no leaven of the bigot, any more than it should of the advertiser."

BOOKS AND AUTHORS.

The Expositor, for February. London: Hodder & Stoughton.

THE debate on the Language spoken in Palestine in the time of Christ goes on, the Rev. W. Sanday, in an elaborate paper, arguing strongly against the contention of Dr. Roberts that Christ habitually spoke Greek, and maintaining that the Great Teacher spoke Aramaic. The editor, in his valuable commentary on the Book of Job, presents some suggestive renderings in notes on chaps. xvi., xvii. Mr. Cox is a very sympathetic and thoughtful commentator, and the present paper is one of the best of the series on the wonderful Old Testament drama. Professor Milligan discusses minutely some recent critical readings in the New Testament—Matt. vi. 12, vii. 29.—Mark vi. 22, Mark vi. 20. Under the title of "Divine Myths," the Rev. Rayner Winterbotham takes the position that the early records of Genesis are myths, and that all the efforts made to reconcile their statements with history and science are only so much earnestness and ingenuity thrown away. Mr. Winterbotham's is a remarkably candid paper; and altogether the magazine is an undoubted power in promoting a more rational view of the Bible and of theology generally.

The Congregationalist, for February. London: Hodder and Stoughton.

THE opening article is a trenchant and powerful reply to Mr. Forster's speech at Bradford, and to the Duke of Argyll's Contemporary article against disestablishment. The Rev. T. C. Finlayson continues his exposition of the "Golden Texts" in the Sunday School Union lesson; and we note that he gives to the prologue to the Fourth Gospel an interpretation which does not claim it as a proof of the Deity of Christ, and which many Unitarians would at once and gladly approve. Mrs. Reaney, of Reading, writes sensibly on "English Girls in Society." A bit of graphic writing and of pleasant reading is Mr. Hollowell's account of "Divine Worship at Bangor," where the characteristics of a Welsh service are vividly sketched. The biographical paper on Mr. John Bright, M.P., tells the story of his early life, mainly under the guidance of Mr. William Robertson, of Rochdale, who has published the life of the right hon. gentleman. In the notices of books the Rev. Joseph Cook's Boston Monday Lectures meet with discriminating criticism. The number is quite up to the average in variety and interest.

The University Magazine for February. London: Hurst and Blackett.

The University Magazine presents, this month, a new feature, which will go far to make it the magazine of the universities de facto as well as de titulo. Under the head "Spirit of the Universities" appear letters from Oxford, Cambridge, Dublin, Edinburgh, and Glasgow, full of university news and college gossip. The portrait is that of Sir John Lubbock, a very good one, as those of the previous series have been; the memoir not so good—stuffed with facts but wanting in attractiveness. Perhaps we have been spoiled by past character-sketches, which have lent such brilliancy to the brown cover. The Marquis de Nangis gives a vivid etching of the surprises which marked the career of "the thirty-fourth King of Italy." The first of Mr. W.M. Rossetti's two lectures on "Shelley," a continuation of Mrs. Boole's exceedingly interesting records of her husband at home; a descriptive critique of Professor Clifford ("The great Panjandrum") at St. George's Hall, are among the longer articles. A short one on "The Earl of Shaftesbury and his Critics" takes the part of his Lordship and of the Dean of Carlisle and Canon Miller in withdrawing their names from the S.P.C.K., on the ground that Mr. Maitland, in his book on the Argument from Prophecy, the publication of which by the society was the cause of their retirement, had acted like a general who, finding his artillery old-fashioned, should evacuate his line of defence without order from the Minister of War. It seems to us there is a great deal of truth in this way of putting it. The reviewer does not say that the artillery is not old-fashioned. In another article, however, "those well-meaning folk" are credited with absolute folly for having tarred Mr. Bonney's "Geology" with the same brush as Mr. Maitland's "Prophecy." The ground of the distinction is that the latter is purely speculative, and moreover, "provisional, transitory, and unconvincing," while the former is "a simple abstract of the actual state of our existing knowledge of facts." When a University Magazine can write thus on the province of fact and theory, what is to be expected from the intelligence of the town, not to say from the country? On behalf of Lord Shaftesbury we must insist that Mr. Bonney's facts will do as much damage to the traditional interpretation of Genesis i. as Mr. Maitland's speculations to that of Isaiah vii. We have just room for a charming true story from Mrs. Boole's paper:—

On entering the breakfast-room one morning, he found one of his children occupied in making toast, and addressed her in German. No answer. After repeating his remark two or three times, he asked, "Don't you understand me?" "No." "I don't think I've used any new words, have I?" "I wasn't listening." "Why weren't you listening?" "A pretty thing it would be if mother came down and found her toast as black as the chimney because little girls were talking German with their fathers."

SCOTTISH NOTES.

"SABBATH" AND "SUNDAY."

The proceedings at a recent meeting of the Glasgow Trades House were disturbed by the lively eruption of a Dr. Donald Munro, who proposed that the words "Sunday" and "Christmas," occurring in a set of rules submitted for confirmation, should be deleted, and "Sabbath" and "25th December" substituted. He argued that the terms objected to tended to bring about "a return to the darkness and ignorance of heathenism and Popery, and the ritual and superstition of prelacy," and that the word "Sunday," in particular, was anti-Scriptural, and attacked the wisdom and sovereignty of God, who, being the maker of the "Sabbath," was entitled to the privilege of naming it. The heir of the throne had, he added, lately insulted the feelings of the Scotch people by landing from the train at a spot saturated with the best blood of Scotland's dearest sons on a Sabbath morning. The doctor's appeal found no response among the members, and the rules were passed as originally framed.

THE RELIGION OF NURSES.

The question of the employment of Roman Catholic nurses in the institution came up prominently at the annual meeting of the subscribers to the Glasgow Royal Infirmary. From the directors' report, and the speech of the chairman in moving its adoption, it appeared that there had been a falling-off in the subscriptions, and especially in the contributions of the working classes, and that there was reason to believe that this was partly attributable to the insinuations that had been made to the effect that partiality was shown for Roman Catholic nurses. Mr. William Kidston moved, as an amendment, that the introduction of Roman Catholic nurses and other servants was objectionable; and that it was necessary, in order to restore public confidence in the institution, to infuse new blood into the directorate. In Mr. Kidston's view, it could not be admitted "that an illiterate, low-bred Papist made such a good nurse as an educated, intelligent, Bible-loving Protestant." The report was adopted by an overwhelming majority.

Professor Crombie, of St. Andrew's University, has delivered the first of the Baird Lectures in the Blythwood Church, Glasgow, his subject being "The Genuineness and Authenticity of the Gospel of St. John." The lecturer enumerated the assaults made on the gospel, beginning with a short account of the Alogi in the second century, and alluding to the doubts of English Deists in the latter part of the eighteenth century. The work of Bretschneider, The Probabilia, was passed in review, as being the most formidable attack that had yet been made against the gospel. He concluded by referring to the support given to the traditional view by Schleiermacher and his pupils.

The Scottish Disestablishment Association, at a meeting held at Glasgow, have approved of an alteration in the constitution of the body. The declaration that the fundamental principle of the Association was that the interests of the country and religion demand the disestablishment and disendowment of the State Churches of England and Scotland was deleted; and a paragraph substituted which declared that the object of the Society was the disestablishment and disendowment of the State Church in Scotland. This makes the Association more purely a Scottish one, which will doubtless tend to secure concentrated effort on the overthrow of the Scottish State Church, and will probably most aid in the ultimate abolition of that of England.

OUR SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

SYSTEMATIC RELIGIOUS TEACHING IN SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

In two articles under the above head in the Unitarian Herald of January 11th and January 18th, it was shown that in the religious teaching of the young the moral consciousness should be the stepping-stone by which to reach the religious consciousness, that from Conscience we must rise to God. We now offer an example of the method.

We go back then to any of the lessons of the moral course. We take now lesson vi. (August 17, 1877), the story of the Good Samaritan, and use it with the scholars in some such way as follows:—

You remember how in the story the traveller is riding along the road overhung by crags among which dwell fierce robbers. Some of these rush down upon him, beat him down, take his money, strip him of his clothes, and leave him bruised, bloody, stunned, half dead upon the road.

Now I want you to think first of the conduct of the robbers. First, find out by reflecting in your own mind what impulses in them led them to this cruel act. Will you say they wanted the traveller's money, that was the Desire of Gain. Yes; but was this all; think again. If they had worked for gain there would have been no harm in it. O, yes, they must have been possessed with a Love of Ease or Idleness which led them to seek gain without work. Perhaps, too, they had so long indulged in acts of violence and cruelty that the impulse of our nature which is given to enable us to be violent or angry when it is necessary, had become so strong as to give them pleasure in acts of violence and cruelty.

And now do you think it likely that these robbers had in their minds no little whisper of a feeling of compassion? Was there nothing that said to them, "Spare the man and let him go by?" I think there must have been some such feeling. I think there must have been something in them which made them feel that they were going to do a very bad act. But the robbers would not listen to this pleading of Compassion, or to this feeling that what they were thinking of doing was bad; they listened to them so little that they did not even know that they felt them. They allowed themselves to be hurried away by their lower impulses.

And now I want you to ask yourselves what you think of these robbers for their conduct with regard to their own nature; for refusing to listen to their higher feelings and giving themselves up to their lower one. You think that they were wicked, base, hateful. Are you sure that you think this? Yes; quite sure. Try if you cannot make yourself think otherwise. Try if you cannot persuade yourself that after all the robbers did the right thing, the noble thing, and that it would have been weak, soft folly in them to pity the traveller and lose the opportunity of taking his money. No; however much you try you cannot help thinking that it was wicked, base, hateful. You can no more make yourself think the opposite than you can make yourself think that hot is cold or black is white. What is that feeling that tells you the feelings which the robbers obeyed were lower feelings, and that in obeying them and not listening to the higher they were doing wrong? It is Conscience, and you see you have no power over Conscience to put it down, to make it go away, or make it tell a different story. And now try to recollect, did you make that Conscience, that feeling about the robbers come? Did you invent it or even tell it to come? No; it came of its own accord. It is true that by education you have been taught to attend to it, and therefore to feel it better; but education even did not put it in your mind, or give it the voice with which it speaks to you. Mark this fact, then we shall come to it again presently.

And now go on to the conduct of the Priest. He comes to where the wounded man is lying, he hears his piteous tale, but instead of helping him, feels his own Fears awakened. "Ah! robbers about; should not like to be stopped and plundered, should not like to be knocked on the head." He feels, too, the lower impulses Love of Rest and Ease, and these plead against Compassion, which does live in him, and whispers to him the persuasion to render help. He listens to his lower impulse, puts down his nobler feeling and hurries on, passing by on the other side—leaving the poor traveller to die. Again, what do you think of that Priest because he listened to his lower impulses and refused to hear the higher? "That he was base, mean, contemptible. His conduct was shameful and hateful." Try, again, and see if you can help feeling and thinking thus. Try if you cannot make yourself think and feel that the Priest acted the nobler part and is worthy of praise. No, you cannot do it, anymore than you can make yourself feel that ice is warm and a burning coal, cold. You have no power over this feeling of conscience. It will not go away, will not change at your bidding. You did not invent it, or make it. It seemed to come to you of its own accord. Education taught you to reflect on your own feelings; but even education did not teach you to know which were higher and which were lower. But pass on to the Levite. He sees the wounded man and feels Compassion prompting him to relieve, but again in his mind rise base Fear and mean Love of Ease and Rest, and he passes by on the other side. What do you think of him? Just as you did of the Priest, that he is a poor man, cowardly being, that his conduct is hateful and shameful. Try again if you can alter this feeling and think more kindly of this poor Levite. No you cannot. There the condemnation of him will stay in the mind however you try. It will not alter, nor go away any more than it came, at your bidding. T. E. P.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL TEACHER.

BY CUTHBERT C. GRUNDY, F.L.S., F.C.S.

SINCE the old chief use of Sunday Schools has passed away with the coming of a more general diffusion of primary education amongst the people, I believe two leading ideas have taken its place. On the one hand, the purpose of making the Sunday School chiefly a place for theological instruction, in the hope that the children may be led to choose and hold the religious beliefs of the church with which the school is connected, and of which, to use a phrase frequently employed to express this idea, it may be the nursery. On the other hand, the feeling to allow theology a much less prominent place in the general class teaching of the Sunday School, to have rather the purpose of general care and culture of the mind and heart of the children, and to leave the more marked doctrinal teaching to gatherings of the whole school or to attendance at chapel. The two ideas need not necessarily be antagonistic; the one may be and ought to be a help to the other, for the simple cultivation of head and heart will lead, where any character exists, to the adoption of a generous theology, while the inculcation of the beliefs of Unitarianism as naturally tends to the strengthening and elevation of the powers of the mind and the goodness of the heart. But notwithstanding this happy alliance and this divine unity, the characteristic of Unitarianism, a teacher can scarcely fail to base at all events his general work upon one of these ideas more than upon the other, and to make any suggestions from me useful I must preface them by telling you at once that my purpose in teaching, while pointing out from time to time the difference between Unitarianism and orthodoxy, has been less to give direct religio-theological instruction than to try, by any and every means, however round about, however "secular," to induce individual thought and to cultivate the religion of the heart. I feel that if we accomplish this we need have little fear that a blighting theology will later take hold of our scholars. They will be prepared for the more theological teaching of addresses in school and of sermons and lectures in chapel, and, I believe, will appreciate these more truly and carry out more thoroughly the lessons inculcated by them than if the instruction in the class had been more definite and less general in its religious teaching. And now to any suggestion I may be able to make. With a class of rough-handed, rough-mannered, work-a-day lads, bouncing and shouting and laughing and working and playing as if higher things were foreign to their nature and out of place in dealing with them, the teacher is apt to gain, perhaps unconsciously, an idea that he has very common place, almost unworthy, material to deal with. Now I believe that this idea of the commonness, the roughness, of the material we have to work upon is just the one thing which stands most in the way of our success. If a teacher is to work with pleasure and success he must have a firm belief in the really great nature he has to work upon and have a firm faith in its wonderful capacity for development. Are we likely to look with zeal for a thing in the existence of which we scarcely believe? Are we likely to earnestly try to cultivate a plant in whose capacity for development we have but slender faith? It was the advice of Faraday, to be prepared beforehand for the result of your experiments, to have your mind and your eye on the alert for the effects that should occur as the result of the processes at work; and it seems to me that we also, in our work of development and change, should act on this advice. The essayist having further enforced the necessity of having faith in the scholars, enters a strong protest against corporal punishment in Sunday-schools, and then proceeds:—Let us not expect too much from our scholars, and not forget that we have been lads ourselves. I think, too, that if we will be boy-men, entering into boyish feelings and boyish interests, we shall gain a hold upon the lads that dignity and austerity will fail to possess. In this way scholars will certainly not look frightened of you and avoid coming near you or speaking to you, but, what is perhaps better, they will stay to speak with you and greet you with a smile. Lads, like children of an older growth, prefer being led to being driven. They would rather follow to a pleasant "come with me" than be pushed on with a frowning "go there." I think I have said enough to give an idea of what I wish to suggest in our intercourse with scholars—faith in their good qualities; patience; to constantly remember the power of influence and example, not only in our actions and words, but in look and bearing; to feel and show a kindly interest in them, not only in class, but whenever and wherever we meet; and to lead them by kindness, rather than to attempt to drive them by force. As to the method of teaching, Mr. Grundy recommends that it be exclusively oral, without books, maps, or pictures. Let us be simply "friends in council." But he adds:—It is difficult for one teacher to advise another. Each teacher can himself best judge of the means most likely to accomplish the object in view. I am not one who thinks a high-class education is an absolute necessity in a Sunday school teacher, although, other things equal, the more education he possessed doubtless the better teacher he will be. An uncultivated, good man will do more good in our school than ever so clever a man who lacks moral integrity and kind feelings. Whatever means may be employed, if we but succeed in keeping a lad, and especially one who is just developing into the free man, just beginning to have an independent place in the world, just beginning to feel his strength for good or for evil, at an age when doubts and difficulties spring up, and power to resist and temptations to succumb develop; if we succeed in keeping such a lad or such a girl strong for good, upright and true, honest and kind, we have accomplished an act worthy of our most profound desire; deserving the patient, earnest devotion of every power; worthier than the bravest deed of war, grander than the greatest work of science, more beautiful than the fairest work of art. I believe that a little kind and hearty interest in our scholars, and the being to them something of a friend, as well as a teacher, is of more importance than anything else towards the accomplishment of our work, and we all can do and be this.

THE NATURAL HISTORY OF ATHEISM.

In a review of the work of Professor Blackie, under the above title, the Glasgow Herald says:—In the last chapter, on the atheism of reaction, we find the author at his best. He lodges a vigorous protest against the hard Calvinistic doctrines which have been repulsive to so many minds, driving them to the opposite extreme of atheism. He begins by rebelling against the authority of any one "with or without lawn sleeves," "dealing damnation round the land" on those who do not accept dogmas about the Divine nature. One after the other original sin, eternal punishment, creation out of nothing, so-called answers to prayer, and rigid Sabbatarianism, come under the Professor's free pen, and he does not spare them or their upholders. Speaking of asceticism, he says:—

"I for one, can never look upon these sallow saints pursuing skulls, and gazing up into heaven through the narrow window-sills of a dark cell, which you see on the walls of all great picture galleries, without feeling myself driven for relief into a heathenish sympathy with a brawny Hergules, a blooming Venus, or a rubicund Dionysus."

And we cannot refrain from quoting the following story of one of those ministers in the North who will have no music and no eloquence "but the alternate whine and screech of their own sepulchral voices:—

"One of them, I have been informed, in a district of the wide county of Inverness, wishing to abolish merry meetings and dances of every kind in his parish, and knowing that a fiddle or some musical instrument was a necessary adjunct of such assemblies, took occasion one day, when her husband, who was a fiddler, happened to be absent, to call on a woman of his congregation, in order to give her a serious remonstrance on the grave sin of fiddling at balls and weddings. The woman confessed that it was not exactly the most saintly occupation, but she did not see there was any harm in it; that even King David, the man after God's own heart, danced before the Lord, which he could not have done without a fiddle, or some such instrument; and, besides that, her husband might often earn a pound in the half-year by his fiddling, which could not be well wanted when the rent was to be paid. 'Well,' said the minister, 'here's a pound for you, and give me the fiddle.' The woman obeyed: she brought down the fiddle and pocketed the pound, and the reverend gentleman forthwith broke the back of the instrument with a violent bang upon the table, and flung the wreck off into the fire. This was dramatic enough; but the fiddle was not yet exterminated. The woman, true to her descent from Eve, had, on this trying occasion, encountered the clerical bear with a touch of the wisdom of the serpent. She had brought down an old obsolete fiddle from the garret, and left the real offender unharmed in his case!"

Professor Blackie affirms that Tyndall, Martineau, Atkinson, and the rest condemn certain notions regarding God and creation of which "no sane theist ever dreamed;" "and evolution," he further says, "is a doctrine to which no Christian theologian can have the slightest objection." But when one thinks of the numerous volumes of outpourings of wrath and anathema which have been hurled at Darwin and his co-workers, one must conclude, if the Professor is right, that sane theists are in a minority, and that a large number of ministers claim the title of Christian theologians who have no right to it. The book is full of smart points and descriptive epithets, and it is delightful reading. We hope it may have an extensive circulation.

E PLURIBUS UNUM.

BY MRS. E. D. CHENEY.

"Many in one," our fathers said,
Many in one, say we;
Of differing creeds, of differing forms,
Love brings us unity.

Let Science scan the open page
Of sky and sea and land,
And tell the secrets written there
By Time's mysterious hand.

Let Art reveal the inner thought
In Nature's forms of grace,
And feel God's presence everywhere,
See everywhere his face.

Let Faith attune the hidden strings
That Science cannot sound,
And Future, Past, and Present bind
In one harmonious sound.

From each, from all, may life outflow,
To each and all flow in;
It needs us all to swell the chords
Of Life's triumphant hymn.

The Unitarian Herald.

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 8, 1878.

FREE TEACHING AND FREE LEARNING IN THEOLOGY.

We wish to call attention to the lectures which are to be delivered in the Memorial Hall, Manchester, in connection with the courses of study prescribed by Manchester New College for its local theological examinations in May next. The object of these lectures was primarily to help candidates in preparing for the examinations, but it was determined at the same time to enlarge their scope so that they should be of practical value to all who attended, whether going in for the examinations or not—the acquisition of sound systematic knowledge being the main thing, of which the examination certificate is only the proof. These lectures are an attempt to give such instruction in theology to our young people—young men and women from sixteen years upwards, who have time for further culture and desire to use these opportunities to the best advantage. In order to give an opportunity for attending more than one course—though, as a rule, one course is quite sufficient at a time—the lectures are given at different times. The course on the Old Testament History and Literature, by the Rev. T. Elford Poynting, begins at three o'clock; that on the Rational Grounds and Truths of Moral Religion, by the Rev. James Black, begins at four o'clock; that on New Testament Literature and Theology, by the Rev. Charles T. Poynting, begins at five o'clock on Wednesday afternoons; while the last course, on the History of the Church in its more Critical Periods, by the Rev. S. Alfred Steinthal, begins at half-past seven o'clock on Tuesday evenings. Each course will include about twelve lectures, and also conversational instruction. As to the fundamental principle of the lectures it is not necessary to say much here. That principle is essentially free teaching and free learning in theology. The main aim is to show those principles by the use of which the learners may find the truth for themselves. Lecturers under such a system will strive to be as impartial and single-minded in teaching the several branches of theological study as if they were giving lessons in geology or chemistry. We recently urged the paramount claims of a systematic study of some part of theology in all real culture, and the subject was handled with admirable fullness and power in the paper read by Professor Upton at the Inaugural Meeting on Wednesday. The comparative smallness of the audience at that meeting, however, once more deeply impresses us with the need of urging the matter with all importunity. How can any one profess even the most elementary acquaintance with the best thoughts of the greatest minds if he knows nothing of that subject which has occupied the best thoughts of the greatest minds at every time? Theology is in every sense the queen of the sciences, and no subject better repays in every way—in training and disciplining the mind, the imagination, the affections and sympathies—faithful conscientious study. And to-day especially, when old traditional theologies are breaking up on every side, how are our young people to distinguish truth from falsehood, how to know what real foundation is left, unless carefully trained in the use of that instrument by which alone truth can be determined? Do not we, with all our vaunted love of truth, need some quickening of our conscience in this respect? How many of our young people are still a prey to that most destructive of superstitious prejudices, that all that is necessary in these matters is a few stock negations and cheap phrases! Truth is not learned in a day. And here if absolute truth be inaccessible, yet the love of truth is the one foundation of the whole of the moral and religious life. No pains, we are assured, will be spared to make these lectures what are wanted by the young people in this respect, and we trust that a due response will be made in reply to these efforts.

THE ECCLESIASTICAL CRISIS IN BERLIN.

WE are glad to learn that the article in the Theological Review, by the Rev. A. CHALMERS, of Cambridge, on "The Ecclesiastical Crisis in Berlin," has attracted very favourable attention in liberal circles in Germany, and called forth high praise from a portion of the religious press. In a critique upon it in the Neue Evang. Gemeinde Bote (which is quoted at length by one of the chief organs of the PROTESTANTEN-VEREIN), it is stated that Mr. CHALMERS' description of the present unfortunate condition of religious affairs in Berlin is "so unsparingly accurate, so painfully correct in every particular, that the German reader, no matter how anxious to question its correctness, would find in it nothing to contradict, to alter, or to soften down." A similar complaint is paid in reference to Mr. CHALMERS' examination of the causes of this unsatisfactory state of things, and to that part of the article which tells the story of the late disputes, while the concluding portion is translated in full and given in both papers. The writer of this critique also finds opportunity for dealing a sharp home-thrust at HERR VON TREITSCHKE, who in a somewhat inaccurate and extremely one-sided article, has lately brought his great influence to bear against the Liberal party. He strongly recommends him to study the account given of the present conflict in the Theological Review, and assures him he will find there more exact information and a better understanding of the whole situation than he at present seems to possess. We are sometimes apt to complain that the literary work done by Unitarian ministers is only read within our own denomination, and it is therefore all the more gratifying to find that Mr. CHALMERS' extensive acquaintance with German thought and modern religious movements has found appreciation amongst our continental allies.

AMERICAN NOTES.

James Freeman Clarke's little book, containing six lectures on Essentials and Non-Essentials in Religion is already proving a word in season to many inquiring minds. From Georgia the Christian Register receives a pleasant testimony of its usefulness; and in one Ohio community it has wrought a wholesome change in the temper of one class of religious people. It is a good book for Unitarians to give away—or keep. We hope to hear soon that it is on sale at the rooms of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, London.

REV. DAVID MACRAE ON HERETICS, HERESY, AND FETISHISM.

SPEAKING at Clackmannan at the annual soiree of the U.P. Church, and referring to the chairman's remark that some people thought him a great heretic, Mr. Macrae said that, if heresy meant revolt from ecclesiasticism and superstition, he was a heretic in good company. As to the present revolt from Westminster orthodoxy, he doubted if he and others in revolt were more heretics than the Church to which they belonged. That would be seen by-and-by. The real heretic was the Westminster Confession. The Westminster dogma of everlasting torment in itself is a subversion of God's character as revealed in Christ, and amounts to a denial of the Gospel. Carried to its issue, it robs God of His goodness, His mercy, and His justice. It robs Him even of His sovereignty, giving sin a power of maintaining itself against Him for ever, and so leaving the devil to all eternity master of the situation. Whether he (Mr. Macrae) was a heretic, was even at variance with the Church in rejecting such dogmas, would by and by be seen. The first necessity, in the present state of things, was that the present policy of evasion and concealment should be reversed, and the Church's real convictions be made known. The second was that her Confession should be squared with her actual faith. The third was that this should be done on grounds that would make her new creed a help and not a hindrance, and allow her henceforth to advance freely, as God shall guide, to the full knowledge, and proclamation, and practice of the truth. He had good hope from the appointment of the U.P. Revision Committee. It was the first victory in a cause that would advance from Church to Church and liberate the theology of Scotland. Theological emancipation was not a thing to be achieved by a stroke. The conflict was only beginning. It was being waged against enormous odds; it would need the help of all who loved the truth more than the traditions of men. People were alarmed at the spread of Romanism, and the prospect of a Roman hierarchy in Scotland. But we were only reaping what we had sown. Making a Pope of the Confession of Faith, frowning upon the exercise of independent judgment, and teaching the people to try men, and even the Bible, at the bar of human tradition, was another form of Popery. It was Romanism in a Geneva gown. We have been playing at a game which Rome plays best. We are involved in a fetishism which is only baptised with Christian names. The Church is made a fetish when attendance there is made a substitute for Christian life. The Lord's Supper is made a fetish when consecrated bread is made to do duty for a consecrated heart. The creed and formula is made a fetish when it is allowed to stand between us and the Bible. The Bible itself is made a fetish when it is allowed to stand between us and God; when the letter is put in place of the Spirit; when the Book is worshipped instead of Him of whom it tells; when the lamp is made an idol of instead of being used as a light to guide our steps. The Bible, the Church, the sacraments, the creeds and catechisms of every name, are to be judged by their fitness to make men good, to bring men into living communion with God, into Christian fellowship with one another, and into harmony with the spiritual laws of the universe.

BISHOP FRASER'S CONCESSIONS.

BISHOP FRASER often gives expression to liberal sentiments in theology, but never, perhaps, has he openly taken so wide a departure from the old hard and fast line of orthodoxy as he did in an address given on Monday last to the Liverpool Sunday School Church of England Institute, at the Liverpool College. Again and again has he pleaded for greater simplicity in our conceptions of Christianity, and again and again has he urged the prejudicial effect on religion of the spirit of dogmatism. But, as far as we are aware, he has not, until Monday last, so boldly uttered opinions widely divergent from that theology which makes Christianity dependent upon the infallibility of the Bible. He was speaking of the difficulties that beset the work of Sunday schools in consequence of the religious doubts of the age. He said that there were many points of doctrine upon which reading, and study, and reflection had made him think, and upon which the outcome of these thoughts was that he knew to-day much less clearly than he thought he knew 25 years ago, and that he should be much less disposed to give a positive opinion to-day on many points than he should a quarter of a century ago. He thought that Protestants had dogmatised just as freely and just as absolutely as any other school of theologians. They had dogmatised far too peremptorily. There was a time when the literal interpretation of the cosmogony of the first chapter of the Book of Genesis was thought to be an undoubted truth, and when the days of the creation were said positively to be days of twenty-four hours. There might be some who held that doctrine still, but it must be admitted that those views had undergone a severe revision, and he supposed that most of them, if they were perfectly honest, would say that at the present moment they were not prepared to give a dogmatic, positive interpretation of the first chapter of the Book of Genesis; but, as Paley told them long ago, it would be the greatest of blunders to make Christianity answer with its life for an interpretation of which no one could pretend to say that it had the stamp of divine truth upon it for every historic incident in the Mosaic record. The vital principles of Christianity were very few—that was a point he was always anxious to insist upon—were very practical, and very simple. To believe in a Father who made us, in a Saviour who redeemed us, and in the Spirit who sanctified us; to recognise that there was a law of God, a very simple one—Christ summed it up in two commandments—by which we were to govern our steps, and that in the effort to rule our way aright we had a help from God, which we had only to seek by the appointed means of prayer and the sacraments, to obtain; and to believe in the resurrection of the dead and the eternal judgment—there they had the sum and substance of Christianity. If they could get people to lay fast hold upon those, and if they could make those truths practically operative upon the minds and hearts and consciences of their scholars, they might put on one side such questions as these: “Were those days of the 1st chapter of Genesis days of 24 hours?” “Was the deluge universal or not?” “Were the patriarchs’ 960 years of 365 days or not?” “Were those last verses of the Gospel of St. Mark the genuine product of the Evangelist or not?” “Was that verse in the 8th chapter of the Acts of the Apostles genuine or not?” “Were those verses of the three heavenly witnesses in the First Epistle of St. John genuine or not?” They did not teach these vital things; and though he admitted that if, as people told them, the Christian faith was a house of cards, no doubt it would be a matter of supreme danger to allow doubts of this kind, even for a moment, to find entrance into people’s minds, that was not the idea of the church of the living God which the Bible presented to us. It was not a house of cards, but a house of solid stone resting on a sure foundation, built up by the faith of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone.

LIVERPOOL DOMESTIC MISSION.

REPORTS addressed to the committee of the Liverpool Domestic Mission Society by their ministers to the poor, the Revs. John Shannon and F. Summers, have just been circulated, previous to the forty-first annual general meeting of the society, which will be held on Friday evening next, the 15th inst., in the Mission Room, Beaufort-street, under the presidency of George Holt, Esq. We take from the reports, which are of a very interesting character, and which testify in many ways to the good work of the mission, a few paragraphs. The Rev. John Shannon says:—

THE CONDITION OF WORKING PEOPLE.

Working people are not as prosperous as they were three or four years ago. I hope there is not much actual destitution; but money is by no means plentiful. As I go from house to house I hear great complaints about the scarcity of work. Shipwrights, boiler makers, riggers, sail makers, and the various classes of unskilled labourers, tell me that employment is very irregular. The slackness of work at the Mersey Steel and Iron Company’s works affects the condition of the people I visit.

Mr. SHANNON then gives some touching instances of how families contrive to exist on very slender earnings, and cites cases relieved out of the Poor’s Purse. As proofs of the honesty of the poor it is worth noting that he advanced £2, 10s. to a respectable widow, with two children, for the purchase of a sewing machine, to enable her to support herself and family. The money has been returned. He lent £3 to another until her two boys returned from long voyages with their wages. With the exception of a few shillings this has been repaid. A small sum lent to a third has been refunded. He advanced £1 to a woman, whose husband is very irregularly employed, on the faith of a legacy which should be forthcoming. The delay of law is proverbial, and as the legacy has not been received, the money has not been repaid. The woman, however, is honest; she has faithfully paid smaller sums lent to her, and he has confidence that this will be returned in due time.

KINDNESS AMONG THE POOR.

Several poor people that I know have charge of children who do not belong to them, and apparently treat them in every respect as their own. Two children who come to our Sunday School are brought up by a woman upon whom they have little claim; and this woman has a large family of her own. One of these children is an orphan; and the other has a father living somewhere, but he takes no interest in his child. I called a few weeks ago at the house of a woman who has ten children, and to my surprise she told me she had brought up, and been a mother to, an eleventh child that did not belong to her. Mrs. K—, who lives in a cellar in R—-street, is a poor but very respectable widow, and maintains herself by keeping a shop for smallwares and sweets. Until lately, I thought a boy about nine or ten years old, who lives with her, was her own child. She has told me that the child belonged to a poor widow who died some years ago; that she was engaged to nurse him as a babe, while his mother was in a situation; that he was left an orphan and without friends; that she could not bear to think of his going to the Workhouse; and she is bringing him up as tenderly, and educating him as carefully, as if he were her own.

THE MORAL CONDITION OF THE POOR.

It is hazardous to venture an opinion respecting the moral condition of my district; I think, however, it is encouraging. My own impression is that the drunkenness is less than last year. I have certainly seen fewer drunken people in broad daylight, and at the doors of public houses. The festive season of Christmas and New Year has passed by, and I have not heard of any scene of riot or disorder. The hard times may partly account for a decrease of inebriety; but I have a strong conviction that a higher moral feeling is growing on this subject among the working classes, and that they are becoming more alive than formerly to the sin and shame of drunkenness. Wherever I go among the homes of the poor, I find members of Bands of Hope, Good Templar Lodges, and other Temperance organisations, and these people must all exercise a salutary influence among their friends and neighbours, not only in setting an example of strict sobriety, but also in creating and sustaining a healthy popular opinion respecting the sin and disgrace of drunken indulgence.

I hope these remarks will not leave the impression that, through long intercourse with the poor, I am becoming insensible to the evil of intemperance. I believe it is the greatest sin and curse of our country, responsible directly or indirectly for nine-tenths of our poverty, and a great part of our crime. I have during the year, conversed with some incorrigible drunkards, who have been advised and warned in vain; but I also know hopeful people who have listened to reason, have forsaken their evil ways, and are giving every promise of becoming respectable members of society. There are some saving money when they can, and attending our week evening meetings and Sunday services, who not long ago were leading thoughtless, spendthrift lives.

WHAT COTTAGE OWNERS MIGHT DO.

I think the owners of cottage property and collectors of rents might do something to raise the moral character of the poor. Since I came to Liverpool I have known courts of six, eight, or more houses (often belonging to two or three separate owners) once respectable, that have deteriorated in value through allowing, in the first instance, one or two drunken families to settle in them. The respectable people gradually moved away, and those courts were abandoned to the dissolute. Care in choosing new tenants might have prevented this unfortunate result. I know a lady who owns a good deal of cottage property, within a few yards of the Mission House. She looks after it, and collects her own rents. She tells me she has little trouble with it, and scarcely any difficulty in getting the rents. When a house is empty and a new tenant applies, she is not satisfied with a written character, or with seeing an old rent book. A tenant will sometimes apply under an assumed name, or show a rent book that does not belong to him. She always seeks a personal interview with his late landlord or collector, or some respectable person to whom he can refer. Owners of small houses, by acting as judiciously as this lady—looking after their property personally, and not trusting too much to collectors; keeping it in good repair and decent condition, inside and outside; and exercising great care, and making minute inquiry respecting the character and respectability of the tenants they choose—would be, I believe, consulting their own best interests, and also conferring a blessing on the community.

SUNDAY SERVICES.—The attendance at the Sunday morning service averages about 80; consisting of a few adults, the scholars of the Sunday school, and the members of the choir, who are, for the most part, older pupils of the school. The attendance at the evening service kept up better last summer than usual. During the autumn months it has been 100 or more. The congregation is endeavouring to organise itself a little more. Monthly collections are made, monthly committee meetings are held, cards of membership are issued, and a list is kept of those who look upon the chapel as their religious home.

SUNDAY SCHOOL.—Mr. Summers has superintended the school during the past year. The average attendance in the morning has been 56; in the afternoon 93; which is an improvement upon last year, more especially in the morning. The Sunday school library contains 365 books; during the year there have been 39 readers, and 1,971 issues of books; and 49 new books have been bought and added to the library. Mr. White has sold in the school 38 copies of Young Days. Mr. Currie, as usual manages the savings bank; and interest is given to the children on all money allowed to remain till the New Year.

PROVIDENT SOCIETY.—The amount collected in the mission district during 1877 has been £1,671, 11s. 11d., against £1,570, 4s. 7d. of the previous year. Provident visiting brings the rich and poor, the intelligent and less instructed, into friendly intercourse, and thus helps, in some measure, to bridge over the chasm which, unhappily, separates the different classes of society.

Mr. Shannon concludes his report by expressing his warmest thanks to the many friends who, during the past year, have cheerfully and regularly given valuable help in the day and Sunday-schools, in the musical training of the young, in provident visiting and collection, in the mother’s meeting, and in the week evening readings and entertainments. Without their aid the work of the mission could not be efficiently sustained, and he feels assured that the consciousness of doing some good is their all-sufficient reward and satisfaction.

The Rev. Frederic Summers supplements Mr. Shannon’s report by giving an account of the principal part of his work in visiting the distressed and dying, and in conducting the various agencies in connection with the mission. Mr. Summers especially mentions the institutions which he has himself set on foot, and given life and aid to, by his zeal and energy, during the last twelve months,—Wednesday evening service, Sunday evening college services (which are held in one of the courts of the lowest street in the district, after the usual Mission-room service), Mothers’ Meeting, Girls’ Sewing Class, Weekly Temperance Meeting, Band of Hope, and Penny Entertainments. In all these ways the Mission is exercising a redeeming influence; and when the friends and supporters of it come together on Friday evening next, they will assuredly feel that, in an effective, though quiet and noiseless way, the institution is “bringing a little human love to mend the world.”

ULSTER UNITARIAN CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

ANNUAL MEETING.

ON Friday evening the second annual meeting and soiree of the members and friends of this association were held in the Ulster Minor Hall—the Rev. William Napier (Clough) presiding. There was a large attendance, and amongst those present were—Rev. C. J. McAlester, Rev. Alexander Gordon, M.A.; Rev. John Jellie, Rev. T. H. M. Scott, M.A.; Rev. J. Pollard, Messrs. Richard Patterson, Nicholas Oakman, Wm. Campbell, James Neill, James McFadden, Alex. Hunter, J. W. McNinch, Dr. McMorde, Messrs. N. A. Campbell, R. J. McMorde, Robert Irvine, John C. Hunter, George Patterson, J. W. Russell, Robert McClelland, jun.; Frederick Little, D. C. Patterson, William Spackman, Joseph McCaul, W. B. Boomer, James McClelland, C. R. Russell, G. Orr, M.D.; John Carmichael, Joseph McNinch, Thomas Ritchie, W. O. Hume, W. H. McFadden, Drummond Porter, Robert Thompson, W. H. Ash, John Dickson, John Nelson, W. Sweeney, jun.; Wm. Taylor, D. Petticrew, W. Boyce, Robt. Rankin, W. P. Jennings, E. J. McErvel, W. H. Quinn, John McCormick, George Sinclair, John Cronne, Wm. Kennedy, J. A. Gray, James Leslie, James Cronne, James Hamilton, D. Lowry, W. Orr, L. Drennan, Geo. Linn, Robert Gray, and a large number of ladies. After tea the meeting was opened with prayer by the Rev. Alexander Gordon.

The CHAIRMAN then said he would rather some person of more experience, weight, and influence than himself had been called upon to preside. Nevertheless, he was happy to take the chair upon the occasion, and bear his humble testimony to the unspeakable worth of the Christian faith which they all professed in common. He deemed it an honour to be allowed to do something even in an humble way to promote the growth and spread the influence of Unitarian Christianity. It was to promote that holy cause, and for the purpose of spreading abroad literature of a healthy Christian tendency that the Ulster Unitarian Christian Association, which held its second annual meeting that night, was formed. He remembered, as he was present at the inaugural meeting that time two years ago, the fewness of those present, as compared with this meeting, giving rise to doubts and misgivings. He was happy to see such a large gathering now before him, and he thought there was no occasion for their doubts and misgivings; their success had amply rebuked their fears. (Applause.) He need not tell them that he entertained the heartiest good wishes for the success of the Ulster Unitarian Christian Association, because he thought the principles which it set forth were the principles of their early fathers, and without casting reflection on any person, on any church or denomination whatever, he believed that Unitarian Christianity, as expounded by their early fathers and set forth in the writings of Dr. Channing, were the nearest and truest approach to the printed Gospel. (Hear, hear.) That Unitarian Christianity was based upon the foundation of the Prophets and Apostles, Jesus Christ Himself being the chief corner-stone. It was the religion calculated to win the affections and satisfy the inclinations and cravings of our reason. It was calculated to rouse them to a sense of their duty, to promote the growth of Christianity, to foster love and truth, and therefore he would do all that he could that it might be spread abroad. He did not mean to say that it was the only form of Christianity that was admirable, because he thought all forms were calculated to do good. It was their aim to set forth what they believed to be gospel truth, not in any offensive manner, but in love and affection. He hoped no publication would come from their depository which would wound the susceptibilities of any one. (Hear, hear.) Perhaps no church in proportion to its members could show a larger number of men of power and genius, men who have done great work, who were ornaments to their species, and a benefit to mankind. (Hear, hear.) They knew the cause of the origin of this society. It was that they might not have any complicity with the spreading abroad of views which were justly felt to impugn the divine origin of Christianity. While they gave their opponents at that time credit for sincerity, they must take credit to themselves, for they intended to hold aloft the banner of the Lord Jesus Christ, and through good and evil report they would so. (Applause.) They did well in separating from the old society. (Hear, hear.) Since the separation the course of that society had developed itself so as to more than realise their fears. (Hear, hear.) And not only that, but objectionable literature, against which they protested, had been circulated in all its fulness, and he had it on reliable authority that large numbers of publications ignoring the existence of religion, and setting it forth as a hindrance to civilisation, had been disseminated.* That was going a step too far, and he thought it bad enough to disseminate works impugning the Divine origin of Christianity. It was for the Ulster Unitarian Christian Association to follow the course they had shaped for themselves through good and evil report. Let them stand fast in their Unitarian faith, and let them not be led away by spurious liberalism. (Applause.)

The Rev. C. J. McALESTER then read the annual report, from which the following is an extract:—

"Your committee have much pleasure in stating that the several local treasurers have, in the great majority of cases, devoted themselves actively and successfully to the work of gathering in contributions in aid of the association's funds, as the list of subscriptions to be appended to this report will clearly show. Last year the annual subscriptions amounted to £93. 9s. 6d., contributed by 354 individuals. In the year just closed the annual subscribers amounted to £150. 7s. 0d., contributed by 433 individuals. This enumeration does not include, for either year, life members and other donors who did not enter their names in the list of annual subscriptions. Of these there were, in 1876, 36, as appears from the appendix to the printed report. This year, as was to have been expected, the number of such contributors was much smaller; but still the constituency of the association has been considerably enlarged, a circumstance which must be highly gratifying to all persons who approve of the great principles for the promotion of which it was established. The treasurer's statement of accounts will show that the largest contribution to our funds made during the past year was sent, unsolicited and unexpected, by a lady resident in the south of England.—The sale of books and tracts at the depository amounted during the year to the sum of £147. 14s. 6d. This may perhaps appear to some persons an inadequate result for all the care that has been devoted to the procurement and publication of works calculated to promote the objects of the association; nor do the committee conceal that they would have had much pleasure in reporting sales to ten times or twenty times that amount. But it is to be observed that the whole of the sum above specified represents literature, properly so called, the privilege of selling stationary on her own account being part of our agent's well-earned remuneration, by our agreement with her, as reported to the last annual meeting. Still further, it is to be noted that all the works on sale at our establishment are offered at or under the first cost; and lastly, sales for money alone are taken into account. Large quantities of various publications have been given gratis at the depository, in pursuance of instructions given to your agents to do so under proper limitations, and various grants have been made to members of the Association and others for gratuitous distribution. The committee have to express their regret that Mr. Richard Patterson has been obliged by the pressure of other business to retire from the office of treasurer to the Association. They are grateful to him for his valuable services while he held office."

Rev. T. H. M. SCOTT (Dunmurry) said he felt gratified at being present that evening, and it was with pleasure that he moved the adoption of the excellent report just read. He shared entirely in the regret expressed by the Rev. Mr. McAlester at the absence of one from amongst them that evening who, if present, would be accorded a warm and hearty greeting. He alluded to the Rev. John Scott Porter—(applause)—whose name had only to be mentioned in any Unitarian Christian Society to elicit the warmest approval, and whose memory would be endeared to Unitarians as long as the Unitarian name existed. They could now only hope that, with God's blessing, he would be soon in their midst again, restored to perfect health. (Applause.) The speaker then entered into an elaborate review of the work done by the society, and concluded by wishing it a prosperous future.

Rev. JOHN JELLIE seconded the resolution, and said that although from a theological standpoint, perhaps, he belonged to the more liberal section of Unitarian Christians, he sympathised most heartily with the object of the society. (Applause.)

Rev. C. J. McALESTER then delivered an eloquent address on "Unitarian Christianity." He concluded by moving the following resolution:—"That Unitarian Christianity, including as its two leading principles a belief in the sole deity of God our Father, and in the divine mission and authority of the Lord Jesus Christ, commends itself to our love and veneration as being in accordance with the best feelings of the human heart, and perfectly fitted to promote the moral and spiritual good of all who embrace it."

Mr. JOHN NELSON seconded the motion, which was passed.

The Rev. ALEXANDER GORDON moved—"That it is especially incumbent on all who desire to promote the cause of true religion to educate the young in Christian knowledge; and we recommend the committee for the ensuing year to use all the means in their power to increase and extend the efficiency of the Sunday-schools." In the course of his observations, the Rev. A. Gordon alluded at some length to the benefits arising from Sunday-school teaching to the young, and impressed upon his hearers the necessity for instilling into the minds of children at an early age sound Unitarian principles.

Mr. WILLIAM SPACKMAN seconded the resolution, which was passed.

The following resolution was adopted with acclamation:—"That we desire to convey to our venerable and valued friend, the Rev. John Scott Porter, our sympathy with him in his recent illness, our gratification that he is in a great measure recovered, and our earnest hope that he may be spared for years to come to labour in the cause of Christian truth and freedom, with which his name has been so long and so honourably associated."

The office-bearers were re-elected, and a vote of thanks to the chairman concluded the proceedings.

FREE TEACHING AND FREE LEARNING IN THEOLOGY.

On Wednesday evening, in the Memorial Hall, Manchester, Professor Upton, B.A., delivered the inaugural lecture of a course to be given there during the ensuing session. The attendance was not large; among those present we noticed the Revs. T. E. Poynting, James Black, M.A.; Charles T. Poynting, B.A.; J. B. Lloyd, James Harrop, T. Lloyd Jones, Wm. Harrison; Messrs. James Bennett, S. B. Worthington, W. H. Herford, B.A., Harry Rawson, John Thomas, and others.

In the absence of the Rev. Wm. Gaskell, M.A., R. D. DARBISHIRE, Esq., presided, and opened the proceedings by saying that those who had seen the advertisement convening that meeting would have learnt something of the nature of the movement which they had taken in hand. They were of opinion that no life is sufficient that did not take in a fair cultivation of man's whole nature, and embrace the religious questions which affect his relation to God, to this life and to the next. (Hear, hear.) At present there is too much inclination among men to seek learning for its immediate fruit through worldly advantage—tempting them to live a life for to-day. There is a great want of the culture of the soul and the spirit, so that men might rear their souls not only for to-day but for the time to come. (Hear, hear.) They were anxious to apply the same methods that they had learned to apply in scientific culture—to rely upon honest research and a frank declaration of results—and to have faith in the ultimate issues that might arise from their abiding by such conditions. (Hear, hear.)

Professor UPTON then delivered his lecture, changing the title of it from "The distinctive character and method of theological study" to that of "The demand in the present day for the introduction of theological information and study into general culture," and was frequently applauded during the delivery. He said it would be his aim to show that not only was the study of theology and truth always desirable, but that there were special reasons in the present day why it should receive general and careful attention. He trusted the time was not far removed when the conviction which inspired those gentlemen who had taken in hand theological investigations in that place would so spread and deepen in the minds of thoughtful men all over the country, that, instead of indifference being shown to these non-academic lectures, the thorough study of theology would be duly recognised in all their great educational institutions. He might be told that there were good and cogent reasons why theological studies should be excluded from the curriculum of their colleges. Of those who opposed the introduction of theology into this curriculum there were some who maintained that theology was based not on facts but fancies, and that to establish classes for such investigations in University College, London, or Owens College, would be as if they were to appoint a professor of alchemy or astrology. He first dealt with the question in its relation to scientific knowledge, and showed that from that sphere of inquiry theological considerations and perceptions could not be wholly excluded. It was impossible for thoughtful students of science to escape from the necessity of importing theological ideas into scientific conceptions. Students of science could not eliminate the influence of cause and force from physical investigation, and cause and force were philosophical and theological ideas which derived life and significance from the conception of volitional causation. The question of the day was whether they should have science studied in conjunction with thorough theological training, or in conjunction with such crude and negative ideas concerning the nature of the Eternal as might be expected when savants, in sensational lectures, endeavoured to make a wreck of opinions which had been the bread of life to mankind for ages. What was true of science was also true of history and morals, and if not in their time, at all events before many generations had passed, correct views of theology would prevail, and there would be no wish to exclude theology from the halls of culture, but, on the contrary, an eager desire to give it an honoured place.

We hope to present our readers with a full report of the lecture on a future occasion.

At the close Mr. W. H. HERFORD moved a sincere and earnest vote of thanks to Professor Upton for his lecture, and said he wished that a greater number had heard it, and expressed a hope that they might have the pleasure of seeing the address in a visible form, so that they might refresh and perfect the impression which it had made upon them. (Hear, hear.)

Mr. S. B. WORTHINGTON said he had great pleasure in seconding the motion, and expressed his belief that theology was as real a science and as much worthy of scientific treatment as any other matter of study. (Hear, hear.)

Mr. JOHN THOMAS said he should like to see the address in print; after which the motion was put and carried with applause.

Professor UPTON briefly replied, and the meeting terminated.

MIDDLESBOROUGH: CHRIST CHURCH.

On Monday evening, the 28th ult., the members of the above church assembled to welcome the Rev. W. L. Spencer to the pastorate of their church. The chair was occupied by Mr. T. F. WARD, who reviewed the relation of the church to science, and showed that of all the churches the Unitarian had the least to fear from scientific discoveries. Indeed they were favourable to all discoveries of truth in all departments of nature, and he was of opinion that these were true revelations of the wisdom and goodness of the Infinite God, who was the author of nature. He hoped the welcoming they were having that night would have a strengthening influence upon their numbers.

Mr. C. BELL said he had a peculiar pleasure in rising to give their new minister a hearty welcome, but would ask the question why welcome him to their town, and on what grounds did they take this particular step? They did not expect impossibilities from their brother, who would have a considerable number of difficulties even in the church to contend with. They expected their minister to build his Church week after week, month after month, year after year, to make their religion felt among them and others. "First the blade, and then the ear, and then the full corn." He would say:—

First diligently concoct your plan,
Then resolutely persevere.
As yet you know not half your skill:
Unnumber'd difficulties fly
Before a bold determin'd will.

They did not expect uniformity of opinion, but they expected their minister to think and lay before them facts that they might see the way of truth. They would, at any rate, give him freedom of thought, and he was certain they had sufficient confidence in him that he meant to do right, and would help them to use to the utmost their intellectual and moral abilities. They left him free, but asked him to think out the great problems of the age, and lay them before his congregation, in order that his hearers might have light and life more abundantly. They wanted to get rid of the many foibles and narrowings to which they were subject. In conclusion he urged upon them individually that the success of their new minister depended in a great measure upon themselves, and they ought to help and encourage him by attending as regularly as they could at church, and bringing as many as they could with them; by bringing outside poor lost children to the Sabbath school, and by helping that institution both by their purse and individual effort in teaching. He then shook hands with the Rev. W. L. Spencer, and said, "In the name of this church, allow me to welcome you here as our minister for the purpose of helping us forward in the great work we have before us."

The Rev. W. ELLIOTT, Stockton, had pleasure in extending to their new minister a hearty welcome on behalf of the district which was included in that magical circle called the Northumberland and Durham District Mission Association. He welcomed Mr. Spencer as a worker, and he would find an abundant scope for his powers in a town like Middlesborough, for in addition to the vice and immorality which existed in their midst, he would find it a happy thing to try and build up those connected with his church and Sunday-school—the weak, the sorrowful, the young, the aged, the sinful, each should come in for a share of his labours. The Gospel of Jesus Christ was the great instrument and power with which he would be able to work, but he was open to receive light and aid from all quarters—from science, from experience, and the revelations of God's wisdom and goodness in the great works of nature. He urged upon all present to cordially co-operate with their newly-appointed minister, and hoped the blessing of God, our Heavenly Father, would rest upon him and his work.

Mr. W. L. FALLOWS cordially supported all that had been advanced, and hoped that there would be no half-heartedness, but a thoroughly earnest spirit of love and hearty work.

The Rev. W. L. SPENCER rose to respond. He saw that the work which had been indicated was indeed arduous, and he greatly doubted his power to accomplish it, but he would promise them this, that he would do his best, and the best could do no more. He would use his utmost endeavours to organise an earnest, Christ-like, and God-like church, and he claimed their sympathy and co-operation, or all would be in vain. He would endeavour to promote true and just conceptions of the Bible, and the position it ought to occupy. We had no right to treat it as a book designed to teach the science of the present day, but to gather from it, and especially from the teachings and life of Christ, those great moral and religious lessons and impulses which it is so well calculated to give. It was true he would be placed in antagonism to some of the popular theology of the day, but he trusted he would not be a mere puller down and a rooter up, but a planter and a builder up; a developer of the divine life which ought to animate all men and women. He contended that no church should be formed merely to give men correct theological views, but to stimulate pure religion, to influence men to think good thoughts, to feel good feelings, to live good lives; in short to love God, to love man, to love goodness, and exhibit them in practical everyday life. He hoped by their combined efforts in the church and in the Sunday school to build up a cause so that they might have a church of the future worthy of their noblest efforts.

*We give the report above as it appears in the columns of two Belfast contemporaries, but we are reluctant to believe that the chairman's intention was to assert upon reliable authority that publications setting forth "religion as a hindrance to civilisation" were disseminated from the depository of the older society in Donegal-street.—Eds. U. H.

The Rev. W. J. TAYLOR, South Shields, had come to welcome Mr. Spencer, and as he had been a fellow student in the Home Mission Board, he probably was better acquainted with him than any one there.

Mr. HAMMOND moved and Mr. EADON seconded, in neat and telling speeches, a vote of thanks to the visitors from a distance.

During the evening Mr. Hall, Miss Marshall, and the Misses Mc'Nay contributed greatly to the enjoyment of the meeting by their songs and music. The CHAIRMAN moved from the chair a vote of thanks to the singers, and Miss Maria Fallows, who presided at the pianoforte. After the meeting, tea and coffee were handed round, and the proceedings were of a conversational character. A very successful and enjoyable meeting was thus terminated.

NEWS OF OUR CHURCHES.

NOTICE.—Our friends would oblige if they would kindly send their news paragraphs so as to arrive never later than Wednesday morning, otherwise we are compelled to cut them down.

AN APPEAL.—A correspondent writes: Would you kindly allow me to draw attention to the advertisement of the Rev. M.A., in your columns; and to ask whether any person interested in Free Christian Work among the poor in Bristol, could lend a room or building which could be fitted up aesthetically, and in which, with the attractions of good music, a religious service might be held? The advertiser would not, however, wish to identify himself, in name, with any special sect: his object being simply to institute a worship, with spiritual teaching, to meet the requirements of human nature, unfettered by the repetition of a creed.

ACCRINGTON.—On Saturday last, the 2nd inst., the District Sunday School Association held its second conference for the session 1877-8. After tea the president (Mr. Peter Bibby) occupied the chair, and opened the proceedings with a hymn. After a few introductory remarks, he called upon Mr. J. E. Benson, of Manchester, to read a paper on "How to make the Sunday School successful." The essayist argued that, if we are to do any good in the school, we must show love and kindness to our scholars, pay visits to their homes, and strive to win their affections. He also urged the introduction of good and lively singing, the selection of words and tunes adapted to the children; and, to make the school a success, the establishment of mutual improvement societies, bands of hope, and schoolrooms clean and neatly decorated. A discussion followed, in which the Revs. H. S. Solly, M.A., E. W. Hopkinson, W. Mathews, Messrs. Crabtree, Halstead, Mackie, Anderton, and Lancaster took part. A reply from Mr. Benson, and a vote of thanks to him for his paper, and one to the president, brought the proceedings to a close.

BIRMINGHAM: LAWRENCE-STREET SUNDAY-SCHOOLS.—It is worth recording that seven of the scholars (four girls and three boys) connected with the above schools were presented, at the close of the morning service on Sunday last, with bronze medals, for their attendance and conduct at school. Three of them had made a perfect attendance for five consecutive years. It is the custom at the close of each Sunday-school year to present to each scholar who has made a perfect attendance, and who has not received a bad mark, a medal made of white metal, as an extra prize. No excuse is taken for any absence or lateness, no matter what the cause. Dr. Russell, president of the mission, presented the medals, and in a few well-chosen words said that it gave him great pleasure to praise their efforts, because they had such determination and perseverance: for he knew that such results could not be obtained without great determination. Punctuality, perseverance, and steadiness of character were great qualities to possess, and would go a great way to make them successful in life, and help to fit them for the life hereafter. Such qualities would make them valuable members of society. They would find that their influence would make their homes happier, it would extend to their workshops and act upon those around them. Mr. Moore, of Pitsford, who has given the white medals for so many years past, kindly gave them on this occasion.

BIRMINGHAM: OLD MEETING HOUSE.—The annual meeting of the congregation was held on Tuesday, the 29th January. Arrangements were made for holding the business meeting in the chapel, and a social gathering afterwards in the Lecture Room. The experiment was successful, the attendance at the earlier meeting being larger than has been usual on such occasions, the numbers being considerably increased when the adjournment to the Lecture Room took place. The Senior Warden, Mr. Thomas Martineau, occupied the chair. Letters of apology for absence were read from Mr. W. S. Harding, Rev. J. Alsop, and Mr. Spilsbury Putler. A report was presented from the Wardens and Vestry Committee, and a statement of accounts by the Treasurer. Reports were also presented from the Sunday-school Committee, the Ladies' Benevolent Society, and the Sewing Society, and adopted unanimously. Mr. Townly was elected Warden, and Mr. J. A. Jones re-elected Treasurer, and thanks were voted to the retiring officers. In the course of the speeches that were delivered by the Chairman, Mr. Prime, Mr. Councillor C. H. Edwards, Mr. Councillor Whitfield, Mr. Charles Harding, and others, reference was made to the Congregational work of the past year, and especially to the extension of the Minister's Fund. The social meeting passed off very pleasantly. An excellent tea was provided, and some admirable vocal and instrumental pieces were given by several friends, and by Mr. Bond and members of the choir. In the course of the evening, Mr. Alderman Collings, in a humorous and telling speech, moved, and Mr. Councillor Payton seconded, a resolution, expressive of the continued confidence and esteem with which Mr. Clarke is regarded by the congregation. In reply, Mr. Clarke reminded his hearers that it was more than twenty-five years since he became minister of the Old Meeting, and sketched the changes that had occurred during that period,—the erection of the vast railway station close at hand, and of the "acres of shops and warehouses" around, which had led to the residences of the congregation being more widely dispersed, and to the consequent difficulty in getting them together at evening meetings,—the loss of old friends by death,—and the accession of new,—and said, that his cordial intercourse with the members had throughout rendered his life "a continued sunshine and happiness." Proceeding to inquire "What is our work?" he sketched the progress of the individual man, beginning life helpless and ignorant, but destined to growth,—in infancy, delighting in tales of fairyland,—in boyhood, in histories of manly adventure,—in more advanced youth, in the Poetry of Love,—and showed how unreasonable it would be for man at any one time, to bind his future within the limits of his present thought. Applying this illustration to the history of Religion, he said the Founders of our Church had said such restriction should not exist with our community—they would form their own conclusions and serve them honestly in their day, but leave nothing to bind the opinions of the future. He concluded a powerful address by warmly thanking his congregation for their sympathy and support.

CWMBAE, ABERDARE.—The Rev. E. W. Lloyd, having devoted nearly the whole of his time during the last three weeks to the distribution of relief to the distressed poor, was unable to prepare for his Sunday work, and consequently his friend, the Rev. R. J. Jones, Myrtle Cottage, kindly conducted the service on Sunday evening last.

HUDDERSFIELD.—The fortnightly entertainment, held at the Mechanics' Institution on Saturday last, was one of the most successful of the season. The large room was densely crowded, and hundreds who sought admission were unable to obtain it. Joseph Lowenthal, Esq., occupied the chair. The concert was given by the Fitzwilliam-street Philharmonic Society. This band of about forty amateur instrumentalists have, with their able and much-esteemed conductor, the Rev. J. Thomas, B.A., done much and varied service in connection with the institution. They always attract a large assembly; and, although their programme on every occasion contains a portion of classical music, no performances are more thoroughly enjoyed by the people who attend these meetings, and certainly none are more elevating. Before closing the proceedings a vote of thanks to the performers for their very kind and excellent services was moved by Mr. Ruddock, seconded by Mr. Sugden, and carried with loud acclamation.—The Chairman conveyed the resolution to the performers in very appropriate terms, when the Rev. J. Thomas replied. He said he was a musician, and there was a moral to be drawn from the performance of an orchestra like this. First of all every member of this orchestra had to learn his instrument by steady practice. It was practice that made perfect in all arts. If they thought otherwise let them take up a fiddle and try. Now, the conduct of life was art, that is doing, and doing right. Therefore to approach perfection in the conduct of life they must constantly practise doing right in small things and in great, in the easy matters first, in the hard ones next, in all the affairs of life at home and abroad. Secondly, the practice of an instrument obliged them to study the theory underlying the practice. He who was quite unacquainted with the corresponding theory must necessarily make mistakes. Wrong methods led to wrong practice, and wrong practice did not bring out right playing. Here, again, there was resemblance with life; for all anxious to live rightly must learn the laws of life, its theory, its method. Thirdly and lastly, he would point to the fact that every member of the orchestra, however well he could play his individual instrument, was obliged, nevertheless, to play it in harmony with the rest, and subordinately to the whole effect desired. For that purpose the members were disciplined to submit to a presiding mind, that directed the energies of each, and combined and controlled all for the musical result. So was it in life. Whatever abilities anyone might have, to exercise them for himself solely would lead to a jarring effect, but to subordinate them to the great mind that presided in each one's soul, and directed us to live for one another and the welfare of society as a whole, would produce harmony.

LEICESTER.—The annual meeting of the Great Meeting congregation was held on Wednesday evening, Jan. 30, in the schoolroom. After tea the chair was taken by the minister, the Rev. J. Page Hopps, who congratulated the meeting on a year of perfect peace, but of peace without the slightest sign of stagnation. He thanked them for enabling him to feel, as he did, the greatest possible satisfaction in his work. In proceeding to justify their somewhat isolated position, he argued that the tendency of thought and feeling all over the world was in their direction. In America, the great revival had shown nothing more clearly than the harmony there was between the old theology and the mind of the 19th century. In Italy, a young and gallant nation was gradually overpowering the priest and the church. In Germany the influence of the secular arm was almost too palpable and potent. In France, the Republic was giving an answer to the priest. At home, in Scotland and in England, the whole tendency of things was away from the views of God, the Bible, man, and the future life, against which they were making a stand. The ideas of the age on these great subjects were all surely tending their way; and this was their justification in still continuing to occupy their old position. Much, however, remained to be done. They had to combat sacerdotalism on the one hand and credulism on the other. They had to testify against the dogmas of natural depravity and endless punishment. The old theology began with us by saying that we were born in sin and shapen in iniquity; and it ended with us by dismissing us to possible endless torture. Against both these dogmas they contended. The little child they welcomed as the pure gift of God; the man they dismissed from earth with no other thought than that the God who brought him here would provide for him hereafter. In place of these two pernicious dogmas they put two great trusts, a trust in God's infinite perfections, and a trust in man's infinite or indefinite improvableity. The reports for the year showed that several improvements had been carried out in connection with the chapel and its institutions, and that a balance of over £200 remained in the treasurer's hands, after paying all expenses. The meeting was addressed by Ald. Kempson, Messrs. E. Clephan, A. Paget, E. F. Cooper, A. Else, George Hall, and others, on various resolutions connected with the Congregational report, and a petition to Parliament against the war vote.

LIVERPOOL: HOPE-STREET.—We understand that Mr. J. C. Perry, B.A., who is now in his final term at Manchester New College, has received and accepted a cordial invitation to the pastorate, which has been vacant since the retirement of the Rev. E. M. Geldart, M.A., at the close of 1876. Mr. Perry is expected to enter upon the pulpit on the last Sunday in September.

LIVERPOOL: RENSLOW-STREET.—The Rev. Charles Beard has recently concluded a course of Sunday evening lectures on "The Grounds and Evidences of Religious Belief, with special reference to Modern Scientific and Philosophical Thought." The lectures have attracted large congregations, the church having been on each Sunday evening throughout the course well filled. After a short interval Mr. Beard began on Sunday evening last a course entitled "Restatements of Christian Doctrine." The subject of the first address was "God." Next Sunday evening the topic will be "Man," and the succeeding themes will be "Christ" and "The Bible." On Sunday morning next Mr. Beard will begin a series of Sermons on "The Relation of the Fine Arts to Human Life and Society." On Monday evenings Mr. Beard is now engaged in giving a course of lectures at the schoolroom, Mount Pleasant, in connection with the Manchester New College Local Theological Examinations, on "The Political, Moral, and Religious Condition of the Roman Empire in the First Century."

LIVERPOOL: KIRKDALE.—The first of a course of four lectures, expository of Unitarian views of religion, was delivered on Tuesday evening, in the Skelmersdale Masonic Hall, Westminster Road, Kirkdale, Liverpool, by the Rev. S. Fletcher Williams, minister of the Hamilton Road Free Church, Everton. The subject of the lecture was "What is Christianity? What Churches teach and what Christ teaches." There was an attendance of 78, which included a number of ladies. The lecture was listened to with great attention, and was brought to a close, without any discussion, by singing the hymn, "Come, kingdom of our God," in which everyone heartily joined. A quantity of Unitarian literature was given away at the close of the lecture, and there was an eager desire to obtain it.

LEEDS: HUNSLLET.—On Monday week, the 28th of January, the annual congregational tea party was held, and was well attended. The main features of the report for the past year were satisfactory. The attendance at the services and at the Sunday school had been maintained in numbers slightly above the average of the preceding year, and the various activities had kept their place. A considerable improvement in the offertory was noted, and the financial position of the church was rather better than in the preceding year. The delays in the erection of the additional class rooms had been at last overcome, and the building was now nearly completed. Resolutions adopting the report, nominating the new committee, and thanking their predecessors, were moved and adopted. Mr. Jos. Lupton, J.P., spoke in most encouraging tones. Addresses were also delivered by the Rev. Charles Hargrove, M.A., of Mill Hill, who spoke on making the Church the centre of our sympathies and labours; by the Rev. Robert Wilkinson, of Holbeck, who took as his topic the influence of religious opinions upon life; and the minister, Rev. Dendy Agate, who referred to the reasons which had induced him to accept the invitation to the pastorate at Scarborough, and expressed the sorrow which he felt at the prospect of parting from his Hunsllet friends. During the evening a glee and two anthems were sung by the church choir, and it was felt that a very pleasant time had been passed.

MIDDLETON.—On Sunday last the teachers and scholars contributed £1.1s.1d. to the relief fund for the suffering children in South Wales. In the evening of the same day a petition to Parliament in favour of peace—moved by Mr. T. B. Wood, J.P., seconded by Mr. Samuel Lawton—was unanimously adopted by the congregation, and has been forwarded to Mr. R. N. Philips, M.P., for presentation.

MILES PLATTING.—The fifth annual presentation of prizes to the members of the publication department took place on Monday evening, January 28, when about 200 persons were in attendance. Mr. Peter Turner, president of the society, occupied the chair. A miscellaneous programme of glees, recitations, and a dialogue ("The Wife's Mistake") having been gone through by the members, the Rev. J. T. Marriott, in fitting terms, distributed the prizes to the eight canvassers (members) who had sold in the neighbourhood during 1877 4,386 copies of various temperance works, entire profit of which, £7, was invested in a bookcase, chifforier, books, and other useful articles. A vote of thanks was accorded to Mr. Marriott, and the meeting closed with singing and prayer.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE.—The biennial sale of work, resulting from the meetings of the Ladies' Society in connection with the Church of the Divine Unity, has recently taken place, and has been more successful than on any previous occasion, the sum realised being £123.

PECKHAM: EAST SURREY GROVE.—The annual New Year's festival of the above was held on Wednesday and Thursday, 30th and 31st ult., when the most successful meetings, both as regards numbers and arrangements, ever held in the building, were celebrated. It was found impossible to accommodate the whole of the scholars at one meeting, and, as in past years, a large number of the scholars' parents were unable to obtain admission, it was deemed advisable to extend it to two evenings. On Wednesday 100 scholars and about 80 friends sat down to tea, and that number was considerably augmented later in the evening. The appearance of the building elicited much praise—the decorations being very neat and tasteful—especially four new and handsome mottoes—the work and gift of a member of the congregation. At the meeting which followed under the presidency of the Rev. John Taylor, addresses were delivered by Rev. John Marten, Messrs. Geo. Smith, of Coalville (The Children's Friend), who gave a deeply interesting account of his labours; A. J. Marchant (superintendent); and Mr. Toye, of Stepney Sunday School. A very interesting and enjoyable entertainment followed, in which the following friends assisted:—Vocalists, the Misses Rowe, Rose, Griffin, and Clifford; Master Wood, Mr. Swales, and Mrs. F. Gascoigne Chambers gave "The Pyramid of Bayonets," by J. Brunt, F.S.A., and by desire, "Nothing to wear," and "The Maniac." On the following evening between 80 and 90 of the younger scholars partook of tea, and were afterwards entertained with a magic lantern entertainment.

STAND.—On Saturday last, a very successful entertainment was given on behalf of the distressed people in South Wales. It consisted of readings, recitations, songs, a dialogue, and a drama. The proceeds, being made up to £5, have been sent to the Rev. R. J. Jones, M.A., of Aberdare, for distribution.

SHEFFIELD: SPARKS FROM THE REV. MR. FAY'S ANVIL. The Rev. Eli Fay, the minister of the Upper Chapel, Norfolk-street, Sheffield, has just closed a very successful course of Sunday evening lectures. All classes have been well represented in his great congregations, but particularly one which the rev. gentleman once characterized as "very respectable sinners." Mr. Fay evidently makes it a point to make points, as the following, given by the Sheffield Telegraph, among others of a similar character in his last lecture, plainly show:—

"When a daughter of luxury and refinement goes to the cottage of the poor to smooth the pillow of the suffering, give bread to the famishing, or read to the dying the words which have given hope, strength, and courage to millions of the departing, tenfold more than if in a fashionable church she opened, with bejewelled fingers, her gold-clasped Bible, and merely read of the scene on Calvary, she illustrates the doctrine of Christ crucified. When he who has no idea that he is good enough to talk about God and religion, but who, in his own manly though unpolished style, advises a friend not to give up the battle of life, not to become discouraged and think that he is really good for nothing, but to arise and renew the struggle, and be a man, and do the right, and as the truest God-speed under the circumstances, puts in his hand a little of the needful, he preaches Christ crucified. The modern self-styled practical man has no idea that a pot of flowers in the home, a kiss on a baby's cheek, a great hope, a new idea, a true and holy love, a noble purpose, a profound reverence, a keen sense of justice between man and man—for want of which capital and labour are in a fearful quarrel, and the industries of all England are alarmingly embarrassed—is quite as practical as more work, better wages, or the necessities of life at reduced prices—possibly, and indeed usually, much more practical."

UNIVERSITY OF LONDON.—We have great pleasure in announcing that Mr. Philemon Moore, late of the H.M.B. and Owens College, has passed the matriculation examination of University College, London, and that his name appears in the first division. Mr. Moore is now pursuing his studies in connection with M.N.C.

CORRESPONDENCE.

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Letters, articles of intelligence, &c., should be addressed to the Unitarian Herald Office, New Cannon Chambers, 55, Market street, and not to the private addresses of the Editors. No anonymous letters inserted: the writer of every letter must append his name for publication. No letter should be more than half a column.

STUDENT.—Please observe our present address. No letter addressed to 74, Market-street from you is to hand, and there is no address on your present letter for a return note.

AUTHORITY IN SCIENCE AND THEOLOGY.

To the Editors.—I have been, with yourselves, intensely interested in the late outbreaks of what is called "Heresy" in the self-styled "Orthodox" churches, and in the articles of Sir James Stopheus and of Mr. Gladstone on "Authority." It seems to me, however, that neither the ultimate truth nor the ultimate fallacy has been touched, and that the practical lesson has yet to be drawn. Will you allow me to try to explain my point, and perhaps aid me to a solution? In your own article on "Heresy" you say, "Lord Shaftesbury's affirmation will carry weight, where his word is powerful, as long as its basis is not examined." But may not this be asserted of even scientific experts, whose are not infallible? Tyndall and Bastian are great authorities, but they contradict each other. How then can either of them be part of the solid Temple of Science? We need here a discrimination which has not been supplied. That part of the upgrown world that cannot, or will not think, seem to me to belong to the class of children who needs must accept what they cannot prove, for want of thinking faculty or moral will; and, therefore, their beliefs, or opinions, are no part of the great body of Thought, and to appeal to them on the ground of authority is a blunder in reasoning, and cannot be rightly called "evidence." To examine is to look and compare—not to hear and accept—and hence Science has to do only with people who think, and never with those who merely "believe." You assert that "Science is subject to the same qualification (as Theology). The conclusions of Science* have been arrived at by slow degrees, and, in the process, opinions and deductions have had to be modified again and again, and even reversed." This seems to me to make Truth dependent upon the perception of it, and at the same time to deny the difference between valid and illicit logical processes. Now Science is an Objective thing, and by its very definition comprehends only what is ascertained as true. It is ascertained by Reason, and reason has its well-known laws, which no more admit of exception, qualification, or reversal than arithmetic or algebra. A proof in logic is always a proof, never a half or a quarter of one. If a conclusion is warranted by the logical premises, it can never be reversed, for that is equivalent to saying it is not "proved"—and therefore ought not to be called "science," or put into a body of ascertained truth. No one allows such loose proceedings in chemistry—why in theology or geology? Should we not, then, learn from this the practical lesson, that the first part of all true and high education is to be able to reason correctly; which means that we should know what the laws and conditions of induction and inference are, and, knowing them, that we should make no hasty or invalid conclusions; that we should distinguish between the certain and the merely possible or probable; that we should modestly, because truly, fall into the category to which we rightly belong—either that of thinking men or that of virtual children, who pin their faith on others? Acting thus, social collisions would be avoided, and social life simplified. Each person could take his proper place, according to his taste, in the School of the Scientific or the Nursery of the Scientific.—Yours truly,

F. R. LEES.

SECULARISM AND UNITARIANISM.

To the Editors.—On reading the East Cheshire Union report in your last week's issue, I find a speech delivered by the Rev. H. Ierson, saying that he had been asked whether a Secularist could join the British and Foreign Association, and be encouraged to speak on its platform with the avowed object of repudiating all Christianity whatever. I think it must have been a mistake on the part of the Secularist (he must have been an Atheist) or on that of the Rev. Mr. Ierson. I send you a card of the proposed rules of the British Secular Mission, which are going to be passed at Bradford if possible next Easter, and if the fifth rule is carried, it is possible that a better feeling may be made to exist between the genuine Secularist and the Unitarian. This rule reads:—"5. That Secularism be taken generally in the sense of seeking to promote the highest discernible good of mankind, from considerations which pertain to this life alone. Secularism intrinsically does not contend against the existence of Deity, but against degrading conceptions thereof; not against the inspiration of Scripture, but against the binding force of what is inapplicable to human welfare; not against a future existence, but against that idea of it which excludes the hope of improvement and honestly-earned happiness." Secularism, as laid down by G. J. Holyoake, who was the founder in the sense of establishing Secularism, I have thought sufficient for man's wants and aspirations; but after hearing the Rev. J. Page Hopps on his visit to our town, and reading his able little monthly, the Truthseeker, and paying attention to Mr. Mitchell's course of lectures on the Soul, and reading Theodore Parker's Discourses on Religion, they have made my mind come to a very different conclusion, and convinced me that I ought to have joined the Unitarian body ten years ago, which I am glad to say that I now have done, but not with any intention of overthrowing it. I do not think any sane man would wish to do so. I have found liberal friends here, whom I thought were only to be found amongst Secularists; but I am very glad to find that I am mistaken. There are a few liberal Secularists that wish to do justice to all people's opinions, but the majority wish to have a Pope to reign over them—which they have got, and couldn't have a better one if they tried all the world over, and the Pope of Rome is not a match for the one they have got now. Besides, they have an extra advantage, they have a Popess—the first one in the history of the world—so they are to be congratulated on being so fortunate, but I have been very pleased to escape. I have been a regular subscriber since Christmas to the Unitarian Herald. I have four copies every week, which I hope to increase; and I order eight Truthseekers every month. I have also ordered three of Parker's works, to lend to friends, and I think I shall be able to do a little good in a humble way. We have a very nice minister in the town, a true Liberal, the Rev. W. L. Spencer. I enjoy his sermons well. Hoping I have not trespassed too much on your space, I remain yours truly,

J. CLAYTON.

Middlesboro', Feb. 4, 1878.

"TO THE LAITY."

A correspondent, in writing us on the subject of the leading article in last week's Herald says, that among our congregations is a large number of the intelligent middle class, really earnest seekers of truth, who only go to service on Sundays, and there their interest ends. He has had forty years' experience of Unitarian Churches, and, in earlier times, worked in the cause. The result of his lengthened experience is that while many confess that they go to a Unitarian chapel to hear a good sermon as an intellectual treat, they do not care to join the body, in consequence of the absence of social warmth, and of the presence of caste as clearly marked as in India. His own children, he adds, have gone over to another denomination, finding there the friendly feeling which they sought amongst us in vain.

[He asks whether we will invite correspondence on the subject. We shall be glad to receive communications on any topic so deeply affecting the welfare of our societies.—Eds. U. H.]

BIRTH.

HEYS.—On the 2nd inst., at Chatham-street, Stockport, the wife of Orlando E. Heys, of a daughter.

DEATHS.

GUY.—On the 26th ult., at Belle Vue Nursery, Ringwood, Eliza, the beloved wife of Aaron Guy, aged 57 years.
MAURICE.—On the 2nd inst., at her residence, Eve Hill, Dudley, Elizabeth Maurice, in the 71st year of her age.
PHILLIPS.—On the 4th inst., Anes Etchells, the second daughter of the late Thomas Ayres Phillips, of Ardwick. Friends will kindly accept this intimation.
POTTER.—On the 5th inst., at the residence of her brother-in-law, W. V. Taylor, 22, Acorn-street, aged 69 years, Constantia Jane, youngest daughter of the late James Potter, of Manchester.

COMING WEEK.

LONDON: UNIVERSITY HALL.—On Wednesday evening, lecture by Professor Drummond on "The Religious Element a Criterion of Truth."
LONDON: STAMFORD-STREET.—For the next few Sundays this congregation will worship at the Chapel, Earl-street, London Road, Newington.
LIVERPOOL: KIRKDALE.—On Tuesday evening, lecture by the Rev. S. Fletcher Williams, in the Masonic Hall, Westminster Road, Kirkdale, on "A Rational View of the Bible."
MANCHESTER: CROSS-STREET.—Hospital Sunday. On Sunday morning the Rev. C. C. Coe will preach, and in the evening the Rev. Wm. Gaskell, M.A.
MOTTRAM.—On Sunday evening, lecture by the Rev. S. A. Steinthal, on "Prayer."
STOCKPORT.—On Sunday evening, lecture by the Rev. James Black, M.A., on "First Notes of a New Reformation."
STOURBRIDGE.—On Sunday evening, a lecture by the Rev. John Cuckson, on "Modern Materialism in its Relation to Religious Thought."

MR. LANCASTER, Organist of Mill Hill Chapel, Leeds, will be glad to receive his PUPILS on and after the 17th of January, 1878.—For terms, &c., apply as above.

LINDOW GROVE SCHOOL, ALDERLEY EDGE.—The premises have been erected for a First-class BOARDING SCHOOL, with extensive grounds for recreation, in a delightful country district. Every effort is made to educate the character, to have work done thoroughly, and to adapt it to the pupil's capacity, physical and mental. References and prospectus on application.

JAMES WOOD.

BRIDPORT.—The Rev. JOHN DAVIES, M.A., Educates Six Pupils as Boarders in his house. Terms moderate. TWO VACANCIES.

HOPE LEA, HEATON NORRIS, STOCKPORT.—HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.—Conducted by Dr. and Mrs. MARCUS, assisted by able masters. The majority of the Senior Girls who passed the last Oxford Examinations in the Manchester centre came from this school.—The NEXT TERM commences on Tuesday, January 15.

BROOK HOUSE, KNUTSFORD, CHESHIRE. BOARDING SCHOOL FOR GIRLS, conducted by Mrs. FRANK SHAWCROSS, assisted by Resident English and Foreign Governesses. Teachers of eminence attend for instruction in Music, Singing, Harmony, Drawing, Dancing, &c. Prospectus and references forwarded on application.

MOUNT VERNON HIGH SCHOOL, NOTTINGHAM.—Established 1864. Mr. EDWIN SMITH, M.A., with competent assistance, thoroughly prepares Boys for College, the University Local Examinations, or for Business. For prospectus address Sandy Knoll, Forest Road, Nottingham.

SOUTHPORT.—BOARDING SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.—Miss CURTIS will RE-OPEN her School, Jan. 23rd, 1878. Prospectus on application.—Westburne, Grosvenor Road, Birkdale.

EDUCATION IN GERMANY. Miss M. WAGNER (17, Helenenstrasse, Weisbaden, Germany), who has passed the Prussian State Examination, and possesses the experience of several first-class English schools, receives a limited number of YOUNG LADIES for Private Education, or to visit the excellent College of the town, with home assistance. Climate very healthy, with mild winter. Hot and other mineral springs. English and German references. For terms and further particulars address as above.

WORK: 26, HIGH PETER GATE.—Miss AMY HERRING begs to announce that she has OPENED, at the above address, a SCHOOL for the instruction of Young Ladies in all branches, comprising a first-class education with liberal views. References kindly permitted by the following:—Dr. G. Vance Smith, The Parade, Catmarthen; the Rev. C. Welbeloved, 38, Monkgate, York; Miss Swaine, 1, The Crescent, York.—Terms on application. Pupils are prepared for the University Examinations, several having passed most successfully.

OPEN SCHOLARSHIPS WITHOUT EXAMINATION.

The Hibbert Trustees are prepared to grant at their meeting in June next One or Two Scholarships of £200 per annum each, for two years, to Graduates of any University in Great Britain and Ireland, between the ages of twenty-one and twenty-eight, to enable them to study Theology and Mental and Moral Philosophy at Universities in Germany, Holland, or Switzerland (or elsewhere), subject to the approval of the Trustees. Full particulars may be obtained of the Secretary, to whom applications for Scholarships must be made before March 30, 1878.

PERCY LAWFORD, Secretary.

University Hall, Gordon Square, W.C.

ARMSTRONG & RICHARDS, St. Ann's Place, Manchester.—SHIRTS, of superior quality, made to order.

MESMERISM! Who can Mesmerise? Anyone on receiving longhand written instructions from "B." 64, Bridge Road, Stratford, Essex.

LONDON: SHIRLEY'S TEMPERANCE HOTEL, 37, Queen's Square, Bloomsbury. Beds from 1s. 6d. Plain Breakfast or Tea, 1s. 3d.

RUPTURES.—Exhibition Prize Medal, 1862, was awarded to R. WESTBURY, inventor and sole maker of the IMPERCEPTIBLE CURATIVE TRUSS. Deformity Instruments, Artificial Limbs, Crutches, Elastic Stockings, and Ladies' Supporting Belts, Chest Expanders for round shoulders, &c., 26, Old Millgate, Manchester.

THE DINNER SHERRY.

2s. PER DOZEN.

The season of the year having arrived when light wines, so agreeable in warmer weather, give place to those of a more generous character, we beg to draw attention to the above wine. For years we have given great attention to keep up and improve its quality, and those who require a delicate clean-flavoured sherry, free from spirit, we submit it with confidence, and ask comparison with wine usually sold at 30s.

A considerable saving can be made taking Quarter-cask, 27 gallons, at £14s. 5s. (cask included). Octave, 13½ gallons, at £7s. 5s. Samples can be tasted. Price list of 32 Sherries and other Wine free by post.

JAMES SMITH & COMPANY, Wine Merchants, 26, Market-street, Manchester; also at Liverpool and Birmingham.

Printed for the Proprietors by WILLIAM EVANS, of Apsley Villa 377, Waterloo Road, Chesham Hill, at his Printing Offices, No. 3, Cross-street, Parish of Manchester; and Published by JOHN PHILLIPS, at New Cannon Chambers, 55, Market-street, in said Parish of Manchester. London Agents, Messrs. Smart and Allen, 2, London-house Yard, Paternoster Row.—Friday, February 8, 1878.

*You add "or what has passed for science!" Will this do with clear thinkers? If science is "clear-seeing," how is it responsible for muddle? If science be "demonstration," how can you allow loose thinking to be called by its name? Careless accounts and loosely worked sums are not arithmetic; nor can the science of numbers be made responsible for the carelessness or opacity of bad pupils.

DOINGS AND SAYINGS.

The Irish Roman Catholic hierarchy have issued a manifesto tracing the history of legislation against Roman Catholics in the matter of education from the Reformation onward, and the Irish representatives are called upon to secure the restitution of at least a considerable portion of the endowments taken for Trinity College. They are to cry, "Give us back our own!" To which a deaf ear will be turned.

The Supreme Consistory of the Established Protestant Church of Prussia have forbidden the Rev. H. Hosebach to assume the Cure of Souls in the parish of St. James, at Berlin, on the ground that in his inaugural sermon he denied the miracles related in the Bible; and they have permitted him to retain his old living in the parish of St. Mark, in the same capital, because they can hardly accept the said inaugural sermon as sufficient evidence of unbelief.

Some of the Episcopal clergy in Ireland seem alarmed—or shocked—at a practice which is now on the increase—the preaching of trial sermons by candidates for vacant parishes. No doubt the system is unpleasant, especially for the preachers, but it is simply the natural outcome of Disestablishment. If the people are now to have a voice in the choice of their ministers, no better plan can be devised. But, with all its drawbacks, is it not infinitely more respectable than the shameless traffic in the "cure of souls" which long disgraced the Church?

The Archbishop of Canterbury gave a tolerably strong slap in the face to the deputation which presented the lay and clerical out-and-out protests on the burials question. His Grace said he could not consider "no surrender" as a solution of the question, for he looked upon that as entirely giving up the matter, and the bishops did not wish to follow that course. They were not dealing with the Liberation Society alone, and he recommended the deputation to settle the matter by some wise arrangement.

At the banquet given to Mr. H. M. Stanley by the Royal Geographical Society, Sir Rutherford Alcock spoke of Mr. Stanley as a geographical explorer who had had the courage, the endurance, the tact, and the energy to prosecute his way across Africa and lay open the vast sources of the Congo, an enterprise as perilous and as difficult as any man ever undertook, and one that has been, and will still more be, fruitful in its results for the benefit of the whole world. Mr. Stanley, in expressing his warm acknowledgments, explained at some length the circumstances which had led to his taking strong measures occasionally, more especially at Bombirch, and he maintained that what was done was to satisfy justice. He also showed the reason why the English flag had been carried by the expedition.

Pope Pius IX., who held the presidency of the Roman Catholic Church for the period of thirty-two years—the longest Pontificate in history—will be remembered as a typical Pope—one of the most bigoted, no doubt, and the most impolitic, but also, in some respects, one of the best. He will probably be canonised. He never realised to any extent the meaning of his title as Pontiff, for he was never given to "bridge-building" between churches. His distinctions have been earned rather as an iconoclast—the Syllabus alone being witness—as a denouncer of modern progress—and history may yet prove that in his efforts to wield the trowel in behalf of the Christian dogmas such as those of the Immaculate Conception and Infallibility, he only succeeded in weakening its foundations and so hastening its overthrow. In England we have settled it, that Rome is not our mother, and our personal consciousness of the blessings of intellectual and spiritual freedom constrain us to add that she will never be permitted to be our mistress.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

THE FERGUS FERGUSON CASE.

In a pamphlet just issued by the Rev. Fergus Ferguson, entitled "Additional statements in defence of my doctrinal position, and in vindication of my plea for doctrinal reform." Mr. Ferguson states—"From the beginning I have openly and deliberately called the Confession in question, so that a conference was in no respect required to elicit that fact. And I did so on the explicit ground of my most perfect right to bring the Confession to the bar of the Divine Word—a right which the Presbytery, on the face of the whole inquiry, should have recognised and acknowledged." In his concluding sentences Mr. Ferguson says he is at a loss to see how the committee can hope to put him right but by telling him in the most frank and explicit way what they themselves consider the truth to be.

The Glasgow United Presbyterian Presbytery on Tuesday considered the charge of heresy against

Mr. Ferguson. A committee reported that he had refused to meet them to explain himself, and that he left the case therefore in the hands of the Presbytery, which by 56 to 16 resolved to suspend him from the ministry.

FREE CHURCH LIBERALITY.

Notwithstanding the dull times and the Patronage Act, the Free Church in Scotland shows no signs of decadence. The Sustentation Fund amounts for the eight months of the year to over £100,000, and shows an increase, as compared with last year, of about £4,600. For its new Extension Church Building Fund also some £45,000 has been already subscribed, and a similar state of prosperity distinguishes likewise all its mission schemes. More significant, however, still, is the fact that the Free Church has more candidates for the ministry this year in its colleges than it has ever had in its past history. Fifty-seven young men have entered its halls from the University, for the first year during the present session. This is a larger number of students than the Established Church can boast of.

REV. GEORGE GILFILLAN.

The Rev. G. Giffillan, of Dundee, in reference to a charge that he had recanted his Confession speeches, says he did "make some concessions in 1870 to the kindness of my own Presbytery, which I would not have made to the bullying and illegal interference of that Presbytery which rejoices in Dr. Peddie as its petty Pope! But I never retracted one of the three points on which I was challenged; and I dared Dr. Peddie, after his insolent letter in the Scotsman, to say so, and he never replied. This summer I twice, if not thrice, reiterated my charges against the Confession of Faith, added to them, and challenged Dr. Harper, who had in the Synod referred by implication to me, to libel me; and Dr. Harper, too, thought discretion the better part of valour, and has never answered till this good hour."

DISESTABLISHMENT.

The Glasgow Herald's London correspondent says that if Scotch disestablishment does not get much attention this session from Parliament, it certainly will from the periodicals of the day. Either in April or in July there will appear a paper in the British Quarterly on the subject from the pen of an eminent Nonconformist while it is probable that Professor Bryce, Mr. Jenkins, and Mr. Taylor Innes may have something to say on the subject in the Contemporary and Fortnightly one of these months. It is said, too, that the Dean of Westminster will publish his quota to a Scotch controversy in which he is perhaps more interested than any other Englishman, not as there was at one time, reason to believe in the form of a pamphlet, but in the columns of the Edinburgh Review, which, by the way, a member of the Opposition, in the Reform Club the other day, called "the organ of dilapidated Liberalism."

AMERICAN NOTES.

THE USUAL THING.

In New York and its vicinity, in Philadelphia, Baltimore, and all the great cities and states of the Union, year by year, the Roman Catholic Church is extending its possessions, increasing its riches, and accumulating in its hands some of the most valuable property in the country. A well-known writer commenting on this says:—"Whether the concentration of such a mass of wealth in the hands of an ecclesiastical corporation will be less dangerous to the Republic of the United States than it has been to the European States remains to be seen. They found it necessary to check it by preventive legislation, and in most instances to convert it to the uses of the community. It looks as if the extirpated abuses of Europe were about to be revived in America. If they are, the same results will follow, or history will belie its own teachings."

THE TUCKERMAN CENTENNIAL.

The Christian Register reports that "by arrangement of the faithful and grateful brethren who belong to the Ministry-at-Large," a meeting was held on Friday, January 18, in the New South Free Church, Boston (Rev. W. P. Tilden's), to commemorate the hundredth anniversary of the birth of Rev. Dr. Joseph Tuckerman. The usual devotional exercises were shared by Rev. Messrs. Tilden, Cruft, Wood, Gerry, Waterbury, and Sallaway. Rev. Charles F. Barnard, Dr. Tuckerman's first and only surviving associate, delivered an address, in which he recited the leading events of his life, drawing largely from the remarkable eulogium pronounced by Dr. Channing, and adding some reminiscences of his own. If the spirit of this address, and of Tuckerman's own work, could enter just now into all our ministry, it would not only serve to confine some current controversies within their proper limits, but would help to recall us to the great and glorious business of spreading light and love, of saving the lost, destroying the works of the devil, and preaching glad tidings to the poor. Were Tuckerman and Channing among us, how earnestly would they enter into the study of all those modern problems which bear upon the improvement of human life! Apocryphus of the Centennial, let us reproduce and ponder this saying of Dr. Channing: "Preaching should be more adapted among us to the wants and capacities of the uneducated poor. These should be attracted to our churches, and feel that they are there in the midst of those who sympathise with them; and I am sure that this style of preaching would be as useful to the more improved and opulent as to the poor."

AMERICAN UNITARIANS AND THE LEICESTER CONFERENCE.

The Boston Unitarian Review, while expressing its general sympathy in the action of the promoters of the Leicester Conference, remarks:—"We do not blame orthodox friends if they do not wish to accompany Mr. Picton into the regions of ether. We may and ought to have spiritual sympathy with a pure-minded Pantheist, if we come in his way, or a pious Buddhist who is satisfied with being absorbed into the universe; but we certainly should not select either of these men to build up the visible Church of Christ, in which we devoutly believe as well as our so-called Evangelical brethren. We will venture to suggest that we think it would have been better in the platform resolution to have added the word entirely. 'Religious communion is not entirely dependent on agreement in historical, critical, or theological opinions;' for we do believe it to be very much dependent on them, though not necessarily or always so, especially with great and far reaching souls."

BOOKS AND AUTHORS.

The Unitarian Magazine, Feb., 1878. Edited by Frank W. Walters. Glasgow: William Rankin, 146, Renfield-street.

THREE numbers of this new monthly have now appeared, and the last does not fail of the good literary promise shown in the first. Its chief interest so far as news goes is local—referring to Scotland and chiefly to the Glasgow congregations. The present number opens with an able article on the affirmations of Rationalism, which is followed by a racy account of an evening with a Scotch Heretic, that is the Rev. Fergus Ferguson. Reflections "on Poetry and Science," by S.E.G., may be taken as introductory to a set of verses much above the ordinary quality:—"The Watcher on the Tower." The cover contains Church Calendars for the St. Vincent-street congregation, Glasgow, and the Aberdeen congregation.

A Catechism to Instruct the Young and those of Older Years in Matters pertaining to Religion, with a view to their becoming Disciples of Jesus. By the Rev. Ben. Walker, minister to the poor, Rochdale Road, Manchester.

MR. WALKER has drawn up, in this little work, what he has been accustomed to teach his own children. He thinks that children, and others too, should have definite ideas on religion presented to them, and he communicates his own, without troubling his mind about whether or not some present or future theologian should prove them to be wrong. Mr. Walker speaks plainly—at times with too much of the form of certainty, as when he answers the question "Will any wicked soul be finally destroyed, that is, annihilated?" with an emphasised "No!" He afterwards gives the reasons for his belief in this matter, and they are very good ones; but on such a subject it would be better to ask at once, What reasons have we for believing so and so?

Satan: A Course of Sunday Evening Lectures. By John Page Hopps. I. The Rise and Progress of Belief in Satan.

THIS is not a history, like the sketch by M. Renan, nor an autobiography, like Dr. Beard's. It is an indignant protest against the conception of a rival of God, "who shares the empire of the world with God, and seems to get the better half of it." Mr. Hopps does not raise the question of evil spirits. He says:—

Evil spirits, in fact, there must be, if there is a life beyond the grave at all; for an evil spirit is simply an evil human being passed into the spirit world. I am not sure, however, whether I agree with a passage in the Talmud, which says that these evil spirits may be all about us, but I see nothing unreasonable in it. The Talmud says that these spirits even come to our assemblies, and spiritually mingle with us! It speaks, with a touch of humour, of their "thronging and squeezing on a Sabbath in our synagogues" . . . "for they come to hear the sermon." So says the Talmud; and I am sure I have no objection, especially if the sermon can do them any good. Let them come. If I can do them no good, I know very well they can do me no harm.

Mr. Hopps' vivid little work will go to help on the day he hopes for, when "poor down-trodden, deluded, devil-ridden humanity will awake to the glorious discovery that Satan is only the shadow of its own misery, sin, and fear. And then will shine forth the blessed truth—that man in this world, is alone with God; that his pain is only discipline; that his toil is intended to win for him experience; that the mighty powers of Nature may all be utilised for his good; that his stumblings may teach him how to stand erect; and that his very sins should only lead him to the infinite Father."

The Life and Times of the Right Honourable John Bright. By William Robertson, author of Rochdale, Past and Present. Published by the author, at the Rochdale Observer office.

THIS book ought to be equally welcome and interesting to Liberals and Tories, to Dissenters and Churchmen, for it records the career of one who, in birth and education, is the result of the radical influences of a free faith and of English politics, in contradistinction to orthodox creedism and class legislation. It is, indeed, not of the highest literary merit, and shows in some respects a want of the sense of proportion, specially in the earlier portions. Here and there it misdates an event, and misleads the student by mispaging in some of the references in the "contents." But it is instructive reading. Here may the young learn the course of one whose career has been beneficent both to his country and mankind. In studying this book a feeling of gratitude will be apt to kindle in the mind of the thoughtful youth that his lot is cast in these days rather than in the England of forty years ago, which in so many things was a contrast to the England of to-day. And that it is richer, stronger, happier, more virtuous and religious now than then, is the result of the efforts of reformers, of whom Mr. Bright has been one of the chief. The old, too, may revive their memories of the details of great events which took place in the immediate past, in which they themselves shared in bygone years, or of which, at any rate, they were contemporary witnesses. We would commend specially to the attention of the reader the picture given in the first thirty pages, of that fine old Quaker gentleman, the father of the subject of the present memoir, who raised himself from the humble position of a handloom weaver to that of a large employer of labour. Such a picture of upright and downright manhood working his way upward to success, his active, cheerful benevolence, his quaint humour, which knew how to decide a dispute with true Solomonic wisdom, or to defeat plans of personal spite against his neighbour, or to thwart Tory schemes, to obtain Liberal support, and without giving offence—all this illustrated by anecdotes, must have an elevating and brightening effect—we intend no pun—on the reader's mind. The story of Mr. John Bright's life is so told that he himself is made largely the teller of it, in quotations of autobiographical passages from his speeches. The information contained in this book may be relied on as authentic, where it relates to matters not before made public, as the author states that he has had access to family sources, as well as to assistance from old friends of Mr. Bright. We hope to see such a demand for the book that a second edition will soon be called for: for there can be no more wholesome literature than the record of the life of a man of great ability who has given himself in unsparring efforts to the good of his country.

From Dr. Klunzinger's Upper Egypt we learn something of the popular beliefs and superstitions of the inhabitants of the Desert. Every man, for instance, is attended by a jinn or spirit. The man of science is able to call up these beings, or to drive them away, by reading certain chapters from the Koran a certain number of times, or by writing down mysteriously-arranged letters, figures, words, and numbers. On Fridays, the Mohammedan Sabbath, the spirits are particularly active. It is not permissible to sweep a house at night, as a jinn might be struck and injured, and so induced to revenge himself. Another belief which affects the customs of the people is that of the evil-eye. Even the seclusion in which women are kept is the result, not alone of Mohammed's commands, or of idle jealousy, but arises from the fear that the evil-eye may injure the beloved beings. The states of ecstasy which prevail, both among women and men occasionally, are produced by the jinn, who takes possession of a person, transforms his appearance, and speaks and acts through him. The metamorphosis of animals is also another part of popular belief. It is curious to remark that while in the more scientific circles of our civilised communities man is held to be an ape modified by natural selection and time, among the Egyptians of the present day the ape is regarded as a metamorphosed man. The baboon, it is generally maintained and believed, was a wicked fellow, who stole the people's shoes and hid them under his coat. The hyena is a vile enchanter transformed by the anger of God. Serpents in the same way are considered as wicked people. Falling stars are wicked angels or devils hurled down by God. It is they who teach man the black art, the evil kind of magic. Accordingly, it is a matter of duty for every believer to say when he sees a shooting star, "I take refuge with God from the stoned devil."

In The Christians under the Crescent in Asia, the Rev. E. L. Cutts gives an interesting account of the Nestorians, their present position, their religious customs and superstitions. Here are some curious particulars concerning the elements used in the Communion:—"The bread is made with wheat flour; the corn is preferred which has been gleaned by the girls; it is ground in a handmill: it is made with leaven: and the Nestorians have a tradition on the subject which makes them regard the question as of the most sacred and solemn importance. The story says that as our Lord went up out of the Jordan after his baptism, John the Baptist collected in a phial some of the water which was dripping from his sacred body; at his death he gave it to the disciple John, afterwards the apostle. At the Last Supper our Lord, the story says, gave to each disciple a loaf; but to John he gave two loaves, and put it into his heart to eat one, but to preserve the other that it might serve as leaven, to be retained, in the Church for perpetual commemoration. When John stood by the cross and saw the blood and water issue from the Lord's pierced side, he took the phial of the water of baptism from his bosom and added to it of the water from his side; and he took the loaf and dyed it in the precious blood, and when the disciples went forth to convert the nations, they took John's loaf of the Last Supper, of which the Lord had said, "this is my body," dyed as it was in the blood from his side, and ground it into powder, and mixed it with flour and salt, and divided it among them to serve for leaven for the body and blood of Christ in the Church; also they took of the water of baptism and of the wounded side, and mixed it with the oil of unction, and divided this also to be a leaven for baptism."

THOUGHTS ON RELIGION.

ON PRIVATE JUDGMENT IN RELIGION.*

REV. CHARLES SHORT.

We have thrown off the Pope of Rome, and have taken some one else in his place—some man or Church. We may say to ourselves, "I think for myself in matters that are indifferent—in such matters as forms of Church government—whether Episcopacy or Presbyterianism or Congregationalism is most scriptural—and I am at liberty to choose which of these bodies or sections I shall be identified with; but in matters fundamental I must submit myself to the authority of the Church or the Standards." That is, you will exercise the freedom of Protestants in very small matters, but you have no courage to exercise freedom in regard to other matters which you are told are very important. In these respects you are willing to be the slaves of others, who, perhaps, are as great slaves as you are yourself. But how and upon what principle will you choose the authority which is to decide for you? It can only be in one of two ways—either you must submit to the authority of the Church in which you have been brought up, and accept it as supreme without question; and if that is the right way, then everybody was wrong who ever left the Romish Church. Or, if you are to choose between the conflicting claims of different Churches, the choice ought to be made after an examination of the doctrines of those Churches; and then the choice is really made not by the surrender of your judgment upon fundamentals, but by the exercise of it. But if you choose without such an examination then you have no guarantee that the choice you make is the right one. It is worth no more than a toss up for a system; Calvin may come down heads and John Wesley tails, or vice versa. And therefore I say there is no middle course between choosing our religious beliefs for ourselves and taking them upon trust from others, and upon their authority. Those who do the first occupy the Protestant position; those who do the second occupy the Roman Catholic position. Protestantism, taking it as a whole, has forgotten the meaning of its protest against the Catholic Church. That protest as it was originally uttered, whether it understand itself or not, could not have any other logically consistent ground than this—That every man enjoyed the right and was subject to the duty of interpreting the Word of God for himself, without let or hindrance from any human authority. "Call no man master on earth," was Christ's own charter of his freedom. "To his own master he standeth or falleth;" who art thou that judgeth him, whether Pope, bishop, or priest? The Reformers themselves, the original champions of this freedom, showed that the spirit of Popery still remained in their heart, however logical their arguments against it; for they soon began to persecute those who held different opinions from their own; thus setting up a multitude of little Popes in place of the big one at Rome. And so it has continued to this day, and the principle of the right of private judgment, though embraced as a theory, is scorned and hated in practice. A scholarly Christian gentleman, a Professor in a Free Church College at Aberdeen, wrote an article some time ago in a certain Encyclopædia, in which he expressed, according to the best of his private judgment, some views about the Book of Deuteronomy, and one of the Psalms and Solomon's Song; and an outcry has been raised against him by a Church which, I suppose in irony, is called the Free Church. It does not matter one pin's head to religion or morality who wrote Solomon's Song or who wrote the Book of Deuteronomy; if Solomon did not write the one, nor Moses the whole of the other, the Christian religion will not go down on that account. But to think of it: for ministers who orate against Popery, who glory in being Protestants, who assert that religion is a personal theory, to hound a man almost to death for so small a thing, seems one of the saddest burlesques which has been acted in modern days. Oh! but he is a Professor, and may corrupt the young men under his charge! All the more reason he should have his liberty; for a Professor who is to teach those who are to be teachers of others ought not to be a parrot repeating merely what others have said; he ought to be a student diving to the bottom of things, inspiring others to go to the bottom of things and not to swear by all he says; he ought to be an independent inquiring thinker if he is to stir up the mind and heart of those who are in training to stir up the heart and mind of future congregations. For Protestantism does not mean the liberty to think anything we please; it means the duty of earnest, patient inquiry, and to come to those conclusions only which are warranted by the evidence within our reach. It is too often imagined that a man who pleads for liberty of thought, pleads for it not for the sake of truth, but for the sake of unrestrained licence; and that he who claims the right to differ from the popular creed does so in order to indulge in some wilful, unreasonable crotchet of his own. But all this is a mistake and misrepresentation. He who truly holds the right of private judgment holds also with equal truth the duty of private judgment, so that he is responsible for its exercise to the Great Master above.

THE KHIRGIZ.

In an account of this tribe of Turcomans, now under the rule of Russia, we have the following curious particulars of their ways and customs given. The Kara-Khirciz are mountaineers, with a tendency towards banditism; the Khirciz-Kassaks live in the plains, and would be the most prosperous people in Central Asia if their innate cleverness were not overlaid with the crassest superstition. They carry mutton bones about with them to ward off the evil one. If a Khirciz has a singing in his ears down he goes on his knees to pray, thinking that one of his friends is going to die; if you whistle in his presence he imagines you have designs upon his wife, and must be appeased with gifts and incantations; if one of his children yawns he is persuaded that a wicked spirit has dived down the child's throat to cut out a piece of its heart, and he falls to cuffing the poor brat to make him wary of gaping in future. The Khirciz have all the Mongolian facial type, which comes of their affection for Calmuck wives, whom until recently they were in the habit of carrying off by main force from Chinese territory. It used to be thought derogatory to a Khirciz to marry any woman but one whom he had carried off in a raid, and a relic of this practice survives in some very singular marriage customs. When a Khirciz wants a wife he buys her of her parents for so many camels or horses, and on the wedding day the young lady is turned loose upon a pony and armed with a heavy kourbatch, or ox-nerve riding-whip, and her bridegroom is supposed to carry her off against her will, and for this purpose is provided with a troop of friends, all being mounted. The bride defends herself with the kourbatch, and slashes the faces of the friends pretty vigorously, but the bridegroom gets off cheap, and, after a sham struggle, bears back the young lady on his saddle amid the triumphant shouts of his village. The Khirciz live in peaked huts, made of felt, like tents, and take great pride in having their horses richly caparisoned, their bridles being often encrusted with jewels. They are also very particular about their own dress, which consists of leather trousers, a black velvet dressing-gown, more or less braided with gold, and a conical felt hat with curly brim. When a Khirciz can win the red velvet gown given by the Russians he is mighty proud of it, though his loyalty to the bestowers has to be kept alive by continual gifts. It is through the Khirciz that political rumours are chiefly disseminated in Turkestan, for they have an Athenian fondness for reports of all kinds, and are credulous enough to swallow any fable. When one of them gets hold of any piece of news he takes no rest till he has scattered it to the four points of the compass, and will ride about all day to do this, leaving his business to take care of itself. The Khirciz are great breeders of silkworms, camels, and horses, and manufacture, felt, silk, and ornaments of gold as dexteriously as the Chinese.

DUDLEY.—Mr. Alfred Whitehouse, who is a member of the Unitarian congregation of this town, obtained the Clifford's Inn (or first) prize at the Easter examination of the Incorporated Law Society of last year, and has now been awarded the Scott Scholarship, founded by Mr. John Scott, of Lincoln's Inn Fields, and open to all candidates. The number of students examined this year was about 714, and the report states that "Mr. Alfred Whitehouse was, in the opinion of the council, the candidate best acquainted with the theory, principles, and practice of the law, of the year."

* From a lecture delivered in Ward Chapel (Congregationalist), Dundee.

THE THOUGHT OF GOD.

FREDERICK WILLIAM FABER.

The thought of God is like the tree
Beneath whose shade I lie,
And watch the fleet of snowy clouds
Sail o'er the silent sky.

'Tis like that soft, invading light
Which in all darkness shines,
The thread that through life's sombre web
In golden pattern twines.

It is a thought which ever makes
Life's sweetest smiles from tears;
It is a daybreak to our hopes,
A sunset to our fears.

Within a thought so great, our souls
Little and modest grow,
And, by its vastness awed, we learn
The art of walking slow.

The wild flower on the grassy ground,
Scarce bends its pliant form,
When overhead the autumnal wood
Is thundering like a storm.

So is it with our humble souls,
Down in the thought of God,
Scarce conscious in their sober peace
Of the wild storms abroad.

To think of Thee is almost prayer,
And is outspoken praise;
And pain can even passive thoughts
To actual worship raise.

All murmurs lie inside Thy will
Which are to Thee addressed;
To suffer for Thee is our work,
To think of Thee, our rest.

The Unitarian Herald.

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 15, 1878.

PIUS THE NINTH.

Another name, and even in so long and notable a catalogue a most notable one, has been added to the list of the two hundred and fifty-five successors of St. Peter gone to their rest. "Give him but a reign of ten years," said an enthusiastic Republican, joining in the acclamations to the new elected Pius the Ninth, "and he will be the last Bishop of Rome having temporal power." The prediction was prudent enough, and has been as nearly fulfilled as many a solemn prophecy on whose accomplishment great issues have been made to rest. But to have foreseen the wonderful and altogether exceptional career which was before the new holder of the most ancient of titles, would have indeed needed a more than human foresight. Not a little curious is it that he whose lot it was to proclaim his own infallibility should have been the very one to violate in his own person the hitherto unbroken rule, looked upon as almost a divine ordinance, that no Pontificate should exceed in length the twenty-five years which tradition assigns to that of Peter. So firmly established was this belief that even in verses of welcome, addressed to the Pope on his visit to one of the towns of his former dominion, we have seen the wish for a long life cautiously restricted to the orthodox number of years. "Sit tibi longa ætas, sin minus illa Petri." As if in an address to the Queen it should be said, "May your reign be long, though not up to that of George the Third." Nor is his Pontificate merely the longest on record; it may well be doubted if any of his predecessors had a spiritual authority equal to that which he possessed in his later years. Deprived bit by bit of his temporal power till he was left king only by name, with no other dominion than that of the thousand-roomed Vatican palace, he yet wielded such power over the hearts and minds of men as probably no other man ever did, or likely enough ever will again possess. One hundred and fifty millions professed obedience to him as the final judge on earth in all questions of right and wrong, true and false in religion, morality, and all connected therewith. Hundreds of thousands, amongst them men of rank, culture, and distinguished talent, revered his every word, and submitted to it every thought and judgment. Could his life have been so prolonged, we do not doubt but that thousands would have been found contending for the privilege of offering their own lives as a ransom to heaven for his.

Yet this man, before whose word the heads of men were bowed as the ears of corn before the wind, was not possessed of either remarkable powers of mind or much learning, or noted for any extraordinary sanctity of life. A dignified presence, an absolute faith in the divine prerogatives of his office, an easy and benevolent temper, and, above all, a long reign, such seem to have been the causes of his immense success as a Pope. For successful undoubtedly his rule was, despite frequent humiliation and failure endured as king. Few would have been sanguine enough at the beginning of his reign to anticipate the advance which Romanism has actually made, and that especially among the English-speaking races; but there is something more—the firm and fast hold which all that is distinctively Roman rather than Christian, Catholic or even traditional, is taking upon Roman Catholics. Ultramontanism in all its aspects is now the doctrine not of a school of theologians, but of the whole "Catholic" Church.

His death has taken place at a moment when men's hearts are holden of fear and doubt and anger; yet from the terrible retrospect of the war just ended, and the anxious thought of what is yet to come, the world is forced to turn aside to note this old man's death, ponder his career, and speculate not indifferently on the chances of a successor of like or unlike policy.

Those who reverence as supreme alone the dictates of reason and conscience, and subject all claims of external authority to their jurisdiction, need grudge no reverence or praise to the grand old man who now rests so still in the world's grandest temple. The popular principle of the dependence of religion on authority was made as it were visible and tangible in him. From Bible to Creeds, from Creeds to Church, from Church to Pope—to us these seem but steps in the logical development of the anti-Protestant rule, so much insisted on by the majority of Protestants, of the duty of submission in matters of faith. At all events the end has been reached. A submission can scarcely be imagined more entire than that now required of all Roman Catholics as necessary for salvation. Possibly after the end may come a change, and future generations may pass another judgment on the policy of Pius IX., or St. Pius, as he will doubtless then be, and its issues for the good of Popery.

THE SUCCESSION TO THE POPEDOM.

With respect to the election of a successor to Pius IX. it is decided now that the approaching Conclave, which opens on Sunday next, shall be held in Rome. In all probability only a very few days will pass before the Latin Church throughout the world knows that it has again a head. In the meanwhile the Roman correspondent of the Daily News says that the master spirit of the Vatican is now Cardinal Bilio, one of the authors of the Syllabus, one of the two who watched by the dying bed of the late Pontiff and received his last words. Cardinal Simeoni has not of late been indicated by public opinion. His appointment as Secretary of State seems to have excluded him from the chance of attaining the supreme power. The two Cardinals who share with Cardinal Bilio the chance of elevation to the Pontificate are stated to be the Cardinal Vicar, Monaco La Valletta, and Cardinal Pecci. The latter of these holds the important office of Camerlengo, and has been Bishop of Perugia. Cardinal Monaco La Valletta is comparatively a young man, and is extremely popular with the lower ranks of the clergy, to whom he has shown great personal kindness. He is a native of Chieti; possesses much of the versatility of the Italian character; is studious and learned, and is much more a man of the world than an ascetic. Cardinal Bilio, who, however, seems to have the best prospect of election, is about the same age as Cardinal La Valletta, and is a native of Alessandria, in Piedmont. He was a monk, and is said to have owed much to Father Vercellone, a monk whose liberal principles made him obnoxious to the authorities of the Church. Cardinal Bilio is believed to have shared the opinions of his master; but if so he contrived not to allow them to prejudice the Pope against him. He was one of the Consultors of the Congregation of the Index, and drew attention to himself and gained his Cardinal's hat by the vigour with which he advocated the doctrines of the Syllabus, of which, as we have already said, he was one of the authors. He is a learned theologian, and is believed to have a very strong party in his favour among the resident Italian Cardinals, who will of course have very great influence in deciding the choice of the Conclave. But, as the Daily News adds, it is impossible to estimate the chances which these or indeed any other of the Italian Cardinals have in the Conclave. It has often been found that, as in the American party convention, the name which emerges at last is not that, or even one of those, on which previous speculation has fixed. There seems to be no likelihood at present that the voting will be by acclamation or, as it is called, by inspiration, as is the case when one candidate commands an overwhelming number of the votes. The Conclave is likely to be at first somewhat divided; and it is always possible that two sections or more may, in the impossibility of electing their own favourite, agree to concentrate their votes on some one who is not the choice of either and not obnoxious to either, and thus a Cardinal may be chosen on the ground of great age and as a means of bringing up the choice again at no very distant day.

THE PRUSSIAN ULTRAMONTANES AND EDUCATION.

In the Prussian Diet the Ultramontane party has had a great "field-day" against the Government on the subject of religious education. The Dusseldorf correspondent of the Guardian describes the Ultramontanes as having "the floor" almost to themselves for three days. The fight was begun by the well-known Westphalian Ultramontane chief, Count Droste-Fischer, who acted, as he said, as the mouthpiece of 100,000 Catholics. He presented a petition the prayer of which was that the matter and the manner of religious instruction should be left to the clergy. Dr. Gneist, however, in a remarkable speech, opposed the petition, contending that, for the protection of the labouring classes and for the defence of the minorities, the State must keep the direction of education in its own hands. He argued that the present system of instruction, both secular and religious, had been the work of the State and not of the Church, and that it would vitiate the system if the bishop and not the State had the power of controlling the teacher. He further pointed out that the Roman Catholics were constantly endeavouring to draw more lines of separation between themselves and their Protestant countrymen. In the end the petitions were rejected.

FREE TEACHING AND FREE LEARNING IN THEOLOGY.

If Religion is to be made better than a doubtful superstition—if Theology is to hold her own—it is surely by reverently teaching the study of divine relations and human powers and aspirations, in the spirit of pure devotion to the pursuit of universal Truth—the very spirit of God moving over the waters of our present chaos.

In fact, Theology must be studied and pursued and taught in the same way as other sciences are studied and pursued and taught, absolutely free from tests, from authority, from foregone conclusions, and therefore at once and for ever dissociated from the petty organisations of church and sect.

INAUGURAL LECTURE.

BY THE

REV. C. B. UPTON, B.A., B.Sc.,

PROFESSOR OF MENTAL AND MORAL PHILOSOPHY IN MANCHESTER
NEW COLLEGE.THEOLOGICAL INFORMATION AND STUDY ESSENTIAL TO GENERAL CULTURE.

I.

INTRODUCTION.

THE institution of the courses of lectures to which this Address is a preliminary indicates that in this great centre of commercial life there are some at least who are impressed with the idea that the systematic study of theology is a profitable one, and one worthy to take its place side by side with the study of mathematics, chemistry, physiology, and the other grand branches of investigation which contribute so much to the elevation and enrichment of human life. I shall endeavour this evening to justify the belief and the expectation out of which these lectures have proceeded by contending for the position that not only is the study of theological truth always desirable, but that there are also special reasons in the present day why it should receive general and careful attention. I trust, indeed, that the time is not very far removed when the conviction which inspires those who have taken in hand the theological instruction which is to be given in this place will so spread and deepen in the minds of thoughtful men all over the country, that instead of, or rather, I should say, in addition to these non-academic lessons, the thorough study of theology shall be duly recognised in all our great educational institutions, so that every college shall have its classes where the theological phenomena of history will be carefully investigated by unpledged lovers of truth; the great religious faiths of the world thoughtfully and reverently depicted and compared; and man's faculty for moral and spiritual discernment studied with a zeal and earnestness in some way proportionate to the momentous nature of the revelations which we thereby receive. We may be told, however, that there exist good and cogent reasons why theological studies should be excluded from institutions, which are intended to further the free and full discussion of every other department of thought. Let me, then, now ask your attention to these assumed insurmountable obstacles which are supposed to permanently bar the way to the realisation of this aspiration in which, I believe, many of us share; and we will then inquire whether these objections do not melt away in proportion as this question is more carefully considered and more thoroughly understood.

The two main objections urged against the course advocated in this address.

Those who oppose the introduction of theology into the general curriculum of study fall into two main classes:—1st, those who believe that theology is an unreal science dealing with exploded errors; and, 2ndly, those who maintain that the differences in theological opinion are so important and vital that it is not possible for any teacher of these subjects to give satisfaction to more than one particular section of the religious public. I will take these objections in their order.

First objection:—"God, or the Power behind Phenomena, quite unknowable."

The first class of objectors, accordingly, maintain that theology is a study based not on facts but on fancies, and that to establish classes for such investigations in University College, London, or in Owens College, Manchester would be tantamount to the absurdity of appointing professors of alchemy, or astrology, or of any other of the misty and fantastic speculations fostered in mediæval darkness, and now happily dissipated by the sunlight of scientific knowledge. We may study, we are told, the series of events or phenomena as in orderly procession they advance, constituting, on the one hand, what we call nature, and, on the other, that stream of sensations, emotions, thoughts and volitions which make up our personal consciousness; but beyond or behind these we cannot go. Of the order of events we may acquire much useful knowledge, but of the invisible Cause, to which each event and the succession of events are due, we can know nothing; or at the most, all that we can know is that such an invisible energy exists. Over the attributes, over the character of that Self-subsistent Substance or Cause there is ever drawn, we are assured, a veil altogether impenetrable by human ken. At this veil of mystery philosophers and theologians may earnestly or inquisitively gaze, and may fancy that they detect there the lineaments of divine intelligence and love: but, 'tis self-deception: they see naught save the reflection of their own minds, and the God they worship is but the magnified image of themselves,—an optical illusion to which the mental vision is subject when it strives to penetrate behind the surface of sensible phenomena. Now, of course, if all we can say of the Supreme Being is that He exists, our theological knowledge is summed up in two words, and the teachers and students of theology find their occupation gone, and must needs seek to gratify their love of truth in some less barren department of knowledge.

Reply to the above objection.

But, for my own part, I must earnestly protest against the assumption that human intelligence is thus wholly excluded from any satisfying acquaintance with that Causal Power of which nature and mind are the manifestations. I do not indeed pretend that our knowledge of the Eternal and Infinite One is of the same defined and exhaustive character, or is as readily transmissible from mind to mind, as is our knowledge of the finite objects and events of nature and of human life; but I do believe and maintain that it is an assurance most real, most influential, most essential to the well-being, the progress, and the happiness of mankind. Later on in this address I propose to call attention to the solid basis of this knowledge in man's moral and spiritual experience, but at present I wish rather to deal with this question in its relation to scientific knowledge merely, and to show that even from this sphere theological considerations and perceptions cannot be wholly excluded.

The study of the external world inevitably suggests ideas and emotions in reference to the Substance or Cause of Nature.

In the first place, then, I maintain that it is not reasonable to hold, as Mr. Herbert Spencer and Professor Tyndall profess to do, that Nature and Humanity are the manifestations of an Invisible Power, and yet that the study of nature and of history can throw no light upon the character of that creative and sustaining energy, in whom all things, physical and mental, live and move and have their being. The Cause cannot but be accounted adequate for the production of the Effect; the Substance must contain within it adequate provision for all its modes of expression; and I think that very few men can observe with intelligent interest the phenomena of this grassy globe and of the starry heavens without the consciousness that they are contemplating the activity of Power towards which the sentiments of reverence and awe spontaneously go forth. That this reverential mood takes possession at times of the most pronounced teachers of Agnosticism their own admissions clearly indicate. It cannot be doubted, I think, that Professor Tyndall is often visited by sentiments of admiration and even adoration in the felt presence of that Cosmic energy of some of whose operations he is so gifted an interpreter. As he penetrates farther than his fellowmen into the arcana of his own special department of science; as he slowly unravels by virtue of his analysing intellect some little portion of that marvellous web of phenomena which the Eternal is ever weaving, well may he shrink back, as he declares he does, from supposing that his present knowledge can represent the acme of intelligence now existent in the universe; and that there is no Being who comprehends more perfectly than our savans do those complexities of structure and function, which our most advanced science only very imperfectly understands, yet understands sufficiently to be assured there exists in nature a subtilty of adaptation, a wondrous delicacy of workmanship in comparison with which the greatest achievements of human ingenuity are rude and coarse productions. Professor Tyndall would, however, probably tell us that when in his higher moods he yields to the elevating sentiments which the contemplation of Nature's marvels awakens in his soul, he is then passing beyond the proper limits of science, and regaling his spirit in those realms of imagination and emotion, to which the poet and the religious man have legitimate access, but which must be carefully marked off from the sphere of knowledge. That the apprehension of the character of the Eternal One, which physical science by itself is competent to give, is far too vague, indefinite, and unverifiable to be called knowledge, I most readily and emphatically admit.

No wholly satisfying theological convictions apart from the concurrent exercise of man's faculties of moral and spiritual discernment.

The adequate perception of theological truth is a privilege accorded, not to the exclusive exercise of one of our faculties, but to the healthy, well-balanced and concurrent exercise of our intellectual, our moral, and our spiritual discernment. The main foundations of satisfying religious convictions lie no doubt in the moral and spiritual experiences enshrined in history and literature, and repeated with greater or less of intensity and vividness in the individual soul. If, however, as theologians believe, the Spirit which communes with and illumines our inner life be also the creative energy ever active around us in nature, it is to be expected that the external world which appeals to our senses shall, in its expression, bear some confirmatory testimony to the reality and character of that Divine authorship which religious belief assumes. This confirmatory testimony, which is all that theology has a right to expect from science, science does, I believe, afford. When the more gifted of our savans tell us that they are wont to resign themselves to the elevating emotions which the contemplation of nature is fitted to excite, we must remind them that all Emotions imply corresponding Ideas, more or less definite, and, therefore, every sentiment of reverence, trust, and affection towards the Unknowable (whether cherished by the scientist or by the poet) is in itself a tacit confession that to them the cosmic energy is not wholly unknowable, but is vaguely apprehended as marvellous Power, as surpassing Wisdom, or as all-embracing Love. I maintain, then, that so far as these sentiments with regard to the spirit and the essence of the Cosmos are felt and cherished by scientific men (and that they are so felt and cherished to a large extent even among those who call themselves Agnostics, I feel convinced), we are justified in concluding that such men not only see the transient phænomena of nature, but faintly apprehend also the character of the Eternal Cause, out of whose constant energising, nature arises. The glimpses which they thus gain are, it is true, far too vague and variable to bring clear conception and satisfying conviction to minds unilluminated by theological culture and personal religious experience; but are amply sufficient to show how vain it is for the student of the external world to pretend to ignore theology, and to proclaim his utter and invincible ignorance of the character of that Power whose outer manifestations he is ever studying. In truth, the moment our savans pass beyond the mere discovery and cataloguing of the order of phenomena, and allow their higher reason and emotions to expatiate on their discoveries, they immediately become perforce incipient Theologians and bear testimony more or less distinct to the presence in nature of the same power and influence which illumines the genius of the poet and the artist, and inspires the heart of the hero and the saint.

The ideas of Substance, Cause, and Power are not phenomenal but theological conceptions, and so the savant is perforce an incipient theologian.

As far as I can see, it is as impossible, as it is undesirable, for the thoughtful students of science to escape from the necessity of importing theological ideas into their scientific conceptions. They cannot eliminate the notions of Cause and Force from their physical studies and from their theory of Evolution; and Cause and Force are philosophical and theological ideas, which derive all their life and their significance from our consciousness of volitional causation. Nor do I think they can wholly eliminate from science the idea of adaptation, of intelligent purpose, or even of benevolent design.

Darwinism in no way removes the necessity of supposing that nature is due to intelligent activity.

But here some one may ask me if I am utterly ignorant of Darwinism, and have not yet learned that this supposed necessity of assigning the harmonies of nature to intelligent activity is for ever explained away and exploded. I am well aware that since Mr. Darwin announced his theory of natural and sexual selection—a theory which no doubt constitutes a most valuable contribution towards our insight into the method of nature—that many “advanced thinkers,” as it is the fashion now-a-days to call some of the most reckless and superficial speculators upon the profoundest questions of psychology and theology, have never ceased to proclaim with infinite assurance that the old argument from Design, the process of ascending “through nature up to Nature’s God,” is now effectually disposed of, and that henceforth the fields of Natural Theology, in which the countless readers of Paley and the Bridgewater Treatises have gathered so much delightful and, as it seemed to them, nutritious fruit, must be abandoned for ever by all intelligent students. So much for these glib assertions; but what is the sober fact? Since the publication of Darwin’s views, Hartmann, the most popular living philosopher in Germany, whose work on “the Philosophy of the Unconscious” has in a very few years run through seven large editions, Hartmann, I say, after submitting the Darwinian theory to a most searching criticism, and fully admitting the operation within certain limits of the principles which Darwin expounds, yet emphatically urges that no possible explanation can be given of the development of the organic world, which does not bring in the direct action of an organising intelligence. And what renders this testimony the more important is that Hartmann does not write in the interests of positive theology but in favour of pessimistic views of life and destiny. He denies, indeed, that the Cosmical energy to whose activity Evolution is due is possessed of consciousness, but he maintains that Science and Psychology force upon us the certainty that it is Universal Will, and that it is in the highest degree intelligent. I cannot follow the celebrated German pessimist in his paradoxical assertion that there can be the highest intelligence apart from consciousness; but I do hold that in his philosophy we have noteworthy evidence that the most thorough acquaintance with the theories of Evolution may not only not extinguish but may actually intensify the recognition of the reign of intelligent purpose in the universe. And to turn to a philosopher of a very different stamp—the Principal of the free theological college in London. Everyone who is acquainted with Dr. Martineau and his writings is well aware of his great familiarity with the more important features of contemporary science; and those who have attended his recent lectures on the “Evidences and Truths of Religion” have had clear evidence of his thorough study of the views which Darwin and his followers have propounded. I have had the privilege of listening to these lectures, as I also had of listening to lectures from the same teacher on the same subject some twenty years ago, and I find that so far is it from being the case that in Dr. Martineau’s opinion recent science has impaired the validity of the Design-Argument, that this argument now assumes in his philosophy a more prominent and influential position than before, and the treatment of it is much enriched by many observations drawn from the writings of those very savans, who are supposed by superficial thinkers to have given the death-blow to natural theology. Nor let it be supposed that it is theologians and philosophers alone who see that natural theology, though at present quiet, is by no means dead, that it is merely in a pause of transition, undergoing beneficial modifications in the light of the new facts with which the Darwinians and the Evolutionists have enriched our knowledge, and is destined ere long to re-appear with more than its former vitality, and to become a powerful factor among the educational agencies of the ensuing age. It is a significant circumstance that Professor Huxley has come to see that the essential spirit of Teleology is not vitally affected by theories of evolution, for that science can never show that “the primordial molecular arrangement, of which all the phenomena of the universe are the consequences, was not intended to evolve these phenomena.” Many scientific men go, however, much further than this, and I may remind you that one of the most eminent of our mathematicians and physicists, Sir William Thomson, thus wisely spoke in his Address, as President of the British Association, in 1871:—“I feel profoundly convinced that the argument from design has been greatly too much lost sight of in recent zoological speculations. Reaction against the frivolities of teleology such as are to be found, not rarely, in the notes of the learned commentators on Paley’s “Natural Theology,” has, I believe, had a temporary effect of turning attention from the solid irrefragable argument so well put forward in that excellent old book. But overpowering proof of intelligence and benevolent design lies all around us; and if ever perplexities, whether metaphysical or scientific, turn us away from them for a time, they come back upon us with irresistible force, showing to us through nature the influence of a free will, and teaching us that all living beings depend upon one ever-acting Creator and Ruler.” We may add to these remarks of Sir William Thomson, the consideration that if recent science in some of its aspects appears on a superficial view to militate against the Theistic idea, in other and most important directions it lends powerful reinforcement to the conclusions of natural theology. The recent speculations concerning the nature of matter—the vortex-atom theory of Sir W. Thomson, the conclusions of Sir John Herschel and Professor Clerk Maxwell that molecules present all the essential features of manufactured articles, the doctrine of “the dissipation of energy” involving a beginning and an end in time to our present cosmical life;—all their theorisings, which find favour among many of the leaders of science, postulate the existence of definite acts of new creation in the physical world. How far such doctrines will stand the test of further investigation is no doubt uncertain; but one thing, I believe, is not uncertain, and it is that whatever particular theories of the mode of action of the Eternal Being in reference to the phenomenal universe in succession may arise and disappear, the belief that nature has its source and support in the energising of an Invisible Power of surpassing wisdom will never permanently vanish from among the well-assured convictions of mankind.

Scientific and theological studies are needful to each other, and blend in all wise culture.

The whole history of thought proclaims that science and theology—the investigation of phenomenal effects on the one hand, and of the existence and character of the Eternal Cause on the other—have the strongest natural affinities and reciprocal relations, and can never be disassociated without serious injury to the educational interests of humanity.

We are at present suffering from the one-sided direction of the attention to the phenomenal world exclusively.

I cannot but believe that our culture is now grievously suffering from its one-sided character; and were the reading and thinking portion of our countrymen trained, as they ought to be, in the rudiments of philosophical and theological research, they would not, as they now too often do, fall a ready prey to any daring negative speculations concerning God, or the soul, or moral responsibility which a Tyndall, a Huxley, or a Clifford may choose to interweave with their physical or physiological teachings.

I have dealt at, perhaps, disproportionate length on this aspect of my subject, but I feel it very important to make the position quite clear that scientific studies inevitably carry with them theological ideas; that the very men who profess to ignore these ideas indirectly bear testimony to their irrepressible influence. The question of moment in the present day is not whether we shall have science without theology, for that is impossible—the very Agnosticism of our scientists is, as I have said, an incipient and crude theology,—but it is whether we shall have science studied in conjunction with thorough theological training and reflection, or in conjunction with such jejune and negative ideas concerning the nature of the Eternal One as may be expected when savans turn amateur philosophers and theologians, and in sensational lectures to unprepared audiences make easy havoc with the beliefs and hopes that have for ages been the bread of life to mankind. As I before noticed, theology has been compared with alchemy and astrology, and no doubt much that passes under the name of theology deserves to be so characterised; but we must bear in mind that alchemy and astrology, amid all their errors and delusions, contained essential truths, and out of them arose the honoured sciences of chemistry and astronomy. Are there not around us cheerful signs that theology is likewise passing into a higher stage, dropping its superstitions and its bigotry, and resting more and more upon the authentic facts of moral and spiritual experience, and thus qualifying itself for the more effectual performance of its lofty function as the interpreter of the Divine Life in nature and in the soul—just as the several natural sciences are the interpreters of its varied modes of outward expression.

II.

The study of the influence of religious faith in history and biography gives a clearer and fuller insight than science can give into the character of the Supreme Being, and His sympathetic response to the needs and aspirations of His rational creatures.

I have tried to show that science cannot be understood and expounded without theological assumptions expressed or implied, and therefore it is fitting that in every great seat of learning, where the sciences are taught, theology also should receive parallel attention. Now what I have said with regard to the study of nature, applies with far more obvious pertinence to the study of History. If I had no other arguments to urge in favour of the more general culture of theology, I should consider it sufficient to point out that, apart from it, history becomes an inexplicable enigma, and no adequate account can be given of those critical turning-points which determine the destinies of men and nations. What influence is so irresistible and at the same time so apparently unaccountable as the origin and growth of religious faith, and what influence, I may add, has played a more important part in modifying the character and enriching the civilisation of mankind? Scientific knowledge has, no doubt, been a powerful instrument for good; but it can hardly be questioned that the effect of religious belief upon the personal, the social, and the political life has been incalculably more important. Sometimes, indeed, this faith, when it has been associated with perverted intellectual and moral culture, has proved a terrible and most oppressive tyrant; but, whether well or ill-directed, the religious sentiment if genuine, is never feeble or inoperative.

Some analogy between the direct action of the Spirit of God in the history of mankind, and the action of igneous energy in the geological history of the globe.

If we try to picture to ourselves what would have been the condition of society if the influence of such men as Moses, Socrates, Sakya-Muni, Paul and Jesus, and other divinely-inspired souls in more recent times, had been struck out of history, we seem to be endeavouring to solve a problem something like that which a geologist would have to solve, if he were asked to explain what would have become of the physical world if it had been left merely to the levelling influence of water, and had never been upheaved into mountain chains and groups by the mighty igneous energy from within. As the geologist would tell us that such uninterrupted aqueous action would at length have dragged all elevations down to a monotonous level, and covered the earth with a uniform and cheerless ocean-plain, so I think the historian of mankind would have to admit that were the elevating influences of religious faith and hope withdrawn, society would gradually deteriorate by reason of the deadening effect of selfishness and custom, till at length all that is specially distinctive of human nature would die out, and our race gravitate down to the dull level of a merely animal existence. And not only has religious faith been very influential, as it seems to me, in enabling mankind to attain to their present intellectual and moral altitude, and in counteracting the constant tendency to sink back to lower levels of experience, but this upheaving spiritual energy, while it affects all men more or less, incarnates itself at times with especial purity and might in some selected soul, and through him acts mightily upon society. It is these burning principles of faith and love, becoming so fervid at times as to melt and merge the human in the Divine, which give to the choicer epochs of history, and to special periods in the lives of individuals, their exceptionally grand or picturesque character. Over such scenes in history and biography the soul delights to ponder: they tell of influences not of earth; they seem to bring us into the nearer presence of the Eternal. Most delightful and soul-refreshing is an excursion to our Cambrian or Cumbrian hills, with their embosomed lakes mirroring such varied loveliness; their noble mountain tops, whereon we breathe a more invigorating air and gain more glorious ideas of this beautiful globe on which we dwell. Such visits to the sweet and sublime retreats of nature are indeed precious; but a still more precious experience is it to study, in the past and in the present, the grand Alpine heights, the ineffable charms of human character, manifesting as they do the marvellous influence of the Holy Spirit in raising some self-forgetful soul above the mean and commonplace into the heroic, the saintly, the Divine.

To study such characters earnestly and lovingly; to pass into genuine discipleship to them, is, I conceive, one of the chief features in the true method of theological study. There can be no doubt that we gather up in our hereditary complexion, and in the various influences which make up our education, the purifying and fertilising effects of these inspired lives which constitute the grand landmarks in the religious history of our section of the human race. This, however, is not the only benefit which these diviner souls confer on humanity. In our private reading, or in classes such as these which are about to be delivered in this hall, we may penetrate more deeply into the life and character of the beloved sons of the Eternal, and as we are for a season raised by contact with their more spiritual natures to grander experiences and a loftier point of view, we can hardly fail to feel the kindling of faith and love at the heart of our own being, assuring us that we also are visited by the Holy Spirit, we also may be uplifted and blessed by the self-same Divine influence which gives to the lives of those we reverence such saintly purity, such engaging sweetness, such marvellous power to illumine, to strengthen, and to bless. For a brief season at least, we become at one with them as they are at one with God. As we come down refreshed and comforted from these occasional visits to the mountain heights of prophetic experience, we enter into our daily business with a wiser mind and a more loving heart; our hidden life with God becomes more real; to doubt of His presence, His wise guidance, and His unfathomable love becomes for the time impossible; and we feel that it is true wisdom and true happiness to die to self and live in this Eternal life within.

I fear that what I have just said will sound mystical and perhaps fanciful to some who are here present, as it certainly would do to those who are admiring followers of our most popular savans and philosophers. But for the purpose which I have now in view, it is not necessary that you should follow me in my explanation of the mighty influence which religion and its prophets have exerted upon society and history. It is only necessary that you should recognise the reality and importance of this influence; and having done so, I think you will admit that you are face to face with facts of the most practical character, which demand recognition and investigation; with facts that are organically connected at many vital points with our own personal experience and with the entire development of the life of mankind. The most decided Positivist will not deny that such remarkable phenomena call for careful attention and study. He may believe that he can succeed in showing that the hero, the prophet, and the saint, not only take the particular form of their ideas from ancestral and educational influences, but that all that constitutes their genius, their nobleness, and their power, likewise admits of such explanation, so that when the antecedent phenomena are understood there is no special spiritual element left to be accounted for. I cannot admit that such attempts to give an exhaustive explanation of the noblest and divinest men, without appealing to any fresh inspiration from the Eternal have so far been at all successful. But be this as it may, no one can doubt that such men and their influence are subjects of the nearest and deepest interest; and therefore the religious history of the world, and, par excellence, the religious history of the nation in which spiritual phenomena of the most marked kind are conspicuously manifested, should be treated as an important feature in our educational discipline, and should be regarded as certainly not less desirable and imperative than is the study of the military and the constitutional history of the several nations of the world. Nor, indeed, is it possible to separate religious or ecclesiastical history from secular history without serious detriment to the successful treatment of the latter, for not only is the course of political events often quite controlled by unlooked-for currents of religious enthusiasm, but all that is most precious and durable in the social life, in the art and in the literature of a nation, is more or less organically connected with its moral ideal and the character of its religious faith. Surely, then, there is good reason why the origin and the history of the chief religions of the world, and their comparative influence on the personal and the national life should receive careful consideration from all who aspire to that complete and well-balanced culture which is the characteristic of the truly wise man, as distinguished from the sectarian and one-sided partisan in the great commonwealth of truth. If the considerations I have now brought before you are sound, it follows that the first objection, to which I alluded, is not tenable, and that theology is no merely imaginary science, whose subject-matter exists only in the realms of fancy. Theology has for its subject-matter that creative and sustaining energy which we have seen science cannot ignore, and about whose nature no student of the external world can avoid theorising with more or less of intelligent insight. We have seen, too, that there are good reasons for concluding that this cosmical energy is not only power of inconceivable vastness, but that it is power directed by surpassing wisdom, and that, therefore, the study of Natural Theology has valid claims to take its place as an important branch of culture. But, while the interpretation of nature affords some glimpse of the character of its Eternal Cause, it is in the study of human nature and human history that we meet with far more suggestive indications of the essential nature of the Supreme, and of the constant and living relations in which He stands to the spirit of man. Science must assume a Divine Presence and Activity behind phenomena, and can hardly fail to recognise some trace of Divine Wisdom; but it is in the distinctive character and immeasurable influence of religion on human life that we find the most important data for the establishment of the grand fundamental principles of theology. For in the religious history of nations and of individuals we appear to see not only the uniform energising of the Eternal, but fresh and special acts of new creation which force upon us the conclusion that this energy, whose character we are investigating, is a principle of love and inspiration, acting constantly and sympathetically in accordance with the needs and aspirations of His creatures.

III.

Personal religious experience, combined with some philosophic insight, required for the adequate interpretation of religious phenomena.

But the religious phenomena of history, though as intensely interesting to the wise student, as they are influential in the development of the human race, cannot be understood, save in a most superficial way, unless we have the adequate clue to their deep meaning in a rich religious experience interpreted to us by clear philosophic insight. Hence theology or religious philosophy, finds its special sphere of exercise on the study of the rational intuitions and of the moral and religious experience of the spirit of man.

Science, a rationale of our sensational; Theology, of our rational, moral, and spiritual experience. Both imply the action of a Power other than human.

Just as the various physical sciences are a rationale of man's sensational experience, so is theology a rationale of the phenomena of man's higher nature; and as the former inevitably involves the conviction of an Invisible Power operating upon us from without, so, in a still more striking mode, does the latter imply and reveal a Power acting directly upon our inner life. The Power manifesting itself without us, and the Power revealing itself within us are, we are constrained to believe, but the different phases of the activity of one and the same Eternal Self-subsistent Being, and thus Science and Theology both lead us to God, but it is to the latter rather than to the former that we must mainly look for the clearest assurance of His presence, and for the most clear and satisfying apprehension of His character.

Theology is, accordingly, like the physical sciences, based on experience and experiment.

Hence, I take it, theology is essentially as much a science based on observation and experiment as is geology, or chemistry; and whoever seeks to penetrate to its deep and consoling truths without cherishing his own moral and religious life is taking as foolish and as futile a course, as a student of natural science would take, if he confined his studies to books, and did not cultivate a first-hand acquaintance with nature, and personally interrogate her by well-directed observations and experiments.

I maintain, then, that religious philosophy is based upon experience and experiment; that in the sense of Duty; in the felt power of Prayer; in the various religious emotions and their satisfactions; in the feelings of alienation from and reconciliation with God; in the assurance realised more or less by all men, but with especial intensity by the saintliest minds, that God stands to them in a more intimate, a more vital, a more truly sympathetic relation than the nearest friends can possibly stand to one another:—I say, in all these facts of the moral and spiritual consciousness, we have the experiential data out of which theology elicits a more or less adequate interpretation of the living relations in which the Eternal One stands to the spirit of man.

The second objection: "that there is no unanimity in reference to theological truth."

But when I make this claim, I may well be met with the second objection to which I alluded at the opening of this lecture. I may very properly be asked how it comes to pass, if theology be a valid study, based on the normal religious experience of mankind, that it is impossible to appoint teachers of theology in our modern undenominational Colleges, if for no other reason, at least for this reason, that there is no general unanimity of opinion as to what is to be considered theological truth.

A serious practical difficulty, but one which arises out of erroneous views of the nature and criterion of theological truth.

Now, I am only too well aware that in the present state of public opinion in respect to the essentials of theology and religion, there is a difficulty, and I fear an insuperable difficulty, to the immediate adoption of the course I am advocating. Public opinion will have to unlearn many utterly erroneous notions, and to pass through a long educational discipline ere this obstacle will be removed, and theology be enabled to take its legitimate position in the general educational scheme. The fundamental error out of which this obstacle proceeds is a deeply-rooted one, and will take many years to fully eradicate. That it will be finally eradicated I feel no doubt; nay, as I shall presently try to show, it is even now receiving some earnest and powerful tugs, which have already loosened its hold on the public mind and heart, and must in course of time uproot it thoroughly. As I before suggested, it is probable that one of the reasons why the popular theology is at present disqualified for admission into general culture is that it is still in what we may call the pre-scientific stage, and is related to rational and healthy theology as alchemy is related to chemistry. But this is not all.

Peculiar character of religious as distinguished from sensational experience.

The main gist of the difficulty lies, I think, in the special character of religious experience, as compared with that sensational experience out of which the physical sciences arise. The sensational experience which scientific study requires for its prosecution and verification is always accessible. It is it is true, an experience of a far lower order than spiritual experience, but it has the advantage over the latter of being within the reach of all men, and of the same man in all his moods. Now our spiritual relation to the Supreme Being is not of this character. It is the function of our pulpits to kindle and sustain this spiritual life, and to make it the dominant element in our nature, and the religious man is never without some sense of living contact with God. But the spiritual insight of different men varies greatly; nor does the same man at all seasons of his life discern divine truth with the same breadth and vividness. In all his moods Professor Tyndall can investigate the properties of light and sound; it is only in his higher moods that he has suggestive gleams of religious insight.

Spiritual experience is immensely enriched, intensified, and purified by sympathetic contact with diviner souls.

One of the principal laws which govern spiritual experience is, that it acquires a quite fresh and exceeding precious vividness and depth when we have intercourse with, or read the thoughts and deeds of those diviner spirits, who have enjoyed in measure far deeper and fuller than ours the riches of this inner communion with God.

Science knows nothing of Persons: in Religion the personal relation is most important and vital.

Hence it is that while science is impersonal, religion is intensely personal. It is not essential to the student of physical science to know anything about the personal life of the discoverers of great scientific truths; all that he wants is to know the nature of the discovery; the sensational experience that explains and verifies it, he has already at hand. Not so with the theologian. He not only requires to know what the prophet teaches, but it is essential that he should be able to share in some degree at least the prophet's religious consciousness, otherwise the utterance is to him of little worth—it is but the dead body of doctrine without the living spirit. Hence the life, the personal character, the emotional state which prompts the utterance, the vivid picture of the intercourse with God enjoyed by spiritual seers, is, or should be, with the student of religion a quite essential matter. A dry, philosophical statement of the articles of the theological belief of the Hebrew prophets and of Jesus would be of little value; it is because the teachings of those men are instinct with moral and religious life, and so kindle our emotional nature—our God-consciousness—and thus gift us with some share of their own spiritual experience and discernment, that they are of such immeasurable worth. Therefore it comes to pass that the life of a divine man, and the words which body forth his felt relations with the Eternal, can never become obsolete to the theologian. The student of phenomenal knowledge, on the other hand, is not vitally interested in the life and teachings of earlier sages, whose true views have been taken up into and so have been superseded by the most recent scientific treatises.

It is natural and fitting that prophetic teachers should be regarded as authorities.

Theology has accordingly a most living interest in the past as well as in the present, and a most intimate and vital connection with the lives and words of saintly men and prophetic teachers through all the ages. The natural and inevitable consequence of this is that divine persons become authorities in theology. Now, this principle of authority, or the disposition to trust in theological matters those whom we instinctively feel to enjoy a purer and deeper spiritual experience than we do, properly understood, is a most sound and indispensable one; but the application of it in the popular theology is perverse and exceedingly mischievous one.

All prophetic minds see essentially the same spiritual truth, but in different degrees of fulness, and their utterances are more or less alloyed by accidents of culture.

Every earnest and unbiassed student of the world's greatest religious teachers will, I think, bear me out in the assertion that when you study their character and writings, and penetrate to the real spirit of their revelations, you will find that, much as they appear to differ in the letter of their teachings, no sooner do you strip off from their doctrines the peculiarities that are due to the idiosyncrasy of the prophet and to the intellectual influences of the age in which he lived, than you discover a substantial agreement in all the spiritual facts to which their experience bears positive testimony. Different religious teachers will no doubt differ much in the clearness and scope of their spiritual insight; but if we look not to their denials and negations (which only indicate what they did not see), but to their positive asseverations and announcements (which reveal the nature of that which they did see), we shall find, I believe, that the moral and spiritual experience on which theology is based is substantially identical in all men, who have reached to the same purity and depth of communion with God.

Abuse of the principle of authority in the popular theology owing to the imperfect recognition of the fact that each man possesses some faculty of Spiritual Discernment.

Unfortunately, however, the popular mind does not recognise this truth. It makes persons and churches into authorities, but does not accept the principle which is the natural safeguard against the abuse of this principle of authority—i.e., it does not admit the possession of Spiritual Discernment by the soul of man. This principle alone can affix the proper limits to the range of personal authority in matters of religion; this alone can enable us to distinguish between the real revelation of which the prophet is the messenger, and the accidental accretions of personal judgment and contemporary culture; this alone can enable us to tell whether the prophet says these things of himself, or whether the words are the words of the Father within him. When this natural test is allowed and applied, and men see that spiritual experience or the life of man in God is in its essential features quite as real and unchangeable as is our sensational experiences of the external world—then, and not till then, will the difficulty vanish which excludes theology from its natural place in our curriculum of study.

Signs that the best theologians in the so-called orthodox Churches are beginning to test theological truth by spiritual discernment—i.e., by an appeal to the spirit of God within them.

That this principle of spiritual discernment is slowly being admitted, the present widespread rejection of the doctrine of eternal punishment conclusively shows; for in this rejection is involved the admission that no doctrines can be accepted on authority that contravene the moral sense, and are unauthorised by man's spiritual experience. What says Canon Farrar in his admirable and celebrated sermons in Westminster Abbey?—"I fling from me with abhorrence such a creed as that. Let every Pharisee gnash his teeth if he will; let every dogmatist anathematise; but that I cannot and do not believe. Scripture will not let me; my conscience, my reason, my faith in Christ, the voice of the Spirit within my soul, will not let me; God will not let me." In this tacit admission that "the Spirit of God within the soul" is the true court of appeal in matters of theological doctrine Canon Farrar has virtually undermined the foundation on which the whole fabric of error and uncharitableness, in which theology has so long been imprisoned, really rests; and there can be little doubt that this eloquent and courageous preacher speaks as the representative voice of an influential and growing minority in all the so-called orthodox churches.

Anticipations of the future of theological study.

There is good reason then to believe that if not quite in our time, at all events before many generations shall have passed away, correct views on theology will prevail; and then, as I believe, there will not only be no wish to exclude theology from the halls of culture; but, on the contrary, there will be an eager desire to give it a prominent and honoured place. Then Bibliolatry will vanish, but the rational appreciation and love of the Hebrew and Greek scriptures will be vastly deepened, and the earnest and reverent study of them, freed from dogmatic thralldom, will become a privilege and a delight. No longer shall we have, as in the theological section of the present local examinations of Oxford and Cambridge, the students and examiners in Jewish and Christian history and literature, committing year by year no less an absurdity than would be committed by a student of Greek or Roman history, if he ignored the works of Thirlwall and Grote, of Niebuhr and Mommsen, and set himself to learn by heart the undigested mass of fact and fable to be found in Livy and Herodotus. Then, too, a blessed change will come over our theological literature. No longer will the main interest centre in sectarian treatises, in apologies for particular forms of doctrine; but those books will come to the front which have long been dear to the deep heart of humanity, and so have ever been rescued from the ravages of time—such books, I mean, as are the expression and the fruit of a rich and deep religious life, books of the stamp of the "De imitatione Christi" in the olden time, and which are represented by such writings as those of the two Newmans, of Robertson of Brighton, of Channing, Thom, and Martineau in our present literature. But I must not dwell prematurely on this engaging picture of the golden age in store for theology. Much strenuous but noble work has to be done ere this happy result is realised; and I can only in conclusion congratulate the teachers and the students of these classes that they are among the earliest pioneers of a really good movement, which bids fair to confer incalculable blessings on mankind.

THE PAPACY IN SCOTLAND.

The establishment of the Popish hierarchy in Scotland, decided on at last by the authorities at the Vatican, seems to have turned the heads of a good many people in North Britain, who, in all other things, are sensible enough. The Rev. Robert Thomson, of Wellpark Established Church, Glasgow, is reported to have sent something like a threat to the late Pope, that if the proposal were carried out, an interdict against it would be demanded from the Supreme Civil Court in Scotland. One wealthy gentleman is said to have offered £10,000 to contest the legality of the proceeding. The Glasgow Free Presbytery has passed a resolution on the dangers of this "aggression" to the civil and religious interests of the kingdom, and appointed a committee to consider what action should be taken in concert with other evangelical bodies on the subject. All this looks to us supremely ridiculous, inconsistent, and "unbelieving"—ridiculous, because the Roman ecclesiastical organisation will not be stopped by these childish alarms; inconsistent, because on the principle of religious liberty the Romanist has equal right with the Protestant to perfect his agencies in a free country like Scotland; "unbelieving," because if Protestantism is a truer form of religion than Romanism it may surely be trusted to neutralise and render innocuous whatever evil may inhere in the appointment of a few bishops to represent the Roman Church. To attempt to put down this step by enforcing the "penal laws against Popery" which still disgrace our statute books is of the very essence of Popery itself. And that parties and Presbyteries are now busy talking of such an attempt only proves how much of Popery still clings to Scottish Protestantism.

PORTUGAL TEACHING ENGLAND.

A letter from Oporto in the Allgemeine Zeitung throws light upon the circumstances which have led to a change of Ministry in Portugal. The D'Avila Ministry decided that the Lisbon Cemetery should belong exclusively to Catholics, and that non-Catholics must provide, or rather be provided with, a separate and distinct burial-place. The Liberal party contended that as Catholics and non-Catholics are alike Portuguese, and as the burial ground is given by the nation, a section or part of the people cannot have the right to claim and use it as its own peculiar property. A vote of want of confidence in the Ministry was proposed on the ground that in this and other matters they had truckled to the Ultramontane reaction. The motion was adopted, and now the Liberal and Reform party have been placed in power under the premiership of Fontes Pereira de Mello. The English House of Commons, in deciding to-night on Mr. Osborne Morgan's resolution, will fall far short of this example.

OUR SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

SYSTEMATIC RELIGIOUS TEACHING IN SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

ONCE more pass on to the Good Samaritan. He comes along and sees the wounded Jew and remembers he belongs to a people that were treated by the Jews with insult, and hatred. It would have been natural if the lower feelings of anger and dislike had risen, and made him say, "There is one of the hated race that have treated me and mine so oft with insult. Let him lie; let him die. There will be one enemy of our nation less. But not for a moment does he let such base feelings rest in his mind. And if Fear and the Love of Ease and Rest attempted to speak and persuade him to look after himself, they were instantly checked and the voice of Compassion for a fellow man only listened to. He goes to the wounded man, staunches the blood, and dresses the wound, reviving him with the cordial wine. He puts him on his own beast and brings him down to Jericho to an inn, where he stays with him, watching by his bedside, and on the morrow when he goes away he pays the innkeeper for his trouble, and bids him take care of the wounded man and spare no money for he would repay him when he came that way again. Now again, what do you think of the Good Samaritan. That he was truly good and noble. Why? Because he put down his over feelings and listened only to the higher. Try again if you have not made a mistake—if you cannot make yourself think and feel otherwise of the Good Samaritan. Cannot you, if you try hard, think he was soft, mean-spirited, contemptible, and that he would have been more worthy of praise if he had left the wounded man and taken care of himself like the Priest and the Levite. No; you cannot think so. Approval of the Samaritan and his conduct remain in your mind—something there will say the Samaritan was right and noble—however you may try to change it. You have no power over it; you cannot make it depart any more than you could make it come. And so it is every time your Conscience judges in your mind whether between your own feelings or the feelings of others, it is something above your power, above your will. You can tell many thoughts to come and go; you can call up the thought of a mountain or a high hill, of a tree or a wood, of a beast or bird, and dismiss the thought again, but you have no power over the Conscience, you cannot make it come or go. It is like the wind blowing where it listeth; you know not whence it cometh or whither it goeth. Thus you see in Conscience you feel yourself close to a Power which is above your power, stronger than your power, independent of your power. Though in your mind, it seems above the Mind. What is this Power? It is, I have no doubt that it is, the same as the Great Power that fills and rules all the universe. For there is a Power that fills and rules the universe. We see wonderful things going on around us. The clouds are brought from the sea. The rain drops are brought down to the earth. The herbs and trees are built up particle by particle from little seeds; the insects and the birds and fishes are built up too from seeds or eggs, and a thousand other things are continually done. We can see no hand doing them, but God has put an inspiration or intuition into our mind, an intuition of Reason, which tells us and makes us believe that there is, there must be a Power, though invisible to us; and when we go on to ask our Minds what they mean by saying there is a Power it means there is a Power of Mind, like the Power of our Mind, which we call Will. So then our Minds tell us a Great Power of Mind, i.e., a Great Mind fills the universe; in the same way it tells us that a Great Power of Mind rules us in Conscience. And there is no doubt that the Great Power which rules us in Conscience is the same Great Power that fills the Universe. We call that Great Mind-Power, God. T. E. P.

THE COMMUNION SERVICE.

BY THE REV. E. C. TOWNE.

THE design with which this subject is taken up here is to restore the Communion Service to the interest of the entire congregation, by bringing it back to a form and spirit conformed to the example and teaching of Christ. After more than one experiment the writer has found that the service may be made, not a neglected ceremonial, but a festival of consecration and thanksgiving, more fully attended than any ordinary service. In the first experiment, with a small American congregation, where for forty years the service had been sinking into contempt, and only three or four persons took part in it, the immediate results of an effort of restoration were exceedingly impressive occasions, in which more than average congregations joined. A second trial, on English ground, has proved not less satisfactory, the service being participated in by a congregation more numerous than had been present for some weeks at an ordinary service, although most of the circumstances were less favourable than they are found in most churches.

But this result is not to be looked for, in the judgment of the writer, unless the congregation are made to clearly understand that the service is not to be taken as a memorial solemnity, dedicated to Christ, as if somehow Christ were to have worship of an historical and occasional sort, but is to be expressly and solely taken as a festival of consecration and thanksgiving dedicated to God our Father according to the spirit, example, and teaching of Christ, who said, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind;" and "Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and Him only shalt thou serve;" and whose only rule for religion was to hallow this one name of God our Father when we pray, and to look up to His character when we seek to be perfect, having this as our supreme assurance—that the pure in heart shall see God.

The primitive apostolic departure from Christ's perfectly pure theism brought a change over the record we have and the form and thought of the communion service; so that a real restoration of breaking of bread as it was in the hands of Christ, and as conformity to his truth demands that it should be, will compel us to extricate the symbol from the traditions which had got possession in even Paul's day, and some of which evidently originated with Paul. The task is not a hopeless one, but it calls for a vigorous Christian consciousness, after the original pattern of Christ himself, pure from the utterly wrong sense which made disciples call Christ "Lord" instead of learning his lesson of service of God, and to which in Peter, when the zealous disciple was eager to serve him as a "Lord" who need not die a martyr, Christ had to say: "Thou art my stumbling-block; for thy thoughts are not on the things of God, but on those of men." Until we can put away every faintest trace of Peter's stumbling-block Messianism, and can get to Christ's ground of theism pure and simple, it will avail nothing to try to make communion true to Christ's example, and teaching, and spirit. This means some faithful critical work, but even the best doing of this would fail without a pronounced return of the entire mood of devotion to the mind of Christ.

It stands first in importance, therefore, to present the communion service as dedicated to God our Father, and appealing, precisely as our ordinary service, to common feelings of worship and consecration, only with the special emphasis of an extraordinary occasion, so that, to properly carry it out, our conduct of it and our attendance upon it should exceed rather than fall short, and the days of communion should be days of high, joyous, solemn festival, when most of all the congregation will present themselves, and when especially they will go to them that are without and compel them to come in.

It is to be made clear that our communion, though concerned with Christ as martyr-teacher, example, and historic sacramental symbol, laid before us in history as the bread is laid before us on the communion table, is no further concerned with him, any more than it is with the mere bread of the symbol, or with the minister, but is essentially and supremely concerned with God, unto whom we seek to bring special thanks, and with God's present service, in purity of heart and love of one another, to which we specially strive to recall ourselves. If, for instance, some high stress of present devotion and duty carried all before it, and there were no incidental recall of the name of Christ, there would not be in this any real failure of the service, although naturally the gracious memory would come in, as in the thickest battle soldiers somehow remember to keep the colours in view, although it is not by them that the real work is done. The usual service is one of memory chiefly, almost as useless as a parade of the colours when nothing but a sentimental show is intended; and it is naturally neglected. The attempt made by some to piece out a reality by making a memorial service for historical benefactors generally, or for memories that are dear to us, does not escape the objection of making the incidental suffice, while the essential is left out. No real religion, least of all that of Christ, in his own pure teaching, separate from the errors and mistakes of the disciples, can make historical memories the substantial part of regular religious service, especially regular festival service, which assumes to stand apart as of peculiar, profound significance. To bring out more fully and clearly this fundamental Christian ground of communion, it will be of use to arrange a calendar of communion for the year, and show how each of half a dozen occasions may be given a special meaning and place, to form a practical Christian year.

(To be continued.)

CONGREGATIONAL SINGING.

(From the Cornhill Magazine.)

LET no reader suppose that there is any cheap and easy road to excellent congregational music. It cannot be had without expense, pains, time, patience, toil, perseverance, and culture. These are the price of superior and delightful congregational singing, and any congregation paying this price will get the advantage of impassioned, powerful, polished, and sustained vocal music; for it may be safely said, as a general truth, that the difference between the singing in St. Paul's Cathedral and in the village choir is one of culture and expense. Good organs, with the sweetness and firmness of subdued power, are not difficult to obtain; and so the harsh, hard, and brassy tones are more easy to avoid. There is much more difficulty with the player than with the instrument. If good organists were as plentiful as good organs, the churches might consider themselves as entering into a musical millennium. The one thing needful in the organists of the present day is not execution. The one thing lacking to so many of them is taste and judgment. It is no uncommon thing for a minister to stand before an organist who works off his tunes like a horse in a mill, without the slightest regard to the sentiment of the hymn, the tune that would be suitable for it, or the speed at which the music should be taken. According to mechanical organists, the funeral hymn and the psalm of joyful adoration must be taken exactly at the same speed, and the same time will do for either of them. Wherever an organist of this mechanical and intractable class is master, the congregational singing is ruined. The production of the best possible congregational singing is impossible without the selection of the most suitable music. Congregations are not exclusively composed of musical artists and highly-educated musicians, and they never will be. Put together in one place of worship the choirs of St. Paul's Cathedral and Westminster Abbey, and let their only congregation be the professional singers in London; let these meet together for worship on the Sabbath day; what music would they choose? Certainly they would never choose as their only psalmody some most difficult, elaborate, and highly-ornamental music, which too many provincial choirs murder in vain attempts to execute it, not for the good of the congregation, but for the glorification of themselves. Such a service of vocal artists as we are thinking of in London would be distinguished by the simple grandeur and stately reverence of its music. Let any one of the first vocal artists of the day have the choosing of the music for an ordinary congregation, and his first and only consideration would be which tunes will be best suited for united worship, which music comes best within the reach of all the people, and which time will be most likely to unite them all in one melodious burst of praise. The music ought to be selected, not for the gratification of the organist or a few vain amateurs, but for the hearty reception and the musical quickening of all the congregation. The constant introduction of new tunes is a practice very injurious to congregational singing. The people have not time to learn them, nor do they see the necessity for burdening their memory with a superfluous mass of music. It is not difficult for the organist and choir, with the music books open before them, to execute new tunes for their own pleasure; but their pleasure is not the chief end of vocal music; their only delectation ought to be in helping the congregation to sing, and this end can never be gained by constantly changing the music. Considering the limited musical attainments of congregations generally, and the little time they can give to united practice, it is far the best to keep almost absolutely to one set of tunes, and we may rely upon it, there never can be more than two tunes suitable for any one given hymn. When tune and hymn are suitably wedded to each other, and never separated, they recall each other, and are most helpful to the soul in the service of song.

Many people who are accustomed to an organ in public worship have never seriously formulated to themselves what the use of it is, or ought to be. Definite ideas and convictions of the right use of the organ in worship are needful for its highest use and best received utility. The function of the organ in relation to the voices of the congregation is to sustain them, to lead them, and to blend them. The tendency of a body of voices when singing is to drop, become flat, and to fall into lower notes. This phenomenon has been proved again and again, and the members of any family may easily test it for themselves. Strike a chord, and let several persons commence singing from it, and after they have sung several verses without being accompanied by the instrument; strike the same chord again, and you will find that the voices have fallen half a note or a note, probably a note and a half if the singers are uncultured. The organ prevents this falling tendency, because it supplies a platform of sound upon which the voices may rest, and they cannot even force themselves below the plane without harshness, discord, and all the disagreeable sounds of being out of tune. Congregations sing without notes, without marking time, and have only the ear to guide them. Under these circumstances they cannot be kept together, unless they have someone to guide them, and this is what the organ and choir should do. The melody should be so strongly marked by the organist that the congregation cannot mistake it as it is interpreted to them by the organ and the leading singers. Some organists get such a handful of chords that it is next to impossible to tell what tune they are playing, and even the choir find it difficult to be sure of the air and mark it distinctly. A skilful organist will remember that his chief duty is not to show how many notes his hands and feet can bring out of the instrument at once, but how he can keep the congregation to the right time and tune; and if he is firm and judicious he will mostly succeed. The practice of playing over the air before the singing begins is excellent, only some organists defeat the purpose of it by drowning the air in the multiplicity of chords. The organist should always keep to a suitable speed, and the choir and congregation should take the time entirely from him.

It may not be out of place to note some of the blemishes and defects of choir-singing as they have been sometimes painfully realised through a long and various course of observation. It is no easy matter so to subdue the pride and individuality of choir-singers as to induce them to blend their voices together. Each, in some instances, seems inclined to make his part separate and independent from all the rest; and so it sounds not like twenty voices flowing into one common result, but twenty voices with twenty independent results. The toute ensemble of the choir and congregation voices is a prime essential for superior congregational song. When all the voices mingle and unite in producing one strain of sound the intonation is perfect. The individual voices still give colouring to the whole, but the individual distinctness is not detrimental to the intermingling. This excellent effect cannot be produced without study and practice. The singers should try to sing into each other's voices, so that there may be unity and sympathy of tone. There are choir-singers who imagine that this unity comes as a matter of course. They do not practise together, they are not used to each other's voices, and when they pass into the performance of their music on the Sabbath their rendering of it is marked, not by the blending and interfusion of voices, but by that multitudinous and separate enunciation of sound which makes the true musicians feel that the organ is vainly trying to blend a number of incohesive, self-willed, and antagonistic notes. Very often in country choirs and congregations one or two singers appear to be determined to set up for themselves. They are anxious that their voice should be heard separately from all the rest, and this they easily accomplish if their voice is at all strong. They give their voice what is called "a sort of twang," or unusual flavour, to the delight of their own vanity and to the disgust of all educated musicians. This unenviable distinction is generally gained by purposely singing out of time; either too flat or too sharp, as the case may be; or perhaps both in turn for a change. These peculiar "twangs" are out of place in worship, and whatever gratification of individual vanity they may bring, they ought to be put down for the sake of art and reverence.

Much more might be got out of the Sunday schools for congregational and choir singing, with a little pains and good judgment. There are sweet singing voices in every Sunday school, and if they were only picked out and carefully trained would be of great use. Every Sunday school should have a singing-class for occasional practice on a week-day. It would not cost much of expense or labour to raise the general character of Sunday school-singing, and this would tell beneficially, though indirectly, on the congregations. The Sunday-school anniversary is a fine opportunity for the scholars. They take great interest in it, and are often very diligent in getting up their music for it. Boys and girls can be greatly interested in public singing on the Sabbath, as is evident in their diligence and eagerness in relation to the Sunday School Anniversary. . . . [About the worst use a congregation can make of a choir is to leave it to do the singing for the people. To say nothing of human worship by proxy, the congregation which leaves the choir to do all the singing misses many advantages. Yet this is too often the case, and in some quarters increasingly so. In too many places of worship, the work of the choir is becoming a separate and independent performance, and the body of the congregation look on with indifference or listen with interest, as the case may be. You may call it a Sunday concert in the house of God, but never call it congregational worship, when the people pay little heed to the singing and take little personal part in it.]

Familiarity with many congregations, and their ways of singing, enables one to sketch with passable accuracy some of the faults to be avoided. If the place were not sacred, it would be highly amusing to listen to the grotesque attempts made to extemporise parts or "seconds," as they are called, in the congregational singing. You may be listening gravely enough, and the music may be going quite steadily, when all of a sudden somebody near you breaks out with a little solo of his (it is generally the men that do it) own; and before you can recover your surprise the ludicrous little solo has done its work by gratifying the vanity of its author, who immediately submerges himself in the general sound. On one occasion, when Sir William Fairbairn was in France, he had to explain to his host the nature of home-brewed ale. In the course of the same visit he was asked to perform on the violin, when he astonished the party by giving them his best tune, "The Keel Row." It was a wretched performance, and the excited host, unable to bear it any longer, exclaimed in broken English, "Top, top, Monsieur; egad that be home-brewed music." How much better it would be if the extemporising soloists in the House of God would keep their "home-brewed music" to themselves. Grace notes are great favourites with many amateur musicians, and the taste for them needs to be kept under very severe restraint. Turns, shakes, and cadenzas are well enough as put down by the author of the music, and in the execution of great artists are sometimes enchanting, but for ordinary organists to be quavering, trilling, turning, and shaking is to distract attention and spoil the music by breaking in upon its steady, plain, and progressive harmony. Yet who has not been annoyed by the unreasonable grace-notes of the organist in the gallery and the singer in the pews. There are organists, choirs, and congregations to whom most of these strictures would only slightly apply; but the vocal worship of all popular assemblies would be greatly improved by increased and more intelligent attention to the true art of singing; and to stimulate this we have written with no unkindness, and with every good wish for the prosperity of the art and the happiness of those concerned in it. Even in a human point of view there are few influences more refreshing than those of good congregational psalmody. It has been our happy fortune, though, alas! not often, to be elevated and charmed by beautiful congregational singing.

The tune was suitable to the words; no voice made itself heard by disagreeable distinction from the rest; the voice notes and the organ notes flowed into each other, and, blending together, rolled on in one sweet, strong, full, and liquid stream of song; and as we felt the firmness and precision of the music, and watched the delicate shadings of expression, as the compact and polished tones were poured through their finished course, we could not help exclaiming, would that every organist and choir and congregation were equally successful in art and refined in musical taste.

FIRESIDE READINGS.

CHARITY.

"The blessings which the poor and weak can scatter
Have their own season. 'Tis a little thing
To give a cup of water; yet its draught
Of cool refreshment, drained by fevered lips,
May give a shock of pleasure to the frame
More exquisite than when nectarin juices
Renew the life of joy in happiest hours.
It is a little thing to speak a phrase
Of common comfort, which by daily use
Has almost lost its sense; yet on the ear
Of him who thought to die unmourned 'twill fall
Like choicest music; fill the glazing eye
With gentle tears; relax the knotted hand
To know the bonds of fellowship again."

TALFOURD

CONFUSION IN THE WORKSHOP.

YES, sad to relate, there was confusion in the clerical workshop. Tools designed to work together in harmony were, instead, grumbling and fault-finding, if not, indeed, actually set by the ears.

Bishop Blacksmith smote his forehead in despair, as he looked on his diocese, and heard the angry clatter of discussion concerning the great questions of the day, while all Carpenterdom was engaged with equal violence upon the methods of individual labour.

"I contend," exclaimed the profound Rev. D. D. Auger, "that Brother Plane is superficial in his work. He makes a great flourish of shavings, but does not go beneath the surface. I have no patience with him. I believe in going to the depth of things."

"Yes, you do bore one so," whispered a stupid little blockhead, with a yawn.

"I acknowledge," said the Rev. Forcible Hammer, "the depth of your wisdom, and I admire your penetration; but you must confess your powers of influence are limited to a very small circle."

"Stop, stop, Brother Hammer," cried Deacon Tenpenny Nail; "I grant you make a great noise in the world; but my experience is that your performance affects only the head, after all."

Little Gimlet, a preacher of very small calibre, here put in a feeble protest against the surface-work so badly prevalent. He did not think that there was much heart-work accomplished by all this excitement and noise.

A couple of old saws put their heads together ominously, while one mumbled to the other through his broken teeth:—

"I have long been dissatisfied with the state of things in this workshop. In my day the motto was 'Slow and sure.' I went to work on a log of wood, not expecting to convert it in a minute into a pile of lumber. Back and forth, through and through, I tore away, until every fibre yielded; but it was tough work, and very slow. Now-a-days, it seems to me, you just turn a crank, hear a shriek, see a puff, and the thing is done."

"Well, now, Father Saw, we are not talking about old times," said pert, bright Brother Chisel. "We have heard all you have to say on that subject over and over again. The question of to-day is, 'Which is the best mode of working?' or, rather, 'What is it that is lacking in our most active instruments?' The Rev. Mr. Hammer has been severely criticised; but I have worked under his directions a great deal, and I must say that his style is powerful, and his arguments convincing. Every blow tells."

At this juncture, Horseshoe, a lay member of St. Anvil Church, stepped in, and entered into the contest:—

"I have felt the full power of Mr. Hammer's arguments, but I acknowledge I have been more benefited by the influence of Brother Bellows. It is warmth that is required to melt the heart which will not yield to force. Where should I have been were it not for the fire and fervour which he brings to the work?"

There arose a general cry for Mr. Bellows, which puffed up that functionary considerably.

Forgetting where he was, and the inflammatory nature of his audience, he cried out with enthusiasm:

"Ah, yes! Could we but have a forge in every workshop, could the fire of zeal but spread, what might we not accomplish! Warmth, warmth, is all that is needed."

Professor Grindstone, who had been listening with a somewhat contemptuous expression, turned around slowly upon this, and addressed the company. He had been engaged in sharpening the intellects of a class of young Hatchets of different grades of capacity. The dullness of some of these had exhausted his patience.

"Excuse me, gentlemen! Warmth is not all. If thoroughly effective work is to be done, more than mere fervour is required. I have had large experience, and have seen many sparks fly which did but light a little tinder. Acuteness, polish, culture in its widest sense, must contribute to the qualifications of every truly competent instrument. The times demand culture."

Upon this, Brother Screw, a circuit-rider, turned significantly upon Brother Vice, who was totally unpolished, but a faithful and successful worker.

"My plan," said Brother Vice, rather roughly, "is to get a good grip, and then hold fast. I seize upon everybody that comes in my way. As I draw them in, Brother Screw just turns around, and keeps them from slipping away. We work together."

"Yes!"—eagerly broke in Brother Plane, who had been taken aback by the remarks of the Right Reverend at the beginning, and now saw an opportunity to say a word for himself—"Yes! We believe in co-operation. When I see a subject in the grip of Brother Vice, I know that it is my time to work. You must confess that in smoothing away difficulties none of you excel me."

Friend Rule and friend Compass, who had kept their places on the bench in silence hitherto, now expressed a concern that none in undue zeal should go beyond proper bounds. As far as their memory served them, there was no instance on record of work prospering that was not in the line of duty. It must be clearly marked out.

"I am sure," soliloquised Brother Hammer, "I have fastened a nail in a sure place many a time without any such restrictions."

He seemed to forget for a moment the hand of the master builder that had controlled him.

Just at this juncture the "carpenter's son" entered his workshop. The talk among the tools ceased. No work had been going on during the discussion. But now, strange to say, the presence of their master brought vigorous and harmonious activity.

It was the model of a temple upon which he was engaged; and as it grew under his hand, each in turn, without remonstrance, took his part in the work assigned him. Saw and hammer, plane and chisel, vice and grindstone, dropped all distinctions, and yielded each to the other as his turn of service came. And thus, in time, under the skilful guiding and forming hand, the temple grew in beauty and strength unto perfection.—Ipswich Leaflet.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION: BOSTON, UNITED STATES.

WE have received from America the report read at the tenth annual meeting of the Free Religious Association, held at Boston last summer, and an account of the proceedings on that occasion. The report supplies, what appears to be a fair and candid resumé of the objects for which the association was established, its work during the ten years of its existence, and its present position and prospects. It also states and answers some objections that have been urged against the association. One or two extracts may enable readers who have not watched the progress of this vigorous offshoot of American Unitarianism, to ascertain what are its aims, and how it seeks to fulfil them. "The one central idea of the association may be easily defined as unrestricted liberty of thought in matters of religion. This is the one pivotal principle on which the association is organised. Its members may differ in everything else, but to this one thing—freedom of thought, uncompromising and absolute—they are committed." "This Association may certainly claim to have advanced the problem of religious liberty in this country to a new and most comprehensive issue. In abandoning the Christian name as the boundary of religious inquiry and fellowship, it has held up an ideal of freedom and unity in religion which has yet many triumphs to win in the future, but which is already familiarizing a good many people with a larger religious thought and aim than has been been previously furnished in their sects and creeds." Then follows a list of lectures delivered and pamphlets published under the auspices of the Association during the year, and the interesting statement that an "earnest call for its publications has been received from a member of the Brahmo Samaj, who is librarian of the Bungalow Literary Union," and who says "The interest of my friends is awakened, and they are pressing on me with eagerness for all your excellent tracts." The report concludes thus: "We are organised for an enterprise in religious progress and reform that will command the best energies of our lives, and needs our utmost consecration of purpose; a work which we shall not finish, but which will descend from us still incomplete to coming generations, but which our fidelity will make easier for all who come after us, and through which we shall honourably bless our race for all coming time. It is a work, indeed, as large as religion itself must needs be when thought is free to fathom its deepest problems, and life is free to follow its highest sanctions." An address on the need for the Association, and the spirit in which its work should be carried on, was delivered by the President, O. B. FROTHINGHAM; and a valuable essay on "Steps toward Religious Emancipation in Christendom" was read by Wm. R. ALGER.

Then the Rev. W. H. CHANNING gave a characteristic address, in which he discoursed of that spiritual and transcendental Christianity which he has evolved out of Dr. Channing's less mystical Unitarianism. The catholicity of the meeting was next illustrated by a Jew—Rabbi LASKER—addressing it on the free and spiritual aspects of modern Judaism. At a second sitting an essay, full of practical hints and warnings, on "Internal Dangers to Free Thought and Free Religion," was read by C. D. B. MILLS, and followed by some admirable remarks on the same topic by T. W. HIGGINSON, who said that whilst the Association asks the co-operation of theist, pantheist, materialist, atheist, it invites also the Mohammedan, the Jew, and the evangelical Christian—though two of the latter, the Rev. Joseph Cook and Phillips Brooks, had declined the invitation. The Rev. J. L. DUDLEY, D.D., the successor of Theodore Parker, also addressed the meeting in earnest words worthy of him whose place he occupies, and to whose congregation he preaches.

We regret that space does not permit us to give even a brief outline of these eloquent and deeply interesting essays and addresses, so full of valuable information, practical wisdom, and the widest charity. But we cannot conclude without saying that, though our British and Foreign Unitarian Association differs from the Free Religious Association of America in its retention of the Christian name, yet its aims are not less wide, nor its spirit less tolerant. It excludes no reverent man or woman willing to work for it, because he or she is more heterodox, or more orthodox, than those Unitarian ministers and laity who constitute the bulk of its members, and supply the Executive by which its affairs are conducted. Though etymologically the word Unitarian bears a doctrinal meaning, yet practically, in this country, it is becoming the synonym of Free Religion; in like manner as the name Presbyterian has ceased to denote amongst us those who adopt a certain form of church government, and is assumed by professors of a creedless and progressive theology inherited from the early Presbyterians, of whom they are descendants and representatives.

One of the hymns written for the occasion by Mrs. E. D. Cheney appeared in our poetical corner last week. G. B. D.

NEWS OF OUR CHURCHES.

NOTICE.—Our friends would oblige if they would kindly send their news paragraphs so as to arrive never later than Wednesday morning, otherwise we are compelled to cut them down.

BLACKPOOL.—On Monday evening last the usual fortnightly social party, which was given by Mrs. Ben Hulmes, took place in the little chapel. During the evening Mr. Marsden, who occupied the chair, made an urgent appeal to the sympathies and generosity of the congregation in aid of the distressed in South Wales, which resulted in the sum of £2.5s. being collected, which was forwarded to the Rev. R. J. Jones, Aberdare, together with an unanimous vote of sympathy to the Unitarians in the distress district.

HALIFAX: NORTHGATE-END CHAPEL.—On Thursday evening, the 7th inst., the annual business meeting of the congregation was held in the schoolroom, when the accounts for the year were read and passed. A letter from the Rev. F. E. Millson was read, noting various changes, &c., which had occurred since he became minister of the congregation. The election of officers for the next twelve months, and a resolution altering the time of morning service to 10.45, concluded the meeting.

HANLEY.—Unitarian services were commenced in this important town on Sunday afternoon last by the Rev. J. C. Williams. A good company assembled, and friends from Longton and Newcastle testified by their presence their interest in the establishment of a third congregation in this large and populous district. A good room in connection with the Mechanics' Institute has been secured, and the subscription promised by one of the friends in Hanley will meet the rental for one year. Regular Sunday afternoon services will be conducted by Mr. Williams, or, in his absence through other engagements, by one of the laymen in the locality.

LLWYNRHIDYD.—The Rev. W. Thomas, M.A., preached last Sunday without experiencing any bad result. The prospects of his early recovery are now very favourable.

LIVERPOOL: RENSCHAW-STREET CHAPEL SUNDAY SCHOOLS. The prizes to the scholars of these schools for 1877 were delivered on Friday evening last, by the Rev. Charles Beard. Previous to the distribution of the prizes, the children of both the day and Sunday schools, together with their teachers and parents were entertained with a fine lime light magic lantern kindly lent and exhibited by Mr. J. H. Ellerbeck. During the evening the children sang songs, under the guidance of their master, Mr. Calvely, which greatly enlivened the proceedings. After a short address from Mr. Beard, and a few words from the superintendent, Mr. George Eyre Evans, relative to a prize given at the request of the late Mr. John Parry, the meeting terminated at half-past nine.

LIVERPOOL: HAMILTON ROAD.—The annual tea party in connection with the Sunday school took place on Monday evening. After tea the scholars, with a good number of members of the congregation, met in the church, and the chair was taken by Mr. J. A. Green, superintendent, who gave a brief address. Several recitations were given by scholars; and subsequently the Rev. S. Fletcher Williams distributed the prizes to scholars who were entitled to them by regular attendance and good conduct, and the boys who form part of the church choir. The prizes consisted of a metronome for Master Richard Jones, who presides at the harmonium, and of books of history, science, and art, including a number published by our London Sunday School Association. Mr. J. Harrison also presented a Bible to the boys of his class. The usual votes of thanks were spoken to by Mr. Webb, Mr. J. Birkett, and Mr. J. Harrison, and the meeting closed with singing and prayer.

LEICESTER: FREE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.—The minister (Rev. J. J. Wright) and members of this church appear to be "full of good works," and to be especially addressing themselves to the interests of the young. In connection with the Church Calendar for February, they have issued an address "To All Well Wishers," in which they say:—"You may notice on our calendar that, in connection with the above church, there is held every Tuesday evening, a physiology class for mothers and daughters. We have also, on alternate Tuesday evenings, a literary class and a social union. By means of these classes we try to give the homeliest and most useful information touching the laws of bodily health; we seek by the study of standard literature to arouse and enrich the mind, and by well-directed conversation on some chosen topic to cultivate clear thinking and sound speech. You may be pleased to hear that these classes have proved highly successful. The interest does not flag, but is increasing; as a gain of this, our room has become too small. The attendance at the classes has been so numerous that our present room is cramped to uncomfortable and unhealthy excess. We need a larger room, and must have one, or suffer in our success. Happily the gallery (now unused) at the lower end of the church is at our disposal; a very little expense will make it into a neat, commodious meeting place. A week or two ago this desirable alteration was mooted, and at once taken up heartily by our young people and friends. About £9 was voluntarily subscribed; near £25 will be needed." To aid in raising this sum the Rev. J. Page Hopps, of the Great Meeting, gave a lecture on "The Gospel according to Malomet," in the church, on Tuesday evening last. At the close of the lecture a collection was made to help on the object in view.

LEEDS: MILL HILL CHAPEL.—The quarterly meeting of the Old Scholars Society took place on Monday, Feb. 11, in the Congregational Hall. After tea the Rev. Dendy Agate, B.A., was voted to the chair (in the absence of the Rev. C. Hargrove, president), and called upon Mr. W. Campbell to read a paper on "Competition a Cause of Pauperism." Mr. Campbell showed that while in this country we produced more wealth than we required, while in every trade there had been over-production, yet there was a vast amount of poverty. He did not refer so much to able-bodied paupers as to those hard-working poor who struggled for a bare living. And he traced this anomalous state of things to competition, which did not give the workman his due reward for his labour. A discussion followed, in which Mr. Wilberforce held that if every one were enabled to start life with equal advantages, some would rise above the average in a very short time. He suggested co-operation as the true remedy. Mr. Grosvenor Talbot thought the essayist favoured protection, for if competition were abolished free trade would be destroyed. The discussion was continued by Messrs. W. Child, H. Ines, Gamble, F. W. Orams, and others. The usual vote of thanks concluded the meeting.

LONDON, STAMPNEY: COLLEGE CHAPEL.—On Sunday, February 3rd, a forcible sermon on "The Eastern Question and its Lessons," was preached hereby Mr. Herbert Burrows, of Cambridge, whose views on this all-absorbing topic were thoroughly appreciated by a large congregation. Mr. Spears is now giving a course of theological lectures on Wednesday evenings, when the chapel is well filled by strangers, who evince great interest in the various subjects which are discussed; at the close of each lecture questions are invited and answered, and it is a sign of good feeling, that votes of thanks to the Lecturer are moved and carried by opponents.

LONDON, STRATFORD.—A Sunday evening course of special lectures are now being delivered in the Unitarian Chapel, Westham Lane. On February 3rd the lecturer was Mr. Herbert Burrows, of Cambridge, who took for his subject, "The True Christian Religion." The congregations, though small, are exceedingly earnest. A good work is being done here in various ways by Mr. and Mrs. Rix, the latter being especially active in connection with the Eclectic and other societies.

NORTHAMPTON.—Mr. Hopps' book of "Hymns, Chants, and Anthems" has been adopted by the committee for congregational use.

OXFORD: HERMITAGE SUNDAY SCHOOL.—The anniversary meeting of this school took place on Friday evening, the 8th inst. Above one hundred, including parents and scholars, sat down to tea, after which the Victoria Cross certificates and prizes for good attendance during the past year were distributed to fifteen children whose conduct had merited the distinction. Mrs. Morton addressed the parents upon the need of greater attention to the moral education of children through home influence and Sunday-school teaching, these being imperatively required to supplement the work of the day-school. After some kind words of encouragement from other friends, and several recitations and songs by the children, a magic lantern was exhibited, which had been kindly lent for the occasion. The proceedings were closed by the distribution of toys to the scholars and the singing of an anniversary hymn to the tune of the National Anthem, which was heartily joined in by all present.

POOLE.—The first social meeting of the season was held on Tuesday evening, the 12th inst. Upwards of seventy sat down to tea, which was provided by some of the ladies of the congregation, after which the company adjourned to the church to listen to an organ recital by the talented organist of Wimborne Minster, who had kindly volunteered his services for the occasion. The remainder of the evening was pleasantly passed in the schoolroom with music and readings, the latter being given by Mr. Pike, Mr. Sedgfield, and the Rev. W. Agar, late of Rimbod. The meeting was an undoubted success. All the friends seemed much pleased with their entertainment, and a goodly sum was realised towards the church fund.

PORTSMOUTH: ST. THOMAS-STREET CHAPEL.—On Sunday evening last the Rev. John Ellis preached a funeral sermon for Mr. Orange, who was a nephew of the late Dr. Beard. The preacher spoke of him—in his relation to his congregation—as a fellow worshipper, and an earnest, quiet, unassuming, industrious worker, ready at all times to do what he could for the good of all, and to make his religious home a home where all would feel welcome. He did not only attend, and sit and sing and listen; he brought his family with him, and took an interest in the management of affairs, and laboured with his hands as well as his head to make all comfortable, and to make the chapel attractive, especially when Christmas gave an opportunity for the exercise of his taste and skill in decorations. His frank, honest, open countenance, and his straightforward, good humoured, unmistakable utterances will not be forgotten by many of us. Mr. Orange was only 40 years of age, and has left a widow and four children, the youngest only six months old. He was highly esteemed by all who knew him.

SALE.—On Tuesday evening a concert was given in the Old School, in aid of the school funds, by the choir of the church. There was a large audience, and Misses A. Rawson, Lily Peck, M. C. Haslam, Wanstall, Collinge, Mrs. S. Chatt, Messrs. W. B. Collier, T. Shorrocks, E. Horkheimer, Barber, Talbot, Carruthers, and Nacken took part in the various pieces, which were satisfactorily gone through, especially the violin playing of Mr. Horkheimer.

SOUTH SHIELDS.—The anniversary sermons of Unity Church Sunday School were preached on Sunday, the 3rd instant, by the Rev. James Macdonald, of Sunderland, to good congregations. In the afternoon we had the children's service, and pieces were recited by some of the scholars, when there was a good muster. Collections were taken in behalf of the school funds, and were found to be satisfactory. On the following Wednesday evening the children had their anniversary tea party, which was followed by the exhibition of the magic lantern by Mr. James Downey, treasurer of the congregation.

TAUNTON.—On Thursday evening, a service of sacred song, illustrative of the life of Christ, according to the Scriptures from a Unitarian point of view, was given in the Mary-street Chapel, by the scholars attending the schools and the choir. There was a numerous congregation. The service was arranged, and the readings given, by the Rev. John Birks, pastor, the following subjects being enumerated:—Angel songs, birth and work, temptation, ministry, sermon on the mount, sayings of Jesus, the good shepherd, providence, future life, crucifixion and death, resurrection. Mr. G. Philpott presided at the organ, and his able and careful training of the children, together with the spirit, energy, and taste thrown into the musical part, contributed greatly to the success of the service. During the evening, the choir performed in good style Jackson's Deus Misericatur, in F flat, and also gave the service a closing effect, by their rendering of the Nunc Dimittis (Clarke in E). The service was repeated on Sunday evening, the congregation filling the chapel. Collections were made for day and Sunday schools.

CORRESPONDENCE.

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Letters, articles of intelligence, &c., should be addressed to the Unitarian Herald Office, New Cannon Chambers, 55, Market-street, and not to the private addresses of the Editors. No anonymous letters inserted: the writer of every letter must append his name for publication. No letter should be more than half a column.

ERRATUM.—In Dr. Lee's letter on "Authority" in Science, last sentence should read, "the School of the Scientific, or the Nursery of the Stomach."

We are requested to state that the sum of £1. 13s. credited to Mrs. Farrington for the South Wales Distress Fund, in the Herald of February 8, 1878, should be credited to Upper Brook-street Free Church Sunday School.

J. B.—Write to the Universalist, 37, Cornhill, Boston, U.S.A., and the editor will be able to supply any information you require. We are not aware whether any of their works are in the Manchester Free Libraries.

We have recently and on many former occasions received letters, articles, and poetry on the subject of Spiritualism, with what have been stated to be communications from the spirit world. The subject is one which we could not admit to our columns without a flood of controversy of a kind much more suitable for spiritualist journals.

N.W.—We hope no one has charged 2d. for the Herald.

A CITY UNITARIAN CHAPEL.

To the Editors.—Can you, or any of your readers, kindly inform me where I can obtain any information respecting the Unitarian Chapel which formerly stood in Carter Lane, Doctor's Commons, London? I do not know whether its history is published or not. Who were the ministers there when it was first established, and when the building was taken down? I think Dr. Hutton was one of the principal ministers there for several years.—I am, yours respectfully,

NATHANIEL WATERALL.

London, February 12th, 1878.

A UNITARIAN REQUIREMENT FOR MANCHESTER AND DISTRICT.

To the Editors.—I read in the Unitarian Herald of last week a letter about forming a kind of meeting-place or club in Manchester, the want of which we all know to be very much felt. I shall be very happy to help in any way in forming a place of this kind, and I know of suitable premises. They are quite central, and are at present in the occupation of a club; but, owing to some difficulties, they are going to give up in June, so that all the fixtures, kitchen things, &c.—in fact, the whole place—I think, would be just the thing for us. I shall be very glad, as I said before, to do all I can in forming the club, as I know the great want that is felt by all Unitarians for such a place, not only for strangers coming into town on Sundays, but for Unitarians who reside in or near Manchester going to concerts or meetings in the evenings. They entail so much expense by either going to a restaurant or an hotel, that a great many stop away. If you will kindly find space for this in your next issue, I think something will result.—Yours truly,

R. D. THOMSON.

Over Knutsford, Feb. 8, 1878.

To the Editors.—I was surprised at not seeing a response in last week's Herald to Mr. Reynolds' letter of Feb. 2nd and your leader of the same date. The charge of coldness, which he mentions, there is good ground for. I have myself been connected all my life with one of our oldest chapels, and yet hardly know a dozen of its members personally. Perhaps the reasons are those contained in your leader: want of social meetings, tea parties, &c.—means adopted largely by other religious bodies not only to cement their friendship but increase their numbers. I would propose, if Mr. Reynolds's scheme is successful, a kind of pioneer society in connection with it. Many of our friends, like myself, have to travel to various districts on business; in doing so they could easily find out where a church is needed. For instance, a tradesman with whom I do business in Droydsden, gathering from my conversation that I was a Unitarian, expressed his regret at not being able to attend one of our chapels, the nearest being at Gorton, and asked if I could bring the matter forward. Hearing the Rev. Joseph Freeston was expected at a meeting I wrote him, at my friend's request, to call and see him about it. Had there been an association such as Mr. Reynolds suggests the matter could have been talked over and perhaps something done long ago. I trust, therefore, it will be taken up at once, and not allow our children grow into adults whilst it is being thought of.—Yours, &c.,

Daisy Bank, Moston.

JAS. BARKER.

THE BOSNIAN FUGITIVES' RELIEF FUND.

Miss Mary J. Gibson desires to thank those who contributed through her to this fund, and asks us to insert the following letter:—

158, Leadenhall-street, 5th Feb., 1878.

Dear Miss Gibson,—In Mr. Boyle's absence it is a great pleasure to me to acknowledge the receipt of your cheque for £16, collected from readers of the Unitarian Herald for Miss Irby's and my sister's fund. It is very pleasant to see how all denominations of Christians have been able to work together in this truly noble, and at the same time very practical, scheme of beneficence.

Pray accept the warmest thanks of the two ladies.—Yours very faithfully,

ANDREW JOHNSTON,

Treasurer Bosnian and Herzegovinian Fugitives and Orphan Relief Fund.

OUR SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

To the Editors.—I had read with interest the various articles in your paper on "Our Sunday Schools," this being a time of much anxiety to the friends of those noble institutions. I have also read with pain the remarks of your correspondent whose children have left our body on account of the lack of warmth among us. I am constantly hearing similar complaints, and can suggest no remedy, but I can suggest a means which might have the effect of keeping some of our Sunday scholars with us, too many of whom, when they grow up, drift off to orthodox places of worship.

I suppose all of our schools have their annual treat in the country, which is the only glimpse of nature which many poor children enjoy. Something more is needed, however, to bind together teacher and taught, and I know of nothing better than for the teacher occasionally to ask the elder scholars to a friendly cup of tea. The experiment has been tried with the most gratifying results.

If he has but a small garden, they who have none enjoy walking round it. His books are looked over with delight, and as the shyness of his guests wears off, those of them who are in the singing class will sing, especially if there be a piano, and those who are in the elocution class will recite or read aloud. Then when all restraint has passed away the teacher can give kind advice or answer questions. Sometimes the pupils themselves make useful suggestions, and if they have among them a grievance, real or imaginary, it is stated, discussed, and lo! it vanishes into thin air. All this costs little, and how the young folks talk about it afterwards. People are too little aware how much happiness they may diffuse by means of a small outlay. Trusting that you will favour me by inserting this, I remain, yours respectfully,

A FOXALL.

Edgbaston, Birmingham, Feb. 11th, 1878.

SECTARIANISM AND CHARITY.

To the Editors.—Seeing that you have copied into your last issue an article with the above heading from the Western Mail, I am sure you will be glad to know that the accusation it brings against a very benevolent neighbour of mine—the head of the firm of Messrs. Hudson—is utterly without foundation in truth. Feeling satisfied that it was so, I sent Mr. Hudson a copy of the article in question, asking him for authority to contradict it. I had the pleasure this morning of receiving a note, which so entirely exonerates my neighbour from the charge of bigotry so lightly and unjustifiably brought against his firm, that I venture to ask your insertion of a portion of the letter, which you will at once see puts a totally different phase upon the matter. It is unfortunate when persons are so sensitive as to put uncharitable constructions upon the acts of others, and thus exhibit the very want of charity of which they accuse their neighbours. I hope the article was not written by any Unitarian. But whoever be the writer, I think it is due alike to your readers and to Mr. Hudson that, having given currency to the accusation, you should give equally currency to the refutation and explanation. And it is with this view that I wish to lay before your readers my neighbour's letter, even though he would personally take no notice of the matter. He writes:—"My dear Sir,—Your letter has been delivered to me this evening, and I sit down before going to bed to notice briefly the extract you have sent me from the Western Mail. The writer is evidently ignorant of the circumstances of the case about which he so grandiloquently discourses. In the first place he attributes to me a larger gift than I had the honour to make; and in the next place he charges me with a bigotry, I am most happy to know, I do not possess. I never meant, in the little act of assistance I sought to render, to embrace the whole population of Merthyr and adjacent districts, because a large fund was being formed from the liberal contributions of a generous public which would embrace almost all classes, at all events the most destitute and noisy. But knowing there must be a large class of Christian people who were probably living in deep poverty and not willing to make their condition known,

I sent to 50 ministers, of various denominations, printed books of orders for goods, to be taken to my customers (who are mainly grocers) who would supply tea, sugar, &c., and make their demand for payment of me in due course. For the names of the ministers I was dependent on the good offices of a gentleman who is a member of the relief committee. . . . With regard to the charge of my carefully excluding the Unitarian minister, I did not even know that there was one in Merthyr. Much less had I any design in excluding him from aiding me in the very little relief God inclined me to afford to my suffering brethren. I have written this much not in vindication of the course I adopted, nor with a view to answer the unworthy accusations of the newspaper writer. Being conscious of a purely benevolent motive, I can well afford to take no notice of it. I must, however, confess to you how very highly I esteem gentlemen of your persuasion. While I differ from the doctrines they teach, as personal friends and public characters I have ever had the greatest respect for them—indeed the most beloved, trusted, and intimate friend (not relative) I have is a Unitarian. . . . I am very much obliged for your kind offer to contradict the slander, but I think the best plan is to take no notice of it.—I am, yours faithfully,

R. S. HUDSON.

I would simply add that Mr. Hudson confidentially communicates to me a fact, which more than confirms all that he has said respecting his esteem and confidence towards Unitarians.—Yours, &c.,

J. K. MONTGOMERY.

[We have the greatest pleasure in inserting the above. That it is ever necessary for us to call attention to cases in which our co-religionists may have been placed out of the pale of Christians cannot but be painful to those who above all desire, like ourselves, that brethren should dwell together in unity.—Eds. U. H.]

BIRTHS.

ASHTON.—On the 11th inst., at Bignor-street, Cheetham, Manchester, the wife of J. E. Ashton, of a daughter.

THOMPSON.—On the 7th inst., at 6, Cathcart Hill, London, N., the wife of George C. Thompson, of a son, who only survived a few hours.

MARRIAGES.

BARKER—BROTHERS.—On the 12th inst., at St. Mildred's Church, Canterbury, Captain William B. Barker, 10th Hussars (late 16th Queen's Lancers), to Bertha, third daughter of George Brothers, of Canterbury.

LORD—ROBINSON.—On the 9th inst., at the Bank-street Chapel, Bury, by the Rev. Douglas Walmsey, B.A., William, youngest son of the late John Lord, to Hannah, eldest daughter of Richard Robinson, all of Bury.

WILSON—HAMMOND.—On the 6th inst., at All Saint's Church, Lewes, Francis Thomas Wilson, of Brighton, to Harriet Elizabeth, eldest surviving daughter of William Hammond, of Lewes.

SEABROOK—BOOTH.—On the 10th inst., at the Unitarian Chapel, Maidstone, by the Rev. E. R. Grant, Alfred Seabrook, of Sevenoaks, to Elizabeth Ann Booth, daughter of Mr. Benjamin Booth, of Maidstone.

DEATHS.

BROWN.—On the 9th inst., at 219, Plymouth Grove, Manchester, David Brown, late of Holly Bank, West Gorton, in his 77th year.

DORE.—On the 7th inst., at Collyhurst-street, Manchester, Herbert, the son of Joseph and Alice Dore, aged two years and ten months.

COMING WEEK.

LONDON: STAMFORD-STREET.—For the next few Sundays this congregation will worship at the Chapel, Earl-street, London Road, Newington.

LONDON: UNIVERSITY HALL.—On Wednesday, third lecture by Professor Drummond. Subject: "Criticism of Schleiermacher's Definition of Religion."

LIVERPOOL: KIRKDALE.—On Tuesday evening, lecture by the Rev. S. Fletcher Williams, in the Masonic Hall, Westminster Road, Kirkdale, on "The Doctrine of the Blood of Christ."

MANCHESTER: ARDWICK.—On Sunday afternoon, meeting of teachers, when Mr. James Bradley will read a paper on "Discipline in our Sunday Schools."

STOURBRIDGE.—On Sunday evening, a lecture by the Rev. M. Gibson, on "The Name Emmanuel (God with us) as applied to Christ."

STOCKPORT.—The Rev. Jas. Black will lecture, on Sunday evening, on "Lord Shaftesbury and the Bible Critics."

THE Boston Pulpit being now Vacant, SUPPLIES for short periods are Wanted.—Apply to THOS. MEGGITT, Secretary.

THE PULPIT of the Unitarian Church, Stockton-on-Tees, will be Vacant after the 31st March.—Applications to M. HEAVISIDE, Secretary, Finkle-street.

TO Estate Agents, Auctioneers, &c.—The Advertiser, who is thoroughly acquainted with the business, seeks a PARTNERSHIP in an old-established firm.—Address A. Y. B., 10, Smith Square, Westminster, S.W.

LONDON: SHIRLEY'S TEMPERANCE HOTEL, 37, Queen's Square, Bloomsbury. Beds from 1s. 6d. Plain Breakfast or Tea, 1s. 3d.

RUPTURES.—Exhibition Prize Medal, 1862. Was awarded to R. WESTBURY, inventor and sole maker of the IMPERFECTIBLE CURATIVE TRUSS.

Deformity Instruments, Artificial Limbs, Crutches, Elastic Stockings, and Ladies' Supporting Belts, Chest Expansors for round shoulders, &c., 26, Old Millgate, Manchester.

THE DINNER SHERRY.

24s. PER DOZEN.

The season of the year having arrived when light wines, so agreeable in warmer weather, give place to those of a more generous character, we beg to draw attention to the above wine. For years we have given great attention to keep up and improve its quality, and those who require a delicate, clean-flavoured sherry, free from spirit, we submit it with confidence, and ask comparison with wine usually sold at 30s.

A considerable saving can be made taking Quarter-cask, 27 gallons, at 47s. 5s. 1/2 cask included.

Octave, 13 gallons, at 67s. 5s. 1/2 cask included.

Samples can be tasted. Price list of 32 Sherries and other Wine free by post.

JAMES SMITH & COMPANY, Wine Merchants, 26, Market-street, Manchester; also at Liverpool and Birmingham.

Printed for the Proprietors by WILLIAM EVANS, of Apley Villa 377, Waterloo Road, Cheetham Hill, at his Printing Office, No. 3, Cross-street, Parish of Manchester; and Published by JOHN JULLIENS, at New Cannon Chambers, 55, Market-street, in said Parish of Manchester.—London Agents: Messrs. Smart and Allen, 2, London-house Yard, Paternoster Row.—Friday, February 15, 1878.

DOINGS AND SAYINGS.

The Conclave brought its labours to a close on Wednesday. Cardinal Pecci, who has ruled the Vatican, in his quality of Camerlengo, since the death of Pius IX., was elected, and assumed the title of Leo XIII.

There is a remarkable statement made in the letter of the Times correspondent at Rome, Mr. Gallenga—that though Cardinal Manning is now one of the most violent irreconcilables, only two years ago he so warmly approved of Father Curci's views as to incur the extreme displeasure of Pius IX. The Pope ordered Cardinal Franchi to address to Cardinal Manning a letter of very severe condemnation, after which the English cardinal changed his policy and became an inveterate Ultramontane.

The leading London preachers are getting more and more into the habit of preaching on the leading political events of the day. Three well-known men preached on the late Pope on Sunday. Dean Stanley at the Abbey, Mr. Haweis at his own church in Westminster-street, and Canon Robinson (one of the three education commissioners) at Streatham. This is a very laudable practice; yet there are some preachers who would condemn it. They think that the capture of Ai is of far greater interest and importance than the siege of Constantinople, the wars of Joshua than the Russo-Turkish war, and Adonizedek than Pius IX. Some of the Low Church party surmount the difficulty by connecting the events now passing with the prophecies. They treat as secular and wholly unfit for the pulpit an event described as having happened, but as spiritual and edifying when described as about to happen. Daniel and the Apocalypse are lawful but not the Times and the Daily News.

The Division List on the burials question shows that no fewer than 13 Conservative members voted with Mr. Osborne Morgan. But what is most significant is the large number of Conservative abentions. To the urgent whip only 244 responded, which is about 100 short of the total strength of the party. Still, the smallness of the majority was unexpected by Mr. Osborne Morgan. He had hoped to reduce it below last year's figures, and thought by great good luck he might bring it down to 20, but that was the limit of his hopes. The question now stands on the best possible footing for the Liberal party. They can point to an adverse majority of only 15 in a Conservative House of Commons, and to a vote in their favour in the Upper House; at the same time the matter is left over till the next general election, and will be of immense assistance to the party whenever that event takes place.

The False Loons!—At the late meeting of the London Presbytery, Dr. White submitted a motion proposing nothing less than that a letter should be addressed to the Presbyterian Churches of Scotland and Ireland remonstrating strongly upon the very small number of the Scotch and Irish-born Presbyterians settling in London who join the Presbyterian Churches in the metropolis. In a clear and exceedingly able speech, bristling with figures, Dr. White said he believed the desertion—the almost entire desertion—by Scotch and Irish Presbyterians settling in England has never been exceeded and rarely equalled in the history of any Church since the foundation of Christianity itself. While to-day they had fifty congregations in London (including six Established Presbyterians), but for this falling away from the faith of the fathers they would have 250 with 208,000 members and adherents. They had not made an inroad upon a solitary individual, and leaving out of the question their “sheepstealing,” the desertion by Presbyterians was almost complete. If they had now all the Scotch and Irish Presbyterians in England they would have upwards of 13,000 congregations instead of the 260 which they possessed to-day. When Presbyterians crossed the Border or the Channel they just rolled up the blue banner, and by a regular somersault leaped into the very Church of Claverhouse and Laud, or that of some other denomination. They should make no alteration as a Church under these circumstances, and if the good ship Presbyterianism went down in the waves of England, let them be prepared to go down with it, the blue banner floating over them. Prof. Chalmers and Dr. Fraser took a more hopeful view, and Mr. Turnbull thought Dr. White had underestimated the figures. The matter was eventually referred to the Church Extension Committee.

On Monday evening sermons were preached in thirty-four churches of the Church of England, in Manchester and the neighbourhood, on the subject of “The Christian Priesthood.” These sermons were not connected with or under the auspices of any society, but were the result of a voluntary agreement on the part of a large number of the clergy. At most of the churches there were large congregations. The preachers, one and all, disclaimed the idea of a sacrificial priesthood. At Christ Church, Salford, the Rev. T. A. Stowell, said:—

The simple question at issue was, what were the clergy? Were they possessors of certain mysterious powers and awful prerogatives which separated them from the laity? Were they priests who exercised at will the tremendous power of absolution, and who could offer sacrifices for sin? Or were they ministers set by Christ to preach the Gospel, solemnly set apart for the work by those who had public authority given unto them to call men into the Lord's vineyard? The former view was that of the Church of Rome and of a certain school—not legitimately—of our own Church. The latter, he ventured to assert, and undertook to prove, was that of Holy Scripture and the Church of England alike. He maintained that the ministers of the Church of England had no sacerdotal functions, and quoted the words of Professor Lightfoot that the Kingdom of Christ had no sacerdotal priesthood. It interposed no sacrificial tribe or class between God and man, by whose intervention alone God was to be reconciled and man forgiven; but each individual could go to the Divine Head, to whom immediately he was responsible, and from whom directly he obtained pardon and drew strength.

At Sacred Trinity Church, Salford, the Rev. Capel Wolseley said he did not deny that he was a priest, but he held that the meaning of the word as used to denote one of the orders of the ministry of the Church of England was not a sacrificing priest, but simply a presbyter or elder. The calling of the communion table an “altar” carried with it the idea of a sacrificing priest, and a sacrificing priest gave the idea of a man situated far above his neighbours and having powers which for himself (the preacher) he did not profess to hold, and would be sorry to have anything to do with. In the early Christian Church there was no attempt made to get up a fresh offering for sin. Their worship was formed on the model of the synagogue service, and here was the hinge of the whole mistake. The great mistake in this matter was in the belief that the Christian Church was to take as its model the service of the Temple, with its magnificent vestments and the sacrificing of the priest. In the synagogue there was no altar and no sacrificing priest.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

DRUNKENNESS IN GLASGOW.

Speaking at a meeting of the Glasgow Foundry Boys' Religious Society on Tuesday week, Canon Farrar characterised Glasgow as “one of the most drunken, if not the most drunken, city in a country which is one of the most drunken, if not the most drunken, in the world.” This may or may not be true, but could only be known to Canon Farrar by hearsay. Such denunciations of particular places, especially when made without actual personal knowledge, do little good. The grand thing to point out is, not where drunkenness most abounds, but how it can best be prevented.

A LECTURER AND HIS CRITIC.

The Rev. C. C. Macdonald, minister of the South Church, Paisley, has inaugurated a series of lectures in his church, taking for his subject “The Poet Tannahill.” Mr. Macdonald, who delivered the same lecture on a Sunday evening a few months ago, stated at the close that he had received an anonymous letter concerning it, which showed how possible it was for presumptive piety to be associated with the grossest ignorance and injustice. The writer of the letter said:—“I was not in the South Kirk on Sabbath evening week, but I hear that the secret [sic] place was the scene of the grossest profanity ever heard of in a Christian land. You profess to be a minister of the gospel, collecting around you a congregation of thoughtless persons, to listen to the rehearsal of the secular songs, and the profane rhymes of a wicked man, and even a suicide.” Mr. Macdonald said, that if the writer was present, perhaps he would go home and read Tannahill's “Zealot.” He had preserved the letter as belonging to the sort of things they put into the Museum—curiosities. It showed that Holy Willie was still alive. He would like to know if there was anything in any one of those beautiful lyrics of Tannahill that could do harm to anybody, by being sung in a church? If they did, his audience must be constituted on a different psychological principle from what he was. He would only like to get hold of his friend, the writer of the letter, and to get six Paisley weaver poets, representatives of Tannahill, who would duck him in a horse pond. What a pity Mr. Macdonald should have spoiled all that went before with his finishing remarks! It may be they were spoken in pure fun, but we are rather too near the days of actual persecution for theological opinion to be quite sure of this. The old leaven is still in some degree with us, though it shows itself sometimes in new shapes, and in unwonted connections. Is it too much to say that there are those yet amongst us who, if they dared, would use a horse pond to punish those who are as much in advance of Mr. Macdonald in theological position, as he is of his “Holy Willie” correspondent?

BELFAST.—On Sunday night week the Depository, 33, Donegall-street, was broken into by burglars. The police made the discovery shortly before midnight. It was found on searching the premises that entrance had been effected by forcing a back door, and thence into the shop. Most of the cash had been removed on Saturday night,—all, indeed, with the exception of 14s., a post-office order, and some 5s. worth of stamps. These were all taken, together with some few pounds' worth of Bibles and various articles on sale. At present no trace has been discovered either of the perpetrators or the property stolen.

AMERICAN NOTES.

THE WASHINGTON CHURCH JUBILEE.

Seldom, says the Christian Register, have services of dedication or installation assembled a happier or more unanimous company than that which met in Washington on Tuesday, January 29th, on the occasion of the dedication of the new Unitarian church and the installation of the Rev. Clay MacCauley as its pastor. The cordial invitation of the Washington society, issued to all the Unitarian churches, was answered in person by over one hundred delegates. Distance did not prevent the attendance of several zealous down-Easters and far-Westers, for from Bangor and Belfast came Rev. Messrs. Knapp and Bixby, and from St. Louis and Cincinnati Rev. Messrs. Snyder and Wendte. The external appearance of the church, which is of pressed brick with brown-stone facings, is handsome and substantial, not grand, but with a certain quiet elegance and symmetry of proportions which satisfies every reasonable expectation. The wood work is of ash finished with black walnut. At the pulpit end of the church is the pulpit, of black walnut, in semi-circular form, low, and approached by three or four steps. On the left is the organ, of thirty-nine stops, an instrument of beautiful tone and ample power. On the right stands the baptismal font, simple but tasteful in form,—the gift of a lady. On the three blue panels of the eastern wall are appropriate texts of Scripture in gilt letters. Every seat in the church but one commands a view of the preacher. At night the church is well lighted by a large central chandelier—more patriotic than ecclesiastical in its style of decoration,—and by brackets arranged around the walls. More grateful, however, to the senses of the modern minister than all besides, is the beautiful and commodious chapel adjoining the church, with its minister's study, church parlour, kitchen, and all the other conveniences of a well-planned church to-day. This chapel measures twenty-seven by forty-six feet, and is supplied with folding-chairs for three hundred persons. Unquestionably, the most striking feature about the new church is that it is paid for. Incredible as this sounds, it is none the less a delightful, encouraging fact. There have been many larger, more elegant, more pretentious churches erected within the past ten years; but we know of none so good for the money expended as this one. The lot cost 19,500 dollars; the building about 45,000 dollars; or say 65,000 dollars in all. There seemed to be but one feeling among the delegates, and that was one of entire satisfaction at the result of this last denominational experiment in co-operative church building. They are satisfied with the building, and believe it will satisfy the expectations of all who have contributed to its erection. They are more than satisfied with the wisdom and care displayed by the building committee in the expenditure of the money contributed by the denomination. How so much has been obtained for so little money continues to excite the surprise of even the most experienced church builders.

THE DEDICATION SERVICES.

on Tuesday evening, January 29, drew to the church a congregation which completely filled it. The pastor-elect, Rev. Clay MacCauley, and the people united in an impressive, responsive form of dedication, especially prepared for the occasion. The sermon by Rev. Dr. Bellows was a very lucid and forcible statement of three of the leading principles of Unitarian Christianity: (1) the right and duty of private judgment in religious as in other questions; (2) the essential dignity of human nature; (3) character the substance and end of personal salvation.

Taking for his text Ephesians iv., 3-6: “Endeavouring to keep the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace,” etc., the preacher began by calling attention to the common ends and purposes which unite Christians of all sorts, whether Romanists or Protestants, Trinitarians or Unitarians. These he declared to be the proclamation of God's being, providence, holiness, and goodness, and the establishment of his Kingdom on earth through determined opposition to evil of every kind. Sectarian animosities are rapidly declining, and Christian disciples of different names are coming to feel and acknowledge that what is common in their faith and purposes is far more significant than what is peculiar. While every church should faithfully contend for its distinctive religious convictions, the warfare against sin should always engage its best and most persistent attention.

1. It is not the exercise of private judgment which creates diversities of creed, for judgment, however private, since it appeals to a common reason, appeals to the source of all permanent agreements. The reign of unreasoned creeds is a reign of suspended action in those faculties appropriated to the knowledge of God; a reign of dull and inoperative convictions, because they are not in direct connection with our deeper faculties of reason and conscience, and so do not carry the real life of a man into his alleged creed. There is no intrinsic unity of conviction or feeling, no real, living faith, except that which becomes domesticated in the heart by natural hospitality. Abolish or degrade reason, or throw doubt upon her dignity, and you have done your best to cloud the face of God and to hide the nature and authority of Jesus.

(2.) Human nature is not a ruin, but a divine temple still in the process of building. The universe is God's factory, and man His highest product. Into his nature goes something of everything that belongs to the great workshop of God. We have no need to excuse or defend human nature, or anything in it that is earthly or bestial. It is only its place as part of a method, or a factor in a composite, that we seek to understand, and we accept the method of God with man as part of His universal method. We honour human nature because it is the epitome, the crown and flower of universal nature and its opening into something which alone deserves the name of supernatural—mind, conscience, self-consciousness, and a consciousness of something in Nature which is not of it, but over it, which we fitly call God.

(3.) Unitarians insist above all other things, upon character as the ground, substance, and end of personal salvation. The real evil of sin is the injury it does to the soul by its violation of the eternal, constitutional laws and conditions of its peace, its dignity, its order, its self-respect. Make individual men and women lovers and servants of righteousness, followers of justice, mercy, and purity, and you render each self-conquered soul not only saved, but the instrument of a salvation of the same noble and practical kind, to all whom it influences and inspires. There is only one sort of goodness, and it is equally current in heaven and on earth,—the genuine goodness of a pure and true heart and life. The vitality of the religion of Jesus lies in his character, whose spotless and exalted goodness, wisdom, and truth have filled the world with veneration, love, and gratitude, and have been sufficient to make him the crystallizing centre around which human aspirations for virtue and holiness have arranged themselves in ever brighter and larger circles. The only heresies of importance are deviations of character from the moral standard which Jesus did not make, but illuminated, when he presented the righteousness of God as the rule of human souls. Unitarianism is sometimes called "mere morality." Would it were worthy of such taunt! As well say mere godliness, mere Christliness! We know no true piety which is not the gloss on morality's holy plumes. Intellectual atheism or unbelief are evils of magnitude; but they sink into trifles when compared with doubts of the obligations of personal duty and honour, indifference to or the denial of the binding nature of moral obligation. Unitarianism is willing to stake its existence on this postulate.

THE CONFERENCE OF WEDNESDAY.

A Conference was held in the church on Wednesday morning, conducted by Rev. Dr. Farley, and participated in by many of the ministers present. At half-past ten an essay was read by Rev. James De Normandie, of Portsmouth, on "The Idea of an American Church." The reading of the essay was followed by a series of brief impromptu addresses full of life, insight, and good sense.

The Installation Services on Wednesday evening were not so largely attended as those of the previous evening; but, in spite of musical and social attractions elsewhere, the church was well filled. The sermon, by the Rev. J. F. W. Ware, of Boston, from Gal. 2: 20,—"I live by the faith of the Son of God," was an able presentation of the difference between faith in Jesus and having the faith of Jesus. Orthodox Christianity lays its emphasis upon faith in Jesus as an official person, and in so doing distracts attention from his character and the influence of his life. Unitarian Christianity, on the contrary, while not overlooking the many benefits of this faith in Jesus, insists much more earnestly upon the need of our being actual partakers and sharers of the faith and divine life with which he was filled and of which his life was the supreme illustration.

THOUGHTS ON RELIGION.

THE CHARACTERISTICS OF A DIVINE FAITH.*

REV. J. B. GREEN.

"HAPPY is he who condemneth not himself in in that thing which he alloweth." In other words, well is it with him whose own sense of what is right and true is not in antagonism with what he professes and practises. Paul's meaning is that that man is morally well-off whose own conscience does not condemn the faith which he holds. Not that one belief or set of beliefs is just as good as another. We, to day, with history at our backs, ought to be the last to admit that what men hold for truth is unimportant. Paul would not have admitted it. But this is his distinction—important to be remembered—if the man's conscience does not condemn him, or the doctrine held, "happy is he." The doctrine may be fallacious and pernicious in its influence and tendency, but the man may be conscientious and honest enough in holding it. Let not the man be condemned, if he condemn not himself, whatever you may say of his doctrine.

And now, with this, our own interior sense of what is right and true, as judge, let us inquire as to what peculiarities and characteristics we ought to find in a faith to satisfy us that it is divine.

Firstly, it seems to me that a religious faith, which would recommend itself to God, would be such as would be adequate to every need of the human soul. This implies and involves much. Not simply adequate to what needs may be felt to-day, but able to meet every need which in the providence of God and the history of the soul's unfolding, may yet be awakened. It may be, nay it is quite probable that, in the course of our life, needs will be awakened in us, which nothing in our faith, as now held, will be able satisfactorily to meet. And this suggests that it is wise to keep the mind and heart open for truth which may yet be revealed. Do not conclude from this that I teach that the faith which Jesus held and set forth, by precept and example, is defective. As apprehended by him, I believe it to be sufficient, but it is more than probable we have not yet fathomed all that was his. But, leaving the future, by keeping our minds and hearts open, let us speak out of our present conscious needs what would be the peculiarities of a faith which would satisfactorily meet these.

Secondly, it seems to me a pre-requisite of an adequate faith that it be such as to inspire us with confidence in ourselves, confidence in our own best thoughts and feelings. Revelation, strictly speaking, is only thus possible. It is to no purpose that a messenger comes to me direct from God if I cannot place full confidence in my own sense of the fitness of things. I must be able to judge of the truthfulness of what the messenger says to me; if I can have no confidence in my own spiritual appreciation of what is delivered to me, then I am not a man in any true, high, or worthy sense. I am not a free, moral agent, am not a fit subject for moral and spiritual illumination or character. But who really doubts the reliability of his own best judgments? Practically none. My brother of a different faith differs from me because he feels that he must rely on his own convictions rather than on mine. He may, indeed, tell me the Bible or Christ tells him so and so. I reply, his judgment reports to him that so and so is told him. He uses the Bible, but behind the Bible is his own God-given moral judgment, which weighs what he finds in the Bible. And herein I think is one important difference between the method of men in founding their faith and creed. Some freely use their moral judgment, and place full confidence in it, and make no apology; while others do so falteringly, and seem always to be asking pardon for presuming to set up their human reason as superior to God. The truth is, he only is trusting God who trusts the highest that God has given him, his own best and highest sense of truth.

Thirdly, when I fall back on this divinest of our faculties and listen to the voice of its Godward crying, I learn something of the attributes of the being who alone can meet its need. And I find that he must be a personal God—a willing, intelligent, beneficent, affectionate, sympathetic Being—one who can and will come into vital personal relations with the soul of his child. With anything less in God, the divinity within will not be satisfied. My soul craves a God in whom it can have the sweet repose of a perfect trust in every conceivable emergency, here and hereafter; for I find awakened within me, and refusing to be stifled or crushed, aspirations and forward-stretchings of soul which nothing this side of the bourne can satisfy.

And, fourthly, there is another characteristic of a faith that is divine, confidence in a future field of activity for the more perfect development of the soul—a chance for the fulfilment of what seems to have been God's purpose in calling the soul into being. As to the mode of life beyond, my soul does not seem to be much concerned. Give it, as a living reality, the God which it craves, and it can quietly rest, leaving all else to Him. When it has the Infinite and good God as a Father to confide in, it has an unalterable conviction that no good or needed thing will be withheld, and what more can it want? Do not these two articles of faith include all else? Faith in our souls, and in a perfect God, and what is excluded? Have I dispensed with Christ or his Gospel? I could not do that if I would. As well might I try to dispense with the ground I stand on, or the mother who bore me. This very confidence in my own soul, which I find to be so essential to a divine faith, I owe to Christ; he has inspired that confidence. He has taught me that the Kingdom of God, the kingdom which he in his life illustrated, is within me. He has taught me to look inward with confidence; I have tremblingly done it, and what have I found—not perfection, alas! but, blessed be God, underneath piles of rubbish, a divine nature, which hungers, sometimes blindly enough indeed, yet unceasingly hungers for the deep things of God. And this same Christ assures me, that if I but look to his God and my God, his Father and my Father, the deepest and divinest hunger of my soul shall be filled with divine and eternal satisfaction. And this faith I find to be adequate to every emergency of life. I find that it always stood Jesus in good stead. In the morning of life it was all he needed to set him about his Heavenly Father's business. In temptation he needed nothing else. To make him a friend and brother of the believer, the destitute, and the sinful, his faith in himself and in God as his helper was all he needed. He met sorrow, suffering, and death, supported by his faith in the perfect God. But men, alas! in their weakness and blindness, keep running after this and after that to find safety in them. Yesterday it was safe to get inside the pale of the Church and safe only there, and all who cared, first, chiefest, for their own safety, rather than the glorifying of God by a divine life and character, were found within the safe pale. To-day it is safe to trust the Bible or a list of dogmas said to be taught there; to-morrow it will be something else. Thank God for the soul of Jesus, which was brave enough to trust itself and God, and gave no encouragement to any to run and seek safety in anything other than God and the soul's own best and holiest promptings. One cannot escape from themselves, and until we can, there can be no safety from the outside. The only possible safety is in the Holy Spirit. The spirit of truth, goodness, and love made welcome in our hearts, that makes us safe, and nothing else can. From that only can flow a true and a good life; and that, a true and a good life, is the ever-convincing evidence that the faith held is divine; it ultimates in a good and true life; this, the fruit of the divine, the safe and saving spirit. And that spirit is ever ready to fill all hearts where there is a readiness to trust and act upon the prompting of what of it there is now in every heart. For God does not leave Himself without a witness, even in a darker place than the darkest scene. Let His voice be heeded as it makes itself heard to us all. To ourselves be true, that we may be true to each other and to God. "Happy is he who condemneth not himself in that thing which he alloweth."

DEAN STANLEY ON THE BURIALS QUESTION.

The discussions in Convocation have been rather tame. The only lively debate was in the Lower House on the burials question. The motion of Canon Gregory, affirming the exclusive right of the Establishment to the churchyards, was carried by a large majority; but the minority in favour of opening them to dissenters included the Deans of Westminster and Lincoln, the Archdeacon of Exeter, Canon Harvey, and Sir James Phillips. In the course of the debate Dean Stanley made a speech in which he argued that there was no law to forbid a clergyman from permitting the use of any extraneous service in the church. He said he agreed with what had been said by Archdeacon Palmer, that the Church of England had no exclusive right to the soil of the churchyard. No one could be convicted of trespass for bringing the body of their friend or relative into the churchyard to be buried there. They had an absolute right to do this, and nothing that Convocation could do could prevent them from doing it. That point he understood was not contested even in that report. They heard sometimes there of the refusal to admit into the churchyard the corpse of a Nonconformist. (Cries of "No.") Again and again instances had recurred. (Renewed cries of "No.") He was glad then that they had not. He objected to this resolution because it proceeded on the assumption that they held something which they were determined not to surrender, and that was the right they had to the exclusive use of the churchyards. Where was the law, where was the canon which forbade the parochial clergy of the Church of England to permit the use of extraneous services within the churchyard? The fact was that such extraneous services were used without any protest from any legal or ecclesiastical authority, and in numerous instances Nonconformists, Roman Catholics, members of the Greek Church, nay, even Turks, had been buried in our churchyards with their own ceremonies, and no one had tried to prevent this, and though the question had been asked again and again in the public journals, "Where is the law to prevent this?" not a single law had been adduced with the exception of a clause in the Public Worship Act. That, however, was an Act passed not to create additional offences, but simply to regulate procedure against offenders under some previous Acts. Therefore, they had two things—they had the right of the Nonconformists to be buried in the churchyard, and they had the undoubted right of the clergyman to permit the Nonconformists to use their own services in the churchyard—and the only thing which remained was the possible right, founded on some law of trespass, of preventing the body being brought into the churchyard. He rejoiced to think that in all probability the whole of this agitation would fall through when it was found that that which so many had been protesting against had been all the while the allowed law of the Church. He stated this, not with the least view or hope to carry that House with him, but he wished publicly to call the attention of the House to the state of the law.

BURY.—The return match between the Bury and Rochdale Unitarian Football Club was played on Saturday last, at Bury, and resulted in an easy victory for the home team, by two goals.

* Condensed from report of a sermon preached in the Church of the Messiah, Montreal, Canada.

THE FELLOWSHIP OF THE DEAD.

THE LATE DR. GEORGE BOOLE.

FELLOWSHIP of spirits bright,
Crowned with laurel, clad with light,
From what labours are ye sped,
By what common impulse led:
With what deep remembrance bound,
Mid the mighty concourse round,
That ye thus together stand,
An inseparable band?

Mortal! well hast thou divined
What the chains that strongest bind;
For the free unfettered soul
Bows to no enforced control.
Sympathy of feelings shared,
Deeds achieved, and perils dared,
These to spirits are—beyond
Time and place—the noblest bond.

All who felt the sacred flame
Rising at Oppression's name,
All who toiled for equal laws,
All who loved the righteous cause,
All whose world-embracing span
Bound to them each brother man,
Are upon the spirit coast
An indissoluble host.

All who with a pure intent
Were on Nature's knowledge bent,
Watched the comet's wheeling flight,
Traced the subtle web of light,
And the wide dominion saw
Of the Universal law,
In this land of souls agree
With a deep-felt sympathy.

All that to the love of truth
Gave the fervour of their youth,
Then for others spread the store
Of their rich and curious lore,
Bringing starry wisdom down
To the peasant and the clown,
Are with us in Spirit Land
An inseparable band.

Whether they were known to fame,
Whether Silence wrapt their name,
Whether dwellers in the strife,
Or the still and cloistered life,
If with pure and humble thought
For the Good alone they wrought,
When the earthly life is done,
In the heavenly they are one.

And their souls together twine
In a Fellowship divine,
And they see the ages roll
Onward to their destined goal,
Dark with shadows of the past
Till the morning come at last,
And an Eden bloom again
For the weary sons of men.

—University Magazine.

The Unitarian Herald.

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 22, 1878.

POPE-MAKING.

If we did not know how ready many are to give up the use of their reason entirely when they have to do with matters ecclesiastical and theological, we should think it scarcely possible that any one could bring himself to believe that the proceedings just closed in the Conclave at Rome are conducted under the special guidance of the Holy Spirit, and such as may be expected to issue in providing the Christian Church with an infallible Head. Even the most devoted Catholic might well have his doubts on the subject excited, if he were to read the accounts that are given, by unquestionable authorities, of what has taken place at not a few preceding Conclaves. For instance, we are reminded by a writer in the Pall Mall Gazette how Mendoza, Cardinal of Burgos, in the 16th century, in a report to the King of Spain, said, after attending three Conclaves:—"Most assuredly were a prince of the earth to behold one with his own eyes, he could not fail to be convinced, if he were a pious, God-fearing man, that it is to the Papacy, shamefully bought and sold as it nowadays is, that all the evils of Christendom should be ascribed." In a work recently published on "Pio Nono and the Future Pope," Signor Petrucci quotes a letter from the Sardinian Ambassador at Rome in 1829, which more than confirms all that Mendoza wrote. He says:—"Flatteries, deceptions, treacheries, pledges and promises given and broken without a shame—these are the ordinary incidents at every Conclave, and they certainly did not fail to reproduce themselves in the present instance: and to reproduce themselves so glaringly, that I heard more than one pious, upright, and noble-hearted person declare that it would be impossible for any man of character to take active part in a Conclave more than once in his lifetime, unless he were compelled to do so by the strongest sense of duty."

As our readers are aware, when a Pope is chosen by acclamation, he is represented as elected by direct inspiration. What this kind of "inspiration" has sometimes been, may be judged of from one or two examples. Bergenroth gives this account of the election of Clement VII. Julius di Medicis, a soldier in his youth, having become a priest, in his old age aspired to the Papacy. By the joint efforts of the Duke of Sessa and himself, Cardinal Colonna was won over. The Conclave was in a state of confusion, and Julius, if elected at all, must clearly be elected by a coup. Colonna arranged his tactics with some of his friends, and suddenly rising in the night, he exclaimed in a loud voice, "All who wish to have Julius for Pope, and to preserve the unity of the Christian Republic intact, follow me!" The cardinals, surprised by this appeal, discontinued their disputes, and after a short deliberation the Cardinal di Medicis was elected "by the inspiration of God." Marcellus II. is said to have owed his election to a stroke of policy on the part of Crispo. The account which Gregorio Leti gives of the election of Sixtus V. well illustrates the arts by which, when the votes of the College have been nearly balanced, ambitious cardinals have contrived to turn the scale in their favour. He describes Cardinal Montalto, the son of a swineherd in Illyria, playing for fifteen years the part of an infirm old man, tottering along the streets of Rome on a crutch, with a deep and hollow cough, a husky and broken voice, and sunken eyes, in order, when a vacancy arose, to commend himself to those who, if they were out of the running themselves, might be induced to give him their votes in anticipation of another vacancy in the Holy See before long; and then, when this ruse had served its purpose and he had secured the tiara by the votes of a couple of cardinals who, because they were not chosen, avenged the slight upon themselves by voting against a rival, throwing his crutch aside, springing up at once to his natural height, and thundering out a Te Deum to the astonishment and terror of the assembled cardinals. "While I was a cardinal," said Sixtus to the first of the electors who came to offer him the kiss of adoration and to express his gratification at the marvellous change which the election had wrought in him, "my eyes were fixed upon the earth, that I might find the keys of heaven. Now I have found them I look to heaven, for I have nothing more to seek on earth." John XXII. is said to have owed his election to his own wit. The Conclave, after sitting many days and putting up several candidates only to have them rejected, saw no prospect of coming to an agreement. The crafty and ambitious priest seized this opportunity to propose that the puzzled cardinals should leave the nomination in his hands, as those of a thoroughly impartial person; and when this was done, because he belonged to neither of the factions, John placed his hands upon his breast and nominated himself.

Such are some of the accounts given of the way in which Popes have been made and infallibility conferred. It is pleasant to hope that nothing of a similar kind is likely to have occurred in the election of Leo XIII., under which name Cardinal Pecci assumes the dread responsibilities still belonging to the Papal chair.

THE COMMUNION SERVICE.

BY THE REV. E. C. TOWNE.

LEAVING critical and historical questions to be dealt with at a later stage of our inquiry, and accepting the conception that special communion means special emphasis of our best and deepest faith, and does not mean historical remembrance, except incidentally, we may easily come to a clear understanding as to the nature of our privilege and our duty in this service. By means of it we from time to time make a special effort, with special aids of symbolism, historical association, and peculiar pains on the part of both minister and congregation, to revive and renew a due sense of the sacredness of our duties and our hopes, our joys and our sorrows. The profound need of it lies in the fact that it is most necessary and most helpful, to thus remind ourselves from time to time, with these means and aids of rational revival and renewal, what the highest laws, the purest ideal, the deepest consolation, of our Christian life consist in. By making a united effort, and lending it all the emphasis we can, and especially gathering into these occasions what we best can of significant interest, from events which touch or appeal to the common concern, we may secure united renewal of consecration and faith. Such a communion service once in two months ought to be found of general interest and value. But circumstances may alter details of the plan; we only seek to illustrate the idea. And, however carried out, the aim should be to make a service from which no one can, by any possibility, be excluded, but rather one which shall attract more than any other service, a feast for whose will of the best things of religion. There may be added to the symbolism of such an occasion the peculiarly appropriate, and especially Christian symbolism of flowers. There should be sought for in it, the best aid of music, something more than is done in the ordinary service of worship; and to it should be given the richest words of ministry: while the broken bread should be the symbol of a communion, to which there is no stranger and no outcast, no alien and no heretic. The suggestions of the changing year, may largely aid us to find mark and character for each of these communion festivals, at the same time that we assign to each one some special portion of the great interests which belong to human life, consecrated by love and trust. On the first Sunday of January, there would be the suggestions of the opening year, and those also of the opening of the Christian era by the birth of Christ; in nature the triumph of the sun's light and warmth over the cold and darkness of the shortest days of the year; in human nature the victory of holiness in the soul, by the new birth of spiritual life; in history the coming of the kingdom of God by the world's stages of progress; and in all mankind the hope of good, which rests on the fatherhood of God, and the brotherhood of man. Now one, and now another, of these topics might be the subject of sermon before communion, while some closer personal and practical word would be given with the breaking of bread after the sermon.

At the second communion of the year, on the first Sunday in March, might well be emphasized the thought of the deep passion of struggle and conflict and sorrow, which belongs to our life on earth; the penitence, the patient endurance, the persevering endeavour which we must practise as bearers of the cross of discipline here below, and of which we have the symbol in the typical passion of Christ. This communion would give rational concentration and renewal to the unwise and outworn observance of Lent.

And just so, on the first Sunday in May, would suitably come an Easter communion in place of that uncertain and vagrant observance which the ecclesiastical calendar makes to wander back and forth between March and May, losing oftentimes the advantage of nature's suggestion of resurrection; losing always the advantage of a fixed and remembered date; and yet never finding with any conscious certainty the anniversary of the day it seeks to commemorate. The calendar of nature is better than the calendar of the church; the very name Easter was borrowed from the old Saxon festival of resurrection in nature; and whether Christ did, or did not, reappear on earth after death, the thing to be celebrated by a true Christianity is not that reappearance, but the rising of the spirit to eternal life, the victory over death which enabled Christ to say, on the cross "Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit." A true Easter communion would celebrate resurrection as a universal fact. It would be a feast of the great and blessed hope of eternal life, of the joyous consciousness of "what manner of love the Father hath bestowed on us that we should be called the sons of God," as Christ was called a son of God. It is not, as the Church has made it, a feast commemorative of Christ simply, but a feast commemorative of that gift of God whereof Christ is in history the type, or we might say the sacramental symbol. Let it be planted, therefore, on the sure and blessed order of nature; let it have the Mayday of our Sundays; and let it be a festival of all that is brightest and best in our faith. (To be continued.)

BRIGHTON FREE CHRISTIAN CONGREGATION.

THE annual soirée in connection with Christ Church, New Road, Brighton, took place on Friday, the 15th inst., in the banquetting room of the Royal Pavilion. The gathering was of a social and delightful character, friends from Lewes and other neighbouring churches forming part of the company, which numbered nearly 200. A large number of interesting and instructive objects were exhibited at one end of the spacious and elegant apartment, including stereoscopes, antiquities of various descriptions, engravings, &c. A noticeable feature was an excellent portrait in oil-colour of the Rev. T. R. Dobson, the esteemed minister of the church, painted by Mr. Jefferies, a gentleman connected with the congregation. Refreshments were dispensed from a buffet extending along one side of the room. The subsequent proceedings were presided over by the Rev. T. R. Dobson, in the absence of Sir James Clarke Lawrence, Bart., M.P., who it was announced would take the chair, but in consequence of his parliamentary duties was detained in London. The chairman was supported on the platform by the Revs. A. F. Macdonald, M.A. (Lewes), E. R. Grant (Maidstone), and T. Scott (Horsham), and Messrs. Bartholomew, Broadbent, G. J. Holyoake, E. Warren, Waterfield, &c.

The CHAIRMAN, after giving all a hearty welcome, expressed the pleasure he felt at meeting friends from a distance, and observed that just as members of one family had their times and seasons for meeting together, so should the members of their church in Sussex. He thought he had a right to congratulate them on what had been done, and what was now going on. People were now beginning to think about theological and religious matters, and there was a broadening of thought going on, as it were, on which he thought they might fairly congratulate themselves. A correspondence had been going on in the columns of the Christian World, and in the course of it the Rev. Mr. White said that "Unitarianism was eating into the heart of Independency itself, taking it by sap." He did not think the expression "taking it by sap," was a fair one, but when they had such language from an orthodox reverend, he thought they might well take courage, and he, therefore, heartily congratulated them. (Hear, hear, and applause.)

Mr. WARREN, hon. treasurer, said they had not been going back, and, as it had been a year of great depression and stagnation, they might well consider this a satisfactory fact. Last year they had heard of some new schools being built, which had not been built, but he believed and hoped they would be built during the next year. If they put their shoulders to the wheel, he had no doubt they should get what they wanted in this direction. (Applause.)

The Rev. A. F. MACDONALD spoke on the subject of "Neighbouring Churches and their Work." They sometimes heard it said that the age of controversy was passed away, that all the old subjects of controversy were worn out. He wished he could say so. It was true that many old controversies were burnt out, like extinct volcanoes. There was a beautiful remark of his friend George Dawson—(applause)—the loss of whom, with the late John Stuart Mill, he counted the greatest next to his own family, and it was to this effect: When people are ignorant they are agreed; in an age when there is no inquiry there is no disagreement; but when people begin to inquire, it is then that they begin to launch into controversy. That was the second stage, and the third was when people were educated completely and instructed, and then we shall all be united again. (Applause.) Differences of opinion were already beginning to be considered less than they were, and people's views on certain questions looked on with more tolerant spirit. Nowadays, he did not call his old friend Mr. George Jacob Holyoake, whom he was glad to see present—(applause)—an infidel, nor did he (Mr. Holyoake) call him a heretic. They had learned to be more sympathetic in their language, to become more Christian and more human. Canon Farrar had denounced the doctrine of eternal torment, and, though what Dr. Marcus Dodo had recently written was very extreme, yet when it came to a question whether he should be prosecuted for heresy, 51 voted against it. These were signs of the times, of the growing spirit of tolerance and religious freedom. In conclusion, the rev. gentleman pointed out that the dry-rot of the churches was the growing spirit of indifference which tended to augment the ranks of that large and increasing sect, the "nothingarians." (Applause.)

The Rev. E. R. GRANT next addressed the meeting, remarking in the course of his observations that, by freedom of thought, they did not mean freedom of thought only as far as their mode of thinking went, but that Canon Farrar should have freedom of thought, that the Bishop of their diocese should, and Mr. Tyndall, Mr. Huxley, and Mr. George Jacob Holyoake. (Laughter and cheers.)

The Rev. T. SCOTT responded to the welcome accorded to the clerical visitors, and Mr. Broadbent on behalf of the visitors.

Mr. GORDON, junr., representing the Young Men's Mutual Improvement Society, stated that that institution was in a satisfactory position both financially and as regards the number of members, who numbered thirty.

Mr. WATERFIELD moved a vote of thanks to the church choir and other workers, and begged to be allowed to include the name of the Rev. Mr. Dodson. (Applause.)

The motion was seconded and unanimously carried, the CHAIRMAN returning thanks on behalf of himself and the other workers.

Mr. G. J. HOLYOAKE, who was received with much warmth, stepped upon the platform to propose a vote of thanks to the Chairman. He never had the pleasure of seeing him until that evening, but he had always been told that he was remarkable for his toleration of freedom in thought and lucidity of expression. (Hear, hear.) He himself had been reared amid orthodoxy of a narrow and painful kind, and he felt that if the knowledge of the general belief of Unitarianism had been carried into it, how much more happiness might he have had. (Applause.)

The Rev. E. R. GRANT seconded, and it was carried with enthusiasm.

The CHAIRMAN returned thanks for the compliment.

An excellent programme of music and readings was then gone through, in which Messrs. W. Francis, Harvey, Juniper, George Cole, H. E. Branch, W. H. Bridge, C. T. West, and Miss Wright took part. Mr. C. T. West was the accompanist.

LIVERPOOL DOMESTIC MISSION.

THE forty-first annual meeting of the supporters and friends of the Liverpool Domestic Mission was held at the Mission House, Beaufort-street, on Friday evening. Mr. GEORGE HOLT occupied the chair; and amongst those present were the Revs. J. H. Thom, C. Beard, J. Harwood, W. Binns, G. Beaumont, H. W. Hawkes, S. Fletcher Williams, T. W. Freckleton (London); Messrs. Holbrook Gaskell, S. G. Rathbone, Meade-King, W. B. Bowring, H. Jevons, J. Thornely, T. Chapman, &c., &c. There was a large attendance.

The CHAIRMAN, in opening the proceedings, said they had always had such confidence and satisfaction in the labours of their missionaries that they had felt the utmost reliance might be placed upon all that had been done; and that state of things had gone on uninterruptedly from the commencement of the mission until the present time. From the reports of their missionaries it would be seen that there was a good work going on in the district, and that they were imbued with as strong and as earnest a spirit as ever. Mr. Shannon spoke with confidence of his health, and felt himself stronger and more fit to do his work. Mr. Summers had been most industrious in his labours, and proved an excellent coadjutor to Mr. Shannon. Their work still went on amongst the poorer classes, who were suffering from one cause or another, calling forth all the active and powerful aid of the true missionary to combat against the evils by which they were surrounded. Mr. Shannon worked on the old maxim that prevention was better than cure, and he endeavoured to put the poor people into the right course of doing the work which they ought naturally to perform. His report this year pointed in a satisfactory manner to the question of intemperance, and he thought there were signs of less drunkenness amongst the poor than in previous years. The work of the mission was not a work that could yield any quantity of fruit immediately. It was of slow growth and of gradual and gentle progress.

The Rev. J. N. THOM then moved a resolution, assuring Mr. Shannon of the society's grateful appreciation of his earnest, self-denying zeal in his missionary work, and rejoicing that his active exertions were being beneficially directed to the welfare of those amongst whom he laboured. In the course of a forcible speech, Mr. Thom said that the society might supply some counter attractions to the working classes on Sundays. They opened the public-houses, and they shut the museums—(hear, hear)—the public libraries, the lecture halls, and even the halls for sacred music. In whose interest, he asked, did we do that? It was monstrous to say it was for the sake of religion that we shut what was pure, and opened what was impure; or that it was for the sake of the working man that we exposed him to temptations, and deprived him of what was elevating and afforded healthy and innocent pastime. (Applause.) We were broken up into such a large number of small separating religious bodies that, though there might be much common philanthropy, there was no common religious mind. We had no national religious life at all, but only club life—larger or smaller clubs: and hence the necessity for those make-shifts of religious homes—to look after those whom no universal Church looked after. (Hear, hear.)

Mr. MEADE-KING, in seconding the resolution, said that in spite of the numerous agencies of every kind established around them for the purpose of improving, ennobling, and brightening the lot of the poor, the evils against which they had to contend were of such a character that they would ever keep ahead of any efforts they could make to redress them.

The resolution was carried, and was acknowledged by the Revs. J. Shannon and F. Summers in brief speeches.

The Rev. J. HARWOOD (secretary) read the report of the committee, which commenced by referring to the valuable labours of the two missionaries, Mr.

Shannon and Mr. Summers. At the present date there remained a debt on the society of £230, which could not be reduced until the present income had been enlarged. Arrangements had been made for a collection in Renshaw-street Chapel, and he hoped other chapels would follow the example.

Mr. W. B. BOWRING (treasurer) read the financial statement, an abstract of which and of the report has already appeared in our columns.

Mr. S. G. RATHBONE then moved, "That the report of the committee be received, and the treasurer's accounts, now read, be passed." He thought there must be a considerable sense of relief amongst them all in meeting that day. Having lately heard so much of the honour of England, as affected by ambassadors and diplomats, they were now called upon, as an agreeable change, for a few minutes, to consider the honour of England as affected in the condition of our own people. (Hear, hear.) There was growing up in the public mind now a kind of sneering tone in relation to everything that concerned the working of our municipal institutions and home affairs, and he complained of the manner in which domestic questions were dealt with by the Spectator—a paper, he said, which never alluded to the question of education without an apology.

The Rev. W. BINNS, in seconding the motion, gave a graphic description of a visit he paid to a number of public-houses in the neighbourhood of the Sailors' Home, and of the character of the people who frequented them. In one of these places he said he got a glass of sherry, which was vile and poisonous, and which no person could drink without feeling inclined to become a teetotaler. He had no doubt that nine-tenths of the people he saw in that neighbourhood might have more comfortable homes than they at present dwelt in; but he thought some of the blame rested on the shoulders of many of their rich people. One might blame those who had not tried to provide healthy and pleasant recreation grounds and open-air spaces for these poor people; and one might blame those who threw away Parliament Fields to create a distant paradise in Sefton Park. (Hear, hear.) What struck him as a most melancholy fact was that the cocoa-rooms were all closed on Sunday—on the very day when keeping them open would be of the greatest service to the people. (Hear, hear.) Would it not be a desirable thing if a number of philanthropic people could make up their minds to establish cocoa-rooms which could always be open on Sundays? He did not think there was any chance of the British Workmen's Public-house Company doing that, because they were hampered by prejudices of various kinds, from which the bulk of them were comparatively free.

The Rev. C. BEARD moved the appointment of Mr. Henry Jevons as president of the society, the Rev. J. Harwood as secretary, Mr. Bowring as treasurer, and the addition of two ladies to the committee, which was an innovation. He said it was part of his duty, as secretary of Hospital Sunday Fund, to examine every year the accounts of the various hospitals in town, and it seemed, from a comparison of those statistics, that the hospitals had done less work in 1877 than was their usual amount. If they had done less work, it was simply because they had less work to do. They did not turn people away from their doors. There was rather a tendency in hospitals to try to do more work than was necessary, and the result of competition sometimes was that their charity was a little too indiscriminate. If there were fewer accidents and a less proportion of disease, he thought they might take that as some indication that the general sobriety of the town was on the increase. It was difficult to state these things definitely, but they were warranted in the supposition that increased sobriety in the town might have something to do with the character of the statistics in the various hospitals. He should very much like to see cocoa-rooms open on Sunday, because he thought it was hardly possible to over-estimate the amount of good work done by these places, and the valid competition being set up against the public-houses. He would not, however, go the length of Mr. Binns in setting up opposition cocoa-rooms, which, he believed, would damage the good effect the present houses were producing.

Mr. HOLBROOK GASKELL said he had great pleasure in seconding the resolution, all the more so because of the innovation which had been referred to by Mr. Beard. He was quite sure that every man in that room would agree with him that women were entitled to perfect freedom in embarking on any sphere of work, public or private, for which they felt themselves qualified. Though there might be some difference of opinion out of that room on the point, he was quite sure there could be none in respect to the appointment which they were now about to make. Some of the noblest work of the present day was now being done, as in past times it had also been done, by women; and the missionaries there, he was quite sure, would rejoice to see the introduction of the female element on the committee, for they knew well that woman's mission, often more than man's, was to assist in the great and holy work of humanising and evangelising. (Applause.)

Mr. THORNELLY moved that the committee's report and the treasurer's account be printed and circulated.

The Rev. G. BEAUMONT seconded the motion, which was carried unanimously.

On the motion of the Rev. H. W. HAWKES, seconded by the Rev. T. W. FRECKLETON, a hearty vote of thanks was accorded to Mr. George Holt, the retiring president, for his services during the past year. The proceedings then terminated.

CHURCH CURIOSITIES.

THE PARTY PAT FEARED.

An Irishman who had been sick a long time was one day met by the parish priest, when the following conversation took place: "Well, Patrick, I am glad you have recovered. Were you not afraid to meet your God?" "Oh, no your riverence! It was meetin the other party I was afeared of!" replied Pat.

BISHOPS ABROAD AND AT HOME.

When Doctor Thomas, afterwards Bishop of Salisbury, was chaplain to the British factory at Hamburg, he applied to a clergyman to permit the burial of an English gentleman in the former's graveyard. The parson asked of what religion the dead man was, and on being told a Calvinist, replied that none but Lutherans were buried in his ground. Whereupon, after a little parleying, Doctor Thomas told him that the refusal had recalled to him an incident which, some years before, had befallen him in London. While performing a burial service, a woman came and pulled him by the sleeve, saying she must speak to him immediately. "Why, what is the matter?" "Why, sir, you are going to bury a man who died of smallpox near my poor husband, who never had it!" The relation of this story had the desired effect.

Once upon a time, Hosea Ballou and Lyman Beecher met to compare Calvinism and Universalism. Both were Bible men, and each came armed with textual missiles. After several apostolic blows from each, shrewdly parried by the other, Dr. Beecher opened to the ninth Psalm and read: "The wicked shall be turned into hell, and all the nations that forget God." "There, sir, the wicked are in hell; get them out, if you can." Hosea Ballou, calm as a summer morning, pointing to the twentieth chapter of John's Revelation, read: "Death and hell delivered up the dead which were in them." "There," said Father Ballou, "they are out; get them in again if you can."

NEWS OF OUR CHURCHES.

NOTICE.—Our friends would oblige if they would kindly send their news paragraphs so as to arrive never later than Wednesday morning, otherwise we are compelled to cut them down.

MINISTERIAL APPOINTMENT.—The Rev. E. M. Geldart, M.A., has received a cordial invitation to the pulpit at Croydon, which he has accepted.

AINSWORTH.—On Saturday evening last the annual parents' party was held in the Unitarian Sunday School. There was a fair attendance. Tea was announced for five o'clock, and afterwards a meeting was held, presided over by the Rev. Ephraim Turland, and addressed by Mr. Thomas Holt, of Walshaw Lane, and Mr. Ellis Greenhalgh, of Elton. Books of an interesting and instructive character were given in the course of the evening to those Sunday scholars who had been most regular and punctual in their attendance throughout the year. Several others who had scarcely been regular enough to obtain book prizes recited pieces of poetry. There were also some songs and instrumental music. A pleasant evening was spent, and it is hoped that the parents' party will increase in importance as time goes on, and that parents and teachers may by such meetings be encouraged to work together for the increased efficiency and success of Sunday school work.

BOLTON: BANK-STREET.—On Sunday evening last the Rev. C. C. Coe delivered a lecture on the war in the East from 1 Kings xx. 10, 11, "And Benhadad sent unto him and said: The Gods do so unto me and more also, if the dust of Samaria shall suffice for handfuls for all the people that follow me. And the King of Israel answered and said: Tell him, let not him that girdeth on his harness boast himself as he that putteth it off." The sermon is reported at full length in the Bolton Evening News.

BELFAST.—The annual concert in connection with the Mutual Improvement Association was held in the Lecture Hall of the second congregation, Rosemary-street, on Monday evening last. Several of the pieces were encored; especially was Herr Stiel's piano solo, "Michellema," enthusiastically received. At the close the Rev. J. C. Street said that he was going to do a somewhat unusual thing. It was not usual to give special thanks on occasions like this; still they had had such a special treat that evening that, as president of the association, he felt he was but expressing the thoughts of all present when he said how delighted they had all been with the services rendered. Not only were they assisted by those ladies and gentlemen more intimately associated with them, but others had also come from far and near to help the work they as an association had before them. It was most gratifying to think that year by year the efforts made by that association to spread knowledge in all branches of thought were so eminently successful, without regard to sect or party: week by week were produced papers, essays, lectures, on all conceivable subjects, and it was very pleasing that these same friends who favoured them with such useful labours could and did voluntarily come forward and speak to them pleasant words in song and please the ear with music. He was sure they were all delighted that the eminent composer and musician, Herr Stiel, had so kindly helped that evening. He would only add that, when they considered that the services had been given in aid of the objects of the association, he was quite sure the thanks he proposed would be carried with acclamation. The attendance was large.

BELFAST: MOUNTPOTTINGER.—The third annual meeting of the members of this congregation was held on Thursday evening week in the church. Mr. J. Davidson, Dundela, occupied the chair. The chairman congratulated those present on the quiet and steady growth of the congregation, and urged the importance of united and persevering exertions. Their progress had exceeded their most sanguine expectations. The annual report of the committee was read by the secretary, Mr. H. M. Ward. We take from it the following extracts:—"The important question of obtaining a lease of the ground on which the present buildings stand, as well as of the ground adjacent, promised for the erection of a church, has been repeatedly before your committee, but no definite arrangement has yet been made. The congregation has sustained some losses by deaths and removals, and also by the withdrawal of the support of some connected with other congregations. While we have to report these losses, we are at the same time cheered by fresh accessions to our ranks. On our minister's visiting list there are 140 names, and of these upwards of 120 are enrolled as members of the congregation. There has been a steady attendance of the regular members of the church at the Sunday services. The usual classes for religious instruction have been conducted by the pastor, on Monday evenings during the winter, from seven till nine o'clock. On the first Tuesday evening of each month the Band of Hope has met. The Mutual Improvement Association held its meetings regularly every Wednesday evening during the session, in the reading-room, and many interesting and instructive lectures, essays, readings, &c., have been contributed by members and friends. The reading-room has not proved so attractive as it was hoped it would, comparatively few persons availing themselves of its advantages. The British and Foreign Unitarian Association has continued its aid, though your committee regret to say not to the same extent as in the two previous years. The committee of the Association found it necessary to reduce grants to congregations and missions by forty per cent during the latter half of the past year, and the grant to Mountpottinger was thus lessened by £8. The increase or continuance of the grant to congregations will depend on the amount of support given to the association all over the country. Through the kindness of an anonymous friend, per Dr. Ritchie, a valuable addition to the congregational and school library has been made. The gift consisted of fifty-two volumes, which were carefully selected as being suitable for the purpose. The committee can conclude their report with expressing their thankfulness at the measure of success that has thus far attended the effort to build up a church here, and earnestly press upon all the duty of hearty, united, and persevering efforts in helping on all that concerns church and school." The financial statement was presented by the treasurer, Mr. Davidson, and was considered, on the whole, very satisfactory. The report and statement of accounts having been unanimously adopted, the committee and office-bearers were next appointed, Mr. Davidson being re-elected treasurer, and Mr. H. M. Ward secretary. On the motion of Mr. R. M'Calmont, seconded by Mr. M'Bratney, a vote of thanks was passed by acclamation to the British and Foreign Unitarian Association for the generous help given to the congregation, and the usual votes of thanks were accorded to the committee, office-bearers, and choir. The Rev. D. Thompson acknowledged the aid he had received from Mr. M'Calmont and Mr. Spackman in conducting services for him when he was ill, and expressed a hope that the time was coming when laymen would occupy the pulpit as readily and acceptably in this country as in England. It was moved by the chairman, seconded by Mr. H. M. Ward, and agreed to, "That it be an instruction to the committee just appointed to delay no time in securing the title deeds of the ground on which the present buildings are erected."

COLNE: LECTURE BY REV. W. MATTHEWS.—On Sunday evening week, the Rev. William Matthews, minister of the Unitarian Church, gave the last of a course of lectures in the Cloth Hall, taking for his subject "Christ and the Healing of the Woes of Human Life." The lecturer said the more he looked at this subject the more was he forced to regard the work of Christ as the world's greatest boon. It was not by lifting Christ out of the rank of human beings that gave value to that work, but just because he was a human being that he could look on as being in every point like himself, except that he had a much stronger God-consciousness than what he at this moment possessed. His great soul saw the needs of the human race, and unfolded and applied some of the great remedies in his day to the suffering sons of humanity. Some might ask, what was there about Christ that was fitted to heal the woes of human life? One of the grand things which Christ had done for the healing of the woes of the great family of man, was the showing of the great worth of man. He never looked upon man as being nothing but a mass of corruption and sin, but as a being of the highest worth. He did not view little children as compound beasts and devils, as theological systems have done, for he saw in them the image of God. He did not tell men that they were not able to think a good thought, speak a good word, or do a good deed in the sight of their Father until they had undergone some magical change, nor did he frighten men by shaking them over an eternal hell. That was not Christ's way of going about his work. He could see that men sometimes sought against the laws of God as they were established in and around them, and he desired to win them away from the doing of such things, and his grand soul was so grieved because he saw that men did wrong both to themselves and others that he lamented over them. Their unjust dealings deeply affected his soul, yet while denouncing wrong-doing he pitied the wrong doer, and always tried to win him over by the cords of affection and love. Mr. Matthews concluded with an earnest appeal to his hearers to have true and honest souls, to aim at living holy lives, troubling themselves not about hell and damnation, nor distressing themselves even much about the doctrine of God and the immortality of the soul, for if they did right God would reveal himself to the soul.

CONGLETON.—The Rev. Iden Payne delivered a lecture in the Cross-street School, on Thursday evening week on "The Evils arising from the Union of Church and State," to a large and appreciative audience. Mr. Payne has been delivering a series of historical and biographical lectures illustrative of "Struggles for Religious Freedom," of which the lecture on Thursday evening was the conclusion. The lecturer disclaimed all antagonism to the Episcopal Church. He had nothing to do with its doctrines or its practices, but he thought that in its relation to the State, as a Church established by law and supported by the public purse, it was in a false position, and that its union with the State had been productive of incalculable evils to the Church itself and to the nation at large. On Sunday, the 10th instant, the quarterly tea meeting of the Sunday-school teachers was held, and a presentation took place of a handsome marble clock to Mr. J. S. Bayley, one of the superintendents of the school, and organist of the chapel, on the occasion of his marriage. The present was given as a slight token of the estimation of the teachers for his personal character, and of their desire for the happiness of himself and his wife.

CHATHAM.—On Wednesday evening last, the congregation assembling at Hamond Hill Chapel, presented to their esteemed pastor, the Rev. E. B. Maclellan, a purse of gold, accompanied by an address, engrossed, and set in a rich gilt frame, in which they say:—"We, the members and attendants of the above named church, being desirous of making known to you our appreciation of your services for upwards of four years, as minister of the said church; your independent and reverent exposition of Holy Writ; your willing acceptance of the revelations of science, and the teachings of the wise and good of all times and classes; your generous philanthropy and love of liberty, truth, and right, ever prominent in your pulpit declarations; herewith tender to you our hearty thanks and our earnest hope that you will be yet spared for some years, to labour in the great cause of Divine Truth, Human Brotherhood, and God's impartial and ever-abiding love for all mankind. Desiring, for yourself and family that happiness, peace, and satisfaction inseparable from a conscientious discharge of duty, we, are, dear and reverend sir, your faithful friends." The address was signed by the members of the Committee.

COSELEY.—The teachers of the Old Meeting Sunday School recently decided to give a testimonial to their minister, the Rev. H. Eachus, on his retiring from the office of superintendent of the school, which he had held for many years. A very ready response was made by the members of the congregation, and friends who were appealed to, and enabled the committee to procure a handsome tea and coffee service, together with a cruet stand. It was resolved to make the presentation on the 52nd birthday of the rev. gentleman, which occurred on Tuesday last. To celebrate the occasion a tea meeting was held, and the chair was taken by Mr. J. Pardal, the newly-appointed superintendent. There was a numerous attendance of friends, including a number from the neighbouring towns of Wolverhampton and Bilston and also from Birmingham. After a very interesting musical entertainment by the choir, the presentation was made in appropriate language by Mr. J. Grainger, who for forty years had been attached in the Sunday school. He reviewed the past and present condition of the school, pointing out that in the time of Mr. J. C. Lunn, a former minister, the school, which was at a very low ebb, was revived. Mr. Lunn canvassed the congregation, and succeeded in inducing a number of young persons to become teachers. Mr. Eachus, who was heartily applauded, responded to the presentation in suitable terms, expressing the gratification he felt at the testimonial, not from its great pecuniary worth, but as a token of the regard of his fellow teachers and friends, and as an indication that his labours were appreciated by them.

DUNDEE.—The twelfth anniversary of the re-inauguration of the church was held on Monday evening, in the Channing Hall. There was an attendance of over 150. The Rev. Henry Williamson occupied the chair, and referred in his address to the history and progress of the Church. The changes going on in other bodies only served to justify the step Unitarians had taken in organising their religious home upon the principles of theological freedom. Their church was still young, but it was always growing, and he hoped that greater progress would be made in the future than they had secured in the past. The treasurer, Mr. David Jobson, gave a full statement of the financial condition of the congregation. While enforcing the necessity for larger contributions, in order to gain a position of independence, he said that the income of the church for the year showed an increase of about £17; of this, £13 arose from additional gifts to the offertory, in consequence of some of the worshippers kindly adopting the suggestion of giving silver instead of copper. He regretted that they were not able, however, to make up at present the reduction in the grant of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association. Mr. David S. Hodge referred to the burden the church had to bear of the annual ground rent of £35. He believed that the ladies would be willing to follow the popular custom of holding a bazaar on a small scale in order to create a fund for buying the freehold. The treasurer, however, did not think it would be wise for the congregation to lose sight of the first necessity of meeting the annual expenditure of the church. Mr. William Speed, referred to by the chairman as a connecting link between the various stages of the Unitarian cause in Dundee, related an anecdote of a visit paid to him at one time, while he was in the habit of attending the Presbyterian Church, by the parish minister, who was astonished to find a Unitarian. The minister remarked to Mr. Speed he surely did not believe the Bible, or accept it as an authority, for in 1 John v. 7 the Trinity was taught. "Are you not aware," said Mr. Speed, "that that text is spurious?" "Well, yes," replied the minister, "but I did not think you knew it to be so." Mr. Solly Anthony, who had come over from St. Andrew's University, where he is studying with the view of entering Manchester New College, also addressed the meeting. Some simple songs and readings were rendered by the young people and others. A really harmonious and helpful meeting was brought to a close by singing the doxology and benediction.

FORFAR.—The Rev. Alexander Webster delivered a lecture on "The Ultimate Authority in Religion," in the Reid Hall, on Tuesday evening, the 19th inst. There were about ninety persons present. Two gentlemen, who regularly turn out to stand up for orthodoxy, offered some opposition, but it was met by the lecturer in a way which seemed to satisfy the most of those present. The argument was kept up with good feeling for upwards of an hour, and the lecturer received a round of applause at the close.

HULME: EMBDEN-STREET.—On Wednesday, the 13th inst., a lecture on Ballad Poetry was delivered to the members and friends of the Mutual Improvement Society, by the Rev. S. Alfred Steintal. There was a good attendance, and the lecture, which was illustrated by choice selections from both ancient and modern ballad writers, was listened to with much pleasure and interest. At the conclusion a very hearty vote of thanks was accorded to the lecturer. The Rev. James Harrop, president of the society, occupied the chair.

LONDON: CLARENCE ROAD, KENTISH TOWN.—The annual tea meeting took place on the 13th inst., and was held at Milton Hall, 160 scholars and some 80 or more parents and visitors sitting down to tea, the tables being presided over by Mrs. Clayden, Mrs. Noel, Mrs. Hazlewood, and Mrs. G. J. Smith. The after-proceedings began with a magic lantern entertainment, kindly provided by two of the teachers, Messrs. J. H. S. and H. H. Cooper. Then, at 7.30, came the distribution of prizes, consisting of books and certificates, the Rev. P. W. Clayden (who presided on the occasion), after some introductory remarks, a hymn, and the Lord's Prayer, giving them away. Mr. F. Allen, superintendent of the school, then gave three medals to Mary Ann, Ellen, and William Jolly, who had been successful in gaining the full number of marks for the past year. Mrs. Allen then addressed a few words to those present, which now numbered over 300. Mr. Clayden now called forward Mary Ann Jolly, who, on behalf of the first class of girls, presented Mr. Allen with a handsome mahogany book-slide, with brass and ivory ornaments, and with the following address:

(To Mr. Frederic Allen.)

Dear Sir,—It is with the greatest feelings of pleasure, we, the undersigned scholars of the 1st class of girls in the Clarence Road Free Christian Church Sunday School, request your acceptance of this, our humble tribute of thanks for your uniform kindness, and the very many valuable lessons we have received from you. We are well aware there are many occasions when you should have received from us greater attention to our studies; but we sincerely trust you will not think all your labours have been in vain, and hope you may live to see very many of your pupils grow up to be good men and women, filling their respective spheres with credit to themselves and reflecting honour on your good teaching. We are very sure you will not measure the affection and esteem by which we hold you by the value of our simple gift and will feel the pleasing satisfaction of knowing that you have not only the inward pleasure of feeling that you are doing a great and good work, but that your efforts are appreciated by some of those scholars who trust at no distant time to be helpers with you in that noble and self-denying work in which you have been so long such an able, persevering, and industrious worker.—A. Cowan, E. Jolly, A. Merrington, E. Dyson, M. A. Jolly, P. Wright, L. Hovey, E. Crozier, C. Jennis, L. Yarnold.

Feb. 13, 1878. (Signed in a round robin.)

Mr. Allen, who was evidently much surprised and affected by this unlooked-for incident, thanked them for their beautiful gift, assuring them that he would always try and do his best in promoting the welfare and interest of the school.—Short addresses were then given by the Chairman, Mr. W. J. Noel, secretary of the school, (who in his report showed that the school was in a most flourishing condition, giving statistics which proved that the school had very much increased of late; he also urged the claims of the new Social Institute, which is very successful in its results; Mr. George Smith, of Coalville, the chief promoter of the Canal Boats Children's Act, just passed; Mr. Hazlewood, treasurer of the church, who as usual kindly provided a large box of oranges for the children; and Mr. Noel.—This was followed by a very clever performance of conjuring and legerdemain by Mr. Potter, who gave his services for the occasion, which were greatly admired and appreciated by all present.—Mr. I. M. Wade then gave a short speech expressive of his pleasure at seeing so large a gathering; and Messrs. George Smith and Inspector Goodwin moved a vote of thanks to the superintendent and teachers, thus bringing a very happy and pleasant evening to an agreeable close.—The number of scholars during the year was—Girls, 106; boys, 123; total, 229; an increase on last year of 57. Out of the total of 229, 103 were new scholars. During the year 58 have left, leaving on the books at the end of the year 73 girls and 97 boys—total 170, an increase of 37 on last year, with a staff of 20 teachers. The Provident Fund had 84 depositors, an increase of 20 on last year.

LIVERPOOL: KIRKDALE.—The second of a course of four lectures, expository of Unitarian views of religion, was delivered on Tuesday week, in the Skelmersdale Masonic Hall, Westminster Road, Kirkdale, Liverpool, by the Rev. S. Fletcher Williams, minister of the Hamilton Road Free Church. The subject of the lecture was "A Rational View of the Bible." There was an attendance of 69, which included a number of ladies. The lecture was listened to with great attention, and was brought to a close, without any discussion, by singing a hymn, in which everyone heartily joined. A quantity of Unitarian literature was given away at the close of the lecture, and there was an eager desire to obtain it.

LIVERPOOL: KIRKDALE.—The third of a course of four lectures, expository of Unitarian views of religion, was delivered on Tuesday in the Skelmersdale Masonic Hall, Westminster Road, Kirkdale, by the Rev. S. Fletcher Williams. The subject was "The Doctrine of the Blood of Christ." There was an attendance of 65 adults. The lecturer traced the popular doctrine from its systematisation by Anselm through its subsequent phases, and then went step by step through the Gospels delineating the teachings of Jesus on the method of the reconciliation of man with God. After the lecture there was an animated discussion for over an hour, and the lecturer's replies were received with applause.

LLWYN-RHYD-OWEN.—The first burial in the new ground took place on the 9th inst., and the second on the 17th. The former was that of an infant, and the funeral service was conducted by the Rev. W. Thomas, M.A., and the latter was that of an aged person of 94, named Hannah Evans, whose funeral service was conducted by the Rev. David Evans, B.A., of Cribin.

LEICESTER: FREE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.—On Sunday evening week the Rev. J. J. Wright gave an admirable discourse entitled "Another Word on Leicester Amusements." The discourse is reported at length in the Leicester Daily Mercury. We take from it the closing paragraph: Why, asked the preacher, don't the music-hall masses come to churches and colleges? Simply because their desires are, as yet, so much grosser, inferior, and undirected. What is needed, then? We cannot force into people a hunger for higher things. But we can cater and tempt the appetite. Is the mental and moral food pernicious we now see people feeding on? Then provide them a better fare. Build Granby-halls, schools, and colleges, and work to get the people in them. But do all in perfect fairness and freedom. Let the coffee-house openly compete with the ale-house. Let church and college labour with might and main against base desires exhibited elsewhere. Teach and preach, reason and persuade, with all the higher powers God has given us. I know a street in Birmingham which used to be a hot-bed of vice and drunkenness; it is now a fountain of knowledge and purity. At a great cost, the building, so vilely utilised before, was bought by a number of gentlemen, and cleansed and refurbished. Lectures are delivered there now; young people meet in class and club; books and refreshments are there; games and amusements, merry and wholesome, are prepared for all who care to come. It was a free business speculation, as every other place must be, if it is to do any good for the people. That is one way to sweeten the tastes of people. I know a man of education who did thus: He found young men habitually standing at street corners. He found others in his own school. And two things he noted about them; either that their conversation was low and vulgar, or, in company, their talk was silly and small. And the idea struck him, "What a fine good thing it would be for these young people, how much more useful and pleasurable it would make their company, could they but become acquainted with books, and a man who delighted in reading poetry and prose." But these young men had no desire as yet. Their talk was low and vulgar, silly and small, just because they had nothing higher to occupy their minds. But the craving for something was there in their natures, needing only to be aroused and guided. And it was done. In time those young people studied English literature, Carlyle, Tennyson, Shakespeare, Longfellow. Their talk is different now. Their desires so superfinised that a drinkshop is no temptation; lower passions are subdued; the higher powers are cultivated. Deal with men thus; draw them off from evil by the attraction of a higher good. Make men hunger for purer pleasures, sounder education, sweeter joys. Be sure that men will wade through fire and flood for what they truly hunger. Begin at the heart. It will demand satisfaction for its desires. That was Christ's royal way of conversion.

MANCHESTER: UNITARIAN SUNDAY SCHOOL UNION. The sixth united teachers' meeting of this season was held on Sunday afternoon last, 17th inst., in the Ardwick schoolroom. Over ninety persons were present, and after tea Mr. John Heys, president, took the chair. Mr. James Bradley read a paper on "Discipline in the Sunday school," in which he stated that discipline is the total of appliances brought to bear upon individuals in their training. The better the government, the greater the respect shown. Point out clearly that all are amenable to law and order, which is the foundation of a disciplined life. Talk as little as possible about good order, but act with firmness, gentleness, and quietness. Treat children with respect, but do not humour them. In remarks following the reading of the paper, Messrs. David Baxter, George Smith, Rev. Edward C. Towne, and the Chairman took part. The proceedings terminated with prayer.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE.—On Monday evening, Feb. 18th, the first anniversary of the Unity Young Men's Improvement Society was held in the schoolroom of the Church. Tea was provided in the girls' schoolroom, and was largely attended by the members of the Church and friends. The meeting and concert was held in the boys' schoolroom, and was presided over by the President of the Society, the Rev. A. Payne, who pointed out the beneficial results of the establishing of such societies, and made a protest against the leader in the Herald of January 25th on "A Plain Word to Mutual Improvers." The Secretary's report (Mr. Auckland) showed the society to be doing a good work, one very interesting feature being the fact that the Church Library, consisting of some thousands of volumes, which has not been used for years, has been re-opened by them, through the kindness of the Church Committee, and extensively used. An interesting and lively paper was read by Mr. F. Slater on "The Wanderings of a Misanthrope." The musical part of the programme was given with that correctness and fine taste for which the young people of the Divine Unity are so well known, and was highly appreciated by the assembly.

PRESTON.—The discussion class connected with the Unitarian Chapel resumed its meetings on the 13th inst., when Mr. Dalby gave an address on "The mistaken attitude of Modern Unitarianism towards Scientific Thought." It was shown that the Revelation in which Dr. Priestley believed was confined to the Hebrew race, culminated in Jesus Christ, and was finally closed as a miraculous dispensation with the close of the Apostolic age. Hence, Priestley had no more belief in any subsequent supernatural communication between the human and divine minds than the French savans with whom he corresponded, and was not less firmly convinced that the mind is as completely subject to fixed law as the body is than any modern scientist. These views enabled him and his immediate followers to welcome the discoveries and sympathise with the speculations of science; but the introduction by Dr. Channing of the idea of the direct influence of God on the human soul—his belief in Free Will, and his doctrine of a God-given conscience, gradually changed all this, and had led many of the present Unitarian ministers to regard with aversion and alarm those philosophical opinions which Priestley and the early Unitarians defended. The lecturer expressed his conviction that this antagonism is injurious to the cause of free-thought, and repels from our services many who might otherwise join us. He expressed his hope that this phase of thought is but temporary, and his confidence in the practical common sense of our laity to save us from the mischievous effects of a dreamy and mystic spiritualism. The report of the address in a local paper says, "These opinions were endorsed by those members who took part in the short discussion that followed."

SOUTHPORT.—We are glad to learn that Mr. Benjamin Templar, of this town, has been elected a Fellow of the Royal Astronomical Society.

STRANGEWAYS UNITARIAN FREE CHURCH.—The annual meeting of the congregation was held last evening, Mr. Abel Heywood, jun., presiding. In moving the adoption of the report of the retiring committee, he explained that though the pecuniary resources at their disposal had been (probably owing to the general depression of trade) somewhat reduced, yet in respect of number of members, the recently-formed list showed a considerable increase. The various institutions dependent on the church were never more successful—the Band of Hope, the Library, the School, the Ladies' Congregational Society, and the Mutual Improvement Society, had been highly efficient and useful. Mr. Heywood criticised a leading article in the Unitarian Herald, which seemed to depreciate the advantages of Mutual Improvement Societies. He thought the writer failed to realise their just value, as a means of acquiring and diffusing information.—Among other speakers, who moved and seconded various resolutions, were Messrs. Thomas Parry, E. Winsor, W. Hough, H. T. Simister, and J. Munbray. The meeting was closed with an address from the minister, the Rev. J. T. Marriott, and the benediction.

WHITCHURCH: FREE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.—On Tuesday evening an entertainment was given in aid of the harmonium fund by the members of the Children's Class under the care of the Rev. W. Carey Walters. There was a very good attendance, and the efforts of the young people seemed much appreciated. The following took part in the entertainment:—Misses Haines, Day, Caulcott, Nellie Caulcott, Black, Laura Annie and Ada Porter; and Masters George Porter, Downing, Norton, Finn, Martin, Henry Black, and Alfred and Enoch Briscoe. The Rev. W. C. Walters gave several readings from the Ingoldsby Legends. The evening's amusement was brought to an end by the singing of "Auld Lang Syne."

CORRESPONDENCE.

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Letters, articles of intelligence, &c., should be addressed to the Unitarian Herald Office, New Cannon Chambers, 55, Market-street, and not to the private addresses of the Editors.

No anonymous letters inserted: the writer of every letter must append his name for publication. No letter should be more than half a column.

THE NUMBER OF ROMAN CATHOLICS IN THE WORLD.

To the Editors.—In your last week's issue, in the article on "Pius the Ninth," I find the following sentence:—"One hundred and fifty millions professed obedience to him (Pius IX.) as the final judge on earth in all questions of right and wrong, true and false in religion, morality, and all connected therewith." I have seen various statements as to the number of Roman Catholics in the world, and I am at a loss to know which statement to consider the correct one. A leading newspaper recently said there were "over two hundred millions," while in a little work by the Rev. Stephen Keenan, of Dundee, I find some statistics quoted from the Scientific Miscellany, and the number of Roman Catholics is there given a 254,655,000, that is, more than a hundred millions above the estimate which you give. A very eminent authority, Mr. Batbie, writing some years ago, said "one hundred and fifty millions of the world's inhabitants are or profess to be Catholics." But if that estimate was true when M. Batbie wrote it, it cannot be true now, as I do not think it will be denied that Roman Catholicism has made enormous strides of late years all over the Christian world, and especially in England and America. My object in writing to you is to ascertain if there is any authority which cannot be disputed as to the number of Roman Catholics in the world, and if so, what is the estimate put forward by that authority? When we find a difference of a hundred millions between the statements given by two writers as to the number of adherents which a Church possesses we are of course led to inquire, if we desire to arrive at a proper conclusion, which statement is the true one. This is a matter in which I think a great many of your readers will take an interest, and I make no apology for troubling you, knowing that in this as in everything else you will be desirous that the truth should be known.—Yours truly, JAMES BARTLEY, Salford, February 18, 1878.

[We took one hundred and fifty millions as the lowest estimate, and therefore indisputable. That the Roman Catholic Church has made enormous strides in England and America and greatly increased its influence we do not doubt. But is the increase in mere numbers so made of any moment when it is a question of millions? We should find it very difficult to believe that the number of converts made within the last forty years had amounted to anything like one million. One thing at all events is certain, that the number of Professing Romanists exceeds the number of Protestant Christians by many millions.—Eps. U.H.]

FRATERNAL RECOGNITION.

To the Editors.—I happened to be at the house of one of our Unitarian families last Sunday; and my friend, the head of the household, opened a letter, just to hand, from one of his daughters, who is residing at a distance, in one of our large towns. He read me a portion of the letter, and I think it would be just as well to give the extract a wider publicity. The young lady said: "I have been away from home three months, and have during that time attended the Unitarian church at — morning and evening all the time, but no one has taken the slightest notice of me." Now, let it be clearly understood that this communication is not meant to cast any blame upon that congregation, or anybody connected with it, arising out of this circumstance. My object is simply to call attention of the friends throughout our denomination, to what we all must acknowledge to be a great need—the cultivation of a more fraternal spirit towards strangers. It does appear to me that we greatly damage our cause by not having some fixed arrangement in our churches, by which those who visit us may be recognised. How welcome a kind word would have been from a lady-member to this young disciple so far away from her home. I am sure there are many ladies connected with the church in question, who would have been just as happy to give that friendly greeting, as the young lady herself would have been to receive it. The objection is not to be attributed to a spirit of indifference among the members of our congregations: it is simply a want of pre-arrangement. This work of fraternal recognition requires formulating into an institution throughout our denominations. Cannot it be done? Let us try. It would not be difficult to suggest methods to meet such a requirement, but it would, perhaps, be superfluous to do so.

Sunderland, Feb. 13th, 1878.

GEO. LUCAS.

THE PAPACY IN SCOTLAND.

To the Editors.—I am much grieved on reading an article in your journal of the 15th inst., headed "The Papacy in Scotland." I asked myself can it be that you may have a Jesuit on the staff, as so many daily and weekly papers are stated to have? No Jesuit could wish for an article better fitted to advocate his cause than the one in question. I cannot think you so supremely ignorant of the past history of the Papacy, with its abominable iniquities and horrors, or of its present machinations to bring this country into its bondage, as to endorse the sentiment therein expressed, that it is supremely ridiculous, and that the action taken by the Glasgow Free Presbytery is to be considered simply in the light of childish alarms. I must confess I view it in a very different light, and I am glad to know that many Unitarians feel as I do. We boast of our freedom of Reason and Conscience, and it is a grand privilege to be able to, and may we never depreciate its worth. What says Cardinal Manning? "I shall not say too much if I say that we have to subjugate and subdue, to conquer and rule an imperial race. We have to do with a will which reigns throughout the world as the will of old Rome reigned once. We have to bend or break that will which nations and kingdoms have found invincible and inflexible." Again, the Pope, speaking by Dr. Manning, says: "I claim to be the supreme judge and director of the consciences of men—of the peasant that tills the field and the prince that sits on the throne, of the household that lives in the shade of privacy and the legislature that makes laws for kingdoms. I am the sole, last, and supreme judge of what is right and wrong."—The Times, Oct. 4, 1869.

Then when we look at the amount of money this country is already paying (over a million pounds annually) to foster such a degrading system of mental and physical slavery, I for one must say God speed to the endeavours of the Scotch people to stay the advance of the Papacy there.—I remain, gentlemen, yours respectfully, JOHN STEELE.

Horsham, February 18, 1878.

[We will admit to our correspondent that it may be consistent with Free Church ideas, it certainly is with the declarations of the Confession of Faith, that the magistrate should protect the "true" religion, but Unitarians have been noted for helping to remove Catholic Disabilities in the past, and we hope will continue true to the cause of freedom. The evils of Rome will not be undone by imitating them.—Eps. U.H.]

A CITY UNITARIAN CHAPEL.

To the Editors.—In your number of the 15th inst. a correspondent wishes to be informed where he can obtain any information respecting the Unitarian chapel which formerly stood in Carter Lane, Doctors' Commons, London, and he wishes to know whether its history is published or not.

With regard to the first point, the following inscription from a memorial tablet erected on the wall of Unity Church, Islington, will give the information desired:—"This church was dedicated to the worship of God on the 20th August, 1862, by the congregation previously assembling in Little Carter Lane, St. Paul's, to which place it removed in 1734, from Blackfriars, where it was first formed in 1667 under the ministry of the Rev. Matthew Sylvester, the friend and colleague of Richard Baxter, and one of the large body of Presbyterian ministers who were compelled by the Act of Uniformity in the reign of Charles II. to leave the Established Church of England. The funds for the erection of the present building were obtained from the disposal of the Carter Lane Chapel, largely aided by private subscriptions."

As to the second point, a brief history of the congregation was given in a discourse delivered in the chapel at Carter Lane, October 13th, 1861, by the Rev. Henry Ierson, M.A., who was the last minister of that chapel and the first minister of Unity Church, Islington. The discourse was printed under the title of "A History of an English Presbyterian Church," and published by E. T. Whitfield, 178, Strand.—Yours truly,

HENRY JEFFREY, secretary Unity Church.

London, 19th February, 1878.

CONGREGATIONAL SINGING.

To the Editors.—Your last number contained an article on congregational singing, copied from the Cornhill Magazine. I welcome its introduction into your columns as a sign that you think the subject worthy of discussion, and likely to be of advantage to our body if fully and fairly considered. I wish I could welcome the article itself as a valuable contribution to the pages of musical literature. I think it very superficial and falling far short of the real reasons for the present want of heartiness and zeal in the music of so many churches and chapels.

It is not my intention to answer the article in all its points, as that would entail an unwarranted trespass on your space. I will therefore content myself with attacking what I consider to be the grossest error in the article. That is, the assumption, that to have good congregational singing you have only to provide a good organ and an efficient organist, limit the selection of hymn tunes to such as are well known, and the work is done! The article certainly commences by the announcement that "there is no cheap and easy road to excellent congregational music;" but the subsequent recommendations of the writer seem to me to contradict this statement, and to show that he has hardly even thought of the full meaning of this phrase, inasmuch as he leaves the whole responsibility of promoting congregational singing with the organist and choir. This is an "easy" and mostly a "cheap" way out of the difficulty.

I admit that the efficiency or inefficiency of the organist and choir has much influence on the congregational singing, but I insist on the congregation taking their part and responsibility in the work. It is utterly unworthy of them as intelligent people to go to divine service totally ignorant and careless as to the music they are to take part in; and yet forsooth, they wonder how it is there is no real congregational singing! Would they go into a friend's drawing-room so unprepared? No, certainly not. Then, I say, if they will bestow one-twentieth part of the pains on their congregational singing as they do on their drawing-room music, there will be an early revival in church music. Let those amongst them who have musical ability possess themselves of copies of the tune-books in use in their respective places of worship, and there will be little difficulty in their ascertaining before hand what music is to be sung on the Sunday, as it ought to be selected for a week-night choir practice. They can then in a few minutes at home learn the melodies, and sing them in service with that knowledge which gives power. There will then be no more demands that we should limit the selection of tunes (a practice which would gradually reduce the number in use), and no more absurd suggestions that the organist shall make it his business to grind the tunes into the ears of an unprepared and indifferent congregation. Every hymn can then have a tune allotted to it according to its sentiment, without fear of its being left unsung; and the organist will be enabled to work and study his proper duty, to accompany and sustain the united voices of the people; not to turn the church into a very inferior and useless music school. One great bar to improvement, I fear, is the "fatalistic laziness" ably referred to in your last leading article.

Apologising for the length of my letter, I remain, Sirs, yours truly, WILLIAM WRIGHT.

Nottingham, Feb. 19th, 1878.

[Our correspondent seems to overlook or place little weight on the remark made in the article referred to, that "about the worst use a congregation can make of a choir is to leave it to do the singing for the people," which at least implies that the congregation should fit themselves for taking their part. Besides, it is urged that more advantage be taken of the opportunity afforded in the Sunday-school for such training as would improve the congregational singing. This we consider to be a most valuable suggestion.—Eps. U.H.]

COMING WEEK.

LONDON: STAMFORD-STREET.—For the next few Sundays this congregation will worship at the Chapel, Earl-street, London Road, Newington.

LONDON: UNIVERSITY HALL.—On Wednesday, fourth lecture by Professor Drummond. Subject: "Criticism of Theodore Parker's definition of Religion."

LONDON: UNITY CHURCH.—On Wednesday evening, a social meeting of the London District Unitarian Society.

LIVERPOOL: KIRKDALE.—On Tuesday evening, lecture by the Rev. S. Fletcher Williams, in the Masonic Hall, Westminster Road, Kirkdale, on "Eternal Punishment, Annihilation, and Universalism."

MANCHESTER: MEMORIAL HALL.—On Monday evening Beard Memorial Union Meeting.

STOCKPORT.—On Sunday evening, lecture by the Rev. James Black on "The Scottish Churches and their Confession."

STOURBRIDGE.—On Sunday evening, a lecture by the Rev. T. B. Broadrick, on "The World Waiting for the Human Jesus."

BIRTH.

THOMAS.—On the 18th inst., at Cribboer, Llandyssul, the wife of the Rev. Thomas Thomas, Pantydeaf, of a daughter.

MARRIAGE.

SMALLEY-COX.—On the 15th inst., at the Unitarian Chapel, Hill-street, Poole, by the Rev. Henry Solly, of London, Richard Smalley, Esq., of Lune Villa, Lancaster, to Emma, only daughter of the late George Frederick Cox, Esq., of Liverpool. No cards.

DEATHS.

LEE.—On the 12th inst., at Southport, in her 75th year, Mary Ann, the eldest daughter of the late Rev. Geo. Lee, of Hull.

ROBERTS.—On the 13th inst., at Albion Terrace, Hulme, Matthew Downe Roberts, son of M. D. Roberts, late organist of the Bridport Unitarian Chapel, aged 35 years.

SAXTON.—On the 12th inst., at his residence, Waddon Lodge, Waddon, Croydon, Surrey, Mr. Nathaniel Saxton, aged 75, also of Blackfriars Bridge Wharf, Upper Ground-street, London, S.E.; interred at the Great Meeting, Leicester, on the 19th inst.

WHITTAKER.—On the 10th inst., at Lee Brook House, Rawtenstall, Mr. Fort Whittaker, aged 27 years.

WOOD.—On the 14th inst., at Lloyd-street, Greenheys, aged 56 years, Thomas Wood, C.E., formerly of St. Petersburg, and youngest son of the late Isaac Wood, of Manchester.

LONDON: SHIRLEY'S TEMPERANCE HOTEL, 37, Queen's Square, Bloomsbury. Beds from 1s. 6d. Plain Breakfast or Tea, 1s. 3d.

RUPTURES.—Exhibition Prize Medal, 1862, was awarded to R. WESTBURY, inventor and sole maker of the IMPERCEPTIBLE CURATIVE TRUSS.

Deformity Instruments, Artificial Limbs, Crutches, Elastic Stockings, and Ladies' Supporting Belts, Chest Expansors for round shoulders, &c., 26, Old Millgate, Manchester.

THE ONLY PERFECT MARKING INK.

NO HEATING; no mixing or trouble. Does not injure the most delicate fabric. Absolutely indelible.

Fletcher's Jet Marker, 1s., from drapers, or post free from THOMAS FLETCHER, Museum-street, Warrington.

Printed for the Proprietors by WILLIAM EVANS, of Apsley Villa 377, Waterloo Road, Chesham Hill, at his Printing Offices, No. 3, Cross-street, Parish of Manchester; and Published by JOHN JELLIPS, at New Cannon Chambers, 55, Market-street, in said Parish of Manchester.—London Agents: Messrs. Smart and Allen, 2, London-house Yard, Paternoster Row.—Friday, February 22, 1878.

The Unitarian Herald.

EDITED BY

REV. JAMES BLACK, M.A., & REV. S. FLETCHER WILLIAMS.

VOL. XVIII.—882.

FRIDAY, MARCH 22, 1878.

PRICE 1D.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE.
Doings and Sayings	98
The Communion Service	98
Hull: Bowalley Lane Chapel	98
Birkenhead Unitarian Church	99
Is it so?	100
Conditional Immortality	100
The late Rev. John Colston	100
Midland Christian Union	101
Bristol: Lewin's Mead Domestic Mission	103
News of our Churches	103

REV. S. FLETCHER WILLIAMS.—Correspondents will kindly note that Mr. Williams's POSTAL ADDRESS is NOW 85, Breckfield Road North, Liverpool.

STRANGEWAYS: UNITARIAN FREE CHURCH.
On Sunday morning next, the Rev. J. B. LLOYD will PREACH. All seats free. Offertory.

NORTH MIDLAND PRESBYTERIAN AND UNITARIAN ASSOCIATION.
THE ANNUAL COLLECTIONS will be made
On SUNDAY, MARCH 24, 1878, as follows:—

Bedford	Mr. R. Hill.
Chesterfield	Rev. A. W. Worthington, B.A.
Derby	Rev. C. D. Badland, M.A.
Flagg	Mr. C. Woolen.
Gainsborough, March 31st	Rev. W. W. Robinson.
Great Hucklow	Rev. H. W. Ellis.
Ikeston	Rev. W. Shakespear.
Leicester—Great Meeting	Rev. J. Page Hopps.
Leicester—Free Christian Church	Rev. J. J. Wright.
Lincoln	Rev. F. Revitt.
Loughborough	Rev. F. H. Jones, B.A.
Mansfield	Rev. J. F. Smith.
Newark	Rev. W. W. Robinson.
Nottingham—High Pavement	Rev. R. A. Armstrong, B.A.
Nottingham—Christ Church, April 14th	Rev. A. W. Worthington, B.A.
Northampton, March 31st	Rev. W. Birks.
Sheffield—Upper Chapel, March 10th	Rev. C. Hargrove, M.A.
Stannington, March 31st	Rev. R. E. Birks.

For many years past the work of the Association has been greatly hampered, not only by general want of funds, but also by the special burden of a considerable balance due to the treasurer. That balance has happily been at last cleared off. But this improved financial position of the Association has had the effect of calling fresh attention to opportunities of doing really valuable work, of which the Committee would gladly avail themselves immediately, but for the inadequacy of their resources. In particular, the services of a settled minister are urgently needed at Newark, where there is a congregation which has faithfully kept together, in spite of the many discouragements of its present position. They are prepared to raise a sum of £30 a year towards the minister's salary, in addition to defraying current expenses, and have also a small endowment of £20 yearly. The British and Foreign Unitarian Association offers to contribute one-fourth of a minister's salary of between £150 and £200. To do this work of undoubted utility a further sum of at least £80 a year would be required from the funds of this Association, which, however, cannot be furnished without considerably increased support. A minister at Newark could also give valuable assistance in neighbouring towns. An opening already presents itself at Retford.

Services at Flagg have been re-commenced under the zealous management of a gentleman at Sheffield, with assistance from neighbouring towns, and have been successfully conducted. The chapel at Hinkley has been closed during the past year, but there is hope that arrangements may speedily be made for resuming regular worship in that place.

KENDAL: UNITARIAN SCHOOL.—The Ladies interested in the school work determined some time ago, to try to raise a school house in which the education of the children would be more complete than is possible when the classes have to be held in a chapel. For this purpose they formed a committee, and set to work, and the result of their efforts so far is the purchasing a plot of land in an open part of the town. A Bazaar in aid of the Building Fund will be held on the 11th of April. Contributions in money or work will be gratefully received by Mrs. MACDONALD, 6, Loud-street, Kendal.

Miss A. K. GREENHOW, Anchorite House, Kendal.
Miss RUDD, Greenside, Kendal.

LOWER MOSLEY-STREET DAY AND SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

The ANNUAL MEETING of the Friends and Supporters of these Schools will be held at the School, on Monday evening, March 25th, 1878. Tea will be provided at six o'clock, and the chair will be taken at seven o'clock precisely.

W. E. NABSON, Secretary.

BOLTON: COMMISSION-STREET UNITARIAN SUNDAY SCHOOL.

The ANNUAL SCHOOL SERMONS will be Preached on Sunday, March 31st, 1878, by the Rev. WILLIAM GASKELL, M.A., of Manchester. Afternoon, at 2.30; evening, at 6.30. SPECIAL SERVICE for SCHOLARS in the morning, at 10.30. Collections at each service on behalf of the Sunday School Funds.

DOB LANE CHAPEL, FAIRSWORTH.
CLOSING SERVICES.

The Last Services in the Old Chapel will take place on Sunday, March 24th, when SPECIAL SERMONS will be preached as follows:—

Morning, 10.45.....Rev. S. A. STEINTHAL, of Manchester.
Afternoon, 2.30.....Rev. EDWARD ALLEN, of Lydgate.
Evening, 6.30.....Rev. W. GASKELL, M.A., of Manchester.

Subject: The past makes us debtors to the future.
Suitable Hymns and Anthems by the Choir. Collections after each Service.

Subscriptions in aid of the New Chapel will be thankfully received and acknowledged by Mr. Luke Pollitt, London House, Newton Heath, Manchester, treasurer.

MANCHESTER UNITARIAN SUNDAY SCHOOL UNION.

In consequence of Mr. GEORGE SMITH'S INDISPOSITION the Rev. JAMES HARROP has kindly undertaken to give his Paper, "Our Sunday Schools, as they are and as they might be," on Sunday afternoon, 31st inst., in Embden-street School-room. Tea at four o'clock, fourpence each. Mr. JOHN HEYS, president, in the chair. Friends are cordially invited.

DAVID THOMPSON, Hon. Sec.

CHOWBENT.—SCHOOL SERMONS, July 14, 1878. Preacher: Rev. D. WALMSLEY, B.A., of Bury, morning and afternoon.

CARTER LANE MISSION, PRIAR-STREET, DOCTORS' COMMONS.

The ANNUAL SERMON on behalf of the Mission will be preached at Rosslyn Hill Chapel, Hampstead, on Sunday, 24th March, by Rev. J. ALLANSON PICTON, M.A. Service at 11.30. The ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING of the Subscribers will be held on Monday, 25th March, at the Mission, at seven o'clock. T. CHATFIELD CLARKE, Esq., in the chair.

C. F. PEARSON, Hon. Secretary.

UPPER BROOK-STREET FREE CHURCH.

A RECITAL of Sacred Music, in behalf of the C.-on-M. Young Working Men's Club, will be given in this Church on Wednesday evening, April 3rd, at 7.30. Tickets 1s. Sold by JOHNSON and RAWSON, and at the door.

ROTHERHAM NEW CHURCH. PRELIMINARY NOTICE.

The BAZAAR and CEREMONY of laying the Foundation Stone are expected to take place on May 1st next. Articles for the Bazaar will be thankfully received by the REV. WM. BLAZEY, B.A., Rotherham.

UNITARIAN HOME MISSIONARY BOARD.

Candidates for Admission must send in their APPLICATIONS before May 20th, to Rev. H. E. DOWSON, Gee Cross, Manchester, from whom all information can be received.

H. E. DOWSON, { Hon. Secs.
F. NICHOLSON, }

THE Boston Pulpit being now Vacant, SUPPLIES for short periods are Wanted.—Apply to THOS. MEGGITT, Secretary.

THE PULPIT of the Unitarian Church, Stockton-on-Tees, will be Vacant after the 31st March.—Applications to Mr. HEAVYSIDE, Secretary, Finkle-street.

FREE-TRADE HALL MEETING of British and Foreign Unitarian Association.—Friends who have not yet sent in their PROMISES of NEW or ADDITIONAL SUBSCRIPTIONS or DONATIONS will oblige by forwarding them before THURSDAY MORNING, so as to be in time for the weekly advertisement, to Mr. HARRY RAWSON, local treasurer, Market-street, Manchester.

BRITISH AND FOREIGN UNITARIAN ASSOCIATION.

LOCAL COMMITTEE FOR MANCHESTER AND THE DISTRICT:
W. GASKELL, M.A., Chairman.
C. T. POYNTING, B.A., Hon. Sec.
HARRY RAWSON, Local Treasurer.

NEW SUBSCRIPTION. £ s. d.
Groves, James, Dinting Vale, Glossop..... 0 2 0

HENRY IERSON, Secretary, per Local Treasurer.
March 21st, 1878.

COMMISSION-STREET UNITARIAN CHAPEL, BOLTON.

A BAZAAR

For the Sale of FANCY and USEFUL ARTICLES, will be held in the Bank-street Unitarian Schoolroom—the use of which has been very kindly granted for this purpose by the congregation—On WEDNESDAY, THURSDAY, FRIDAY, and SATURDAY, April 10th, 11th, 12th, and 13th, 1878.

In order to raise a sum of money sufficient for clearing off a heavy debt of £250 on the present buildings and intended improvements.

Contributions in money, fancy and useful articles, or books, will be kindly received on our behalf by Ainsworth—Mrs. Turland, Higher Green.

Altrincham—Mrs. Howes, Sandiway Road.
Bury—Mrs. Duckworth, Unsworth Lodge.
Chorley—Miss Ride, Park-street.
Chowbent—Mrs. Frankland.
Dean Row—Mrs. Noar, Dean Cottage.
Gateacre—Rev. G. Beaumont, Woolton.
Glossop—Mrs. Ashton, Lord-street.
Heywood—Mrs. Fox, Starkey-street.
Knutsford—Mrs. Lloyd.
Leeds—Mrs. Hargrove, 8, Montpelier Terrace.
Liverpool—Mrs. Williams, 89, Breckfield Road North.
London—Rev. Jeffery Worthington, Oak Cottage, Streatham Place.
Manchester—
Mrs. Harwood, Garsfield, Pendleton.
Mrs. Steinthal, The Limes, Nelson-street.
Mrs. H. Rawson, The Woodlands, Higher Broughton.
Miss Tottle, Strangeways.
Mansfield—Mrs. Worthington, The Parsonage.
Morton—Mrs. Poynting, Monton Parsonage.
Newchurch—Miss Nuttall, Waterfoot.
Padiham—Rev. H. S. Solly, M.A., Albert-street.
Park Lane—Mrs. Fox.
Rivington—Mrs. Gilbert.
Roche-dale—
Mrs. Elliott, Fenton-street.
Mrs. Mellor, Fenton-street.
Southport—Mrs. Holland, Duke-street.
Stand—Mrs. Squier, Whitefield.
Stockport—Mrs. Black, Greek-street.
Sunderland—Mrs. Jonas Pilling.

Or by any members of the congregation and committee; or

Mrs. JOHN HARWOOD, Woodsleigh, Heaton, Bolton, Treasurer; or

Rev. ALBERT LAZENBY, 15, Deano Terrace, Deane, Bolton, Secretary.

WANTED, by a Lady of experience, a Situation as RESIDENT GOVERNESS: English, French, Music, and Calisthenics: excellent references.—Address M. A., Herald office, 55, Market-street, Manchester.

WANTED, a NURSE in Surrey. Can a lady recommend me a single-handed nurse for three children (youngest five months old): assistance given in the nursery: need not be a needlewoman, but a kind, truthful, and very tidy person.—Address B, Unitarian Herald office.

WANTED, in May, a Sensible, Cheerful, Trustworthy Person, not less than 28, as CHILDREN'S MAID and NEEDLEWOMAN: she must have a good English education, and be in all ways above an ordinary servant.—Apply for particulars to Mrs. W. C. JOLLY, Home Lea, Bath.

THE Rev. W. W. ROBINSON, Furby House, Gainsborough, RECEIVES a Small Number of BOARDERS. Special advantages for boys with a taste for music.

HOPE LEA, HEATON NORRIS, STOCKPORT.—HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.—Conducted by Dr. and Mrs. MARCUS, assisted by able masters. The majority of the Senior Girls who passed the last Oxford Examinations in the Manchester centre came from this school.

LINDOW GROVE SCHOOL, ALDERLEY EDGE.—The premises have been erected for a First-class BOARDING SCHOOL, with extensive grounds for recreation, in a delightful country district. Every effort is made to educate the character, to have work done thoroughly, and to adapt it to the pupil's capacity, physical and mental. References and prospectus on application. JAMES WOOD.

BROOK HOUSE, KNUTSFORD, CHESHIRE. BOARDING SCHOOL for GIRLS, conducted by Mrs. FRANK SHAWCROSS, assisted by Resident English and Foreign Governesses. Teachers of eminence attend for instruction in Music, Singing, Harmony, Drawing, Dancing, &c. Prospectus and references forwarded on application.

MOUNT VERNON HIGH SCHOOL, NOTTINGHAM.—Established 1864.

Mr. EDWIN SMITH, M.A., with competent assistance, thoroughly prepares Boys for College, the University Local Examinations, or for Business. For prospectus address Sandy Knoll, Forest Road, Nottingham.

EDUCATION IN GERMANY. Miss M. WAGNER (17, Helenenstrasse, Weisbaden, Germany), who has passed the Prussian State Examination, and possesses the experience of several first-class English schools, receives a limited number of YOUNG LADIES for Private Education, or to visit the excellent College of the town, with home assistance. Climate very healthy, with mild winter. Hot and other mineral springs. English and German references. For terms and further particulars address as above.

YORK: 26, HIGH PETER GATE.—Miss AMY HERRING begs to announce that she has OPENED, at the above address, a SCHOOL for the instruction of Young Ladies in all branches, comprising a first-class education with liberal views. References kindly permitted by the following:—Dr. G. Vance Smith, The Parade, Carmarthen; the Rev. C. Welbeloved, 38, Monkgate, York; Miss Swaine, 1, The Crescent, York.—Terms on application.
Pupils are prepared for the University Examinations, several having passed most successfully.

Price Sixpence, post free from writer,
A CONTINENTAL HOLIDAY: described in a Series of Letters. By W. HARRISON, of Swinton, Manchester.

THE TRUTHSEEKER.—Wanted the Numbers for July, October, December, 1868, and January, February, 1869: 1s. each will be given.—Address Mr. A. COTTRELL, 22, Lee Crescent, Edgbaston, Birmingham.

Sixth Edition, price 2s. 6d.
MARTINEAU (Rev. Dr. JAMES)—RELIGION AS AFFECTED BY MODERN MATERIALISM, with Modern Materialism: its Attitude towards Theology. The Second Essay may be had, price 1s. 6d.
Williams and Norgate, 14, Henrietta-street, Covent Garden, London; and 20, South Frederick-street, Edinburgh.

Just Published, Price Two-pence.
BAD TIMES AND HOW TO MEET THEM: A Sermon preached at Hyde Chapel, Gee Cross, on Sunday, January 13th, 1878. By H. ENFIELD DOWSON, B.A. Published by request.
Manchester: Johnson and Rawson, Market-street; Cartwright, Rattray, and Co., 98, Deansgate, and Caxton Works, Hyde.

E. IRELAND begs to call attention to all lovers of Old Dob Lane Chapel to his PHOTOGRAPHIC VIEWS of the old spot. Large size, 9in. by 7in. (mounted), 3s. 6d.; carte size, 6d. each.—E. IRELAND, 113, Market-street.

THE ONLY PERFECT MARKING INK.
NO HEATING; no mixing or trouble. Does not injure the most delicate fabric. Absolutely indelible. Fletcher's Jet Marker, 1s., from drapers, or post free from THOMAS FLETCHER, Museum-street, Warrington.

THE DINNER SHERRY.

24s. PER DOZEN.
The season of the year having arrived when light wines, so agreeable in warmer weather, give place to those of a more generous character, we beg to draw attention to the above wine. For years we have given great attention to keep up and improve its quality, and those who require a delicate clean-flavoured sherry, free from spirit, we submit it with confidence, and ask comparison with wine usually sold at 30s.

A considerable saving can be made taking Quarter-cask, 27 gallons, at 24s. 5s. cask included.
Octave, 13½ gallons, at 27s. 5s.

Samples can be tasted. Price list of 32 Sherries and other Wine free by post.

JAMES SMITH & COMPANY, Wine Merchants, 26, Market-street, Manchester; also at Liverpool and Birmingham.

DOINGS AND SAYINGS.

Dr. Schliemann intends to resume his excavations at Troy as soon as the country is safe to live in.

Manchester is about to establish a local museum for the purpose of imparting technical instruction to workmen.

During the year Parliament has provided for the education in England and Wales of 92,248,000 children, at 14s. 10d. per head.

Arab children in Liverpool are to be sent to the industrial home, and the School Board will defray the expense incurred in maintaining them.

The Bishop of Lichfield states that there never was a greater scarcity of clergymen in the history of the Church of England than at the present day.

The Spectator learns that the telephone has been adopted by the Chinese, the telegraph being useless, as they have no alphabet. Five hundred miles have already been spoken over in China.

The arrests for drunkenness in England, Scotland, and Ireland have shown a steady increase since 1851. Last year the intoxicated persons arrested in London numbered 32,328, of whom 15,558 were females.

The London Drapers' Company have given to the London School Board two additional scholarships of £30 a year for four years, open to boys and girls. This makes nine scholarships of £30 each given by this company.

A memorial by 500 street arabs has been presented to the Glasgow police board, praying that measures should be taken for their supervision, "to prevent them being a nuisance to the public, an injury to themselves, and a disgrace to the city."

The Bishop of London, preaching before the University of Cambridge, was very severe on the tone of society, the revelations of the law courts, the aspects of our streets, the stream of impurity that was flowing, and the bitter strife which characterised political and religious parties.

In Good Words for March is a most interesting article on "Convicts and Quakers," where we have a new and perhaps a correct reading of the cause of the decline of the Society of Friends—one, at least, worth thinking about. The cause assigned is that the society has substantially imbued all Christians with its own spirit and doctrines. Therefore, it has done its work.

A correspondent of the Times calls attention to an advertisement which is certainly calculated to excite the wrath of the Bishop of Peterborough. It runs as follows:—"A clergyman of the Church of England, thirty-nine, 5ft. 9in., considered good-looking, a widower, with an only daughter, wishes to hear from any lady with a view to marriage who has from £6,000 to £12,000 at command, and would be willing to invest about £5,000 in the purchase of an advowson (that is, the freehold of a church, rectory-house, and grounds) in some beautiful locality, to produce £500 a year. Please write direct to the above reverend gentleman . . . as this advertisement is genuine and bonâ fide. Address," &c. "Such an advertisement," adds the writer, "speaks for itself; comment would be wholly superfluous."

The Strasburg Gazette has lighted upon an album, that of Count Enzenberg, in which are inscribed the autographs of distinguished statesmen, with moral maxims annexed. Guizot, for example, wrote, "I have learnt in my long life two rules of prudence. The first is to forgive much; the second is never to forget." This will strike some people as a distinction without a difference; probably it so struck M. Thiers, for he wrote below, "A little forgetting would not detract from the sincerity of the forgiveness." Prince Bismarck meant still further to improve upon the original entry, and penned these words: "As for me, I have learnt to forget much, and to ask to be forgiven much." But the cautious Chancellor takes care not to say that he ever forgives, although he prays to be forgiven. And yet he has not the excuse of Narvaez, who, when asked on his deathbed if he forgave his enemies, piously made answer, "I have none; I shot them all."

M. Molinari draws attention to a pastoral letter which Cardinal Pecci, now Pope Leo XIII., addressed to his clergy in 1877. This pastoral praised modern civilisation, and might very well, says M. Molinari, have been pronounced at the Collège de France by that eminent economist Michel Chevalier. The Archbishop of Besançon, who saw matters in a different light, once declared that railways were the invention of Satan intended to punish hotel keepers who gave meat upon Fridays. Cardinal Pecci said:—"How fine and full of majesty does man appear when he lays hold of the lightning and causes it to fall harmless at his feet!—when he calls upon the electric spark and sends it as a messenger of his will across the depths of the ocean and the loftiest mountains! How glorious is he when he orders steam to supply him with wings and to carry him with the rapidity of lightning by land and by sea!" The Syllabus condemns all modern progress and civilisation; but to the mind of Cardinal Pecci this condemnation did not extend to true science, but simply to that so-called progress whose name is atheism and materialism.

THE COMMUNION SERVICE.

REV. C. E. TOWNE.

III.

THE CHRISTIAN YEAR: SPECIAL SERVICES AFTER EASTER.

In the same order of nature, of the purest reflection of God's love in the flowers, and of the spirit of him who said "Consider the lilies," let there be made on the first Sunday of July, with the white symbols of purity which are then in bloom, a communion of lilies; consecrated to the thought of purity of heart, and to the celebration of these two things in human life which are most spotless, motherhood and infancy. In the season of the sun's highest course, under the amplest glory of sunlight, when all nature's brightest suggestion and purest sacrament is complete, let the babes be brought to their christening, and, with whitest lilies set about the bread of communion, let there be a sacrament of mothers, a feast of the inexpressible sacredness of motherhood, of the consecration of the little ones, of the hope we have that we all are little children, and of the simple pureness of soul by which we are born into the knowledge of God's kingdom within us.

And next to this, when September brings a day of communion, and flowers in all the glory of many colours, and when the season brings the summer wanderers back to their homes, let there be the children's communion, with special regard to the sacredness of home, and of honour to father and mother, and of the bright promise of young life. It is, in the world of childhood and youth, the season of return to serious duties; it is the time when the interests of education press themselves anew upon attention; it is the period when the routine of home is resumed; and it is the season when the glory of the flowers is as rich as that which nature bestows on childhood and youth. Let there be then, at this time, the communion of children; the sacrament of their joys, and hopes, and interests, and duties; of their bond to father and mother and home; and of our common relations, for discipline and growth, and an eternal home with one God and Father of all souls. And seeing the children set in the midst, and taking with them the sacrament of childhood, we may remember the education of the race; the childhood of all the peoples and religions of mankind; the hope that all existence is discipline, and the universe our school, and God a Father as infinite in blessing as in power; and the humility, docility, filial trust, and brotherly love, which become our dependence, one and all, on the Infinite and Eternal Goodness.

Once more, in this calendar of sacraments, as we come towards the end of the season of life out of doors, and see the lap of nature full of the fruits of the earth, and are conscious of the time for housing our lives in domestic comfort, and our poor in charity, against the rigours of coming winter, we may keep on the first Sunday of November a communion of thanksgiving; a sacrament of our gratitude for comforts and blessings, and of the charity by which comfort and blessing will overflow from us to those who suffer want. How opportune, how suitable, and how rich such a sacrament would be there is no need to point out. It fitly closes a year of communion,—a year whose order, as it has been suggested, gathers up the best associations both of nature and of Christian usage and life, and whose authority is in no ecclesiasticism nor in any formal creed, but in its own persuasive attractions, and in ideas native to the heart or dear to the history of man.

Through this order of successive sacraments runs the symbolism of the broken bread, not as a thing of any inherent sacredness, but as a sign of our equal, united communion in all the gifts of God and all the graces of a good life. It was perhaps two thousand years old, as a symbol of the supply from on high of man's necessities, when Christ found it a part of the passover service of the Jews. Long before there was any passover, in the dim antiquity of which history has left no record, there was this use of bread as a symbol in the feast of thanksgiving; and when Christ "took a loaf and gave thanks" he was doing what had been done before him for at least sixty, perhaps a hundred, generations of toiling and suffering, yet gladdened and grateful men. And down through nearly sixty generations more has descended to us this venerable symbol of man's communion in gratefully looking to God, bringing us the touch of his hand who taught men to say "give us this day our daily bread," and who showed in word and in deed, in spirit and in truth, how to make return of the heart and the life unto Him who is the giver of every good and perfect gift. We may well think that in the history of mankind there can never arise a symbol equal to this, with its roots so deep in the past, and its significance so deep in the nature and life of man. As long as bread is the staff of life, as long as men look to the goodness of God, and as long as the essence of practical religion is to love one another, this symbol of the breaking of bread may well be the sign of sacred communion.

But we must not suppose that the symbol is the sacrament, or that the ceremony has any sacredness in itself. The sacredness is in the idea and the feeling which we bring to the ceremony. One who has no deeply-sacred feelings, no profoundly sacred religious convictions, can make no real sacrament of anything. But to one for whom life is full of deeply sacred feeling, it will be full of sacrament. The real sacrament is always in something of our faith and our feeling, to which we give expression by the ceremony. The ceremony, moreover, is only a limited expression, made publicly and in common, while the full and perfect expression is left to the life of each one. The ceremony is a public, common recognition of the sacredness of certain aspects of our life; the carrying out of this recognition, in the various sacred duties of life, is the real sacrament.

The highest and purest Christian life is the greatest and truest sacrament. A man may feel very upright and honourable, humane and unselfish, when he takes the communion; but the real test is, Does he carry that communion into the world, and make life a sacrament of integrity and rectitude, of kindness and generosity? The ceremony is only a hint, a suggestion, an inspiration for the moment, to take part in it is to accept for the moment, to give an earnest promise; it is in the life only, in conduct and character, that the fulfilment, the real sacrament is to be seen. Unless the fulfilment appear in the life, there is not only no good in the ceremony but there is delusion and mischief. It is doing as the heathen do, and not according to Christ, to suppose that by a sacred ceremony we get a credit with God, to set against the discredit of our lives; or that in any ceremony there is an efficacy to cleanse away the accumulated stains of misconduct. All the efficacy is in the carrying out the lesson and promise of the ceremony; to use it as atoning for failure in sacred duties is a superstitious misuse, which came universally into the Christian church along with converts from heathenism, who kept many of the old heathen ideas. But to bring this into view we must go back and consider what was the example and lesson of Christ in the breaking of bread.

(To be continued.)

HULL.

BOWLALEY LANE CHAPEL.

A RESPECTED correspondent sends us the following:—"Truly, the Hull Packet has muddled the story of Bowlaley Lane Chapel. All that he has recorded (and something more) may be read more intelligently in the old Monthly Repository, 1818 (November, pp. 665-670), in an article communicated by the Rev. George Kenrick, at that time minister, avowedly derived (as regards the oldest ministers) from the Nonconformists' Memorial and Tickell's History of Hull. The history of Mr. Samuel Charles, the ejected of Mickleover in Derbyshire, is correctly transcribed, but the jumps and jumbles about his successors from that time are intolerable. Mr. Kenrick's narrative in 1818 supplies everything up to that time, and I think I can fill it up since. But I recommend those who have the opportunity to read Mr. Kenrick's narrative above referred to. Mr. Charles was succeeded in 1704 by Mr. John Billingsley, M.A., also an ejected minister (from Chesterfield). He soon removed to London, as stated in the Hull Packet; and Mr. John Witter succeeded in 1705, and served till 1755. Chamberlain's Charity was founded in his time; see Kenrick's narrative for a most interesting account of this intelligent and benevolent, and apparently learned, linendraper of Hull. Mr. Witter was succeeded by Mr. Titus Cordingley, about May, 1755; but the latter died of a decline after two and a half years. At the end of 1757, Mr. Jno. Beverley was chosen, a Glasgow student. He was a Unitarian, but more Christian than sectarian. He resigned in 1799, after a ministry of 42 years, and died in 1812. I have six or eight of his MS. sermons (beautifully written) which were given me by his old surviving housekeeper, Mrs. Jameson, when I was minister in Hull. She did reverence him truly. Mr. Wm. Oke Manning, son of Mr. Manning, minister of Exeter, succeeded; but he having still to complete his studies at York College, "the Society thought themselves peculiarly fortunate in engaging in the interval the services of Mr. Geo. Lee, who removed to Hull from Belper (Lea-Wood rather), in Derbyshire at this time." In 1803 the chapel was rebuilt. After five years "Mr. Manning quitted Hull (1805) to enter into business in London (the Stock Exchange) Mr. Lee again officiated for a few months; and in 1806 Mr. W. Severn of Kidderminster (formerly a Wesleyan), was chosen. He died suddenly in 1813. Mr. Lee again kindly officiated for a year and a half, when Mr. George Kenrick, of Chesterfield, entered on the Hull charge, early in 1815. Mr. Kenrick's ministry and everything else is unaccountably left an entire blank in the Hull Packet for 30 years, till 1845. I supply the blanks briefly with names and dates. Mr. Kenrick left Hull, I think, about 1820 for Maidstone; and was succeeded by William Worsley, of the York College; who however removed to Gainsbro' in a few years and was succeeded by another York student, William Steel Brown, a senior fellow-student of the Rev. E. Higginson, in 1825. Mr. Brown soon moved to Bridgewater, and thence emigrated to Texas, where he died. In the autumn of 1826 Mr. Joseph Ketley, of the York College, succeeded; but in a few months his excitable mind was upset by work and worry; and after being placed for a while under necessary constraint, he recovered his health and conformed to the State Church. In August, 1828, Edward Higginson succeeded, and had the happiness of vindicating Hull from the charge of fickleness and change by working there nearly 18 years. Domestic trouble and ill-health broke him down, and he resigned at the end of 1845, continuing his school honours till he was invited in the spring of 1846 to the ministry of the Westgate Chapel, Wakefield. Mr. John Shannon, of the North Irish Presbyterian Academy, succeeded in 1846, and here the Hull Packet begins (after a sleep of so many years) to articulate again. Mr. Shannon remained minister for 19 years. In 1862, on the bi-centenary of the chapel, he published a short "Sketch of the Ministers of Bowl Alley Lane Chapel" (from which, no doubt, the particulars which I have now recorded might have been quoted.) Mr. James Matthias Dixon succeeded Mr. Shannon on his removal to Liverpool as missionary to the poor, and is still the minister of Bowlalley Lane Chapel.

BIRKENHEAD UNITARIAN CHURCH.

THE PROGRESS OF RELIGIOUS THOUGHT.

ON Thursday evening a soiree and social gathering of the members and friends of this church was held in the Music Hall, Cloughton Road, Birkenhead. There was a large attendance of ladies and gentlemen. In the room were exhibited some telephones, scientific apparatus, albums, and other articles of interest. Tea, coffee, and other refreshments were served up during the evening.

The Rev. WILLIAM BINNS, in addressing the assembly from the chair, said that a survey of the religious world, in proportion as it was thorough and extensive, bred a Catholic spirit. The human race had always been various in religious ideas, and was so still, and likely to grow more so. Four great religions divided the world, reckoning Buddhism a religion, and putting African and purely Pagan types out of consideration. The differences, however, among them were more intellectual and theological than they were moral, for the moral law was universal—at least, universal in germ, and always tended to develop in the same direction, while in the nature of things theology invited to speculation and variety. As in the political, so in the theological world, two forces were at work, the stationary and progressive; and that seemed to have been the case from time immemorial. We saw them in the Jews, who had a reforming party and an old-fashioned party, in the Mohammedans, who were divided in the same way, and in the Hindoos, where the members of the Brahmo Somaj were pure theists of a high and spiritual type. In Christianity these two forces were peculiarly distinguishable. Christianity itself was a manifestation of the progressive force breaking free from old forms of thought; it was the emancipation of the spirit from a narrow region into a boundless region; and the whole history of Christianity had been a history of disintegration and reformation, in which old systems had fallen to pieces or old elements been dropped out of them, and in which new elements had been appropriated and combined in fresh fashions. This was partly shown by the great schism between the eastern and western churches; but still more was it shown by the Protestant Reformation, which had been slowly prepared for by the spirit of the world for centuries beforehand. Rome, representing the stationary force, had attempted to stereotype theology in vain, and even now there were frequent outbreaks of the progressive genius of humanity within the pale of the Roman Church itself. Protestantism lived and flourished solely by virtue of the progressive force, which was its original inspiration. Still, Protestantism itself was not always quite faithful to its own raison d'être, and it sometimes shrunk from carrying on the progress out of which it was born. In these isles, too, great attempts at stereotyping had been made. They were represented by the creeds and articles of the Establishment in England, and by the Westminster Confession in Scotland; and yet they had both practically broken down, just because uniformity was not part of the permanent plan of Providence, and every attempt to enforce it was fated to disaster and defeat. (Cheers.) At a very early period Nonconformist sects grew up out of the English Church, and of the multitudes of people who now conformed, it was notorious that many of the clergy and still more of the laity were utterly out of sympathy with the letter of the old standards of the faith. Dean Stanley and Mr. Stopford Brooke were types of hundreds. In Scotland divisions were not so numerous, and there Nonconformity had arisen more on ecclesiastical than on theological grounds. Yet the country was honey-combed through and through with free religious thought. Professors Tulloch, Caird, and Flint, all free-minded and able men, were only nominally in harmony with the Confession. Mr. Fergus Ferguson boldly repudiated certain portions of it, and insisted that the time was come for recasting it. In the Free Church of Scotland Professor Robertson Smith had set the example of bringing the light of modern learning to bear on Biblical criticism. Mr. Smith's articles had appeared in the Encyclopædia Britannica. If they looked at Mr. Smith's and other articles in that work, which on the whole represented the best culture of the day, they would be struck by the enormous extent to which old ideas had been abandoned. The article on Adam, for instance, undermined the whole popular system of theology, and all the Biblical articles, while they were written in a scholarly and reverent spirit, were entirely free from Bibliolatry. It must be remembered, however, that Nonconformist sects generally only followed the promptings of the progressive spirit to a certain point, and when they got there wanted to stereotype, as their forefathers had wanted, but in vain. They all seemed to labour under the idea that they had attained to final religious truth, or at least that all developments must be a simple bringing out of what was contained in the Bible. Exceptional individuals might take a broader stand, but no worshipping body did. Now it was their own peculiarity, as Unitarians, who had grown organically and historically from the English Presbyterians, that they equally rejected the stereotyping of forms of religious thought in the past the present, and the future. (Cheers.) Such a phrase as Christian Theism perhaps described their religious attitude as well as any. They made great affirmations based on the perfection of God, and these involved immortality and universal salvation, while the spirit of life in Christ at once revealed the divine character and the law of human duty. (Cheers.) But they had no finis, and they had no creed which either ministers or members of congregations were bound to adhere to. Hence they were open to receive new light from every quarter, and were thankful for it. They accepted all scientific facts, and intensified them in the light of God. They took Secularism for whatever it was worth, as a vindication of the claims of this world, and interpreted Christianity as the true Secularism, providing an endless sphere for life and growth, and not arbitrarily and despairingly cutting it short. Opinions might be abandoned to free inquiry, in the confidence that truth would be sure to conquer, and lead to ever brighter views and broader theories. But righteousness and aspiration were everlastingly binding. (Cheers.) With such a Church basis as this they could not expect rapid progress. The best things grow most slowly. Yet they believed in God and his unfolding Providence, and prayed to be made men and women mighty both in faith and in works. (Loud cheers.)

The Rev. S. FLETCHER WILLIAMS, referring to the theological convulsions and bankruptcies of the time, asked what was their attitude as liberal religionists? Was it that of fear of being involved in the general wreck? Or was it that of confidence in the stability and permanence of religion? It was this latter position which, he believed, they were able to take, and hence they could regard without distrust and alarm the religious disturbances of the day. Perhaps they were apt to exaggerate when they said that they were passing through an unequalled crisis, and that the world had never before seen such revolutions as they saw. The personal interest they took in the circumstances which immediately surrounded them had the effect of magnifying them; and the grand reason for thinking that theirs were extraordinary times was that they were living in them, in vital contact with them, and had not lived in other times. The history of religious development showed that theology had in former ages passed through changes as deep as those of which they were now witnesses. Still the crisis was a real one. It exceeded, if not in depth, at least in extent, any similar manifestations of the past. It affected all classes of men everywhere. It was not the speculation of the closet, or the dissertation of the lecture-room, or the daring guess of the philosophic few. It was a world in struggle from an old to a new condition of life. And it demanded from them sympathetic and helpful consideration. What was the relation of liberal religionists to the varied aspects of its thought? They were able to meet present circumstances with a calm outlook, and with a faith that was wanted by minds which ran the risk of losing their balance and their support. They were confronted by a materialistic philosophy which affirmed that they could have no trustworthy knowledge of anything which was outside of the region of the senses. They could present to this philosophy the reply that they thanked it for its grand facts of the physical and material sciences, and for their utility in the business of daily life; but that they did not supply the highest knowledge. According to the significant allegory in the Eastern story, they sprang from the arms and thighs, not from the mind, of the creative Brahm. Divine philosophy, as Milton termed religious truth, must always remain the imperial knowledge; and therefore they as liberal religionists held that their function in this age, intoxicated as it was with physical conquests, was to place before its eyes the celestial side which, as Emerson said, was in every material fact. Then they were surrounded by a materialistic religion. Was not much of the theology of the dominant churches simply crude materialism? What was the doctrine of salvation through the merits of atoning blood but the grossest materialism? What was the doctrine of the Infinite Deity becoming contracted to a span, and of the Eternal God dying, but materialism in a coarse form? What was the doctrine of an endless hell of penal fire but pagan materialism, thoroughly fleshly? What was the doctrine of the Eucharist but the corruption of a spiritual truth into revolting materialism? What was High Churchism altogether—the essence of which was that the relation of God to man was dependent absolutely upon something which someone calling himself a priest could do or say for them—but materialism? What liberal religionists had to say to all this animalistic theology was: "None of these things are of God but of man, and of man ambitious of authority. Love God, man, goodness; dare to speak to Him face to face, to commune with Him heart to heart—this is all He needs." (Cheers.) They were told, again, that men of culture, men moulding the minds of the coming generation, were agreed that religion was worn out, effete, and its time over. Its Paradise was behind it. It was no longer a living power, simply a memory, and their only business with it was to write its epitaph. But it was a most suggestive circumstance that those who assured them of its accomplished dissolution should take so much pains to kill it. The common sentiment of reverence for the dead should constrain them not to make a violent attack upon a corpse. The fact that so much ability and energy were expended upon it naturally led to the inference that they were conscious of having something more serious to do than to inter a lifeless faith. But, after all, when they were assured that men of culture were ashamed of religion, as on the point of expiry, what was their answer? They asked,—Where did they get their conception of religion from? Was it, like Voltaire, from the Roman Catholic Church? Then they did not wonder that, like him, they disbelieved. Disbelief, in that case, was the protest of what was clearest in the intellect and highest in the soul. Was it, like James Mill and his famous son, John Stuart Mill, from the dogmas of the Calvinist, dogmas which degraded God into a being to worship whom would be impiety? Then they were not surprised that they rejected it. The rejection came of the revolt of their best instincts from the picture of a demon-god. Was it from the theology of the Puritans which, with all its severity and relentlessness, pictured God as a Judge and Destroyer, man's heart as a mass of corruption, man's life as a curse, man's salvation as a bargain, man's future either as a hell of hopeless torture or a heaven of selfish joy? Then it was no marvel that under the mellowing influence of civilisation they cast off the crudities of the sixteenth and seventeenth century theology. Was it from the tracts of the Religious Tract Society, or from some of Watts's and Wesley's popular hymns? Then they were not at all astonished or grieved that they turned away dissatisfied with such presentations of religion. But they affirmed that these were not religion—only theologians' distortions of it. It was doubtless true that theological adjuncts of religion were worn out and decaying; but when they had cut away the straw from a rick of grain the wheat remained. They confessed that round about religion there were things, ideas, views of God and man that were effete, that were vanishing, and ought to vanish away; but religion, as they held it, stood as firmly as a castle on the everlasting rock, and when they had removed these ideas all that was gone was a number of extraneous growths that had flourished on the castle walls, and hid the grandeur of the structure from the eyes of men. (Cheers.) Another school was now rather loudly assuring them that science would displace religion. A distinguished German leader of this school was reported to have said that all the religion he knew or needed, all the religion the world knew or needed, was the religion of science. And a French leader of the same school had said that science was the invincible power of the future, and the only true religion of humanity, based upon the teaching of nature. What was the reply of liberal religionists? They answered that they accepted all the help, the light, the truth, which had come, and were to come, from rock and soil, air and sea and star. This globe was not a cursed and demon-haunted world. It was the book of God, and they yearned to learn the wondrous characters on its pages. They were eager to know how this planet came into existence, how it had been fashioned and refashioned in its successive stages, and how had worked the stable and unswerving laws which had bound it round through all its changes and its cycles. They were thankful that ten thousand workers were abroad to-day, interpreting the revelation that was in all things; and they said, that every man who hauled up facts from the ocean's bed, or brought them down from the sky, or hammered them out from the rock's recesses—that every man who brought forth facts from any department of research whatever, and set them thinking of their origin and uses, was hastening the great end to which all knowledge was tending. (Cheers.) But there were imperishable instincts, emotions, and wants of the human soul, upon which science was dumb and philosophy opened not its mouth, and which experience demonstrated that religion alone could furnish; and, therefore, while they were thankful for all that science did for civilisation, they must have something more to meet man's natural hungering and thirsting after God—something that answered to man's reaching upward ever for what was perfect. They found that something neither in science nor in philosophy, but in the teachings of religious prophets, eminently in those of Jesus Christ, the real attraction and fullness of whose ideas could not be exhausted. To these the world would turn to satisfy its deepest thirst after it had drunk in the truths of science; and to exhibit them in their purity and in all the sufficiency of their simplicity was the work they had to do. Such appeared to him to be the true attitudes of liberal religionists towards the philosophic, scientific, and sceptical schools of the day; and, looked at from this point of view, he thought he could see for them, if only they were faithful to the calls of the age upon them, a future of even more substantial service to the race and the world than that they had contributed in the past. (Loud cheers.)

The Rev. CHARLES BEARD addressed the assembly in a brief but eloquent speech. After offering his congratulations to Mr. Binns on the pleasant gathering now before him, he went on to speak of liberal principles in religion as exemplified in their own body. The Unitarians, finding themselves in the presence of a mass of superstition and unreasonable belief, naturally felt an impulse to strike a blow at it, but he doubted the value of attempting to substitute one series of beliefs for another. When he saw that beliefs which he did not himself hold, which even seemed to him to be irrational, made human life brave, and strong, and pure, giving inspiration to men and women to be tender and true, why should he aim at destroying them? His endeavour was to help men to realise that overshadowing and surrounding them there was a vast, mysterious, all-pervading Power, which constrained them to goodness and righteousness. It was to bring them into a real contact with eternal and Scriptural mysteries, and make their lives nobler, purer, and better than they otherwise would be. (Loud cheers.)

Speeches were also delivered by Messrs. Bancroft Cooke, J. G. Barnes, and Capleton.

During the evening songs were very prettily sung by Mrs. Leggett, Miss Lloyd, and Mr. Gill; and Miss F. Cooke and Miss Lewis gave piano performances, which greatly delighted the company. After a most enjoyable evening the company broke up.

IS IT SO?

Is it so, O Christ in heaven, that the highest suffer most?
That the strongest wander farthest, and most hopelessly are lost?
That the mark of rank in nature is capacity for pain,
And the anguish of the singer makes the sweetness of the strain?

Is it so, O Christ in heaven, that, whichever way we go, Walls of darkness must surround us, things we would but cannot know?

That the Infinite must bound us, as a temple veil unrent,
While the Finite ever wears, so that none attain content?

Is it so, O Christ in heaven, that the fulness yet to come
Is so glorious and so perfect that to know would strike us dumb?
That if only for a moment we could pierce beyond the sky,
With those poor dim eyes of mortals, we should just see God and die?

—The Day of Rest.

The Unitarian Herald.

FRIDAY, MARCH 22, 1878.

CONDITIONAL IMMORTALITY.

There are those who, while shrinking with horror from the Pagan and repulsive superstition of an eternal hell, cannot persuade themselves that God will make "the pile" of life "complete." They halt half way, accepting as a relief the theory of "annihilation." But what relief is there in the belief in destruction? It is affirmed that immortality is not the natural inheritance of man. Immortality is said to be the gift of God to those who "believe in Jesus Christ," and "are regenerated by the Holy Spirit." The advocates of this theory, however, affirm a belief in a future retribution. It might have been said that the retribution consisted in the non-attainment of future life—in the dreary and awful fact that this "little life," when it has had its day and chance, having failed to connect itself, or to become connected, with Christ by faith, passed into a grave from which there is no awakening. In a sense undreamt of by Shakespeare, that "little life" would thus be "rounded by a sleep," never to be disturbed. In a sense man, the wonder and glory of God's creation, would only be "such stuff as dreams are made of." This awful dissolution of being, this fearful negation of existence, might be held forth as the divine retribution for sin. Every sensitive and reflective mind would confess that such a termination of life is appalling in the extreme. Nothing can be more terrible than a blank as the end of earthly existence—the idea that capacities of thought, reason, imagination, intellect, love, all that makes man a "miniature of greatness absolute," are to be blown out of being as a bubble! None can ever have looked into the grave, even with the momentary suspicion that that is the melting away of life, like a streak of morning cloud, but with a shudder of inexpressible dismay. If Earth's noblest memories end but in "here he lies." And "dust to dust" completes the mournful song, the heart of man can take to itself no sadder thought. It is enough to wake up the most careless and the most hardened sinner, and call forth whatever power of noble yearning may still exist within the soul.

But this is not what is declared by some exponents of destruction. It is said that "unbelievers" will live again, and that annihilation will take effect only after a term of punishment. We are perfectly convinced that the objections to this theory are insuperable, and that, when carefully examined, it will be found not only not to relieve the sensibilities of Christians who find the idea of an eternal hell a burden too grievous to be borne, but to impose new anxieties upon them.

In the first place—and this objection alone appears to be sufficient—it sets out with an emphatic denial of the immortality of the soul. Its position is that man is born on a level with "the beasts that perish." Look on the face of your infant, beneath which sleeps untold possibilities. You may indulge the hope that there may be in it the capability of acting a grand part in the drama of life; but, if you believe this theory, you cannot consistently hold that you are looking on the face of an immortal. It is no answer to say that God in His goodness will confer immortality on all infants. When does He confer it? Is it at the moment of death? If yes, only those children who die in the cradle are immortal: while those who are destined to grow up are mortal. Are you prepared to maintain that a child who, if it had died at twelve months old, would have been immortal, has, at twelve years old, lost its immortality? To-day it blesses your home; to-morrow you carry it to its grave; and you must feel one of two things—either that its life has vanished utterly into dust and ashes, or has entered upon another state of being in an unseen world. While the memory of its pure presence redeems you from many an ill, can you believe that it has thinned away into vapour? If you cannot, and if you feel that it has passed into that which is within the veil, when did God endow it with immortality? Surely everyone who frankly and fully realises the case must shrink from the idea that man is not naturally immortal, and from the further idea that such is his constitution that if he dies as a child he will live for ever by the mercy of God, but if as a youth his opening mind, his dawning imagination, his arising reason, are to be burnt out like bits of cotton. Of all the dismal conceptions which theologians have formed of the simple allegory of the fall of Adam (typical of the choice made by every man spiritually alive between self-indulgence on the one hand, and self-denial on the other), the most ghastly seems to us the conception that, through Adam's disobedience, the whole human race lost their immortal souls and became mere Dead Sea apes.

There is another difficulty raised by this theory. No one is to imagine that immediate extinction is the fate of those who die without faith in Christ. Now, by virtue of what law is the future life of wrongdoers obtained? What warrant is there in reason or in our conceptions of God as a Father, for imposing on them an unnatural and artificial prolongation of life? If man be only a more highly-gifted animal—the paragon of creation—the highest link in the long chain of being—but having in him inherently no immortal life, he drops into the grave as a tree to the ground, or a flower from its stem, never more to bloom and flourish. Death is the end, and not the condition of a change of existence. The theory involves the assumption that "the unbelieving" will live again. But if they live again, do they attain life by the special intervention of God? We may insist upon it that it must be so, but where is the proof of it? Mortal life ends, and yet "the wicked" enter upon another life which is not immortal. It must be regarded as a fresh impartation of life, or as a revival of the present life, in order that they may receive the due punishment of their deeds. It is not easy to imagine all this; and for so solemn, and so unphilosophical, and so irrational a belief there must be a basis more substantial than speculation.

Regarded in another light the theory is repulsive. Though mortal in the sense that they are doomed to ultimate annihilation, the "wicked" may undergo hundreds or thousands of years of torment. Is not such an idea too horrible to be conceivably true? The lost are to be kept in being with an unnaturally perpetuated life in order that they may be subjected to pains and penalties before being reduced to nothing. No relief can be obtained by the notion that progress is possible on their part, for the express object of their being continued in life is that they may be tormented. Does not this open up a view of the character of God as appalling as the rejected doctrine? Vengeance, and vengeance alone, can be the object of these penal fires in which one man may be doomed to suffer for five hundred years, another for fifteen, another for two thousand, another for a million; but which at last consume the vital spark in all. To talk of justice as being glorified by such a method of the divine government is to insult the human understanding. In order even to conceive the emotions which could associate such penal inflictions with divine righteousness and divine satisfaction, we must force ourselves to realise the delight with which Spaniards look upon bull-fights, with which Indians look on their captives writhing at the stake, with which the Romans looked on the dying agonies of gladiators, with which the Bashi-Bazouks looked on the writhings of Bulgarians at Batak and Tatar-Bazardjik. It may be said that an objection of essentially the same nature may be brought against the denunciations of woe upon the impenitent by Christ himself. But at the very worst it cannot be alleged that Christ deprived any man of the hope of immortality, and doomed him to a period of excruciation to be terminated by annihilation; and, further, whilst it is most true that Christ enforced, by a variety of imagery, the terrible majesty of moral law, and the awfulness and stability of God's judgments as contrasted with man's, it is an error swept away by an intelligent exposition of the Gospels,—such as the tractate of Dr. Vance Smith, the Can It Be True of the Rev. William Miall, the Salvator Mundi of the Rev. Samuel Cox, the Inquiry to the Rev. Walter Balfour, and the Introduction of Canon Farrar's Eternal Hope,—that he taught the doctrine of endless punishment.

These are some of the many considerations which show that the destruction theory is not a rational theory.

The late Rev. John Colston.

IN recording the death of another of our old and valued ministers, the Rev. John Colston, a short sketch of his life may serve to recal an old friend to his contemporaries, while it may not be without interest to those whose acquaintance did not extend to his earlier years.

He was born at Leicester in 1813, his father being Mr. Peter Colston, a Unitarian, and a manufacturer of position in the town. His training for the ministry was received at Manchester New College, then at York, at a time when it was attended not only by divinity students but by sons of many of our principal laymen, who thus formed valuable friendships together, which continued of mutual advantage through life, and which Mr. Colston always specially valued and kept up. On leaving college in 1833, he came to Styal, partly as tutor to Mr. R. H. Greg's family, and also as minister of the private chapel there, which had been previously conducted on Baptist principles by the Rev. H. H. Jones, but where it was now determined to try if Unitarianism might not make better way among the workpeople. He here threw the whole force of a most active and ardent spirit into the new work, and in face of considerable opposition soon created a congregation and infused new life into the whole neighbourhood. Institutions and schools were started or resuscitated, and, in a way quite in advance of the time, he introduced frequent lectures, readings, singing, and music and botany classes, physical recreations of various sorts, exhibitions of flowers and fruit, &c., and a little later, Christmas parties, trees, and theatricals. In all these his versatile powers, variety of knowledge, and histrionic talent, enabled him to take the leading part; while his example and influence were felt much beyond the immediate neighbourhood.

In 1843, on the death of the Rev. J. W. Morris, of Dean Row, under whose régime the congregation had long become virtually extinct, and the chapel itself fallen into decay, Mr. Colston made a determined effort to revive this old Presbyterian place of worship, and mainly by his exertions it was remodelled and thoroughly repaired, and in 1845 again opened for service after a lapse of many years, himself being appointed its minister jointly with Styal. He was not long in gathering a congregation together, and then, in the absence of any day school in that township, again setting to work almost single-handed, he succeeded in establishing an excellent school with master's house, which has proved the greatest benefit to the district. In addition to his multifarious work at home, he was always forward in assisting any good work within reach elsewhere; and by virtue of his broad liberality and bonhomie had the happiness of entering into pleasant relations with the families and ministers of all denominations wherever he happened to be. He also generally had one or two young Swiss, French, or German pupils residing with him, considerably more than a dozen passing in this way under his care, many of whom returned to their own countries permanently impressed by his strong liberal political as well as religious views, and retaining a deep and lasting attachment to him. In 1858 he married Miss Lees, of Stalybridge, and a few years later, in 1863, deciding to act on an often-expressed intention of retiring from the ministry at the close of thirty years, he took farewell of the place in which he had spent exactly that length of time. It would be difficult to convey an impression of the warmth and depth of feeling which was entertained for him, and still remains as fresh as ever among the country people of his congregation; his kind, familiar, friendly, simple intercourse, and hearty sympathy and help endeared him in such a way that his portrait hangs in nearly every cottage, and his name is a cherished household word that is never mentioned without exciting lively pleasure. His friends will also recall his impulsive, generous nature, his warm affections, and strong feelings; his characteristic straightforwardness, high sense of honour, spirit of justice, and care to give everybody his due; and last, and not least, his vivacious and hearty social qualities. On leaving the scene of his life's work, in which he was succeeded by the Rev. Alfred Payne, now at Newcastle, Mr. and Mrs. Colston spent one or two years abroad and then settled at Evesham. There again his untiring energy infused itself into all the various interests of the place, whether literary, social, philanthropic, or political; his experience, ability, and cordiality giving him an influence and popularity, which were always used in the direction of liberty and progress, and received a well-earned acknowledgment by his appointment as a justice of the peace for the borough. He still officiated occasionally in the pulpit for his brother ministers on special occasions, when his fine forehead, grey hair, and flowing beard reminded one more of a patriarch of old than a modern preacher; but he gradually adopted more and more the habits of a layman, whose closer participation in the social and political life of the world appeared thoroughly congenial to him.

The last few years of his life were unfortunately clouded by a painful and distressing malady, against which, however, his natural spirits enabled him to maintain a manful struggle; but towards the end the disease gained such ground that he removed to London, to be more directly under the care of his doctor, Sir Henry Thompson. But it was of no avail; and after a great deal of suffering to within a few days of his death, borne with great patience and resignation, he at last passed quietly away on March 12, closing his most active and useful life at the age of 65.

THE FUNERAL

took place on Monday last. The corpse was brought by train to Wilmslow Station, where it arrived shortly after two o'clock, and was met by the mourners and a number of friends. We noticed present the Revs. John Gordon, P. M. Higginson, M.A., C. H. Wellbeloved; Messrs. Harold Lees, E. H. Greg, H. R. Greg, Herbert New (President of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association), W. Evans, John Swanwick, Alfred Swanwick, John Phillips, and others. Preceding the hearse were a number of Styal friends as bearers, and following it were five carriages. The interment took place at Dean Row Chapel—one of our quaint old Presbyterian buildings. Mr. Colston had a great love for this old chapel and selected the yard as his last earthly resting place—a neat single vault having been prepared. The Rev. John Gordon conducted the service and read Job xiv. and I Cor. xv. from the twentieth verse. In the course of the service he said Mr. Colston's character was marked by strict uprightness. He was scrupulous in the discharge of his several duties and had nothing of the pretender about him. His learning was solid, and the range of his knowledge wide. He made it a duty to acquaint himself with all subjects that came under his notice, and his conversation was ever instructive. Those who had the opportunity of social intercourse with him would never forget how bright and happy-hearted he was. He was a faithful preacher and pastor. As a speaker he was impressive, and in the matter of his sermons aimed at being practical. For public business he had a great capacity, and did much of that kind of work when residing in that district during his ministry, and more still at Evesham, where as a magistrate he was much respected, being esteemed and trusted by all. There he would be much missed. In the latter part of his life he was a great sufferer, but his affliction was borne with Christian resignation, and when the end came he passed away in bodily and mental peace. At the close of the service in the chapel, as the body was carried away, the organist played, from Elijah, "Orestin the Lord," and outside a considerable number of the inhabitants had assembled in the chapel-yard, where the Rev. John Gordon read a short service at the grave-side.

The funeral sermons will be preached next Sunday by the Rev. P. M. Higginson, at Styal, in the morning, and at Dean Row in the afternoon.

MIDLAND CHRISTIAN UNION.

ANNUAL MEETING.

On Wednesday last the annual meeting of the Midland Christian Union, which embraces the counties of Worcestershire, Staffordshire, Warwickshire, and Shropshire, was held at Kidderminster, and was well attended by delegates and friends. The business of the Union was transacted at the New Meeting House, when there were present the Revs. H. W. Crosskey, F.G.S., W. C. Walters, D. Maginnis, J. C. Odgers, B.A., W. Cochran, H. Eachus, P. Dean, J. Harrison, T. B. Broadrick, H. M'Kean, W. E. Mellone, Messrs. H. New, C. Harding, S. B. Whitfield, W. P. Greenway, White, Whitehouse, Key, G. Isaacs, J. Stooke, G. Hopkins, and others.

After the transaction of business, divine service was held in the chapel, when the Rev. W. CAREY WALTERS preached an able and eloquent sermon from the words "Watchman, what of the night?" The sermon was a review of the religious and social condition of the world as it presents itself to the gaze of a thoughtful observer. The preacher insisted earnestly on the fact that the only cure was not culture or civilisation, but the Gospel of the Fatherhood and the Spirit of Christ. On our ability to present this gospel depended our success.

In the evening the annual tea and public meeting was held in the Town Hall. Trays and donations were given by the ladies and gentlemen of the congregation. During tea Miss C. Badland gave an organ recital, and was loudly cheered for her admirable performance.

Mr. WILLIAM TALBOT presided at the public meeting, and said they were present that evening to celebrate the visit of the Midland Christian Union to the town, and he was sure all of them, or at least all who were Unitarians, would feel themselves bound to give to the Union their best support. The object of the Union was the spread of truth—truth on the highest subjects. (Hear, hear.) That was enjoined upon them alike by Scripture and reason—by Scripture which denounced lukewarmness, and reason because they knew that God expected them to spread that which they believed to be truth to their brethren of the human race. If such were their duties, how necessary it was that they should do that work with their whole hearts. They were but servants in God's hands of carrying out his will amongst men, and as faithful stewards they should allow no opportunity to pass without making the best use possible of it—(applause)—while they were not to neglect those duties which they owed to their families; they were called upon to give to the utmost of their power, of their substance, to the cause of God. He had been very much interested in the perusal of the report—which would shortly be submitted to the meeting—and particularly in those abstracts from letters received by the union from ministers of the Church of England and other denominations, who acknowledged the pleasure and profit they had derived from the perusal of the works of Dr. Channing, Dr. Martineau, Theodore Parker, and others. Some writers went so far as to intimate that their views on theological points were somewhat altered and changed since the perusal of those books, and he (the speaker) believed that many of them were adopting those views which were formerly considered to belong to the Unitarian denomination alone. The Chairman wished to remind the younger portion of the audience that in former days for a man to proclaim himself a Unitarian subjected him to the denunciation of all other sects, but that time had, in a great measure, passed away, and the rising generation need no longer entertain any fear in proclaiming their religious belief. (Applause.)

The Rev. H. M'KEAN read the report of the committee for the past year, of which we gave abstracts last week.

Mr. S. B. WHITFIELD, treasurer, presented the financial statement. The total receipts for the year on the general account—including the balance in hand at the commencement of the year—was £391. 8s. 8d., and the disbursements left a balance in hand £104. 11s. 4d. There was cash in hand on the donation account of £23. 10s. 6d.; £450 having been invested. On the book distributing account there was a balance due to the treasurer of £6. 9s. 6d., and on the book store account there was a balance in hand of £5. 10s. 6d. The treasurer appealed for the liberal assistance of the Kidderminster and other friends, and said he was delighted that a subscription list of £1. 1s., and a donation of £5 had been handed to him by the Chairman from residents of this district.

On the motion of the CHAIRMAN, seconded by the Rev. J. C. ODGERS, the reports were adopted, the Rev. H. W. CROSSKEY reminding the audience that although the treasurer's report showed a considerable balance in hand, it should be remembered that the Union had many liabilities, and, in fact, the treasurer was at the present moment as poor as a church mouse. (Laughter.)

Mr. KEY moved that Mr. W. Talbot be president of the Union; Messrs. H. New and W. P. Greenway, vice-presidents; the Revs. H. W. Crosskey and H. M'Kean, secretaries; Mr. S. B. Whitfield, treasurer; and that a committee be appointed for the year.

The Rev. W. C. WALTERS seconded the motion, which was carried.

SCIENTIFIC FACTS AND CHRISTIAN THOUGHT AND WORK.

The Rev. H. W. CROSSKEY then delivered an address on "The relation of scientific facts to Christian thought and work." That subject had been chosen for him by Mr. Mellone, who thought that there was a great deal of fear and timidity in the country with respect to science. Unfortunately he was the very last man to comfort people in that direction; to give to their fears and timidity any protection at all. The truth was, he believed in science. Whatever else he disbelieved in—and he disbelieved in a great many creeds and dogmas that had been preached as the truth of God with a great many definitions of faith—he did believe there was one witness of God which had never been corrupted; that there was one glory of God over which no shadow had ever fallen; that there was one handwriting touching which there could be—to those who could interpret it—no error in itself; and that was in the glory of this universe, in the majesty of nature, in that awful and mysterious record of creation which was written on every bank, and which trembled in every leaf. With respect to that, they had an absolute truth—a rock of ages; and when religion rested upon that rock it could fear no shock, and suffer no wrong. (Applause.) He was not one to speak of the relationship between science and faith in that apologetic tone which many assumed. Sometimes men seemed almost to be apologising to God when they apologised for creation, and tried to make out that, so far as science was concerned, if they were obliged to believe it they must believe it, but that it was rather an awkward thing to believe in after all. He could offer no such apology as that. Neither could he see any distinction in substance or essence between natural and revealed religion. (Hear, hear.) To himself all religion was revealed. (Applause.) Whatsoever was of God, was unfolded to them by God. There were not two kinds of religion, one of which they were to look for in the Bible, in the life of Christ, and another in the stars and rocks—and then try, by some conjuring trick, to bring the two together; but there was one religion, and whatsoever was true in Christianity must also be true in natural fact, and whatsoever was true in natural fact could not be false in any spiritual religion. All religion was the unfolding of God—the revelation of His will, the law of His being, the conditions under which He brought forth our existence. He had also to speak with equal frankness in another direction on that subject. He had not the slightest fear of anything whatever that science could reveal. He did not—as some did—approach science with a mind of trembling dread, lest some awful secret should be uttered; not with that modern reproduction of the spirit of the middle ages, when men thought that secrets of nature must be learnt through some bargaining with Satan; that to obtain a knowledge of chemistry there must also be a knowledge of the Evil One. He could not approach science with the slightest dread. He could as soon be afraid as to the safety of this world, whether it should keep its place among the stars; whether to-morrow morning they might not find the sun had gone wrong, or that summer was gone; whether they were quite safe in going at the awful speed they were going at at that moment; or really whether it was safe to be in the world at all. He would as soon think of troubling himself about these things as troubling himself about the glory or the divine Majesty of any fact whatever that science could reveal. He desired to speak for a few minutes upon the suspicions which had arisen, and one or two methods of their deliverance from them. The first suspicion which seemed to come from science was that possibly the book of Genesis might get contradicted. Some of the Jewish notions about the order of creation might be proved to be wrong, and that that dream of the early thinker about the creation—very wonderful in its childlike beauty—might be proved contrary to scientific fact. No greater mistake could be done to religion than by identifying the realities of its sanctities with the record of the ancient Jewish cosmogony. When a man believed in the correctness of the early guesses about the method of creation, the danger was lest the foundations of faith should be undermined, and man finding out the mistake of early thinkers, should cast away the eternal realities of religion. When they looked upon the earth as having been fashioned through myriads of years, traced the succession of epoch after epoch; how mountains had been the depths of the sea, and the depths of the sea dry land; how, from age to age, marvellous forms of life had appeared, and how from epoch to epoch there had been a pressing upward to some higher and nobler form, until man appeared, they had a grander conception of creation than when they fancied that all was made in six days, and was made, like some machine in the workshop, instead of being a divine growth—an eternal unfolding. (Applause.) There was a far greater grandeur when he traced the actual work of water on the globe—far more wonderful when he saw in the hills of Kidderminster the signs of past waves; when he traced in the general contour of the land of this district where once the ebb of the sea touched; when he saw how all around them was a record of the marvellous change from sea to dry land—the sea in which the icebergs floated to the dry land upon which their houses were built; when he traced how, in ages past, mountains had disappeared and fresh continents had appeared, so that out of the destruction of the one world another world was fashioned; how perpetually by the forces of nature—which were the forces of God—were at work in bringing down and lifting up; how the rain, the dew, and the frost were God's agents in forming world upon world in successive stages;—there was far more grandeur given to the thought of how this world was fashioned than to imagine one great shower of rain going on for so many days and deluging the land, after the strange fashion told them by the old narrative. And so with respect to man himself. When they saw how that man had been created ages before any date which could be assigned to Adam; when they understood that man lived in this country when the rhinoceros was in the waters, and the elephant in the forests, and the hyenas in the caverns; when man had to carve his first rough stone implements and pass onward to higher forms of useful civilised life; when they saw how—by the forces of the seed of life within him—he advanced from the rude, rough savage state to the state of comparative civilisation which we enjoyed, it was a grander revelation of God than the placing of a man and woman, in the Garden of Eden, with nothing to do, but enjoying the tilling of the soil. Another fear, and a common one, was that a knowledge of law would take away their faith in God. In many minds there was a dread lest the establishment of a natural law meant the dethronement of the living God. That fear rested upon an utter misapprehension of what law was. The law of nature was not a nonentity; it was the will of some being. Law simply meant will in action. Things are as they are because of the operations of an active will. Law was the method of the action of God. It was the rule of a living person, the method of the acting power, and the fixity of law was the ruling of the beneficent God; it was the firmness of His will, instead of a will subject to a variety of changes. There was to him an infinitely greater confidence when he dwelt upon the hopes and the links which bound them to eternity, when he felt that those laws were not the whims of a changeable being, but the determined order of a sustaining purpose. The idea of God was that of a being that could do what He wills, and people fancied that if there was law, He must be more or less hampered or limited. The truth was, that for a man's conduct to be noble it ought to be guided by a determined purpose, and the law of nature was the determined purpose of God. Another fear seemed to come to people when they talked about Matter, and many felt troubled about the materialism of the age. Grant everything. Suppose matter to contain within itself, what Professor Tyndall said it did, the promise and potency of every form of life; that left every reality which he believed, and it became then a matter of definition. Suppose, as he believed was true, that every action, and every throb of the heart, had a physical concomitant, and suppose that every thought was connected with some physical action, the distinction between the thought and the chemical combination remained unbridged. No argument or experiment whatever could make thought the same kind of thing as the combination of two elements in the laboratory. Nothing could make self-sacrifice the same kind of thing as water seeking its level. The two things were entirely different. Man was a living worshipping being, whatever else he might be. The facts of his nature were as real as the stars in the heavens. He would put no doubt or suspicion, nor lift the little finger of a thought, against any scientific research whatever. He would say: "Do what you will, you do not and you cannot prove that my thought is not thought, that I do not live, that I do not worship." Man was a living worshipping being, and the Being who had made him capable of that (whatever be the mystery about matter), was a Being to whom he would entrust the boundless future before him. There were a thousand and one minor fears which he need not touch upon, and he would only now draw one or two thoughts from what had been said—the grounds of a great faith, and of large confidence. For himself, even amid all the turmoil of the world, and the horrors of the times, and the agonies upon which the preacher of the day had dwelt, he felt great confidence as he looked upon the vast order of things of which they were all a part. Bad as man might be, wild as might be his passions, uncontrolled as might be his desires, he was part and parcel of the universe in which not an atom fell out of its appointed path. They belonged to a great system of things, in which there was not a flower that blossoms that was not pledged in its growth—a glory of the whole. Man might be wild, and passionate, and wayward, but the very majesty of the universe was upon him, and he had the divinest hope of man's destiny, because of the glory of the universe to which he belonged. In this world they found there was nothing solitary. Not only was every part of the world linked to every other part, but this world was a system in one perfect whole, so that man was no stranger or interloper in the world. There was nothing too marvellous in the universe to be a fact. There were boundless possibilities in nature. The more a man knew, and studied anything which existed—the smallest inhabitants of pool or the largest thing in space—the more he was convinced of this, that there was nothing too marvellous to be a fact. However man might imagine, he did not believe that imagination could excel the beauty which would come upon them in a few weeks when the east winds had passed away, and the hedges were clothed with the tender green so dear to the heart, and the spring flowers put forth their perfume and the radiance of their light. Nothing imagination could conceive of could be more tender than the spring time; and so when a man studied the cause of effects, there was no explanation that could be too majestic to be a fact. There was no theory they could invent that could be greater and more marvellous than some existing law, and when even imagination could not dwarf the glory of the spring flower, when genius could not invent anything greater than the laws which prevail, they were bound to give the larger trust to the unknown future. Those facts led him to conclude with the thought—and one which he felt deeply—of the vastness of their responsibilities. Instead of feeling the littleness of life, those thoughts made one feel the grandeur of it. (Hear, hear.) Instead of being dwarfed by the mysterious majesty of creation it made it almost too awful to feel that one was a living being. It was given to man, what was not given to outward things, to "mould the vaster future." They had the glorious gift, that in the work of the race to-day the glory of to-morrow should be won. Every brave toil for the human weal, every faithful sacrifice for human good, every dear affection binding heart to heart, every tender tie, every act of heroic self-sacrifice, unknown to the world but bravely borne, brought them nearer to the "heaven to be." While they were waiting for the new heaven and the new earth; while the changes going on were undoubtedly bringing about a new future, yet in the unfolding of their natures by the rightful discharge of their duties, a grander future was coming, of righteousness, of peace, and truth.

MR. HERBERT NEW DELIVERED AN ADDRESS ON THE WORK OF THE BRITISH AND FOREIGN UNITARIAN ASSOCIATION.

Calling the attention of the meeting to one sentence in the report of the Association for last year, that the aim of the society had been for some years to stimulate local zeal and activity, Mr. New proceeded to speak of the various ways in which the association carried that sentence into practical effect. He briefly alluded to the "building difficulty," as it was described, which occurred some time ago, and expressed the belief that by the action taken by the committee on that occasion in not spending some £20,000 in bricks and mortar in the middle of the great metropolis, it had enabled the association to render such assistance to the churches in the country as would otherwise have been impossible, and had also done much in strengthening the operations of the association. There was not a district in the United Kingdom which was not the better for the operations of that association, which would have received no advantage from a central building in London. The local associations—similar to the one under whose auspices they were met—worked conjointly with the larger association, and they were doing what they could to make the Unitarian body a living and vital society. In the report of 1876 the grant to mission stations alone amounted to more than £1,700, exclusive of the jubilee grant for lectures. While asking the audience to support the Midland Christian Union, he hoped they would not be unmindful of the larger association, for which he pleaded. Many difficulties arose in the working of the association from dealing with a constituency which indulged in every possible variety of opinion and thought. That, however, was the charter of their freedom. Let there be no impatience between one school of thought and another. The association over which he presided would not draw any distinctions; they must meet the wants of the times as they arose. He was very pleased when conversing with Mr. Lloyd Garrison, shortly before his return to America, to learn from that gentleman that in America they did not use the word heretic. That was wise, as no man could measure by any standard whatever his brother's faith in religious matters? They ought to stand before the whole world as examples of what the real relations between human beings and between Christians ought to be.

"THE LEICESTER CONFERENCE."

The Rev. W. CAREY WALTERS addressed the meeting upon "The Leicester Conference." Whilst he felt no desire to adopt for himself the name "Unitarian," he most heartily assented to the first article of the constitution of the Midland Christian Union, which declared that it was "an association having for its object the promotion of Christianity in connection with the freedom which rejects subscription to any article of theological belief." Their association was a living example of the possibility of union for Christian work among men who differed very considerably in their views of divine truth. It was this freedom which rendered it possible for him to enter its bounds, and feel—as the honourable position in which they had placed him that day plainly showed he might feel—perfectly authorised to maintain his own position without compromise and without prejudice. The speaker then briefly traced the origin of the Leicester Conference of last year. This conference was called at Wycliffe Church to consider the possibility of religious communion apart from theological agreement. Its issues had been much more serious than were expected. The trumpet call of "Deacons to the rescue" had been sounded, and a great commotion had taken place in the orthodox camp. A special committee appointed by the Congregational Union had met, and in solemn conclave, by a vote of about two-thirds, had passed a condemnatory resolution, and declared that the Congregational Union had always existed for the purpose of maintaining the doctrine of the Authority of Scripture—the Incarnation, the Atoning Sacrifice of Christ, the mediatorial work of Christ, and the work of the Holy Spirit. The general committee had also passed these resolutions, and they would come on for discussion in all probability at the Assembly in May. If they were passed the Congregational Union could no longer call themselves free, but would have to sink to a place among the creed-bound organisations; for while this resolution might be called declaratory and not binding, he felt that no man who objected to a doctrinal statement, even though he accepted each doctrine contained therein, could with consistency remain a member of the Union. But this principle of free religious communion was thought to be not practicable by many besides orthodox leaders. He would venture to point out that while consistency would ever require that a man should worship where he was most fully in sympathy, some point of meeting for Unitarians and Trinitarians might be found in two thoughts:—First, that the great point to be insisted upon was not so much the nature as the character of God. He shrank from assigning a numerical definition to the being of the Infinite God, because he found it quite impossible to define his own being. All Christian bodies believed that God was one, and the doctrine of Tri-theism was only the ignorant misrepresentation of a doctrine which might have under it a very deep truth. He could conceive that the doctrine of the Trinity as held by intelligent men to-day might be a very helpful conception of the Divine Being, but he could never conceive of such a doctrine as a substitutionary atonement or everlasting punishment having any other effect than to make men rebels against God's authority, or at best slaves to a tyrant's will. The great cry of all men was "Show us the Father," and on our answer to that cry depended our ability to give to the world the true bread of life. Then, in regard to Christ, the most important question was not "What is he?" but "What has he done for me?" In the hour when he had most power over us we thought of him only as a spirit and a mighty influence. He led us to the Father, and that was enough. We could then cry "Lord Jesus! thy work for us is done." He felt sure that if men would take a deeper view of things they would see that beneath all forms of faith there had been the same spiritual life. Their work should be not to tear from their fellow men the things which had been helpful to them, but to give to the fainting ones the guidance which alone could lead them aright, and point them to the Father as the satisfaction of their every need. He believed the day was coming when the first question on men's lips as the test of Christianity would not be "What think ye of Christ, whose Son is he?" but "Lovest thou me?"

On the motion of Mr. J. STOOKE a vote of thanks was passed to the ladies who had kindly given trays, on whose behalf Mr. GEORGE HOPKINS briefly responded.—The Rev. W. E. MELLONE moved a cordial vote of thanks to Mr. W. Talbot for his services in the chair, and said the newly-elected president was one of the oldest friends to the Christian Union in that district.—Mr. GEORGE ISAACS seconded the motion, which was carried with acclamation.—The CHAIRMAN assured the meeting that he was at all times ready to sacrifice his personal feelings when he could be of any service to others.

BELFAST.—The Rev. R. Cowley Smith has tendered his resignation as missionary to the Belfast Unitarian Association.

HALE, CHESHIRE.—On Monday evening, the 18th inst., an entertainment was held at the Hale Chapel Schoolroom. In consequence of the inability, through indisposition, of John Hall, Esq., The Grange, to preside, as had been announced, the chair was taken by the minister (Rev. T. Lloyd Jones), and a good programme was gone through, consisting of readings, songs, duets, and trios by ladies and gentlemen, some of whom had come from Knutsford, Manchester, Styal, and Altrincham. A vote of thanks to those who had kindly taken part, proposed by the chairman, was carried with acclamation, and the singing of the National Anthem concluded the very pleasant meeting, which broke up about half-past nine.

BRISTOL: LEWIN'S MEAD DOMESTIC MISSION.

The annual meeting of this mission was held on Tuesday evening, 12th March, in the Mission Chapel, Lower Montague-street, A. H. Wansey, Esq., in the chair. The Chairman in his opening speech referred to the frequent exhortations that people received to make it a part of their duty as Christians to visit the poor, but, he said if there be one duty more than another that requires special aptitude and nice tact and discrimination, it is trying to be of use to the poor, and, therefore, while it is still a duty to do whatever we can, we must be thankful that we are able to delegate the regular and systematic work of instructing and encouraging them to missionaries set apart for the purpose, amongst the most able and judicious of whom we may reckon our friends Mr. and Mrs. Andrews.

The report of the committee stated that all the institutions in connection with the mission were in good working order; and that the good that was being done was evident to all who were acquainted with the locality in which the mission is situated. Sanitary improvements and the more general attendance of the children at school were gradually transforming the neighbourhood, and the mission supplied the much needed means of moral and religious influence. The year that has closed is made memorable by the death of Miss Mary Carpenter, one of the most zealous and earnest of the founders of this Domestic Mission. The present subscribers and friends desire to add their tribute of respect and esteem to that which has been given so generally through the length and breadth of the land. She has joined . . . the choir invisible

Of those immortal dead, who live again
In minds made better by their presence—
So to live is heaven.

The Report of Mr. Andrews gave several interesting instances in which a little kindness and encouragement had been the means of inspiring fresh hope in the minds of men and women who seemed to be gradually sinking into a state of great depression, and in which he had prevailed upon them to attend the mission services instead of sitting at home and brooding over their troubles. Mr. Andrews is always an earnest advocate of temperance principles, and is able to show a very fair number of cases in which giving up an indulgence that so often leads to disastrous consequences has resulted in a steady improvement and increasing self-respect. It is sometimes said that when a woman takes to drinking there is no hope of amendment. But he relates a circumstance which proves that hope of amendment should never be abandoned. One of the many working-men whom Mr. Andrews has succeeded in inducing to give up drinking habits has been for some years making steady progress in home comforts, and very useful amongst his neighbours. Some time ago he took his old widowed mother to live with him, a woman terribly addicted to drinking, and who had fallen into great poverty in consequence; but only on condition that she took a total abstinence pledge. She, knowing that these were the only terms in which she could share his comfortable fireside, consented, and, strange to relate, she is now one of the most zealous members in the Good Templars' Lodge. Her craving for drink has quite left her, and she bids fair to end her days in a position of respectability, to which she had long been a stranger. The religious services, and the Sunday school, are reported to be well attended; and this is fully substantiated by the members of the Lewin's Mead and Oakfield Road congregations who take part in them.

Mrs. Andrews (who, we are glad to say, is now restored to health) is especially useful in looking after young girls at the very critical period of their entering service. She has been the means of rescuing a great number of them who were on the very threshold of the most terrible danger, and by her gentleness and persuasive pleading has turned them into a better way. Not unfrequently has she had to seek, even in the haunts of vice, some young girl who, meeting only with harshness at home, had grown reckless and cast off all restraint. And more than once she has been able, before it was too late, to bring them back with her, and find them a respectable home. Mrs. Andrews is no longer able to do as much as she has done in former years, but her heart is in her work, and she has so far yielded to the advice of her friends as to reserve her strength for those cases with which she is so specially fitted to deal.

The meeting was well attended, and a very hearty spirit pervaded it from first to last.

NEWS OF OUR CHURCHES.

AVONDALE ROAD CHAPEL, PECKHAM.—The annual sermons were preached on Sunday last, in the morning by Rev. T. Dunkerley, B.A., and in the evening by Rev. H. Ierson, M.A. A congregational meeting was held at the close of the evening service to receive reports from secretary and treasurer, for election of officers, &c. The report showed that while decrease of members, from various reasons that occasioned no loss to the general interests of the cause, had not been balanced by accession of new members, there was a very perceptible increase in the funds raised. The preacher of the evening gave a very encouraging address, in which he expressed his satisfaction with the report that had been submitted. Votes of thanks were passed to the Revs. H. Ierson, G. Carter, Messrs. Fabricius, Warren, Jenks, Griffin, Miss White, and other active members of the congregation. The annual social meeting was held on Tuesday, the chair being taken by Mr. Carter. Addresses were then given by Revs. T. Dunkerley, T. Bowring, S. S. Tayler, Esq., and several members of the congregation.

BIRKENHEAD: Mr. JOHN RUSKIN.—At the last meeting of the Birkenhead Literary and Scientific Society, Mr. Bancroft Cooke read an excellent paper on "John Ruskin," in which he spoke of Mr. Ruskin as a student of nature, a political economist, and a social reformer. The secretary of the society is the Rev. William Binns, who, a year or two ago, held the office of president.

BOLTON: FREE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.—The Rev. A. B. Camm, who is suffering from the consequences of a severely sprained foot, the result of an accident prior to beginning his work in Bolton, has felt himself compelled to ask the committee of the Free Christian Church to release him from his engagement, with a view to rest and complete recovery. The committee unanimously requested Mr. Camm to reconsider his decision, but after a week's deliberation he still felt it necessary, under the circumstances, to resign. Mr. Camm will terminate his ministry the first Sunday in April.

CROFT, NEAR WARRINGTON.—On Saturday last a social meeting was held here, when upwards of seventy persons were present. A very comfortable cup of tea was provided in the schoolroom. After tea Mr. T. P. Jones presided, and in a few kind words gave a welcome to all, saying how glad he was to see Messrs. John and Joseph Clare, Mr. Richard Yates, and others present. Mr. John Phillips then expressed, in the interest of the young people, a desire to see the Croft congregation with a settled minister of their own, and advised them to join the East Lancashire Unitarian Mission. He urged this upon the older members as a duty they owed to the younger ones and to the young of their respective growing-up families. By joining that Mission he thought they would soon have a minister who would attend to their various wants, consolidate them, and arm the young to resist temptations to fall away into irregular habits. His experience as a lay preacher among them was that such intermittent parochial labour as laymen could give was soon lost, because it could not be followed up persistently and continuously. The choir of the Astley chapel then gave a concert, interspersed with recitations. For this purpose they had come a distance of six miles. All the pieces were well received, and appeared to be enjoyed. Subsequently Mr. John Mather addressed the meeting, and he also urged the Croft friends to join the East Lancashire Mission. Mr. Samuel Holt also spoke, as did Mr. Rodgers, the minister at Astley, in reply to a vote of thanks to the Astley friends for their kind visit and services. This meeting, it is hoped, will be the beginning of new spirit and life in this old congregation, which has a much better chapel in which to meet than the old Risley chapel, given up to the Scotch Presbyterians many years ago.

DERBY: FRIARGATE CHAPEL.—On Monday evening last an old scholars' re-union party was held in connection with the Friargate Chapel, Derby. About 100 teachers, adult scholars, former scholars, and old friends sat down to tea. After tea there was what is called a conversazione, which in this case was a really pleasant talk among old and new friends, interspersed with music, &c. There was no standing on forms, except for the sake of witnessing some "shocking" experiments with a galvanic battery. In the course of the evening "Auld Lang Syne" was sung with a hearty joining of hands and voices. Later on an opportunity was afforded for the younger members to enjoy themselves in a more exuberant fashion; but it was to be observed that some of the oldest displayed an activity in the performance of "Sir Roger" which might fairly vie with that of Mr. Pickwick and Old Mrs. Wardle themselves. The party was arranged and invitations sent out by the Monday evening class, which has been well attended, and has done useful work in the study of English literature during the winter, and which has been brought by it to an agreeable close. Altogether, for numbers and general heartiness, it was the most successful gathering which has been held in the Friargate Schoolroom for many years. The proceedings were closed with the hymn, "Holiest, breathe an evening blessing."

ELLAND.—The Rev. A. Buckley, of Elland, concluded his ministry as missionary of the West Riding Unitarian Mission on March 12. On Sunday, March 10, at the close of the evening service, the congregation passed a resolution tendering its warmest thanks to him for the untiring energy, zeal, and ability manifested during the four years he has occupied the pulpit, and deeply regretting the discontinuance of his labour amongst them, and assuring him that he would always command their respect and admiration.

HULL.—A lecture was delivered at the Mechanics' Institute on Thursday evening by the Rev. J. M. Dixon, whose subject was "George Dawson." Mr. Dixon described the life of Mr. Dawson, giving many examples of his manly character. At the close a cordial vote of thanks was accorded the lecturer.

HINDERY.—The annual congregational tea party was held on Monday evening, March 18th, in the new schoolrooms. The report, read by Mr. Jones, the secretary, gave an encouraging account of congregational work done during the past year. All the seats in the body of the chapel, it appeared, were now let, and some of them twice over. It had lately been decided to let more seats in the same way, in cases where the present holders were not regular in their attendance. If this method should stir up the original seatholders to look better and more frequently after their property, no great harm would be done; and besides, it was suggested that the difficulty might shortly be overcome by improvements in the chapel which would afford accommodation for all parties. The Sunday school, with its various classes and institutions, was shown to be in its usual active and vigorous condition. The Mutual Improvement Class had been well attended and very lively discussions had taken place, joined in by persons holding various and remarkably divergent creeds, and by some persons holding, seemingly, no creeds at all. After some discussion on the report, the Chairman, the Rev. A. Rushton, called on two young men to address the meeting, who gave very interesting accounts of their progress from orthodoxy to Unitarianism. The one had left the Church of England, and the other had left the Methodists. Quite a large number of individuals, chiefly young men, have become Unitarians in the adjoining township of Westhoughton. Eight of these have in the course of the year taken seats in the Hindley chapel, and are becoming active members of the congregation. The rest of the evening was taken up with singing, dramas, and speeches by the chairman, by Mr. Fogg, and various members of the congregation.

KEIGHLEY.—The teachers, scholars, and friends of the Sunday school held their first tea party on Tuesday. After tea they adjourned to the meeting-room above, where an entertainment consisting of readings, singing, and speeches was given. The chair was occupied by Mr. Greenwood Hopkinson, of West Leeds-street, and speeches were given by the Rev. W. Blazebly, B.A., and Mr. G. Simpson, of Keighley. Recitations were given by several of the school children. Mr. J. Foulds presided at the harmonium, and a very enjoyable meeting was brought to a close by votes of thanks to the chairman and others who had taken part in the entertainment.

LIVERPOOL: SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION.—A meeting of the District Sunday School Teachers' Association was held on the 14th inst., at the Domestic Mission, Beaufort-street. After tea the Rev. J. Shannon took the chair, when the secretary, the Rev. H. W. Hawkes, read the annual report and accounts. The paper of the evening, entitled "The Sunday School Teacher: What is his Ideal?" was read by Mr. J. F. Robinson, and gave great pleasure and stimulus. It was followed by a hearty and useful discussion, after which various plans for increasing the work and usefulness of the Association were mooted and debated upon. The usual votes of thanks closed an unusually interesting meeting.

LONDON: STEPNEY COLLEGE CHAPEL.—On Wednesday evening, the Rev. R. Spears delivered the eighth of a series of theological lectures. The chapel has been well filled every evening, and the discussion, at the close of each lecture, with orthodox ministers and others has been in general typical of the greatest fairness and the best feeling. The chapel on the Sunday evenings has been unusually well attended since the commencement of the lectures. An interesting meeting was held on Monday evening, called a musical soirée, at which Mr. Cook, in the name of the congregation, presented to Miss Cogswell, the organist, a handsome gold watch as an expression of the gratitude of the members and friends of the chapel for her free and valuable service at the organ and her willingness at all times to aid the congregation. About 120 friends were present at tea and during the evening to listen to the various pieces of music, which were excellently rendered. The Rev. R. Spears presided.

MERTHYR: SOUP KITCHEN.—An interesting incident took place at the Drill Hall on Wednesday morning, March 13th, when the captain of the bread cutters, the Rev. N. R. Williams, called his brethren into the ante-room and presented each with a valuable copy of the late Dr. Channing's works, which Mr. Williams had procured from the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, whose secretary, the Rev. H. Ierson, M.A., had kindly forwarded the books free of all charge. In presenting the books Mr. Williams touched upon the good work in which they were all engaged, and congratulated his bread-cutting brethren on the amiable feelings that existed between them and himself, differing widely as they did from him in religion. It pleased him to know that although they could not agree with him as to all the "essentials of Christianity," yet they could meet him there and work with him heart and soul on the broad principle of Christian charity, as votaries of the greatest of the three Christian graces, according to the great Apostle Paul. The gift was highly appreciated by each recipient.

MOTTRAM.—A most interesting gathering of old friends took place on Sunday last, consisting of members of the congregation and teachers of the Sunday school, together with others from a distance who were formerly connected with the place. The object which drew so many together was to present a token of esteem and affection to Alderman Duckworth, Mayor of Bury, who had rendered valuable service in the past in the Sunday school and in the church. After tea a meeting was held, beginning with singing, reading the Scriptures, and prayer. The Rev. N. Green then referred to the object for which they were assembled. It was to testify their respect and affection for one who, by his benevolence and uprightness of character, had earned their esteem and love. Mr. John Sidebottom then presented Mr. Duckworth with a memorial. In the course of his speech he reviewed some of the pleasing incidents of Mr. Duckworth's connection with the Mottram Free Christian Church. In reply, Mr. Duckworth recalled the time when he first came to Mottram, of the happy years he had passed in the Sunday school and in the church, of the unabated interest he still felt in the place, and thanked his dear friends for their kind utterances towards him and his family, adding that the memorial received would be highly prized by him as long as he lived, and by his family after him. Other speeches were delivered by the following gentlemen:—Messrs. Lowe, Shaw, Barlow, Booth, Watts, and Chorlton. During the evening the church choir sang several hymns, and the meeting was closed with prayer by the minister.

OVER DARWEN.—On Wednesday evening last the first of a series of three lectures on Cookery was given by Miss Clewis, of the Manchester School of Cookery, in connection with the Unitarian cause. The lecturer illustrated her remarks by making a number of dishes in the presence of her audience. At the close of the lecture the food was distributed among those present. The chair was taken by T. W. Ashton, Esq., who in a pleasant and suggestive speech introduced the lecturer. Great interest was evinced by those present (about 130), and it is anticipated that at the next lectures the audiences will be still larger. In moving a vote of thanks to the chairman, the Rev. C. H. Osler said that he had been much impressed with the kind courtesy of Mr. Ashton, to whom he went a perfect stranger to ask him to preside on that occasion.

SHEFFIELD: UPPERTHORPE.—The annual congregational meeting of the Uppertorpe Unitarian Chapel was held on Tuesday, the 12th inst., when about 130 members and friends sat down to tea. After tea the meeting was presided over by the Rev. G. Knight, pastor, whose apparently completely restored health, and the excellent address he delivered, caused an unusual amount of cheerfulness to prevail. The Rev. Eli Fay, minister of Upper Chapel, in a vigorous speech, spoke of the great work that was now demanding the attention of our Church. He once more assured his friend Mr. Knight, and his people, that he should always be ready to do all in his power to strengthen their hands. The interest he felt in their prosperity was scarcely second to what he felt in regard to his own people. Messrs. Bramley, Webster, J. Armitage, J. B. Wostinholm, and H. Rowley also delivered addresses. The most pleasant part of the proceedings was a presentation to Mrs. Knight, wife of the pastor. Mr. Woollen, on behalf of the congregation, made the presentation, which consisted of a beautifully carved lady's work table, and a purse of gold. Mr. Woollen, in the course of his remarks, said that the ladies of the congregation, impressed with a sense of Mrs. Knight's great worth, of her indefatigable and self-denying zeal to promote the happiness of the congregation, of her undeviating geniality and kindness to all alike, of the continued solicitude she has evinced for the suffering and poor, had determined to make a record of the esteem and love which were felt towards her by every member of the congregation. Mrs. Knight, who was somewhat overpowered by the warm attachment manifested towards her, acknowledged the gift in a few graceful words; as also did Mr. Knight.

STAND.—The annual meeting of the congregation was held on Wednesday evening, the 13th instant, and was attended by 100 of the adult worshippers at the chapel. After tea the chair was taken by Mr. Squire Cheetham, the senior warden, who was supported by the Revs. William Harrison, J. McDowell, W. C. Squier, Messrs. W. H. Taylor, Mark Taylor, F. C. Roscow, and W. Horrocks. Satisfactory reports and statements of accounts from congregation and Sunday school having been read and adopted, Mr. Roscow was elected warden for the next two years. A resolution conveying the thanks of the congregation to the Misses Philips, of Penmoyle, near Chepstow, for their generous donation of £200 towards defraying the expense of enlarging the chapel yard and improving the chapel, was heartily adopted. The rest of the proceedings consisted of speeches by the Revs. McDowell, Harrison, Squier, Messrs. Horrocks, Darbyshire, Smart, Taylor, &c., and a musical entertainment given by the choir, under the efficient direction of Miss Raglan, the chapel organist. The meeting was one of the best attended and most pleasant ever held at Stand.

STOURBRIDGE.—A course of Sunday evening lectures at the Presbyterian Chapel has just been concluded. The following is a list of the lecturers and their subjects, in the order in which the lectures were given:—Mr. Geo. St. Clair (Birmingham), "Agnosticism;" Rev. John Gordon (Kenilworth), "Universal Redemption;" Rev. Wm. Cochrane (Cradley), "Personal Inquiry: The Method of Forming Personal Belief;" Rev. W. E. Mellone (Kidderminster), "Liberal Religion: What is it?" Rev. John Cuckson (Birmingham), "Modern Materialism in its Relation to Religious Thought;" Rev. M. Gibson (Dudley), "The Name Emmanuel (God with us) as applied to Christ;" Rev. T. B. Broadrick (The Lyce), "The World Waiting for the Human Jesus;" Rev. D. Maginnis (Stourbridge), "The Mythology of the Old Testament;" Rev. Chas. Clarke (Birmingham), "Man's Life on Earth: its Divine Purpose and End;" Rev. H. W. Crosskey (Birmingham), "Modern Scientific Discoveries: how do they affect our Religion?" The attendance throughout the course was very satisfactory, keeping up, indeed increasing, to the very last. Tracts were freely distributed at the close of each lecture.

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Received.—T. B.; G. G. J. S.

Several letters on the Papacy, and on Congregational Singing, are held over.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE SPIRIT OF WAR AND CHRISTIANITY.

To the Editors.—Mr. Lake complains that I "condemned a discourse on the strength of a brief notice reporting half a dozen detached sentences." He is not accurate. I did not presume to condemn a discourse; I only condemned a specific teaching about war, which seemed to me to be specially mischievous at a time when the nation required everything calculated to soothe irritation, to restrain passion, and to calm exaggerated fears. I fully sympathise with Mr. Lake about the impropriety of founding an opinion upon a brief notice of what is said, but it was his ferocious text that led me to think the notice was not far wrong; and his letter confirms me in my judgment as to what his teaching was. Against that teaching I felt bound, on public grounds, to make "war," and "blessed be Jehovah" who taught "my fingers to fight." I am glad, however, to hear that his discourse "denounced war in clear and strong terms as being alike the folly, the wickedness, and the madness of nations;" but if war is "folly," and "wickedness," and "madness," whatever did Mr. Lake mean by standing up with his war paint on at a critical stage of the war fever? That is the point. When the fever was at its height, why did he administer a stimulant in the form of a plea in favour of fighting for something called "dignity," and why did he so pointedly suggest that the religious message for the hour was embodied in the statement that God teaches people's fingers to fight? We had had too much of that already, and we wanted from our teachers all we could get on the other side. Mr. Lake asks me what I should have said if he had taken for his text the words of Jesus: "I came not to send peace but a sword." Well, if he had founded upon that text a justification for war, or an incentive to it, I should have been very much surprised, for Jesus himself explains his words by showing how his new and revolutionary ideas will divide people even in households, as new and revolutionary ideas always do. Of the reference to the sword in Luke xxii. 36, I can only say that it is out of harmony with Christ's ordinary language, and I do not understand it. I see nothing inconsistent in the statements that Jesus has "won a deathless empire over the hearts of men," and that the past 1,800 years have been "more fruitful of bloodshed, cruelty, and strife than any 1,800 years that went before;" for the two statements refer to different persons, spheres, or events. Both statements are true. An ancient psalmist, as we know, can misunderstand God, and take Him to be a huge fighting man; and, in like manner, a modern "Christian" can misunderstand Christ, and take him to approve of an auto da fe: but these are the errors of stumbling men; and his "empire" advances notwithstanding, and is, thank God! a great reality. Mr. Lake thinks I condemned a discourse because I questioned a particular teaching in it. So also he thinks that I condemned a whole psalm because of one verse in it. I did nothing of the kind. If there are bad apples in a barrel, I take them out, I do not throw the whole away. Still, I confess I have but little liking for the rough, fighting saints of the Old Testament, with their frequent appeals to God as a boisterous red-handed warrior.

I hardly know what Mr. Lake means by the statement that war is "an honoured and recognised institution of Christian nations;" but I presume that he regrets that this is so, for he also says it is "the folly, the wickedness, and the madness of nations." As a "folly," a "wickedness," and a "madness," it ought not to be "honoured and recognised," but dishonoured and discountenanced; and that can best be done by discarding the barbarous language of the fighting saints, and by making a dead set against the war spirit when it is rampant, as it was a few weeks ago. But, even though war were a necessity for the preservation of "national existence," surely the assertion of its necessity and possible sanctity, during the late foolish, wicked, or unfortunate war fever, was singularly ill-timed and out of place. It would, of course, be great presumption to say this by way of calling our friend Mr. Lake to account; but in discussing a great public question these references are useful and necessary, and I think too well of him to imagine that he would wish us not to speak right out at a time like this.—Yours truly,

J. PAGE HOPPS.

CONGREGATIONAL SINGING.

To the Editors.—I have read with very great pleasure the article which you recently printed on Congregational Singing, and also the correspondence which has resulted therefrom. Before the editorial veto is brought forward I should be glad to say a word. As it appears to me, organs and choirs are most useful things in so far as they assist and stimulate congregational singing; but when they are vicarious or nearly so, and simply take the place of that singing, they become both religiously and from a congregational point of view a great mistake. I have no objection to a sacred concert, but I do not think that we need indulge in that sort of thing during the time of public worship; though, of course, an anthem by the choir would be perfectly permissible. That great improvements in congregational singing have yet to be effected I have not a doubt, but these improvements will only be brought about with a more extended knowledge of music itself. To me it seems somewhat marvellous that from year's end to year's end a number of people should meet together for the purpose of worshipping God, and of singing His praise in such an ill-prepared way as they do. I suppose that few of them would take an engagement in the ball-room unless they had previously done something towards mastering the very fascinating and graceful art of dancing. I wonder if the intelligent and musical rendering of divine praise is less momentous or important? Fortunately, however, music is itself so delightful and delighting that if the means are only provided and the opportunities afforded the desired result is almost certain to accrue. In the public worship, friends knowing what is to be done will, I feel sure, come prepared to do it.

The first step to take in the accomplishment of the desideratum is the choosing of a tune book suitable to your hymns, and the introduction to the congregation of as many of those tune books as possible. Some might be provided, and others might be sold on the cheapest terms; and of course a book one of the editions of which is very low priced would, from a pecuniary point of view, be the most suitable to a general congregation. A general congregational practice under the management of the organist and the choir would then have to be instituted, and experience has shown that such practices have soon become immensely popular among the people themselves; though possibly some might be able, as well as would prefer, to take the practice at home. The improvement in congregational singing would in a very short time be found to be simply marvellous. Taste and effect could very soon be introduced, and gradually our church music would be found to have a grandeur and glory approachingly commensurate with its importance and meaning. Compared with what may now and then, and here and there, be heard in the way of grumble and struggle and shout, or else of comparative congregational silence and professional musical sweetness, precision, and delight, we should have a fullness, depth, harmony, and volume of sound which would be simply grand to hear and delightful to participate in.

The preliminary difficulties of teaching sight-singing are reduced to their minimum by using the moveable doh system, i.e., the calling of each major key-note doh. This will render the teaching of vocal music far simpler than in the ordinary way. And if any congregation really wanted to produce at a small cost, and in the least possible time, a more general, yet musically correct, rendering of divine praise, they might purchase copies of a tune-book published by Gall and Inglis, of Edinburgh, entitled the Union Sacred Tune Book, containing 490 tunes and 19 chants, price 2s., or 1s. 6d. for the separate voice parts. It is called the Union tune book because it is published in Hamilton's patent union notation, which has the initial letter of the names of the note inside the ordinary musical characters themselves. This makes the matter easy from the very first, and enables a competent teacher to teach at one and the same time, without any further books of instruction, both music and psalmody. Indeed, one good rehearsal would be sufficient to master the four parts of any of our ordinary hymn tunes, whilst a repetition of such rehearsals would soon produce an efficiency simply surprising.

Of course all this has nothing to do with the question of a voluntary or a paid choir, nor do I at all wish to enter into that point, being often a question simply of means; but undoubtedly, with regard to the people themselves, the most competent instruction and the finest musical taste would produce the most perfect and desirable result.

In addition to the improvement and considerable extension of congregational singing, it will be found that the method now suggested would materially enlarge the attendance at our public worship and add to the usefulness and sociability of our congregational life, while sacred singing in the family circle—a thing with us much to be desired—would almost become an institution. The general rehearsals might also be made semi-religious by opening and closing them with prayer.—Yours faithfully,

Liverpool.

F. SUMMERS.

COMING WEEK.

DOB LANE.—On Sunday, closing services. Preachers, morning, Rev. S. A. Steintal; afternoon, Rev. E. Allen; and evening, Rev. Wm. Gaskell, M.A.

LONDON: ESSEX-STREET CHAPEL.—On Tuesday evening, a lecture by the Rev. T. W. Fackelton, on "The Purpose of Man's Life," and on Thursday at Hammersmith Town Hall.

LONDON: CARTER LANE MISSION.—On Sunday morning, annual sermon, by Rev. J. A. Picton, at Hampstead Chapel.

On Monday evening, annual meeting of the Mission.

MISSION SUNDAY: NORTH MIDLAND DISTRICT.—On Sunday next, sermons and collections in aid of the Presbyterian and Unitarian Association.

MANCHESTER: STRANGEWAYS UNITARIAN FREE CHURCH.—On Sunday morning next, the Rev. J. B. Lloyd will preach.

DEATHS.

BARBER.—On the 20th inst., at 9, Cavendish Grove, Monton, Eccles, in the sixth year of his age, Thomas Percy, second son of Edmund and Bertha Barber. Friends will please accept this intimation.

COLSTON.—On the 12th inst., at London, the Rev. John Colston, aged 65 years.

MADOCKS.—On the 13th inst., at Ipswich, Mary Turner, wife of John Madocks, aged 72.

MATTHEWS.—On the 14th inst., in his 76th year, Joseph Matthews of Walsall, formerly of Evesham. Friends will please accept this intimation.

TURLAND.—On the 16th inst., at Higher Green, Ainsworth, Elizabeth Turland, aged 76.

TURNER.—On the 14th inst., at Middleton, Mr. Samuel Turner, aged 55 years. He was one of the founders of the Unitarian congregation at this place 19 years ago.

Printed for the Proprietors by WILLIAM EVANS, of Apsley Villa 377, Waterloo Road, Clogtham Hill, at his Printing Offices, No. 3, Cross-street, Parish of Manchester; and Published by JOHN PHILLIPS, at New Cannon Chambers, 65, Market-street, in said Parish of Manchester.—London Agents: Messrs. Smart and Allen, 2, London-house Yard, Paternoster Row.—Friday, March 22, 1878.

The Unitarian Herald.

EDITED BY

REV. JAMES BLACK, M.A., & REV. S. FLETCHER WILLIAMS.

VOL. XVIII.—883

FRIDAY, MARCH 29, 1878.

PRICE 1D.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE.
Doings and Sayings	106
Scottish Notes	106
Books and Authors	106
The Mission of Unitarianism	107
The Liverpool North-end Mission	107
Not of Right but of Grace	108
The Perfect Day	108
Working Men's Clubs	108
London: Carter Lane Mission	108
Manchester District Unitarian Association	109
News of our Churches	110

STANGEWAYS UNITARIAN FREE CHURCH.

On Sunday next, the Rev. J. T. MARRIOTT will preach. In the morning, "The Gospel of Spring." Services, 10.30 and 6.30. The Offertory.

THE MANCHESTER DOMESTIC MISSION.

ANNUAL MEETING and SOIREE will be held at the Memorial Hall, Albert Square, on Wednesday evening, April 3rd. Tea on the table at 6 p.m. The chair will be taken at 7 p.m. by the Rev. WM. GASKELL, M.A., and the meeting will be addressed by the Revs. C. Beard, B.A., and C. Hargrove, B.A., and other gentlemen. S. A. STENTHAL, Sec.

BIRMINGHAM FREE CHRISTIAN SOCIETY, LOWER FAZELEY STREET.

The First ANNIVERSARY of the Dedication of the Church will be celebrated by SPECIAL SERVICES on Sunday, April 7th. Morning preacher, Mr. GEO. R. TWINN; Evening, Rev. C. CLARKE.

On Monday, April 8th, a Public TEA and MEETING. Chair to be taken at seven o'clock, by W. KENRICK, Esq., Mayor.

LOWER MOSLEY-STREET DAY AND SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

The ANNUAL SERMONS in Upper Brook-street Church, in support of these Schools, will be preached on Sunday, April 7th, by the Rev. J. PAGE HOPPS, of Leicester. Morning service at 10.45; Evening service at 6.30. A Collection will be made at each service.

PRESTON.—SCHOOL SERMONS will be preached April 14th, by Rev. FRANK W. WALTERS, of Glasgow.

MANCHESTER NEW COLLEGE, LONDON.

LOCAL THEOLOGICAL EXAMINATIONS, 1878.

All Applications for these Examinations must be made in writing to the Secretary not later than 10th April. Such applications must state—

- The full names and addresses of candidates who intend to present themselves for examination.
- The subjects in which they desire to be examined.
- The full names and addresses of at least two persons who will undertake personally to conduct the examination in accordance with the regulations. Of these, one must also undertake to act as local correspondent, through whom all subsequent correspondence with the College authorities must pass.
- A fee of 2s. 6d. for each candidate must be forwarded with the application.

P.O.O. to be made payable at Withington to the Secretary, Rev. CHARLES T. POYNTING, Fallowfield, Manchester.

TO the Honourable the Commons of Great Britain and Ireland in Parliament Assembled.

The Humble Petition of the undersigned Women of the United Kingdom Sheweth:

That whereas your petitioners desire to raise the standard of public morality, and that whereas every legal and official sanction given to prostitution is a barrier to such effort and an encouragement to vice, your petitioners humbly pray that the Contagious Diseases Acts 1866-69 be immediately and unconditionally repealed.

This petition is in course of signature in support of the bill before Parliament for the repeal of the acts. Sheets for signature may be obtained from Miss M. Priestman, Durham Park, Bristol.

MANCHESTER DISTRICT SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION.

The THIRTY-THIRD ANNUAL MEETING will be held on GOOD FRIDAY next, the 19th April, at Manchester.

The day's proceedings will commence with a RELIGIOUS SERVICE in Cross-street Chapel, when a Sermon will be preached by the

Rev. WILLIAM GASKELL, M.A.

Service to commence at eleven o'clock.

After the Sermon, a Collection will be made in aid of the Publishing Fund, as the Committee is most desirous of paying off the debt due to the Treasurer.

After this service, Dinner will be provided in the Lower Mosley-street Schools, at a charge of Ninepence each person.

The BUSINESS MEETING will be held in the Memorial Hall, Albert Square, at two o'clock. The chair to be taken by the President of the Association, EDWIN WINNER, Esq.

Tea will be provided, at four o'clock, in the Lower Mosley-street Schools, at a charge of Sixpence each person.

As ample accommodation will be provided by the friends at Mosley-street, both for dinner and tea, the Committee trusts that all friends will avail of the same, and thus avoid the possibility of a loss.

The EVENING MEETING will be held in the Memorial Hall. The chair to be taken, at six o'clock prompt, by the Rev. S. A. STEINTHAL.

The following Papers will be read, to be followed by discussion:—

Mr. GEORGE CUNLIFFE, of Bolton:

Subject:—"Our Elder Classes and their Teachers."

Mr. JOHN REYNOLDS:

Subject:—"Week Evening Amusements for Sunday Scholars."

Deputations from the London, Midland, and Yorkshire Sunday-school Associations are expected to be present.

JESSE PILCHER, } Hon.
JOHN REYNOLDS, } Secs.

LONDON DOMESTIC MISSION.

The ANNUAL SERMONS in behalf of the above Mission will be preached by the Rev. CHARLES HARGROVE, B.A., of Leeds, on Sunday, May 26th—in the morning, at the Unitarian Chapel, Paradise Place, Hackney; and in the evening, at the new station of the Mission, George's Row, Lever-street, St. Luke's.

MANCHESTER NEW COLLEGE, LONDON.

"The College adheres to its original principle of freely imparting Theological knowledge without insisting on the adoption of particular doctrines."

The Trustees of Manchester New College offer for Competition TWO SCHOLARSHIPS of £50 per annum, tenable for two years, at any British or Irish University.

At the time of receiving the Scholarship each scholar is to furnish a written statement that it is his bona fide intention to enter Manchester New College as a Divinity Student, the first session after graduation.

The examination will be held at University Hall, Gordon Square, London, W.C., on Thursday and Friday, May 9th and 10th, at 9 a.m.

For further particulars apply to

R. D. DARBISHIRE, Esq., B.A.
26, George-street, Manchester; or } Secs.
Rev. CHARLES BEARD, B.A.,
13, Southill Road, Liverpool.

COMMISSION-STREET UNITARIAN CHAPEL, BOLTON.

A B A Z A A R

for the

SALE OF FANCY AND USEFUL ARTICLES

WILL BE HELD IN THE

BANK-STREET SCHOOLOROMS,

(the use of which has been very kindly granted for this purpose by the congregation)

On WEDNESDAY, THURSDAY, FRIDAY, and SATURDAY,

April 10th, 11th, 12th, and 13th, 1878.

In order to raise a sum of money sufficient to clear off a debt of £650 on the present buildings, and for intended improvements.

PATRONS:

His Worship the MAYOR of Bolton.

R. N. Phillips, Esq., M.P.

John Hick, Esq., M.P.

J. K. Cross, M.P.

The Mayor of Manchester.

The Mayor of Bury.

Abel Heywood, Esq. (ex-Mayor of Manchester.)

Richard Harwood, Esq., J.P. (ex-Mayor of Salford.)

Joseph Cook, Esq., J.P.

H. J. Leppoc, Esq., J.P.

Holbrook Gaskell, Esq., J.P.

Caleb Wright, Esq., J.P.

Charles Taylor, Esq., J.P.

Alderman Thos. Lever.

Councillor J. C. Haslam.

Councillor Thos. Bramley.

Councillor J. J. Bradshaw.

Rev. C. C. Coe, F.R.G.S.

Rev. A. B. Camm.

Rev. C. A. Berry.

John Grundy, Esq.

Joseph Lupton, Esq.

Arthur Greg, Esq.

William Haslam, Esq.

John Harwood, Esq.

Frank Taylor, Esq.

William Inglis, Esq.

The BAZAAR will be OPENED on Wednesday, April 10th, at Eleven a.m. by

A B E L H E Y W O O D, ESQ.

(ex-Mayor of Manchester.)

THOMAS RAWSON, Esq., of Manchester, will Preside at the Piano, and give Selections of Music at intervals during the day.

LUNCH WILL BE PROVIDED AT 1.30.

On each of the following days the Bazaar will be open at 2 p.m.

Rooms will be set apart for the Exhibition of Electrical Appliances, Microscopical Objects, and other interesting

Curiosities. Vocal and Instrumental Music, and various entertainments will be given at intervals.

ADMISSION:—Wednesday, from 11 a.m. to 6 p.m., 2s. 6d.;

from 6 p.m., 1s. Thursday, from 2 to 6 p.m., 1s.;

from 6 p.m., 6d. Friday and Saturday, all day, 6d. Season Tickets, 3s.

Children under twelve half-price.

The support of the public is earnestly solicited, and contributions in saleable articles will be thankfully received by any of the following stall Holders:—

No. I. STALL.

Mrs. Lazenby, 15, Deane Terrace, Deane.

Miss Tottie, Strangeways, Manchester.

No. II. STALL.

Mrs. John Harwood, Woodsleigh, Heaton.

Miss Nuttall, South Bank, Heaton.

No. III. STALL.

Miss Haslam, Gilnair House, Bolton.

Miss Hay, The Hanleigh, Bolton.

No. IV. STALL.

Mrs. Dutton, 349, Blackburne Road, Bolton.

Mrs. Thos. Rigby, 43, Bayley-street, Chorley Old Road, Bolton.

Miss Taylor, 54, Radcliffe Road, Bolton.

Miss Crook, Victoria Terrace, Bolton.

Miss Kenyon, Manchester Road, Bolton.

Miss Bromley, 60, Blackburn-street, Bolton.

Miss Riding, Davenport-street, Bolton.

No. V. STALL.

Miss Pilling, 22, Marlborough-street, Bolton.

Mrs. Geo. Cunliffe, Heaton.

Mrs. Kay, St. George's Road, Bolton.

Mrs. Jos. Pilling, Blackburn Road, Bolton.

Miss Latham, St. George's Road, Bolton.

Miss Carling, Devonport-street, Bolton.

SCHOOL STALL.

Miss Bridge, Regent Terrace, Chorley Old Road, Bolton.

Miss Ashley, Hammond-street, Bolton.

Miss Smith, Derby-street, Bolton.

Miss Waring, Noble-street, Bolton.

REFRESHMENT STALL.

Miss Heap, Chorley New Road, Bolton: or by

Rev. ALBERT LAZENBY, Deane, Bolton,

Secretary.

KENDAL: UNITARIAN SCHOOL.—The

Ladies interested in the school work determined some time ago, to try to raise a school house in which the education of the children would be more complete than is possible when the classes have to be held in a chapel. For this purpose they formed a committee, and set to work, and the result of their efforts so far is the purchasing a plot of land in an open part of the town. A Bazaar in aid of the Building Fund will be held on the 11th of April. Contributions in money or work will be gratefully received by

Mrs. MACDONALD, 6, Lound-street, Kendal.
Miss A. K. GREENHOW, Anchorite House, Kendal.
Miss RUDD, Greenside, Kendal.

THE SOUTH WALES DISTRESS FUND.

FURTHER SUBSCRIPTION. £ s. d.

Park Lane—per Rev. Geo. Fox; per Rev. J. J. George 1 6 0

Mr. George would respectfully intimate that a few articles of clothing for boys would be very useful.

Any subscriptions sent to the Rev. R. J. Jones, Myrtle Cottage

Aberdare, will be distributed among our churches in relieving the most needy cases of our people.

Parcels of clothing sent to the Rev. J. J. George, Unity

House, Aberdare, will be thankfully acknowledged in the Herald.

THE Boston Pulpit being now Vacant, SUPPLIES for short periods are Wanted.—Apply to THOS. MEGGITT, Secretary.

THE PULPIT of the Unitarian Church, Stockton-on-Tees, will be Vacant after the 31st March.—Applications to M. HEAVISIDE, Secretary, Finkle-street.

A Young LADY HELP WANTED to do housework and a little cooking: liberal views preferred.—Apply, after four, Saturday, 12, Oxford Gardens West, Ladbroke Grove Road, Notting Hill.

WANTED, by a Lady of experience, a Situation as RESIDENT GOVERNESS: English, French, Music, and Calisthenics: excellent references.—Address M. A., Herald office, 55, Market-street, Manchester.

KNUTSFORD.—The NEXT TERM will begin in Miss ARDERN'S School on Monday, April 29th.

HOLLY BANK SCHOOL, BIRKDALE,

SOUTHPORT.—The NEXT QUARTER will begin on Thursday, April 4th.

B. TEMPLAR, F.R.A.S., Principal.

SOUTHPORT.—BOARDING SCHOOL for GIRLS.—The NEW QUARTER begins April 2nd.—For prospectus, apply to Miss CURTIS, Principal, Westbourne, Grosvenor Road, Birkdale.

HOPE LEA, HEATON NORRIS, STOCK-

PORT.—HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.—Conducted by Dr. and Mrs. MARCUS, assisted by able masters. The majority of the Senior Girls who passed the last Oxford Examinations in the Manchester centre came from this school.

SCHOOL TRANSFER.—A long-established and well-known Boarding School for Boys may be shortly TRANSFERRED to a competent person with means: capital required, £800: a good opening for a Unitarian or Liberal Churchman, or for a proprietary school.—Apply, with real name and address, to Scholasticus, at the office of this paper.

LINDOW GROVE SCHOOL, ALDERLEY

EDGE.—The premises have been erected for a First-class BOARDING SCHOOL, with extensive grounds for recreation, in a delightful country district. Every effort is made to educate the character, to have work done thoroughly, and to adapt it to the pupil's capacity, physical and mental. References and prospectus on application. JAMES WOOD.

BROOK HOUSE, KNUTSFORD, CHESHIRE.

BOARDING SCHOOL for GIRLS, conducted by Mrs. FRANK SHAWCROSS, assisted by Resident English and Foreign Governesses. Teachers of eminence attend for instruction in Music, Singing, Harmony, Drawing, Dancing, &c. Prospectus and references forwarded on application.

MOUNT VERNON HIGH SCHOOL,

NOTTINGHAM.—Established 1864.

Mr. EDWIN SMITH, M.A., with competent assistance, thoroughly prepares Boys for College, the University Local Examinations, or for Business. For prospectus address Sandy Knoll, Forest Road, Nottingham.

EDUCATION IN GERMANY.

Miss M. WAGNER (17, Helenenstrasse, Weisbaden, Germany), who has passed the Prussian State Examination, and possesses the experience of several first-class English schools, receives a limited number of YOUNG LADIES for Private Education, or to visit the excellent College of the town, with home assistance. Climate very healthy, with mild winter. Hot and other mineral springs. English and German references. For terms and further particulars address as above.

YORK: 26, HIGH PETER GATE.—Miss

AMY HERRING begs to announce that she has OPENED, at the above address, a SCHOOL for the instruction of Young Ladies in all branches, comprising a first-class education with liberal views. References kindly permitted by the following:—Dr. G. Vance Smith, The Parade, Carmarthen; the Rev. C. Welbeloved, 38, Monkgate, York; Miss Swaine, 1, The Crescent, York.—Terms on application.

Pupils are prepared for the University Examinations, several having passed most successfully.

HIBBERT TRUST.—ONE SCHOLARSHIP will be awarded on this Foundation after the next Examination, provided that Candidates of sufficient merit present themselves. The next Examination will be held at University Hall, Gordon Square, London, on three consecutive days, in November, 1878.

Candidates must furnish satisfactory evidence of age, graduation, and other points, the particulars of which, as well as copies of the scheme of Examination, may be obtained on application to the Secretary of the Trust, and the names and addresses of all Candidates must be sent to the Secretary, at University Hall, on or before October 1, 1878.

PERCY LAWFORD, Secretary.

University Hall, Gordon Square, February 12, 1878.

DOINGS AND SAYINGS.

The Melbourne City Council is spending £2,500 upon planting trees in the streets; an example for municipal bodies in England.

Last year one cemetery chaplain had to read the burial service 1,592 times for his salary of £200. This would be about half-a-crown a time.

The Duke of Norfolk has erected a house for the Vincentian fathers at Sheffield at a cost of £10,000; and is also about to build a new presbytery for them.

Lord Justice Bramwell was presented with a pair of white gloves at Leicester, there being no cases of any kind to try—a circumstance which has not happened in the borough for nearly ten years.

The Church party in Rhyl, to prevent a School Board agitation, are going to increase the national school accommodation of the town. £1,000 is required. Archdeacon Morgan has offered £100.

The Royal Geographical Society contemplate sending out a new expedition for the exploration of Africa, the probable field of exploration being the regions between Mombassa and Mount Kenia and Victoria Nyanza.

Mr. Samuel Morley, M.P., remarks that it is the truest policy of employers to come into close contact with their men; and while thoroughly believing in the right of workmen to combine, he still contends that trades unions have caused increasing alienation between employers and employed.

It is worth while emphasising the fact that the masons, who failed in their strike for higher wages, and have damaged themselves by attracting other labour into London, spent £30,000 in their vain endeavour. Had they distributed it amongst themselves; it would have given them £50 apiece.

Lord Granville holds that the depression in trade is due in a measure to the bankruptcy of a great many nations, who have been good enough to swell the inflation that existed by buying our products, and paying for them, in the most amiable way, with the money they had borrowed from ourselves.

During 1877 the lifeboats of the National Lifeboat institution saved no fewer than 841 lives, under circumstances in which no ordinary boat could have been used without great risk to those on board. And this great aggregate of humane service has been rendered without the loss of a single man of the brave lifeboats' crews.

Two more good and able men in the Victoria Nyanza Mission of the Church Missionary Society have been called to lay down their lives on behalf of Africa. Lieutenant G. Shergold Smith, the leader of the Church Missionary Society's expedition, and Mr. O'Neill, a fellow-labourer in the mission, have lost their lives by violence.

Mr. Thomas Hughes says that co-operation cannot be classed among modern schemes, as it dates from the Middle Ages, when the movement found its home in the monasteries, in which groups of men gathered together against the wrongs of feudal barons on the avowed principle of brotherhood. Co-operation, he says, means the well-being of the many, and this must be the object of all who identify themselves with it.

Drunkenness exists among the boys of the Liverpool Shoeblack Society. The evil has decreased, but the Mayor of Liverpool says that it still exists to a sufficient extent to cause anxiety and pain. It has been discovered that some boys under seventeen years of age were habitual drunkards. Dr. Townson states that the opening of the cocoa-rooms has had a good effect in drawing the lads away from the public-houses.

The members of the Tanganyika Mission sent out by the London Missionary Society have reached the village of Kiras, about forty miles east of Mpwapwa, and have formed a camp on the edge of a high plateau, where they proposed to pass the rainy season, and hoped to advance further into the interior in May. They have everywhere been received most kindly by the natives. They expect to reach Lake Tanganyika before the end of the present year.

The Roman Catholic chaplains being conceded, the Scotch members are about to ask for Presbyterian chaplains in the Navy; and, in order to remove difficulties, it is suggested that Mr. Smith should man our ships according to the religious opinions of the A.B.'s. Thus we may have Catholic hearts of oak in the wooden walls of the Inconstant, and a Presbyterian ironclad in the Inflexible. We see no reason why there should not be a Wesleyan frigate and a Congregational corvette, if once we enter upon denominationalism in the Navy.

No less than 177 Board schools have been erected in London, and some of these occupy sites of historical interest. The Peckham school takes the place of the school in which Oliver Goldsmith was assistant. The school in Holland-street, Blackfriars, also revives the memory of the author of The Vicar of Wakefield, for it takes the place of the apothecary's shop in which Oliver dispensed medicines as an assistant. The Lant-street school in the same district, is erected on the site of the house in which Charles Dickens passed that portion of his boyhood during which his father was made a prisoner for debt. The great novelist afterwards made Lant-street the scene of the evening party given by the immortal Bob Sawyer.

The Rev. Horace Waller writes on the influence of African missionaries and of the officials to whom the British Government has committed the task of representing her determination to stop the slavers' crimes. Mr. Waller tells us that less than ten years ago nearly 50,000 slaves per annum were exported from East Africa to Zanzibar, Pemba, Madagascar, the Comoros, Persia, Arabia, the Red Sea, and Egypt. This represented a loss of life in the interior of Africa of half a million of people annually. The island of Pemba was the last spot to try the vigilance of our consuls and cruisers, but it is now said:—"The slave trade is at an end; still how long will this good news continue? Not a slave goes to Pemba now, nor has one gone for a good while; it looks as if the thing were to be wound up at last."

It is rumoured that Mr. Oliver R. Vassal, a Balliol undergraduate, and three other Oxford men in statu pupillari, have been received into the Church of Rome. Rumours of this kind are, however, not always to be depended on. The last case of Church history-making by way of pure invention was a report that Professor Clifford had joined the Church of Rome; as to which he sent this contradiction to a contemporary:—"It is true that I have been somewhat unwell of late, but I am assured by Dr. Andrew Clark that my indisposition has not yet taken the form of mental derangement. I was therefore fairly astonished to see in your issue of yesterday a report that I had joined the Roman Catholic Church. Since, on the supposition of my sanity, the report amounts to a serious charge against me, I have thought it worth while to ask you to insert this contradiction of it."

English critics often come down pretty severely on our writers and lecturers, but they are altogether beaten by an American reviewer, whose remarks on Mr. Armstrong's translation of Knappert's "Religion of Israel" are quoted in last Saturday's Inquirer:

"This is one of a series of books prepared by foreign infidelity to undermine the faith of men in Jesus Christ. . . . This book aims to present the Old Testament as modern Rationalism receives it, and it is closed with a catechism intended to guide childhood into the dreary wilds of unbelief. The translator applauds the work. 'Children, will without difficulty perceive,' writes this infidel, 'that God's love is none the feeble, and that the Bible is no less precious, because Moses knew nothing of the Levitical legislation, or because it was not the warrior monarch on his semi-barbaric throne, but some far later son of Israel, who breathed forth the immortal hymn of faith, The Lord is my Shepherd.' For wonderful blindness or devilish malignity, who can equal those who write such a sentence?"

O American Presbyterian Christian Intelligencer! how blessed are the people who wait on thy intelligence! They know the joyful sound, "Ignorance is bliss;" and they share the very raptures of heaven in looking down with thee upon the damned!

SCOTTISH NOTES.

"THE HERETIC HUNTER'S SONG."

This is the title of a few verses which have apparently been printed for sale, although they bear no name of author or publisher. The writer expresses himself in a terse and vigorous manner. He represents Professor Smith as "a clever loon" who has been "caught thinking," and thus describes the heretical opinions:—

"He's broken the foundation-stane
Whereon our faith reposes;
He's clippit aff the angels' wings,
And ta'en the feet frae Moses."

Heretics are summarily disposed of as follows:—

"Heretics maun a' be daft.
They dinna think as we dae;
Heretics maun a' be blin'.
They dinna see as we see."

LORD GIFFORD ON DARWINISM.

Lord Gifford, lecturing at the Granton Literary Association on "Dr. Erasmus Darwin," remarked that it was quite impossible for him to name Dr. Erasmus Darwin or to speak of his life and work without thinking of his far greater grandson, who had shed so much light on all the phenomena of organic life, and had almost unified and recast the theory of organic evolution. In reading the works of the elder Darwin they traced, as it were, suggestions of the principles and the plans which were to be extended and displayed by the patient observation and the broad generalisations of his illustrious descendant, who was probably now the greatest living naturalist. Having briefly indicated the laws, or alleged laws, which constituted the development theory, Lord Gifford observed that Dr. Erasmus Darwin, by the boldness and ingenuity of his speculations, had helped to foster the spirit and to diffuse the atmosphere which led to better and more successful work; in short, the lecturer saw in the grandson just the development and evolution of the grandfather, effecting with improved instruments and improved methods the purpose which the ancestor somewhat vainly tried. There was not in the Darwinian theory, or any part of it, any thought or idea which, rightly understood, had the least tendency towards irreligion or infidelity, or atheism in any of its forms. Of course the irreligious man would be irreligious, whatever the form of his specific creed; but Darwinism, rightly understood, was quite consistent with the highest and holiest forms of piety; in truth, it assumed, as all philosophy ought to do, that God alone worketh everywhere and always.

A STRANGE INCONSISTENCY.

It seems that since the Glasgow U.P. Presbytery resolved to libel Mr. Fergus Ferguson for heresy, the committee appointed by the Synod at its last meeting to revise the standards have asked Mr. Ferguson to continue his connection with the committee, although in the meantime he is under suspension by the Presbytery. This is no doubt liberal, but places the U.P. Church in rather a peculiar position. Mr. Ferguson is regarded as so tainted with dangerous heresy as to be unfitted to minister to his own congregation, and yet at the same time he is deemed not disqualified to sit in judgment on those very standards to the leading dogmas of which he objects. Strange! Isn't it?

PROFESSOR SMITH A CHILD OF THE DEVIL.

In the course of the Robertson-Smith case, Mr. Selkirk, of the Free East Church, Aberdeen, told how, in a pleasant retreat in Ross-shire, he last summer met a probationer, now a minister of the Free Church, of whom he innocently asked: "What are your opinions about this case?" No wonder Mr. Selkirk shuddered at the answer he received. It was—"Professor Smith is a child of the devil, and an enemy of all righteousness." When asked, "Have you read Professor Smith's writings?" the answer was, "No; but I have seen them in manse." "Do you know Professor Smith personally?" "No, I would not know him if I met him on the street." "Is it not a harsh judgment to say what you have said just now about a man with whose writings you are not acquainted, and whom you have not seen in the flesh?" The answer to this was, "He is a mass of unsanctified learning." Mr. Selkirk wanted to know how was this man, who might sit in the next Assembly, able to act as judge. Yet his vote might decide the whole case.

BOOKS AND AUTHORS.

Mr. Farrington's four sermons on "Religious Organisation" have come to us in due succession. Nothing but the pressure on our space from overflowing news of the current weeks has led to the postponement of a fitting notice of these deeply-suggestive addresses.

The Wesleyan Methodist Magazine for the present month contains a review by an ex-Roman Catholic Priest—to many of us not a stranger—of Mr. Arthur's book, "The Pope, the Kings, and the People." The article appears in the official Methodist organ in the hope that it may be read not only in England, but by co-members of that, the most numerous, denomination in America. We shall take an early opportunity of making our readers acquainted with the striking, and we believe not less true than striking, revelations it contains of dangers to be anticipated, and surely to be timely and energetically provided against, from the insinuating propaganda of the Vatican.

The Rev. Enfield Dowson preached a sermon for the times to his people in the beginning of the year which by their request has been published, and no one who reads it will wonder why. The theme was "Bad Times and how to meet Them;" the prophetic text "The desert shall rejoice and blossom as the rose;" and the key note "The moral energies are placed under more bracing condition when there are bad times to be faced, than when only the cup of plenty had to be quaffed." When money flows freely, luxury abounds. All history shows the sad result. "Mr. Buckle tells that the vigour of a race is often—[Does he say "often?"]—in inverse ratio to the natural wealth which it finds made ready to its hands." Mr. Buckle never said a truer word. It is his gospel. And it is a gospel of reconciliation for all ages. Our very activities bring new trials, and trials are the salt of existence for us. We do not know where a more encouraging theme could be found, and it is here treated with a masterly scope and brevity.

We have received a discourse by Henry Jeffery on The Reasonableness and Value of Prayer. The soul of man, so far from being self-sufficient, hungers after whatever it has not. Its first and last utterance is a want and a wish. It is an asking soul. And Mr. Jeffery says well:—"All the great inspired ones have said, Ask, and ye shall receive; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you." The Infinite Father of it knows what it wants before its asking; but he made it to ask and seek and find—as an altogether finite father would desire his child to ask and seek and find. Prayer and Labour-with-prayer are congenital to man. In him material law is but one part of a constitution which has also a part that transcends the material limits. Prayer begins with the transcendent nature in us. That it is so familiar to us is a kindly proof of the nearness of the Highest. This is our own view; and it is what Mr. Jeffery expresses in other words in this discourse on the reasonableness of that exercise in which men have found so great help and consolation.

THE MISSION OF UNITARIANISM.

IV.

Is human nature in itself right or wrong? The answer to this question involves the assumption of a position for or against Unitarianism. It is well known how deeply the Augustinian theory of original sin has sunk in the minds, and even the hearts, of many professed Christians. Thousands of mothers are anxiously praying and hoping that their children may be "converted," not in the Christian sense as Jesus taught (Matt xviii., 1, 4), but "converted" from a natural state of sin into a miraculous state of grace in relation to God. A common saying that a young man may be allowed to "sow his wild oats" is made to take the place of a scientific and comprehensive system of training and the directing the mind and heart of youth into free but natural channels. We see on every side indications of the notion that religious men and women are cut off from the rest of mankind by a distinct line of separation. Even in Unitarian congregations, when the communion is celebrated, although pains are taken probably by the minister to say that the rite is not a sacrament, and requires no more preparation than any other religious exercise, the striking anomaly appears of a large proportion of the congregation turning their backs upon a simple and natural expression of regard for the memory of the grandest son of man.

The idea of original sin and the depravity of human nature is absent from all Unitarian literature and teaching; the opposite is universally maintained. Human nature in itself is right. It is not cursed, but blessed beyond the power of words to set forth. A little child in a Unitarian Sunday school is not advised to try and get converted. The child is encouraged to grow "in wisdom and stature and in favour with God and man." In view of the Unitarian doctrine of human nature, an immense field of activity is opened up. What the orthodox Christian thinks he attains after "converting" a man, the Unitarian believes he has to begin with in every human being. It must be a fearful drag upon the labour of the reformer, who works upon the Moody and Sankey principle, having to threaten and alarm, and beseech the people to submit to a transformation.

No ridicule is to be cast upon the serious convictions of any class of men, but something is needing to be said, to teach Unitarians that they are more than spectators and critics.

Old John Pounds, in Portsmouth, not only believed in the natural rightness of man, but he acted upon it. He entered into the competition with the devil, of course with due reverence for one Trinitarian dogma, speaking allegorically, for the lives of neglected children, and some hundreds are said to have been won for the Kingdom of God on earth, through the heroism and faith of the poor cobbler.

Dr. Guthrie of ragged school fame, attributed to the picture of John Pounds teaching the ragged children, the rise in his mind of the scheme for a larger work of the same description.

It may be doubtful if Unitarians have felt the importance of their doctrine of human nature. No one of them doubts it, and in many families it is acted upon. If confirmation were required of the value of the principle the splendid effort now being made to forestall the gaol and the workhouse by the education of the children might be mentioned. But no arguments are needed in this sketch in support of the doctrine of Unitarians. There does, however, appear to be occasion to remind one another of the importance of the mission of Unitarianism in regard to human nature and its development in the life of divine sonship.

Dundee.

HENRY WILLIAMSON.

BALLYCLARE.—A CORRECTION.—We are requested to state that the announcement which we copied March 1st from the Northern Whig of the removal of the Rev. J. A. Brinkworth from Saffron Walden to Ballyclare was incorrect.

BELFAST: MOUNTPOTTINGER.—The annual social meeting of the Mutual Improvement Society was held on Wednesday evening last, and proved very successful. There were upwards of eighty present. After tea the Rev. D. Thompson presided. An excellent entertainment was provided, consisting of glees, songs, readings, &c., in which the following took part:—Messrs. J. Davidson, W. Spackman, W. J. Devers, J. Kerr, J. McQuoid, Mrs. Scott, Miss McGrath, and the members of the choir. A course of ten Sunday evening lectures by the Rev. D. Thompson, assisted by neighbouring ministers, has just been brought to a close. There was a fair attendance at each of the lectures, and tracts were freely distributed.

THE LIVERPOOL NORTH-END MISSION.

THE nineteenth annual meeting of the Liverpool North-end, or Bond-street, Mission was held on Thursday evening, in the Mount Pleasant School-room. Mr. R. R. RATHBONE occupied the chair, and there was about the usual attendance.

The Rev. H. W. Hawkes (one of the missionaries) read the report.

RELIGIOUS WORSHIP AMONG THE POOR.

The report began by giving a description of the "whereabouts and surroundings" of the Mission. "The church accommodation," Mr. Hawkes pointed out, was small for the population, but by dint of frequent services, Sunday and week-day, it was made to suffice. The priests were indefatigable in their efforts to secure attendance, and having so great a leverage arising out of the doctrinal importance of being present at mass, they succeeded very largely. He was struck with admiration when he saw the troops of bareheaded, ragged folks—women with their shawls over their heads, men in their working clothes, boys and girls, mixed with the better-to-do people—flocking to service. Granting, what to them might seem the enormous element of belief which largely helped to this result, it was much to see the claims of God and the soul acknowledged at all, and hard to believe that in spite of the small moral effect of ceremonial worship they could fail to be more or less benefited. On the other hand, there were thousands who never entered chapel for years, and only had recourse to their clergy in the last extremity.

Amongst the Protestants things were worse as regarded public recognition of religion. If a fair proportion of those in the district attended worship, the churches would be far too few—as it was, those that existed were scantily attended. A fine church at the top of Bond-street had often twenty to thirty, and even fewer, in attendance. The next church, though better filled got most of its congregation from the Everton district, and only comparatively few from the immediate neighbourhood. The next church, St. Martin's, while under ritualistic sway, lost nearly all its people, but under the present earnest Evangelical clergy was gathering in a better muster, though very far from being filled. The Independent Chapel got most of its adherents from some distance, and the Mission completed the list with its handful of eighty to a hundred adults.

These facts spoke for themselves. It was sad to think of the thousands to whom religion was but a name, who met the cares and sorrows, the temptations and sins of life without the comfort and strength freely offered them, who lived without God in the world, so far as their knowledge of Him went, and who, when sick and dying, sent in a superstitious hurry for the nearest clergyman "to read prayers over them." Surely, if religion be a reality at all the central reality of life as they believed, it was terrible to think of the darkness of those who thus forsook the fountain of living waters and hewed for themselves cisterns, broken cisterns that could hold no water!

The district, though short of religious accommodation for its population, and still shorter of a precatious population for its religious accommodation, had been liberally evangelised by the brewers and big publicans. Liverpool might be called a city of palaces—unhappily they were gin palaces. What wonder the churches were empty? This was an old cry, but could not be too often repeated till some remedy was found.

DECLINE OF ROWDINESS AND BIGOTRY: THE FEELINGS OF PRIESTS AND ROMANISTS.

Mr. Hawkes proceeded to say that he could distinctly notice an improvement as regarded rowdiness during the years he had been in Bond-street. When he first went there, hardly a night passed without there being some disgraceful disturbance in the street. Women fighting or quarrelling and using the filthiest language; men beating their wives, or having a stand-up fight with each other, were things of the commonest occurrence. The Mission doorsteps were constantly crowded with big boys and girls, conversing in a way to make one shudder, and giving abuse at any attempt to clear them off; and this continued till two and three o'clock in the morning. Now, it was a rare thing to have a row in the street; in fact, all over the district he came upon such things very seldom. Even in the small hours of night, when they used to be most abundant, he was told they were much less frequent. In like manner they were rarely annoyed with the crowd on the steps. This last improvement was distinctly due to the priests at Eldon-street, who frequently came at night and drove away the roughs, lecturing them roundly for the annoyance they were creating.

Another improvement that had taken place in the last six years was the almost total extinction of the bitter bigotry which used to assail them. Then, their windows were broken, their scholars stoned and molested, themselves shouted at in impudent language. Now, their premises were safe; he rarely, if ever, heard of scholars being annoyed; and the very rough wild lads who used to be most impudent towards him now give a civil nod and a "Good morning, Mr. Hawkes," and took good advice from him occasionally with every appearance of respect. And the same held good with Mr. Gabriel. The chief reason for this gratifying change undoubtedly was that the whole neighbourhood had found that they were consistently unsectarian that they acted the same by Catholics as by Protestants, and never interfered with their religious prejudices. This was so much so that a Protestant one day asked him what church he belonged to, adding that he did so from having heard from Catholic neighbours that he never interfered with their religion, but helped all round equally. In the same way Catholics frequently applied to them for advice on domestic matters. Mr. Gabriel, for instance, was consulted by a woman residing in one of the lowest streets, as to getting her son, who had left his home through a quarrel, to return. Telling him all about it, and her share in the faults committed, she broke off with a half-laugh, exclaiming, "Why, I'm talking as if you were my father confessor." By following his advice she got her son back. Such a thing might be done when religious jealousy was disarmed, but not otherwise. Even Protestant animosity, which was often the bitterest, had nearly expired. They were rarely reviled on account of the Unitarian taint which was held in such deep suspicion. Their sick friends were no longer threatened with eternal peril on account of their visits, and the parents of their Sunday scholars who not very constantly, allowed their children to come, while doubting their Christianity, occasionally gave them a visit to a service, and departed fully satisfied that they were "all right."

TOTAL ABSTINENCE AMONG THE POOR.

One more gleam of light cheered them; total abstinence was no longer ridiculed and reviled as it had been. A workman told Mr. Hawkes the other day that it was an easy thing now to be a teetotaler; the men at the shop, instead of nicknaming and jeering, and even persecuting him, now said, half-enviously, "You're in the right of it, I wish I was teetotal!" On the other hand, a publican told him that trade was getting worse and worse, and that last year was a bad one for them. Something of this was due, no doubt, to hard times; but cocoa-rooms, Good Templarism, and teetotal societies helped towards that hopeful fact. They might agree or not with the principle of total abstinence—many of them didn't, he well knew—but Father Nugent's League, the Good Templar Order, and kindred societies were doing a grand work in Liverpool.

DETAILS OF MISSION WORK.

Coming to speak of the details of the work of the Mission, Mr. Hawkes said that while he could not boast of any positive advance on last year in point of numbers, he could unhesitatingly say that never before had they had so compact and harmonious a congregation at their religious services. The average attendance was between 70 and 80 adults. That was exclusive of the children's service, which was still conducted by Mr. Gabriel, and the average attendance at which was about the same as at the adults' service. During the summer months every Friday evening an open-air service was held in front of the Mission-house. In this Mr. Hawkes said he was on several occasions helped by the Rev. S. Fletcher Williams. As many Catholics as Protestants stood to hear them, and never heard a word to wound their susceptibilities. The experiment was decidedly successful. The attendance at the Sunday school had averaged 112 in the morning, and 171 in the afternoon. The collections for the Provident Society amounted to £1,669.15s. 8d., as compared with £1,652.3s. 4d. last year. The year had on the whole been a successful one in regard to temperance work. The lodge of Good Templars had grown much stronger, and showed signs of becoming as good as any in the neighbourhood. In like manner their Juvenile Temple was prospering greatly. There were nearly 120 members in steady attendance, and more were added weekly. During the summer months he held an open-air temperance meeting every Tuesday evening in front of the Mission, with an especial view to the children and youths, and the experiment was fairly successful. The report then referred to the Window Gardening Society, the fourth annual exhibition of which was held in August last, when 170 plants were shown, 20 prizes were awarded, and 45 plants, kindly presented by Mr. C. P. Melly, were distributed among the exhibitors. The Rev. S. Fletcher Williams was in the chair. The report concluded with a reference to the tea parties and social gatherings which had been held during the year.

The Rev. J. H. THOM, in a very impressive speech on the need of raising the home life of the poor, moved a resolution expressing confidence in the two missionaries, Messrs. Hawkes and Gabriel, and heartily sympathising with the work carried on by the Mission.

The Rev. W. BINNS, in seconding the resolution, referred to the proposed establishment of a bishopric for Liverpool. He was afraid that very little good would be done in the district by having a bishop, and believed that the mere establishment of a bishopric would not succeed in getting rid of the evils they deplored. An additional Father Nugent would be better than twenty bishops, so far as that particular district was concerned.

The resolution having been carried with acclamation,

MR. HAWKES and MR. GABRIEL respectively acknowledged the compliment, and gave an interesting account of their missionary labours.

MR. T. CHAPMAN, the hon. secretary, gave a brief report of the committee. The statement of the treasurer, Mr. Alfred Booth, showed that the subscriptions amounted to £283.9s., and the donations £85.1s.; there being a balance due to the treasurer of £7.1s. 7d.

THE REV. CHARLES BEARD moved the adoption of the report and statement of accounts. He referred with pleasure to the evidence of the decline of bigotry amongst the different denominations with regard to mission work, and to the fact that a liberal and tolerant spirit in the teaching of Christianity was being acknowledged.

The motion having been seconded by Mr. C. W. JONES, who warmly advocated the opening of Renshaw-street Chapel on week-evenings for concerts for the poor, was carried unanimously.

THE REV. JOHN SHANNON moved, and the Rev. S. FLETCHER WILLIAMS seconded, the appointment of the president, treasurer, secretary, and committee for the year, and this being carried, a vote of thanks to the chairman closed the proceedings.

RIVINGTON.—The Rev. J. S. Gilbert, whose health has for some time been failing, takes, with the consent of his congregation, six months' rest in order to recruit.

DUDLEY.—A course of seven Sunday evening lectures was completed last Sunday, when the Rev. M. Gibson addressed a very large congregation on the subject of Unitarianism. Many strangers were present, as had been the case at all the lectures. He has been assisted by the Revs. D. Maginnis, W. E. Mellone, J. Cuckson, and J. Harrison, all of whom have excited considerable interest. It is hoped that some good fruits will be the result of this very successful course of lectures.

NOT OF RIGHT, BUT OF GRACE.

BISHOP CLAUGHTON, Archdeacon of London, has come forward as an advocate of the settlement of the burial quest on by means of the permissive trick. In a letter to a rural dean in his archdeaconry, the Bishop speaks favourably of a bill to be brought in by Mr. Ritchie to enable a clergyman to permit a Nonconformist to offer prayers, to read Scripture, or to sing hymns at the grave. Bishop Claughton thinks that this course would not require "a surrender of principle" on the part of the clergy, and that giving them the power to refuse the use of any other service than that of the Church of England would adorn such concessions as they may choose from time to time to make with the character of "gracious acts." There seems, indeed, to be no reason why the clergy should object to such a compromise; but the case is not so clear in regard to the Nonconformists. What they demand is not a constant flow of "gracious acts" on the part of the Establishment, but the concession of a right. Bishop Claughton by this proposal admits the existence of a grievance which requires to be remedied; and a compromise which would empower a clergyman to inflict or remove that grievance at the "good pleasure of his will" does not furnish a very sagacious solution of the difficulty.

THE PERFECT DAY.

REV. SAMUEL LONGFELLOW.

OUT of the dark the circling sphere
Is rounding onward to the light;
We see not yet the full day here,
But we do see the paling night.

And Hope, that lights her fadeless fires,
And Faith, that shines a heavenly will,
And Love, that courage reinspires—
These stars have been above us still.

The Unitarian Herald.

FRIDAY, MARCH 29, 1878.

WORKING MEN'S CLUBS.

Much attention has of late been given to the formation of Working Men's Clubs. As yet, however, we think, the amount of attention bestowed upon them is quite inadequate. They are places of resort where the tired working man may spend his leisure day, or his evenings, in company with his fellows, amid papers, magazines, books, games, and simple refreshments, without being subjected to the heavy tax and temptation of the public-house.

We venture to suppose that the majority of our readers are not very familiar with either the public-house, or the inside of our poorer working people's homes, or with these Working Men's Clubs. We are afraid that one-third of the Christian world knows not how the other two-thirds live, and that some of our readers do not know how the splendid public-house, the wretched dwellings in the back streets, and the unpretending workman's clubhouse stand related to each other.

Our reason for this supposition is, that we are often asked by our busy, thriving, prosperous, comfortably-housed friends why workmen don't stay at home, and behave themselves like other people. Of course, we wish they would, or could, or did; that is, in so far as "other people" behave themselves in a superior style. But we are bound to say that when we have ventured some evening into the home of a man whose wife also goes out to day's work, to find it dim, and dirty, and dismal,—with steaming wash-tub filling the whole place with reeking vapour,—we can very well understand that it requires more of the discipline of patience and virtue than ordinary human nature carries, even in our first circles, to sit down and read, saint-like, the evening's paper in discomfort and confusion like that. We understand, too, why the wife wishes "as him should take hisself off" and leave her to her suds, her children, and herself. Very often, too, the man cannot read. After work he wants diversion. Unfortunately he has no billiard-room in the top story, and has no well-dressed friends to come in and play for penny corners at a rubber of whist. Very likely he is only a lodger, and pays so much per week for bedroom without fire, or much gas. What is he to do? Where is he to go? What diversion shall he have? Where will he drift for the evening? How will he while away the four or five hours between the end of each day's work and the time for nightly sleep?

Not much observation is required to tell. There is a bright corner shop, with flaring lights and many an attraction to beckon him. He has been there, and still would go; and yet, very often, would rather not. He, like a burnt child, dreads the fire—the cost of evenings spent there. So he saunters down the street, bound he knows not whither. But it is bleak and chill, and soon begins to drizzle. So he turns back and enters the place which, in natural supply to natural demand, let us say, our civilisation has provided for him. It is more than a comfortable place surely. Very few middle-class people have so much gilt, and shining plate, and blazing splendour about them as he finds there. But he is expected, if he avails himself of this, to put his hand in his pocket, or to send his pocket itself to the pawnbrokers, to pay for it. He has no other choice than this—either to stay in his comfortless lodging, to roam the street, or to turn in here. He turns in here. The publican and the barmaid are very attentive. More servants wait on him than he is accustomed to. As often as his glass is empty some little page or fairy offers to fill it again. It would be a breach of both honour and established usage to refuse to support a place of such cheer, hospitality, and kindness. So he drinks far more than he wants, far more than he can afford to drink, and goes, at eleven o'clock, penniless, and in a thicker than any outward fog, toward his bed, if, peradventure, he may find it. This is the relation of our costly public-house splendour to thousands and thousands of our common working men in the lodgings and the cottages of our back streets. This is the relation of the splendid plate-glass and the amazing publican glory to the misery, the drunkenness, and the disgrace of our English towns.

The workman's club is designed to come between the lodging, or the home, and this national peril. As yet it is an humble place as compared with the innumerable publican palaces. As yet, too, it is comparatively rare and infrequent. Last Saturday night the Bishop of Manchester opened a new one at Miles Platting, which we believe is the seventh or eighth in Manchester and its immediate vicinity; where we have, who can tell us, how many thousands upon thousands of public-houses, both great and small? These clubs have in every case to be started as experiments. It has to be seen whether or not they will pay. The working men do not themselves, as a rule, realise how much they suffer from the habits and associations contracted at the public-house. So these clubs depend at first for their establishment and furnishing upon the aid, advice, and contributions of the wealthier classes. It has been found thus far that in the very large majority of cases these experiments are successful; that once founded they support themselves; that they are fled to by many a poor man as a comfortable, and orderly, and inexpensive place of refuge. We are glad to see them slowly increasing in our midst. We think, that if our middle and upper classes would bestow more personal attention upon them they would see for themselves how much these clubs may serve to lessen temptation to excess of drinking; to accustom our poorer men to something better than they have known; and to open up a way of escape from the terrible scourge that now afflicts the land. We cordially agree with a sentence which we find in the annual report of the Working Men's Clubs Association—"It is the duty of those who can, in consequence of better education, see further than the mass of the people, to help them to rise into a higher atmosphere, and to know the evils of their present condition."

LONDON: CARTER LANE MISSION.

THE annual general meeting of the subscribers and friends of the above Mission was held on the evening of Monday last, at the Mission-house, Friars-street, Doctors' Commons, London, under the presidency of T. CHATFIELD CLARKE, Esq. Those present included the Revs. T. W. Freckleton, T. L. Marshall, Messrs. C. L. Cochrane, Jeffery, Lister, Bartram, J. T. Preston, S. S. Tayler, and I. M. Wade.

The CHAIRMAN, having expressed the pleasure with which he presided at the annual meeting of a society in whose labours he deeply sympathised, called upon the treasurer to read his report.

Mr. WARREN, the treasurer, read his report for the year 1877 as follows:—Receipts: Subscriptions, £255. 16s. 6d.; donations, £64. 2s.; collections, £74. 1s. 8d.; dividends on investments, £37. 1s. 6d.; subscriptions, Sunday congregations, £3. 5s.; receipts from infant school, £19. 7s. 7d.; sale of bank cards and hymn-books, 8s. 10d.; sundries, £5. 16s.—leaving balance due to the treasurer, £272. 13s. 1d. On the other side of the accounts, the disbursements began with the balance due to the treasurer at the commencement of the year, £150. 2s. 4d.; missionary's salary, £175; salaries of masters, mistresses, and monitors, £240. 11s. 8d.; rent, rates, taxes, &c., £60. 18s. 4d.; repairs, £5. 7s. 2d.; books, prizes, stationery, £16. 13s. 10d.; gas, coals, and water-rate, £27. 16s. 9d.; cleaning and materials, £34. 13s. 9d.; printing, advertising, and postage, £9. 6s. 4d.; sundries, £12. 2s.; making a total of £732. 12s. 2d.

Mr. C. F. PEARSON, hon. sec., then read the committee's report, which stated that the committee had used their utmost endeavours to carry out the spirit and the intention of the resolution passed at the last annual meeting, viz., "That having regard to the present and prospective financial condition of the mission, the committee be authorised either to discontinue such portions of the operations carried on there as they may think fit, or to amalgamate the mission with any other similar institution, or to remove it to some other locality; and that for these purposes the treasurer be empowered to sell so much of the stock and funded property of the mission as may be necessary." Finding that the mission's mixed school was in a decidedly efficient condition, and that the infant school, acting as a partial feeder to it, seemed to be keeping up its numbers, it had not appeared wise to interfere in that direction. When, however, the committee had taken into consideration the field of missionary labour in the neighbourhood, they could not shut their eyes to the increasing destruction of small dwellings, in which dwelt those small families among some of which the Mission found its work; and that those premises were being replaced by large offices and warehouses. At the same time there still existed a small field for missionary efforts, and after much earnest discussion and conference with some members of the Sunday School Association Committee, they had come to an arrangement by which the Rev. J. Taylor, the missionary, would devote somewhat less time to the work which he had hitherto done here, receiving a smaller salary; his remaining time being given to the Sunday-school Association, to the advantage both of himself and that society. This arrangement had come into force on the 1st January, 1878. The day school continued to be conducted as efficiently as heretofore, and merited continued support. At Christmas, 1877, there had been on the books—girls 46, boys 81, total 127, which, on comparison with the numbers at Christmas, 1876, showed a small falling off. The annual inspection, which had been generally held in November, had this year been altered by the educational authorities to the 26th and 27th February, 1878, thus making the term for which the Government grant had been received fifteen months, and bringing it into another financial year. The results of the examination and inspection were very satisfactory. The Government grant, amounting to £107. 15s. 9d., had been recently received, but as it did not appear in the treasurer's accounts must be allowed for when taking the balance owing to him into consideration. The Inspector's endorsement on Mr. Hawkin's the master's certificate was as follows:—"The school is in a very efficient state." The official report of the school was of an equally satisfactory character. The infant school continued in a satisfactory state. The number on the books at Christmas, 1877, has been 96, showing a slight increase; the attendance remains about the same, 544. In conclusion, the committee drew attention to the following facts:—There is in connection with the mission a very excellent day school which shows no sign of falling off, either in numbers or efficiency; there is still a field for missionary labour, though not so large as in former years, and there are several connected institutions which render real service to the neighbourhood, and not the least is the congregation of earnest worshippers meeting every Sunday. On the other side of the question, it must be borne in mind that the balance due to the treasurer shows no sign of being diminished, while the subscription list does, and that the lease of the mission premises has not more than 6½ years to run. Your committee think it better to deal thus frankly with the subscribers, but they do not recommend that the mission should at present be discontinued, believing that it will be better to continue the work that remains, and in that view they hope to receive the substantial and increased help of the friends of the mission.

The Rev. J. TAYLOR, the missionary, next read his report, in which at considerable length he detailed the position of the mission, together with its various connected institutions; the character of the report being, on the whole, very satisfactory.

The CHAIRMAN moved—"That the report now read be received and adopted, and that it be printed and circulated under the direction of the committee." It would be, he said, quite unnecessary for him to dwell at any length upon the objects of the mission, or the desirability of maintaining the good work it so successfully carried on in this locality. The presence there that night of so many subscribers fully testified to the deep interest taken, and sympathy felt, in the work of the society. He did not doubt that many, like himself, attended the meeting with feelings of attachment and deep and lasting respect for those who had worked for so many years and so faithfully in connection with this Mission. (Hear, hear.) Now, if he were to differ in any respect from the tone of the reports just read it would be in his disposition to look forward with great hope to the continuance of the work of the Mission in another locality if a transference of the seat of its operations should eventually become necessary. It was well known to all present with what great and promising auguries of success the London District Unitarian Society had removed one of its missions—the Chapel-street Mission—and he could not help thinking that if such a step became necessary it could be taken by this Mission with every prospect of success. (Hear, hear.) With regard to the treasurer's report, as Mr. Warren had very clearly pointed out, the financial position of the society was not so bad as it appeared. When the explanation as to the postponement of the Government grant was taken into consideration, it would be seen that the increase of debt to the treasurer was only £15, as compared with last year. The fact that the subscriptions showed a slight increase clearly proved that the Mission continued to be highly esteemed by its supporters. (Hear, hear.) Then with reference to the position of the day schools, he felt sure that the subscribers must be deeply grateful to Mr. Hawkins and those who assisted him for the success attained in this department from year to year. (Applause.) Personally he felt great interest in the proposed establishment of better schools in the metropolis. There was no doubt that many of the board schools were eminently defective, and that the time had come when at least one good school should be planted in the city with the view of testing the worth of the others. Still, in view of this probable competition, he had no fear of the Mission's school suffering, for it had been and was now doing right, true, and good work. (Cheers.) With regard to the Sunday school, there were, in his opinion, very many hopeful features. One was the very great amount of assistance given, not only by the elder scholars, but by old pupils. He was also glad to see the success which attended the operations of the various other institutions connected with the Mission. Now, while he did not wish for one moment to dictate to the committee their future course, he did desire to urge the desirability—even necessity—of working on with unflagging zeal and determination, leaving the future to legislate for itself. The subscribers should know the real good and lasting work which was being done by the Mission, which was so pre-eminently deserving of the warmest sympathy and most generous support of all who took an interest in the work that was being carried on. (Applause.)

Mr. BARTRAM seconded the resolution, which was then put and carried unanimously.

The Rev. T. W. FRECKELTON moved: "That this meeting desires to record its grateful recognition of the services of those who for many years have, at the cost of much time and attention and self-sacrifice, contributed so effectually to the working of this Mission." This was no formal commonplace resolution, nor did he recommend it to the adoption of the meeting in that spirit. He confessed to a feeling of perfect amazement on hearing from the reports just read of the immense amount of work of one kind and another which was being done by the Mission. (Hear, hear.) Even supposing that each particular department achieved only a fair appreciative amount of success, the aggregate sum of good must be very great, and must tell in a very much wider circle than could be put upon paper. All that indicated a considerable amount of health and vigour, and he knew well that under such circumstances as obtained here that health and vigour could only be kept up by the utmost zeal and devotion on the part of those who carried on the work. He agreed with the chairman that the subscribers had no reason to be downcast as to the future of the Mission, whether its operations were continued at its present centre, or whether it found a new home in another field of labour. (Cheers.)

Mr. C. L. COCHRANE seconded the resolution, and in doing so expressed his hearty sympathy with the work being carried on by the Mission. While at his own Mission in Chapel-street he was favoured with ample means, he had to deplore the great want of personal support and assistance, which he feared was a characteristic of the present day. Children were no longer brought up in the belief that they could render no higher service to their fellow-creatures than by devoting some of their time, attention, and thought to the elevation of the moral and mental condition of those around them. There was no lack of charity in the world, but it took only a material mundane form. At some length the rev. speaker dealt with the painful discrepancies that existed between the worldly condition of the great masses of our population, and expressed the belief that the multiplication of such missions as this throughout the metropolis would prove the best remedy of the evils he referred to.

The resolution was passed unanimously.

Mr. I. M. WADE proposed the re-election of the existing committee as the officers of the society for the ensuing year, and said that if any body of ladies and gentlemen could make an institution it certainly was that which represented the executive of this Association. (Hear, hear.) He must say he had heard with regret the undertone, he would not say of despair, but certainly of depression, which had marked the utterances of some of the speakers. From such views of the position and prospects of the Mission he differed in toto; and, indeed, after listening to the satisfactory report presented by Mr. Taylor, one was inclined to wonder where the failures existed. He considered the Missions had accomplished the work they were established to perform. Secular education had, he was thankful to say, been practically taken out of their hands. Hence it behoved them now to throw all their energies into the religious and moral instruction of the people. He regretted that the attendance at the Sunday school was not equal to that at the day schools.

The Rev. T. L. MARSHALL seconded the resolution.

The Rev. J. TAYLOR observed that the Mission's Sunday school was incomparably the best of any in the neighbourhood, and that the attendance was as large as could be expected under the circumstances.

Mr. JEFFERY moved a vote of thanks to the congregation of the Muswell Hill Chapel for the use of their place of worship on the occasion of the preaching of the annual sermon on behalf of the Mission by the Rev. Mr. Picton. The collection, Mr. Jeffery added, amounted to the satisfactory total of £62.

Mr. BARTRAM seconded the proposition, and said, in reply to Mr. Wade, that the cause of the better attendance at the day schools was doubtless to be attributed to the fact that the School Board compelled the attendance of children at some school. Then with regard to the deepening poverty of some classes of the community, while recognising this as an undeniable fact, he pointed out that scientists would explain if not justify it by the theory of the survival of the fittest.

The resolution was carried nem. con.

On the motion of Mr. WARREN, a vote of thanks to the chairman, with which was included a similar compliment to the committee of the Mission, was cordially awarded; and the proceedings terminated.

MANCHESTER DISTRICT UNITARIAN ASSOCIATION.

THE annual meeting of this association was held on Tuesday evening last at the Memorial Hall, the Rev. WM. GASKELL, M.A., in the chair. There were present—the Rev. S. A. Steinthal, J. T. Marriott, Jas. Black, M.A., W. G. Cadman, John McDowell, Halliwell Thomas, Wm. Harrison, Chas. T. Poynting, B.A.; Messrs. Smith Golland, James Bennett, Harry Rawson, Herford, John Hadfield, J. H. Reynolds, W. E. Nanson, Jesse Pilcher, E. C. Harding, Luke Pollitt, John Heyes.

The CHAIRMAN briefly explained that in consequence of the death of the Rev. T. E. Poynting, the meeting was not held on the 5th of March last, as originally advertised, and called upon

The Rev. CHARLES POYNTING, secretary, who read THE COMMITTEE'S REPORT.

In the first instance your committee wish to call attention to the fact that this year the report is really only for a period of nine months. Hitherto the annual reports have been from March to March, a year which has not coincided either with the financial year of this association or of the congregations. Your committee therefore have decided that henceforth the reports shall cover the period extending from January 1st to December 31st. This arrangement also enables them to hold the annual meeting earlier in the year.

The chief event of last year was the meeting held in the Free Trade Hall on October 30th, under the presidency of R. N. Philips, Esq., M.P., to welcome the British and Foreign Unitarian Association upon the joint invitation of the East Lancashire Unitarian Mission, the East Cheshire Christian Union for Missionary Purposes, and this association. The meeting originated in a suggestion made by your committee to the committee of the other two associations, and which was cordially taken up by them. Your committee feel that the success of that meeting, alike as regards the very large attendance, the enthusiasm manifested, and the increased pecuniary support secured for the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, is a subject of great congratulation. The interest which was aroused in Unitarian affairs cannot fail to produce beneficial results to all the associations concerned, including our own. It is most satisfactory to have done something to repay the obligations under which this district lies to the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, and to have strengthened the bonds which connect us with our London friends.

In the next place your committee have gratefully to acknowledge the most handsome donation of £50 to the funds of this association from the trustees of the Memorial Hall. This donation, with other generous promises of support which have been received, enable your committee to look forward to the speedy extinction of the debt which has so long hampered the work of this association. Many new subscribers have at the same time been added, but the ordinary income of the association is still far from adequate to the calls made upon it, and it is still impossible to undertake work in other localities which have so long called for attention. In order to remedy this great defect your committee recommend to their successors the appointment of a local treasurer in each congregation, more especially for the purpose of obtaining additional interest by means of a large number of small subscriptions. Your committee feel the great importance of securing as members not only those who can afford to give large subscriptions, but also those whose pecuniary support is limited to a few shillings. It is with extreme regret that the committee have to announce the retirement of Mr. Golland from the treasurership. His services to the association have been so great as to call for the most cordial acknowledgment on the part of all the members. As to the congregations receiving grants in aid of their ministry, there is little new to report.

At Middleton there has been a decided increase in the number of enrolled members. The Sunday school is in a healthy condition, showing both increased numbers and better attendance. At Miles Platting there has been an improvement in the evening congregation, but the morning congregation is still very small. This is due no doubt to the fact that the Sunday school and church are held in one room. The congregation look forward, however, to a time when they will possess a separate building for their religious services. The Sunday school is in a very healthy state, the average attendance having very considerably improved. The new class-rooms mentioned in the last report have been finished, and towards the cost (£104) more than £71 has been subscribed. Altogether this congregation is in a most satisfactory condition.

At Ardwick the great event of the year has been the settlement of the Rev. E. C. Towne, B.A., as the minister. The congregation are now prepared to commence building operations. The land for a new Church and Sunday-school is now in their absolute possession, and they are only waiting for a favourable opportunity to open the subscription list. Meanwhile they are earnestly striving to do their share of the work, and by sewing societies and other means to raise the necessary funds. Three lectures were delivered by their new minister last November in the Ardwick Town Hall, by means of the balance remaining from the Jubilee Grant is now exhausted. Much interest was excited in the neighbourhood.

At Falsworth the new church will be shortly commenced. The number of members has increased from 66 last year to 73 this. The total amount raised for all purposes last year was £103. 12s. 1d. This year it has been £186. 19s. 5½d.

At Swinton, the depression in trade has told heavily against the congregation. The attendance at the services is as good, perhaps better, than ever, though there is a slight falling off in the number of enrolled members. The offertory, owing to low wages, has fallen very considerably, the deficiency having to be made up by special efforts. There has, moreover, been a heavy expenditure in reflooring the school, and they have also lost one of their best subscribers by death. Throughout the whole district, the depression in trade has told heavily against the prosperity of the congregation, and when this is taken into consideration the committee feel that there is cause for congratulation in the progress which has on the whole been made.

Mr. SMITH GOLLAND read the financial report. From annual collections £114. 17s. 8d. had been received, and from subscriptions £142. 10s. 6d., and from other sources £96, making, with a balance due the treasurer of £47. 14s. 5½d., a total of £401. 2s. 7½d. At the beginning of the year, £108. 15s. 5½d. was owing to the treasurer, so that £61 of that had been paid off during the year.

The Rev. S. A. STEINTHAL moved the adoption of the reports, which the Rev. W. G. Cadman seconded: the motion was carried unanimously.

Mr. E. C. HARDING moved the best thanks of the meeting to Mr. Smith Golland on his retirement from the office of treasurer after five years' service, and expressed his regret that on account of his health they were losing Mr. Golland's official help.

Mr. JESSE PILCHER seconded the motion, adding that under the circumstances they could not grudge Mr. Golland the rest which he needed.

Mr. GOLLAND said his medical adviser told him he had been working too hard and too long, and he was therefore compelled to reduce his labours where he could.

On the motion of Mr. W. E. NANSON the officers for the next year were appointed, Mr. G. W. Rayner Wood being appointed treasurer.

The Rev. S. A. STEINTHAL then moved—"That we herby record our sincere sympathy with Mrs. Poynting, and with the family of the late Rev. T. E. Poynting, on the heavy bereavement they have lately suffered, and request the chairman to communicate to Mrs. Poynting how deeply sensible the members of this association are of the great loss which they have sustained." Mr. Steinthal expressed how keenly he felt the loss of Mr. Poynting personally.

Mr. HARRY RAWSON seconded the motion, feeling quite sure that Mr. Steinthal's words would have touched a responsive chord in all their hearts.

The motion was carried unanimously, as was also a vote of thanks to the chairman, which terminated the meeting.

NEWS OF OUR CHURCHES.

DOB LANE, FAILSWORTH.

The closing services of this ancient chapel were held on the last two Sundays, March 17 and 24. In a few days it will be pulled down to make room for the more elegant and convenient structure which has been designed by Messrs. Adams and Son, of King's Lynn, and adopted by the congregation and trustees. The old ivy-mantled building has stood since 1698, and in its prolonged existence of one hundred and eighty years has done good service in its neighbourhood for the great principles of civil and religious freedom, the promotion of education, and the cause of a liberal and progressive theology. Among its ministers have been several notable men—Rev. William Stevenson, assistant classical tutor from 1792 to 1796 at Manchester New College; and the Rev. George Walker, F.R.S., professor of theology from 1798 to 1803. Long before the present highway was formed, Dob Lane was approached from Manchester by bridle-paths and field roads only, along which ambled every Sunday, on his little white Welsh pony, the Rev. Lewis Lloyd;—thinking doubtless of many subtle things, but hardly discerning by prophetic insight that his son would become a member of the House of Lords, and be reckoned among the merchant-princes of the land. Mr. Lloyd held the position of assistant classical tutor at the College from 1790 to 1792. In later times George Buckland, and the learned but eccentric James Taylor, and still more recently the Revs. Joseph Freeston, W. G. Cadman, and its present excellent pastor, Halliwell Thomas, have had charge of the congregation here. These three ministers, with the Rev. Edward Allen, of Lydgate (formerly a Dob Lane scholar and teacher), and the Revs. S. A. Steinthal and Wm. Gaskell, took part in the closing services, all of which were numerously attended. On Sunday evening, the chapel was filled to overflowing immediately after the opening of the door, and a great number being thus excluded a second congregation was assembled in the schoolroom, which was addressed by the Mr. Thomas, whilst Mr. Gaskell conducted the service in the old chapel. In the course of the sermon his references to the special circumstances of the occasion, and the associations which it called up in the minds of many of his hearers, were received with evident sympathy and emotion. Many former members, some from distant localities, had come to take farewell of a house of prayer which, humble enough in appearance, was yet connected with many tender and affectionate remembrances. The choir gave two anthems, and the singing was, as usual here, very hearty and effective. The various collections realised the sum of £35. 10s. During the erection of their new chapel the congregation will assemble in the schoolroom. They have let the contract for the building at a price which, though moderate, will well-nigh exhaust their resources; but the good and self-denying work they have done, and are doing, entitle them to such further aid as will secure them from the burden of a debt.

BIRMINGHAM: MEETING OF PROTESTANT DISSENTING MINISTERS.

The first monthly meeting this year of Protestant Dissenting ministers of Warwickshire and the neighbouring counties was held at Newhall Hill, Birmingham, on Monday last. The following members were present:—Revs. C. Clarke, H. W. Crosskey, J. Cuckson, J. Alsop, B. Wright, W. R. Smyth, and Mr. George St. Clair (Birmingham); Revs. H. McKean (Oldbury), W. E. Mellone (Kidderminster), C. D. Badland (Derby), D. Maginnis (Stourbridge), P. Dean (Walsall), J. Harrison (West Bromwich), H. Eachus (Coseley), and T. B. Broadrick (The Lye). Mr. CUCKSON, as pastor loci, presided. The minutes of last meeting having been read and confirmed, and arrangements made for the next meeting, the following report of the proceedings of 1877 was presented and adopted:—

During the year meetings were held at Birmingham, Old Meeting and Church of the Messiah; Cradley, Evesham, Kidderminster, Kingswood, Oldbury, Stourbridge, and West Bromwich. At two of the meetings papers were read and discussed, and at the other seven sermons were preached. The following were the preachers and their subjects:—Rev. T. B. Broadrick, "Some Certainties of Religion;" Rev. M. Gibson, "The Permanent Character of the Religion of Jesus;" Rev. John Gordon, "Christ's Gospel a Personal Manifestation;" Rev. H. Ierson, "Apostolic Succession;" Rev. H. McKean, "The Cross the Symbol of Free Thought;" Rev. T. E. Poynting, "The Religious Signs of the Times;" and Rev. W. R. Smyth, "The Call of Jesus—How and Why it should be obeyed." The readers and subjects of the papers were—Rev. Peter Dean, "Some Deficiencies of Secularism," and Mr. George St. Clair, "The Place of Evil in the Evolution Theory." The ministers were in all cases hospitably entertained: in five of the nine places visited being met by a numerous party of lay friends.

At most of these meetings there was friendly discussion on subjects introduced, in most instances by the chairman of the day. The following, among other subjects, were thus discussed:—The Government Burials Bill; The Work of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association; Lay and Clerical Co-operation; The Best Means of Diminishing Drunkenness; and Mr. Hoppood's proposed "Accredited Statement." The meeting adopted resolutions recording its sense of the high character and public services of the Rev. Charles Berry (formerly a member of the meeting), the Rev. John Kenrick, and Miss Mary Carpenter, all of whom died within the year. The Rev. William Agar and the Rev. James Kedwards, in consequence of removal from the district, ceased to be members; and the following new members were enrolled:—Revs. J. Alsop, C. D. Badland, T. B. Broadrick, W. Carey Walters, and Mr. George St. Clair. The meeting at the end of the year consisted of 32 members. Its officers are—the Rev. H. McKean, Oldbury, treasurer; and the Rev. D. Maginnis, Stourbridge, secretary.

The TREASURER presented his statement of accounts for the year, which was adopted.

The following resolutions were adopted unanimously:—

1. Moved by the Rev. C. CLARKE, and seconded by the Rev. H. W. CROSSKEY:—"That this meeting expresses its deep regret on account of the death of the Rev. Thomas E. Poynting, of Monton. The sweetness of his character endeared him to all who knew him, and the influence he exerted upon those with whom he came into contact was of the most salutary kind. His learning was extensive, and the depth of his thought remarkable; and in all the labours he undertook, ministerial or literary, he proved himself to be a workman that needeth not to be ashamed."

2. Moved by the Rev. H. MCKEAN, and seconded by the Rev. D. MAGINNIS:—"That this meeting, of which he was a member, in recording the death of the Rev. John Colston, of Hampton Lodge, near Evesham (formerly minister of Dean Row and Styal, in Cheshire), desires to bear testimony to the integrity of his conduct and the usefulness of his life. As a man of high cultivation, of clear intellect, and of strong principle, he was universally respected; and by those intimately connected with him his memory will ever be cherished as that of a genial companion and faithful friend."

After the transaction of some other business, the Rev. C. D. BADLAND proceeded, as announced, to read a paper on "Spinoza." The paper was scholarly and able, and was followed by some discussion.—At the close of these proceedings the ministers were hospitably entertained in the schoolroom. Mr. Cuckson, as chairman, introduced for discussion the subject of the desirability of producing a religious service book for Sunday-school use. The subject was taken up with much interest, and a strong desire was generally expressed for the production of such a book.

TAUNTON: ANNUAL MEETING.

The annual social meeting of the congregation was held on Thursday last, tea being served in both upper and lower schoolrooms, and the meeting afterwards being crowded. Mr. West, medical officer of the benefit society, and the Rev. J. E. Odgers, M.A., of Bridgwater, were present. The Rev. John Birks, pastor, presided, and, after giving all a hearty welcome, said that it might be interesting and useful to them to know something of the life and work of their society, and its various agencies, during the past year, forming the Pastor's Record for the year ending March, 1878, being the eighth year of his ministry among them. The congregation at present numbered about 314, regular and irregular, subscribers and non-subscribers, as compared with 300 last year. The attendance at the ordinary services had been larger during the past year than at any time during his pastorate; while on the occasion of lectures, special services of sacred song, and Sunday School anniversary, the congregations had been very large, the chapel being frequently filled. Yet the regular attendance was far below what it ought to be when they considered the number nominally belonging to the congregation. This was a fact connected with their denomination generally which caused Mr. Spurgeon to say that a Unitarian chapel might be indicated by grass growing outside, in front, and empty pews, with coldness, inside. Attention was now being called to this matter in most of our churches, and he trusted that they would at Mary-street Chapel furnish an example of regular and spirited attendance at the services, and hearty participation in worship and work. In addition to the regular subscriptions to the numerous funds connected with the chapel, the amount of money raised was nearly double that of last year. There had been 14 baptisms, making a total of 71 for the eight years of his ministry. The members of the choir gave their services, and rendered valuable help from Sunday to Sunday under the able leadership of Mr. Philpott, whose gratuitous services had received some little token of appreciation on the part of the members of the congregation in the presentation of £20 as an expression of their gratitude. The day school, with certificated master, is now as full as the Government Education Department requirements would allow. The Sunday school was increasingly prosperous, and with the large number of scholars in regular attendance, the accommodation was frequently taxed to the utmost, causing some to say,

"Let us arise and build." The district visitors had continued, as usual, their work of faith and labour of love, and had done much good. The Benefit Society celebrated that day its 31st anniversary, and had now 46 members, with £739 stock. From that brief sketch they would be able to judge what they were doing, and how they stood with regard to the work committed to their care. They had had many losses, and some difficulties, but for eight years they had lived and laboured happily and usefully together, and this fact had led him to decline offers of positions with higher stipends. And he trusted that in the future God would bless them with health and strength and spirit to do all that they could in every way for their most holy cause.—The Rev. J. E. Odgers expressed his pleasure at being present, and congratulated minister and congregation on the record of their activities which had been brought before them. In a genial and effective speech he pleaded for more general co-operation on the part of the members of congregations with their ministers in the work of religion.—A programme of music, with readings at intervals, was then proceeded with, and a most happy meeting concluded with votes of thanks to the minister, to the visitors, and to the ladies for tea, and musical friends, to which Mr. Philpott responded, referring to the correspondence in our denominational papers on congregational singing and friendliness to strangers, and trusted that good might result in a direction much needed. The Doxology was then heartily sung, and the Benediction closed the proceedings.

NOTICE.—Our friends would oblige if they would kindly send their news paragraphs so as to arrive never later than Wednesday morning, otherwise we are compelled to cut them down.

BELFAST: ROSEMARY-STREET MUTUAL IMPROVEMENT ASSOCIATION.—On Monday evening, after completion of preliminary business, the Chairman (Rev. J. C. Street) called upon Dr. Burden to deliver a lecture upon "Yeast," which he did in a very interesting and instructive manner, illustrating his remarks by prepared specimens under the microscope. On the motion of J. M. Darbishire, Esq., seconded by George Fisher, Esq., a vote of thanks was passed to Dr. Burden by acclamation.

BIRKENHEAD: CRUELTY TO ANIMALS.—A sermon on behalf of the Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals was preached by the Rev. W. Binns at the Unitarian Church, Birkenhead, on Sunday morning. The reverend gentleman took for his text Psalm 104, verse 24—"These wait upon thee that thou mayst give them their meat in due season." He spoke of the cruelty involved in pigeon shooting and hunting the fox and the deer, and designated the desire of killing for sport an exemplification of the fact that the savage element in human nature has not been eliminated. He eulogised the services of the Royal Society in putting the arm of the law in motion to prevent the infliction of cruelty upon the more domesticated and more useful animals. Last year there were 394 convictions in the Liverpool district alone; and throughout the country the greatest energy was displayed by the society's officers with the most salutary effect.

BOLTON: BANK-STREET CHAPEL SOIREE.—On Wednesday evening, March 20, the Bank-street Unitarian congregation held their annual soiree in the new school. A large number sat down to tea, and the after-proceedings were most enjoyable. On the platform and in front were collections of most beautiful conservatory plants and flowers, which gave a very pleasing appearance to the hall. The chair was occupied by Mr. J. C. Hollins, who was supported by the Rev. C. C. Coe, the minister; Rev. J. Fox, Rev. George Ride, Rev. A. B. Camm, Rev. A. Lazenby, and Rev. A. Rushton. At the request of the chairman, Mr. Midgley made a statement as to the condition of the congregation and all its affiliated institutions, and congratulated all that they were in a healthy condition. Referring to the memorial window that had been placed in the chapel by Mr. John Harwood, he said it was a reminder of a benefactor to all their institutions. In addition to numerous other institutions, they had a good day school. The chairman urged upon the attention of the congregation the necessity of dealing with the question of intemperance. Mr. I. Barrow mentioned that they had a sick society of over 100 members, and an accumulated fund of £300. Addresses were then delivered by Mr. George Cunliffe and Mr. Charles Taylor, the latter replying to a vote of thanks for the voluntary services of the choir. The Revs. A. B. Camm and A. Rushton also addressed the meeting, as did the Rev. C. C. Coe. Drawing a distinction between denominationalism and sectarianism, he said he was glad they showed their zeal for denominationalism by aiding other congregations in the district, and as Commission-street congregation were going to have a bazaar in that building, he hoped that Bank-street would send them away with a good sum. (Cheers.) Mr. Coe referred to the importance of maintaining congregational zeal, enforced the value of worship and social intercourse between the different members of the church, and the need of personal effort. In regard to the latter, he laid great stress on the importance of giving personal service as well as contributing pecuniarily. The evening was pleasantly spent, many friends contributing to a delightful musical entertainment.

CAPEL-Y-VADVA, CARDIGANSHIRE.—A little more than a year ago, soon after the eviction at Llwynrhyd-owen, the congregation at Capel-y-Vadva were enabled, owing to a large portion of the Alltrodin estate having to be sold, to buy an acre and a half of land adjoining the chapel for a burial ground. It was intended also to reserve a site for a new chapel, if the present lease, which will expire in about twenty years, cannot be renewed at that time. The expense incurred in the purchase of the land, drainage, fencing, and planting, amounted to about £120. The congregation, made up mostly of small farmers and labourers, having two years ago been compelled to thoroughly repair, indeed almost rebuild, their chapel, at an expense of £200, which was paid off at once, were therefore unable to fully defray the debt incurred for the burial ground without supplementing the first voluntary contributions by an extra effort. The plan adopted was to have a concert on a large scale at which no professional singers were to be employed, but, in addition to the excellent choir and sub-choirs of the congregation itself, the service of choirs belonging to different religious bodies in the neighbourhood should, if possible, be secured. The proposal was very kindly received by all the parties applied to, and, in consequence, a varied and well assorted programme was made up. The concert was held on Friday last, there being a morning and an evening gathering, at both of which the audiences were overflowing. The board schoolroom at Talgareg was generously lent for the occasion by the members. The morning concert was presided over by the Rev. William Thomas, the minister of the congregation; and in the evening the Rev. D. L. Evans, late of Carmarthen College, occupied the chair. The Revs. R. Thomas, Independent minister, and J. Hopkins, a clergyman of the Church of England, as well as Mr. J. Griffiths, surgeon, delivered appreciative and appropriate addresses. The choirs engaged were those of Capel-y-Vadva, Lllwynrhyd-owen, Towyn (New Quay), Llanarth, and Mydroilin. Several solos and duets were sung, Miss Enoch, of New Quay, ably presiding at the piano. The music throughout was of a high class, and ably rendered, which reflects great credit on the inhabitants of a remote and hilly district in Cardiganshire. The sum realised amounted to above £60, which will clear off all liabilities on the new place of rest. The good ladies of the congregation had provided substantial refreshments for the performers and visitors. Before these lines will meet the eyes of your readers, the first grave will have been opened, it being for a child of seven years old, the daughter of one of the deacons of the church.

HALIFAX.—The Rev. F. E. Millson gave a lecture on Thursday the 21st inst., on the history and meaning of Handel's oratorio, the "Messiah," rendering it more intelligible by a description of the characteristics of the three parts into which the oratorio is divided. The following musical illustrations were given by the chapel choir, accompanied on the organ by Mr. Lonsdale:—"Comfort ye," "And the Glory," "Thus saith the Lord," "For behold, darkness shall cover the earth," "The people that walketh in darkness," "Pastoral Symphony," "He shall feed his flock," "Behold the Lamb of God," "He was despised," "But thou didst not leave," "How beautiful are the feet," "The Hallelujah Chorus," "I know that my Redeemer liveth." The performance and lecture were listened to with great pleasure by an audience which quite filled the chapel. At the close a collection amounting to £6. 8s. 3d. was handed to the piano fund of the elocution class in connection with the school.

MONTEYREA.—The Rev. Thomas Leyland has received a hearty and unanimous invitation to become minister of the Trafalgar-street Church, Burnley, Lancashire.

MERTHYR SOUP KITCHEN: PRESENTATION TO REV. N. R. WILLIAMS.—Last week we recorded an interesting presentation of books to the members of the bread-cutting staff at the Drill Hall, and we have no less pleasure this week in chronicling a similar interesting event, the recipient in this case being the Rev. Nestor R. Williams. On meeting together on Wednesday morning to go through the arduous duty of cutting up bread for upwards of 2,000 children an adjournment was moved to the ante-room, when the Rev. Thomas Evans, of Hope Chapel, taking the chair, addressed the worthy captain on the excellence of his direction and example, as shown during the last twelve weeks, and remarked that even as he had thought well to place the eventful duty, sorrowful even as it was viewed from one aspect, in an abiding form in their memory by the presentation of Channing's Works, so they had desired to indicate in the same way the general respect they entertained for their captain, and begged his acceptance of a copy of the French Revolution, by Thomas Carlyle, in three volumes. The books were then presented in due form by the father of the corps, the Rev. J. M. Bowen, and in responding the Rev. Nestor R. Williams tendered his warmest thanks, and assured them that he should treasure the gift as long as he lived, and ever think of the time passed with them as aiding the worthy rector to carry out the exercise of a nation's charity, one of the most pleasurable epochs of his life.

MANCHESTER.—On Monday evening the forty-second annual meeting of the Lower Mosley-street Schools was held, the Rev. S. A. Steinthal presiding. The Secretary (Mr. W. E. Nanson) read the annual report, which stated that the institution was never doing better work than now. The pupils acquitted themselves very creditably at the examination in November last, under the superintendence of the Rev. W. J. Kennedy, Her Majesty's inspector of schools. The total Government grant earned by the school, including £26 for pupil teachers who had passed successfully, was £390. 8s., or 11s. 8d. per head on the average attendance, as against £353. 12s. last year. Of the boys' school Her Majesty's inspector reported: "The boys have shown a considerable amount of cultivation, their work, so done very neatly, and none of the boys seem neglected." 311 presented themselves for examination. The total failures in the three subjects were 16, showing that 98.3 were successful. The two Cartwright scholarships offered in November, 1877, were awarded to candidates from the school. Of the School Board exhibitions eight were now held by former pupils. The Inspector reported of the girls' school: "The behaviour of the girls was excellent, and their attainments are much above the average." 98 girls were presented for examination, and the failures were only four, showing that in the three subjects 98.6 were successful. The infants school was reported to be very well managed and taught. 58 children were presented in the first standard and there were no failures. Honour certificates have been awarded by the Department to eight boys and three girls. In the Sunday school, there was a falling off in the attendance, owing to the destruction of a number of dwelling-houses in the neighbourhood; but the week evening classes were very successfully conducted, some being under the supervision of the Science and Art Department.—The Treasurer (Mr. John Hadfield) read his statement, which showed that the total income of the institution had been £1,612, the result of the year's operations being that there was a balance to the credit of the school of £99, besides which the deficit of £22 on the last year's proceedings had been paid off. The Sunday school was debited with an expense of £76, which was met by a transfer from the general income.—Upon the motion of the chairman, who remarked upon the excellence of the teaching in the schools, the report and financial statement were adopted, and the following resolution was passed: "That this meeting has heard with deep regret of the illness of Mr. Geo. Smith, and desires to express its sympathy with him during his enforced absence from his duties, and its earnest hope that he may be soon restored to health."

READING.—The cause here steadily progresses. On Sunday last the Rev. Charles Voysey, B.A., preached in the morning on "Revelation," and in the evening on "God our Refuge." The discourses were exceedingly able, and were listened to with the greatest attention by large congregations, in the evening the church being well filled. On Monday evening there was again a large and appreciative audience to hear the rev. gentleman deliver his well-known lecture on "The Bible." Our good friend Mr. Eve, of Aldershill, occupied the chair. Mr. Voysey's visit has occasioned much perturbation amongst the Evangelicals, who made arrangements with the Christian Evidence Society to send down the renowned Dr. Sexton presumably to work miracles in the way of defending the faith, and the redoubtable doctor preached morning and evening on Sunday at Congregational churches in the town, and on Monday evening lectured in the Town Hall. On Tuesday afternoon he assisted at a conference of those interested in checking the growth of unbelief, and lectured in the Town Hall again in the evening. But in other ways the progress of free religious thought has excited the zeal of the orthodox. Near our new church, on the London Road, the Presbyterians some time ago erected an iron church, whose minister has declared that he felt called by God to stamp out the Socinian heresy. It is said now that the Episcopalians are about to erect an iron church in our immediate neighbourhood. The temperature is therefore decidedly rising, and it is gratifying to know that the members of the Unitarian Free Church are warming to their work. From the calendar for April we learn that a children's service is held in the afternoon of the first Sunday in every month, to which parents are invited to accompany their children; a Sunday school is conducted on the other Sunday afternoons, and parents are assured that their children will spend a happy and profitable hour; an adult class for the study of religious questions, Parker's Discourse being taken as a text-book, is conducted by the minister for an hour each Sunday morning before service; the choir, under the care of Mr. Barnicoat, meets for practice every Friday evening; the Redlands Literary and Scientific Society, whose recent meetings have been very successful, especially one at which Mr. O. A. Shrubsole delivered a lecture on the Dawn of Life on the Earth, and another at which Mr. G. R. Smith delivered an address on Psychology, Spiritualism, and cognate subjects, will in the course of the month deal with the "County Franchise," to be introduced by Mr. Councillor King, and the Sunday question, to be introduced by Mr. A. Barnicoat; and finally, a geological class in connection with the above-named institution is conducted by Mr. O. A. Shrubsole with marked success. The calendar also gives the subject of the ministers' discourses for the month, and contains an extract from one of Mr. Voysey's sermons on "The End we have in View." The fact that this entirely new congregation is quickly organising itself and settling down to practical church life is a matter for general satisfaction.

STROUD.—Some heretics of the Congregational sect have been pronouncing excommunication against a brother heretic—our friend the Rev. Richard Pilcher. The case which has led to a correspondence in the Stroud Journal, was the exclusion, in effect, of Mr. Pilcher from officiating in a Congregationalist burying ground. It seems that ultimately permission was offered to the family to have Mr. Pilcher's services, but it came too late. In the midst of the controversy it was alleged that the burial services of Unitarians are in glaring opposition to the religious convictions of their neighbours. This Mr. Pilcher denies, and further says that such an assertion would not be true of any of our religious services, adding, however, "There is indeed one prayer we habitually use, to which a Trinitarian might object. It is the Lord's prayer, and I defy Mr. Davis to repeat it without becoming, for the time being, as much a Unitarian as myself!" On the present aspect of opinion among the congregational ministers Mr. Pilcher says:—I am amused by the way in which they pour their new wine into the old 'orthodox' skins, and am on the watch for the bursting of the old leather, sure, if not soon, to be. They are going just as our forerunners, the English Presbyterians, went whithersoever the fresh knowledge and more enlightened conscience of their day is leading them. We are, theologically speaking, only some 80 or 100 years in advance. . . . They differ from me only in the quantity of the old theology we have severally retained or cast away. Mr. Davis says that we are "decidedly heretical." I say to him, "You and your friends are heretical, but 'undecidedly.'" Dr. Allon, e.g. (in his Vision of God &c., p. 297), gives a list of four different theories of the atonement, which have been held by the orthodox, and a sketch of one which he holds to-day; a sketch at which his "orthodox" predecessors would simply have shuddered. I challenge Mr. Park, as leading representative of his sect in Stroud, to say whether or not he holds and preaches the doctrine of a physical endless hell, such as it was preached 30 years ago, and is still held by the Wesleyans; of a "good hot seething hell," as one of that body phrased it when he and I were discussing Dr. Osborne's speech here in Stroud. With what face, then, I ask, do these fractional heretics sit in judgment upon me, and punish me, so far as in them lies, because I am, heretically speaking, an integer?

STAND.—The sixth annual meeting of the Unitarian Band of Hope was held on Saturday last, the 23rd inst., when there was a good attendance of the members and their friends. After tea the chair was taken by the president, the Rev. W. C. Squier, and a satisfactory report was read by the secretary, Mr. Henry Allen. The Rev. S. A. Steinthal delivered an effective speech, and the members gave several recitations and songs with success. A pleasing feature was the presentation of valuable gifts to canvassers for temperance literature in the Sunday school. The performance of the teetotal drama, "Aunt Dinah's Pledge," in which the characters were sustained by the members of the Stand Band of Hope, concluded the proceedings.

THOMAS PARGETER OF FOXCOTE CHARITY.—The annual meeting of the trustees of this charity was held on the 18th instant at the offices of Messrs. Harding and Son, 32, Waterloo-street, Birmingham. The trustees present were the Revs. Charles Clarke, H. W. Crosskey, William Cochrane, H. Eachus, M. Gibson, D. Maginnis, H. McKean, W. E. Mellone, and James Taplin. The latter gentleman was elected chairman for the ensuing year; Mr. Joseph Beattie was re-elected treasurer; the Revs. W. E. Mellone and H. W. Crosskey were elected auditors; and Mr. Charles Harding was re-elected secretary. Nine annuitants have died since the last annual meeting, and one annuity has in accordance with the scheme been discontinued in consequence of the annuitant having become possessed of increased means from other sources. The vacancies thus created have been supplied by the election of other candidates. The present number of annuitants (including three elected at the last quarterly meeting) is 99, 93 of whom are entitled to receive £20 a year, and six (being sisters) £16 a year each. A very large number of names of applicants for annuities still remain on the books of the Charity, many of them of long standing, notwithstanding which new applications are frequently received.

CORRESPONDENCE.

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

A STUDENT.—If you will please send your name and address, we will communicate with you privately.

THE WOMEN'S PETITION.

To the Editors.—In your advertising columns will be found a copy of a petition, now in course of signature, by the women of England. The laws against which it protests were passed in comparative silence, and their promoters were privately working to extend their operation. This, at least, has been checked by the publicity now given to the subject. The Ladies' Protest, signed eight years ago by Harriet Martineau, Florence Nightingale, Josephine Butler, and others, could not be ignored; and a women's petition sent to Parliament some years ago, with upwards of a quarter of a million signatures, increased the moral power of those who condemned the Acts in the House of Commons. Since then, a Royal Commission has declared against them, and "the new Abolitionists," in their struggle against one of the vilest forms of slavery, have shown themselves superior to the unmanly abuse with which they were at first assailed.

Almost all the Nonconformist bodies except our own have passed resolutions against these Acts. In 1874, a conference of our ministers discussed them in the Whitsun week; and a long petition against them was drawn up, and signed by more than 140 ministers. Of the rest, some questioned clauses in the petition, some were too doubtful to sign, a few were opposed to its prayer. Though it was presented by the Right Hon. James Stansfeld, I do not remember to have seen

Printed for the Proprietors by WILLIAM EVANS, of Apsley Villa 377, Waterloo Road, Cheetham Hill, at his Printing Offices, No. 3, Cross-street, Parish of Manchester; and Published by JOHN PHILLIPS, at New Cannon Chambers, 55 Market-street, in said Parish of Manchester. - London Agents Messrs. Smart and Allen, 2, London-house Yard, Paternoster Row. - Friday, March 29, 1878.

The Unitarian Herald.

EDITED BY

REV. JAMES BLACK, M.A., & REV. S. FLETCHER WILLIAMS.

VOL. XVIII.—884.

FRIDAY, APRIL 5, 1878.

PRICE 1D.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE.
Doings and Sayings	114
Scottish Notes	114
Books and Authors	114
Nature and Claims of Jesus Christ	114
In Memoriam—A Sister	116
Are Storms Brewing	116
The Leicester-Conference Principle in America	116
The Church of England and Future Punishment	116
Jabez Robinson, of Padstow	116
Our Sunday Schools	116
Manchester Domestic Mission: Annual Meeting	116
News of our Churches	119

STRANGEWAYS UNITARIAN FREE CHURCH.

MUTUAL IMPROVEMENT SOCIETY'S ANNUAL SOIREE.

TO-MORROW, April 6th.
LECTURE, with experiments, on "Sound." Usual Great Science, &c. Exhibition. Instrumental Music. Tea at 5.30 p.m. Tickets 1s.; after tea, 6d. each.

PRESTON: PERCY-STREET SUNDAY SCHOOL.—SCHOOL ANNIVERSARY, April 14th.

SERMONS will be preached by Rev. FRANK W. WALTERS, of Glasgow. Collections.

BIRMINGHAM FREE CHRISTIAN SOCIETY, LOWER FAZELEY STREET.

The First ANNIVERSARY of the Dedication of the Church will be celebrated by SPECIAL SERVICES on Sunday, April 7th. Morning preacher, Mr. GEO. R. TWINN; Evening, Mr. W. CLARKE.

On Monday, April 8th, a Public TEA and MEETING. Chair to be taken at seven o'clock, by W. KENRICK, Esq., Mayor.

LOWER MOSLEY-STREET DAY AND SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

The ANNUAL SERMONS in Upper Brook-street Church, in support of these Schools, will be preached on Sunday, April 7th, by the Rev. J. PAGE HOPPS, of Leicester. Morning service at 10.45; Evening service at 6.30. A Collection will be made at each service.

ROTHERHAM NEW CHURCH

On Wednesday, May 1st, 1878, the ceremony of Laying the FOUNDATION STONE of the New Church for the Rotherham Unitarian Congregation, will take place at twelve o'clock at noon.

The Stone will be Laid by JOHN HOBSON, Esq., of Tapton Elms, Sheffield.

On the same day, at one o'clock, A BAZAAR

At the Mechanics' Hall, Rotherham, for the Sale of USEFUL AND ORNAMENTAL ARTICLES, will be OPENED by

JOSEPH LUPTON, Esq., J.P., of Chapel Allerton, Leeds.

Admission on Wednesday, One Shilling each; after six o'clock p.m., Sixpence each.

The Bazaar will remain open on the Thursday and Friday following. Admission Free.

The Stalls will be presided over by Ladies of the Congregation.

Goods Marked at Lowest Figures. Proceeds to be devoted to the Building Fund.

After the Opening of the Bazaar on Wednesday, at half-past one o'clock, a LUNCHEON will be provided in the Hall. See bills of fare.

N.B. A Refreshment Stall. All articles at moderate charges.

Goods for the Bazaar will be thankfully received by the Rev. W. Blazey, 41, Hollowgate, Rotherham; Mr. Wm. Leggoe, Treasurer, Moorgate, Rotherham; Mr. John Hill, Secretary, 1, Westfield Terrace, Rotherham.

MANCHESTER DISTRICT SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION.

The THIRTY-THIRD ANNUAL MEETING will be held on GOOD FRIDAY next, the 19th April, at Manchester.

The day's proceedings will commence with a RELIGIOUS SERVICE in Cross-street Chapel, when a Sermon will be preached by the

Rev. WILLIAM GASKELL, M.A.

Service to commence at eleven o'clock.

After the Sermon, a Collection will be made in aid of the Publishing Fund, as the Committee is most desirous of paying off the debt due to the Treasurer.

After this service, Dinner will be provided in the Lower Mosley-street Schools, at a charge of Ninepence each person.

The BUSINESS MEETING will be held in the Memorial Hall, Albert Square, at two o'clock. The chair to be taken by the President of the Association, EDWIN WINNER, Esq.

Tea will be provided, at four o'clock, in the Lower Mosley-street Schools, at a charge of Sixpence each person.

As ample accommodation will be provided by the friends at Mosley-street, both for dinner and tea, the Committee trusts that all friends will avail of the same, and thus avoid the possibility of a loss.

The EVENING MEETING will be held in the Memorial Hall. The chair to be taken, at six o'clock prompt, by the Rev. S. A. STEINTHAL.

The following Papers will be read, to be followed by discussion—

Mr. GEORGE CUNLIFFE, of Bolton:

Subject:—"Our Elder Classes and their Teachers."

Mr. JOHN REYNOLDS:

Subject:—"Week Evening Amusements for Sunday Scholars."

Deputations from the London, Midland, and Yorkshire Sunday-school Associations are expected to be present.

JESSE PILCHER, } Hon.
JOHN REYNOLDS, { Secs.

BRITISH & FOREIGN UNITARIAN ASSOCIATION.

The NEXT MEETING of the COUNCIL will be held at the Office of the Association, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, London, on Wednesday, May 8th, at two o'clock.

HENRY IERSON, Secretary.

COMMISSION-STREET UNITARIAN CHAPEL, BOLTON.

A B A Z A A R

for the

SALE OF FANCY AND USEFUL ARTICLES

WILL BE HELD IN THE

BANK-STREET SCHOOLROOMS,

(the use of which has been very kindly granted for this purpose by the congregation)

On WEDNESDAY, THURSDAY, FRIDAY, and SATURDAY,

April 10th, 11th, 12th, and 13th, 1878.

In order to raise a sum of money sufficient to clear off a debt of £650 on the present buildings, and for intended improvements.

PATRONS:

His Worship the MAYOR of Bolton.

R. N. Philips, Esq., M.P.	Alderman Thos. Lever.
John Hick, Esq. M.P.	Councillor J. C. Haslam.
J. K. Cross, M.P.	Councillor Thos. Bramley.
The Mayor of Manchester.	Councillor J. J. Bradshaw.
The Mayor of Bury.	Rev. C. C. Coe, F.R.G.S.
Abel Heywood, Esq. (ex-Mayor of Manchester.)	Rev. A. B. Camm.
Richard Harwood, Esq., J.P. (ex-Mayor of Salford.)	Rev. C. A. Berry.
Joseph Cook, Esq., J.P.	John Grundy, Esq.
H. J. Leppoc, Esq., J.P.	Joseph Lupton, Esq.
Holbrook Gaskell, Esq., J.P.	Arthur Greg, Esq.
Caleb Wright, Esq., J.P.	William Haslam, Esq.
Charles Taylor, Esq. J.P.	John Harwood, Esq.
	Frank Taylor, Esq.
	William Inglis, Esq.

The BAZAAR will be OPENED on Wednesday, April 10th, at Eleven a.m. by

A B E L H E Y W O O D, ESQ.
(ex-Mayor of Manchester.)

THOMAS RAWSON, Esq., of Manchester, has kindly promised to Preside at the Piano, and give Selections of Music at intervals during the day.

LUNCHEON WILL BE PROVIDED AT 1.30.

On each of the following days the Bazaar will be open at 2 p.m. Rooms will be set apart for the Exhibition of Electrical Appliances, Microscopical Objects, and other interesting Curiosities. Vocal and Instrumental Music, and various entertainments will be given at intervals.

ADMISSION:—Wednesday, from 11 a.m. to 6 p.m., 2s. 6d.; from 6 p.m., 1s. Thursday, from 2 to 6 p.m., 1s.; from 6 p.m., 6d. Friday and Saturday, all day, 6d. Season Tickets, 3s. Children under twelve half-price.

The support of the public is earnestly solicited, and contributions in saleable articles will be thankfully received by any of the following stall Holders:—

No. I. STALL.

Mrs. Lazenby, 15, Deane Terrace, Deane.
Miss Tottie, Strangeways, Manchester.

No. II. STALL.

Mrs. John Harwood, Woodsleigh, Heaton.
Miss Nuttall, South Bank, Heaton.

No. III. STALL.

Miss Haslam, Gilnow House, Bolton.
Miss Kay, The Haugh, Bolton.

No. IV. STALL.

Mrs. Dutton, 349, Blackburne Road, Bolton.
Mrs. Thos. Rigby, 43, Bayley-street, Chorley Old Road, Bolton.
Miss Taylor, 54, Radcliffe Road, Bolton.
Miss Crook, Victoria Terrace, Bolton.
Miss Kenyon, Manchester Road, Bolton.
Miss Bromley, 80, Blackburn-street, Bolton.
Miss Riding, Davenport-street, Bolton.

No. V. STALL.

Miss Pilling, 22, Marlborough-street, Bolton.
Mrs. Geo. Cunliffe, Heaton.
Mrs. Kay, St. George's Road, Bolton.
Mrs. Jos. Pilling, Blackburn Road, Bolton.
Miss Latham, St. George's Road, Bolton.
Miss Carling, Davenport-street, Bolton.

SCHOOL STALL.

Miss Bridge, Regent Terrace, Chorley Old Road, Bolton.
Miss Ashley, Hammond-street, Bolton.
Miss Smith, Derby-street, Bolton.
Miss Waring, Noble-street, Bolton.

REFRESHMENT STALL.

Miss Heap, Chorley New Road, Bolton; or by

Rev. ALBERT LAZENBY, Deane, Bolton, Secretary.

MANCHESTER NEW COLLEGE, LONDON.

LOCAL THEOLOGICAL EXAMINATIONS, 1878.

All Applications for these Examinations must be made in writing to the Secretary not later than 10th April. Such applications must state—

(a) The full names and addresses of candidates who intend to present themselves for examination.

(b) The subjects in which they desire to be examined.

(c) The full names and addresses of at least two persons who will undertake personally to conduct the examination in accordance with the regulations. Of these, one must also undertake to act as local correspondent, through whom all subsequent correspondence with the College authorities must pass.

(d) A fee of 2s. 6d. for each candidate must be forwarded with the application.

P.O.O. to be made payable at Withington to the Secretary,

Rev. CHARLES T. POYNTING, Fallowfield, Manchester.

MILES PLATTING UNITARIAN FREE CHURCH SCHOOLS, Varley-street, Oldham Road, Manchester.

A BAZAAR

in aid of the Church Fund, and to clear off two or three unavoidable debts, will be held on Thursday, Friday, and Saturday, April 25, 26, and 27, in the above schools.

The Bazaar will be opened by His Worshipful the MAYOR of MANCHESTER, on Thursday, 25th April, at 2 p.m.

Contributions in goods or money will be gratefully received by

Mrs. W. G. CADMAN, Westbourne Grove, Harpurhey.
Mrs. ROBT. FIELDING, Beech Mount, Harpurhey.
Mrs. JOS. HULME, Hulme Hall Lane, Miles Platting.

or by Mrs. HAROLD BERRY, 32, Smedley Road, Cheetham.

KENDAL: UNITARIAN SCHOOL.—The

Ladies interested in the school work determined some time ago, to try to raise a school house in which the education of the children would be more complete than is possible when the classes have to be held in a chapel. For this purpose they formed a committee, and set to work, and the result of their efforts so far is the purchasing a plot of land in an open part of the town. A Bazaar in aid of the Building Fund will be held on the 11th of April. Contributions in money or work will be gratefully received by

Mrs. MACDONALD, 6, Lound-street, Kendal.
Miss A. K. GREENHOW, Anchorite House, Kendal.
Miss RUDD, Greenside, Kendal.

MANCHESTER DOMESTIC MISSION.

ANNUAL MEETING, WEDNESDAY EVENING,

3rd April, 1878.

The Rev. WM. GASKELL, M.A., in the chair.

CHAIRMAN'S OPENING ADDRESS.

1. Resolution moved by R. D. DARBISHIRE, Esq., B.A., seconded by JOHN DENDY, jun., and resolved—

That the Trustees of the Society's property be directed to give security by way of mortgage upon the Embden-street land and buildings for a sum of £1,500, and interest at 4 per cent already borrowed, for defraying the cost of the late extension of the school buildings. That the Trustees be directed to sell and convey the land and buildings in Rochdale Road to Mr. W. Brown for the sum of £2,500, and to apply the proceeds of sale in erecting new premises, and as to any surplus by way of investment as the Committee may direct. That the Trustees be requested to complete a purchase of a plot of land in Willert-street, Rochdale Road, subject to chief rent, as a site for new buildings.

2. Resolution moved by the Rev. C. BEARD, B.A., seconded by the Rev. J. T. MARRIOTT, and resolved—

That this meeting adopts the reports of the Committee and Ministers, and the Treasurer's statement of accounts, and expresses its heartfelt sympathy with the Ministers of the Society in the self-denying labours they have devoted to their unassuming work of Christian benevolence. (The Revs. J. Harrop and B. Walker replied.)

3. Resolution moved by the Rev. C. HARGROVE, M.A., seconded by B. HEAPE, Esq., and resolved—

That this meeting hereby appoints the following gentlemen as the committee and officers for the ensuing year:—

The Rev. W. Gaskell, M.A.	Mr. W. H. Herford, B.A.
The Rev. C. T. Poynting.	Mr. R. Nicholson.
The Rev. J. T. Marriott.	Mr. R. Potter.
The Rev. S. Farrington.	Mr. H. Rawson.
The Rev. E. C. Towne.	Mr. S. W. R. Wood.
Mr. E. C. Harding.	Mr. T. Wood.
Mr. R. Harwood.	Mr. J. Worthington.
Mr. B. Heape.

Rev. S. ALFRED STEINTHAL, Secretary.

Mr. R. D. DARBISHIRE, B.A., treasurer.

And trusts that increased co-operation will be given to them by the members of the Manchester congregations, so that the practical work of the ministry to the poor may be extended and rendered more efficient.

On Mr. GASKELL's leaving the chair, it was taken by Mr. Alderman HEYWOOD, when it was moved by W. HADWEN, Esq., seconded by the Rev. S. A. STEINTHAL, and resolved—

That the best thanks of this meeting are hereby given to the Rev. Wm. Gaskell, M.A., for his conduct in the chair, and the constant interest he has shown, from its foundation, in the work of the ministry to the poor; and to the Revs. C. Beard, B.A., and C. Hargrove, M.A., for the valuable help they have this evening given to the Society.

THE Boston Pulpit being now Vacant, SUPPLIES for short periods are Wanted.—Apply to THOS. MEGGITT, Secretary.

WANTED, at the end of this month, an intelligent, trustworthy Girl of 17, or older, as UNDER NURSE.—For further particulars apply to Mrs. DOWSON, Gee Cross, Manchester.

WANTED, by a Lady of experience, a Situation as RESIDENT GOVERNESS: English, French, Music, and Calisthenics: excellent references.—Address M. A., Herald office, 55, Market-street, Manchester.

A Respectable Young Woman seeks a Situation in a quiet Unitarian Family, as HOUSEMAID, or useful Maid; good needlewoman: well recommended: Unitarian.—Address M.P., All Saint's Vicarage, Newmarket, Cambridgeshire

SYDNEY, New South Wales.—The Unitarians of Sydney urgently desire the services of a MINISTER from England: salary, £300: passage out paid.—Communications to be addressed to Rev. HENRY IERSON, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, London, W.C.

THE ONLY PERFECT MARKING INK.

NO HEATING; no mixing or trouble. Does not injure the most delicate fabric. Absolutely indelible. Fletcher's Jet Marker, 1s., from drapers, or post free from THOMAS FLETCHER, Museum-street, Warrington.

DOINGS AND SAYINGS.

A second Baptist chapel has been opened at Rome.

It is stated for positively the last time that Bishop Dupanloup is to be made a cardinal.

The Southampton School Board have decided to place "Temperance Principles" in the curriculum of the board's teaching.

The Pope objects to the presence of women on his premises, and the female members of families residing in the Vatican are being removed from the palace.

Mr. Mundella, M.P., mentions that we are spending 150 millions a year in drink. He has been surprised to find that many members of the Houses of Parliament are total abstainers.

According to the Guardian, German Protestantism, as a religious force, appears to be nearly effete, and what remains of it is splintered up into fragments and antagonisms. It adds that the Old Catholic movement, promising indeed much, has as yet affected little.

It is humiliating, but not surprising, to find that the College of Physicians has decided not to admit women to the licence of the College. On all sides the medical profession is closing its ranks against women with an amount of trade unionism worthy of Sheffield knife-grinders.

The Wesleyan Methodist Magazine for April contains the concluding article on Mr. Arthur's book "The Pope, the Kings, and the People" by an "ex-Roman Catholic Priest"—The Rev. R. Rodolph Suffield. It also contains from the same pen an article on Leo XIII., from whose policy, the writer says, comparing it with that of Pío Nono, "we need not anticipate any essential change over which to rejoice."

Monday was the three hundredth anniversary of the birthday of William Harvey. England has produced few greater men of science, but our fathers, if they did not stone, did not very munificently reward him, and we have not yet built him any memorial. It is proposed to erect a monument to Harvey at Folkestone, where he saw the light. Dr. Richardson gives an interesting account of Harvey's life and labours in the Gentleman's Magazine.

Those of our readers who are interested in the efforts now being made to give higher education to women, and to secure them admission to walks of life from which they have been hitherto shut out, will learn with satisfaction that a bequest of £7,000 has just been made to the London School of Medicine for Women by the late Mrs. George Oakes, of Sydney, Australia. It will undoubtedly give considerable impetus to the movement for opening the medical profession to women, as well as enable the particular institution to which it has been left to do its work better.

If the Roman Catholics do as well with their new noble convert, Lord Arthur Gordon Lennox, as they are doing with their recent one, Lord Archibald Douglas, they will have good cause to congratulate themselves. The youthful scion of the house of Queensberry has lately bought, out of his own means, at a cost of £7,000, a large house in the Harrow Road, London, which he has called St. Philip's Home, and has established for the benefit of street arabs. It possesses a charming garden, and attached to it are a school and a playground. Lord Archibald obtains situations for his lads, and they are given a breakfast at a small cost, and return at night to sleep. So shines a good deed in a naughty church.

It has been suggested in the Nonconformist that Earl Russell should be presented with an address on May 9, the fiftieth anniversary of the passing of the Bill for the Repeal of the Test and Corporation Acts. The proposal has been received with general favour, and the matter is under the consideration of the Committee of Deputies. Some public recognition of Earl Russell's services, whether in the shape of a numerously-signed address or otherwise, could not fail to brighten the declining days of the veteran Liberal leader. "In these days," as Mayfair sarcastically remarks, "the tendency is to forget past services rendered by British statesmen, and even to break their windows."

Whitewash is wanted and forthcoming for Mr. Valentine Baker, an officer dismissed from Her Majesty's service on grounds which we might willingly have forgotten if his friends would allow us to do so. But they will not. On this gentleman's return from the respectable service of the Sultan, he is brought forward to challenge, not condonation, but glory. Bygones are, of course, to be bygones. The Prince of Wales dines with him; the Duke of Sutherland and a set of generals give a banquet in his honour; and the Marlborough Club (said to be of the smartest) elect him unanimously as a fitting member of their society. And, while a gentleman with such antecedents is becoming in certain quarters an accepted London celebrity, the Turkish members of a literary and scientific club—no less than the Athenæum—blackball a gentleman of honour, talent, attainment, and position, notoriously on account of alleged Russian partisanship.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

PROFESSOR FLINT ON MATERIALISM.

Professor Flint, for the third of his lectures on Anti-Theistic Theories, took the subject of "Materialism in the Modern World," especially as revealed in the writings of its disciples. He held that it left unexplained the order, laws, and harmony of nature, and life was another fact which presented a problem that Materialism had as yet failed to solve. Many had maintained the spontaneous generation of life for the lifeless, but the verdict of strict science was that life was only produced by that which lived. Mind presented a still greater difficulty to Materialism. In conclusion, the lecturer said that religion was virtually a universal fact. Materialism openly threatened to turn all religion out of the world; but they might console themselves with the reflection that reason and morality were to be turned out with it. Only then would Materialism have the world to itself, and then the world would not be worth having.

CONDITIONAL IMMORTALITY.

The Rev. John Laidlaw, Aberdeen, has delivered the last of the series of Cunningham lectures on The Bible Theory of Man his special subject being "The Future Life and the Resurrection." He began by criticising the doctrine of Conditional Immortality, and observed that it was a hopeless divergence from the Scripture view of man, that it exaggerated the effect of the Fall, made regeneration a physical or constitutional change, and was loaded with the assumption that men who without redemption would naturally go to nothing, as a consequence of redemption survived to suffer punishment. The leading idea to which the Scripture notion of a future life attached itself, he believed to be that of man's kinship with God. Going on to refer to the resurrection of the body, he remarked that Scripture never spoke as creeds had spoken of the resurrection of the flesh. Had the Church followed the spiritual teaching of 1. Corinthians xv. instead of its own childish memories and Pagan traditions, their pulpits would have long ago been delivered from the charnel-house theology of the Night Thoughts, and they should not have seemed to expose Apostolic teaching to try conclusions with modern chemistry.

BOOKS AND AUTHORS.

Presbyterianism in Ainsworth: Two Lectures. By Ephraim Turland. Belfast: J. Hutchinson.

WE are always glad to hear told the story of any of those congregations of the Liberal Succession, whose chapels serve both as monument and material guarantee of those principles which have made us what we are. Mr. Turland tells the story of Cockey Chapel compendiously and attractively. The several ministers who have occupied the pulpit are not only named and dated, but characterised with much graphic power; and the lesson from their labours is well drawn at the close: "besides being free in religion, we must also be brave, candid and out-spoken, clear, honest, faithful, and true." A quaint account by the celebrated Oliver Heywood of his grandfather is introduced in connection with the first minister of Cockey, Mr. Hibbert, the contemporary and friend of Oliver:—

Oliver Heywood, my father's father, my dear and precious grandfather, after whom they named me, who lived soberly and civilly most part of his days—a good-natured man, but carnal—used to go a shooting on Sabbath Days, in the afternoon, on Lomas Moss, in Little Lever, and did not express any forwardness in religion. His wife, being a good woman, desired Mr. Hubbert (then minister at Cockey) an eminent man of God, to speak to her husband to pray in his family, who, calling as he went to Little Lever, said—"Oliver, you must read the Word of God, and pray with your family." He answered—"Aye, sir; none of these things shall be wanting; I'll do what I can, and what is fitting." But he neglected still. At last, when he was sixty years of age, going to Bury fair, where Mr. Paget preached, he went into the church; heard him; God laid hold of his heart, convinced his conscience; he became an eminent Christian.

Maxims and Miscellanies for Merchants and Business Men. By Henry Turner. London: William Tegg & Co.

THERE was great truth in the saying of David Fordick, of Massachusetts, that "all the world's a shop, and the men and women in it merely traders;" also in his remark that "could we examine it thoroughly by what the Scriptures call the 'candle of the Lord,' we should undoubtedly find a great deal that ought to be altered." This little compendium of good reasoning and sound morality applied to business life deserves a wide circulation. Its central maxim is thus pithily expressed: "Life's great good is wrought out on the anvil of industry," and thus aptly illustrated: "If we should go into a country where the sluggard's garden or farm is covered with the richest grains, fruits and vegetables, and where industry is rewarded only with weeds and brambles; where the drunkard looks sleek and happy, and his home cheerful, while temperance wears the haggard face and eats the bread of want and misery, then we might possibly believe that luck or chance had something to do with it." The advice here given is not confined by any means to general maxims. The methods of successful business men are set before the reader, showing that not only the meaning to do well but the putting "mind" into it, is the way of prosperity in any branch of employment.

NATURE AND CLAIMS OF JESUS CHRIST.*

BY REV. HENRY W. BELLOW, D.D.

MATT. xvi., 13.—"Whom do men say that I, the Son of man, am?"

This is a question that Jesus asked in his own lifetime, of his immediate disciples, again and again; and the answer that he got and which he accepted, and by his silence or his acquiescence, nay, by his full endorsement, gave the final authority to, was this: "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God."

Now who was the Christ? The Christ was the expected Messiah, the anointed one, whom Jewish prophets had darkly foretold—a being who was to be raised up from human lineage, of the stock of David, and was to restore the glory of the house of Israel. He was to be a King and a conqueror, whose reign should subdue all opposition, introduce righteousness and peace, convert the nations, and establish the permanent and transcendent kingdom of God on earth, in the form of a great Israelitish empire. He was to be the Son of God; but in no other sense than Abraham, Moses, and David were sons of God, and as all obedient souls are children of God—except in so far as his faithfulness and goodness drew upon him a more marked and characteristic proof of God's approval and acceptance. Not a distinct word is breathed in the Old Testament of his supernatural birth; not a syllable of his pre-existence or of his Godhead, much less of his being the second person in a divine Trinity. All these ideas would have been shocking to the Jews, by whom the unity of God and his incommunicable and unshared divinity were truths held with absolute and awful conviction. That the coming of the expected Messiah should be the descent to earth of God himself, in human form, would have been a blasphemous hypothesis, violating all their notions of his invisibility, and all their horror of representing him in any palpable image. The apostles, who were Jews, shared, as Jesus himself shared, this profound national feeling; and there is no evidence that at any time during his life it ever occurred to any apostle that Jesus was God himself, or was ever intimated by Jesus that he thought himself to be the God of the Jews and a proper object of supreme worship. The most he ever claimed, and the highest dignity ever assigned to him by his apostles, in his lifetime, is that he was the Messiah and the Son of God.

But what did Jesus mean by claiming to be the Messiah? Certainly he did not meet, in any literal way—in any way to support and justify them,—the predictions of the Jewish prophets and the expectations of the Jewish people. They rejected him for this very reason. Not one of their priests or learned men saw in him anything that they had been carefully reared to look for among the signs and proofs of their Messiah. Even his birth from Mary without a natural father, however true it may have been, was no part of Jesus' own pretensions, no part of his preaching, no ground of his appeal to respect and confidence. Thirty or forty years after his death, when the Gospels of Matthew and Luke were perhaps issued, this claim was set up, possibly truly, but in genealogies that have never been, and can never be, fairly made to agree with each other. Paul's Epistles, written before the Gospels, and unquestionably genuine, have not a word to say about Jesus' origin by a miraculous generation. He himself never claims it; and the passages that recite it are at least of uncertain authenticity. There is nothing in the intercourse of the disciples with him to indicate that they felt themselves in the presence of a disguised or shrouded God. They feel his moral and spiritual superiority with unquestioned and affecting awe; but his deity, had it been seen or surmised, must have produced very different emotions, and very different behaviour from any we notice in them. It is not necessary to assume that they must have known it if he had been the second person in the Trinity; for if we adopt the theory of a providential blindness imposed upon them, and of the slow development of God's plan, we may even go so far as to suspect that Jesus himself did not know who he himself was, farther than that he was the Messiah. I do not adopt this notion, but it is not wholly untenable. It is enough now to say that the apostles, in his life-time, did not know or suspect Jesus to be a deity and equal with the Almighty.

But did Jesus mean to declare his own assent to the Jewish notion of the Messiah, and to propose himself as, and claim to be, the Messiah, in what was the fair interpretation of the prophecies? I think the Church has greatly magnified the definiteness of the prophetic spirit of the Old Testament, and given a system and form of its own to the shattered and incoherent longings and yearnings of noble Jewish hearts for a national deliverer. The foundation of the hope lay in the depths of that glorious hopefulness of better things, of fairer days, of more realised conceptions of human worth, of national peace and glory, and of God's kingdom, which, thank heaven, has not wholly expired among any people. Two equal tendencies characterise our nature: to look back to a paradise that has been, and to a paradise that shall be; to an ideal that has been already somewhere attained, and to a lost ideal that shall again be recovered. The golden age has been behind all peoples, ennobling their ancestors and progenitors; and far before them, too, encouraging their future, and destined to bless their children's children. Every natural expression in the poetry or piety of Jewish literature exhibiting this longing, whether it described a good ruler, a deliverer from present oppressors, a reviver of neglected worship, a purifier of the national morality—however it was meant or accepted at the time, howsoever definitely it was aimed at something near, or vaguely suggestive of something distantly hoped for,—was woven by the Jews themselves after the voice of prophecy (that is, of exalted religious feeling) had ceased, into a theory of an expected Messiah; and, of course, was played upon again and again, by pretenders or enthusiasts, who claimed to be this glorious personage. A superstitious veneration for the letter of their sacred writings (which the great prophets always discouraged) had grown in their degenerate days into a passion; and there were scribes and lawyers whose main occupation was to study the signs and enumerate the prophetic marks that would accompany the appearance of the Messiah when he came.

*A sermon given at the ordination of Rev. J. M. W. Pratt, to the ministry of the First Unitarian Church in Wilmington, Del., Jan. 28, 1878.

Jesus, at least in my judgment, knew that no such expectation or hope, as the Jewish people were cherishing in his day, was either probable or possible. I do not suppose that he shared the superstitious feelings of his countrymen about the letter of their law, or adopted in any form their idea of the Messiah. I cannot say as much as this of his apostles; and it is very important to keep what they said about him, and what he said about himself, in different grades of authority. That they should sometimes interpret what he said in a Jewish way seems to have been unavoidable, unless we are to suppose them to have shared his full elevation and enlightenment. When Jesus called himself the Messiah, the anointed, I have no doubt he meant to disclaim and set aside the Jewish hope—to deny its literal reality; and, by the violent contrast of his poverty, his unacceptableness to Jewish authorities, his powerlessness in any human weapons, his lack of all state and splendour and ability to enrich or protect his following, to declare the utterly new sense in which alone a Messiah was to be expected; as if he had said, "The only Messiah God will ever send the Jew or the world, is a teacher and example of true righteousness, a radical reformer of Jewish superstitions, among which this is chief. You have been looking for princes of the old blood royal to come and sit on David's throne, and wield Solomon's wealth and splendour, and conquer your enemies, and drive Roman princes and armies and tax-gatherers out of the land. There is no such being to be looked for: It is an idle dream, and a false rendering of the vague predictions of your old prophets. What they yearned for at heart was a renewer of a godly life, and a society built on the honour and service of the true God. That is the only Messiah you will ever see—and I am he!"

Jesus felt himself to be anointed from God,—able to teach and lead the people in this knowledge. In claiming the Messiahship he claimed this place. It was the glorious simplicity, the holy boldness, the living faith in his heart, that enabled him to assert this claim. He was indeed the anointed, the Messiah, for the whole world. That he felt this constitutes his highest right to the name. Only the deepest knowledge of the everlasting truth of God, the most unshadowed clearness of faith, the holiest sense of right to be the spiritual leader of his time and age, and of all time, could have inspired or justified this claim. Others had made it in mean and low senses, and had perished for their presumption. Jesus made it in a sense of his own—in the only sense in which it had ever been true, or could be verified,—a sense wholly different from that in which even the noblest prophets had ever made it; and if it had not been a true claim, and one which God honoured and was satisfied with, the claim would have perished with its maker. Jesus himself died of this bold claim. He was thought to have made it in a Jewish sense, and had he done so, the claim would have been crucified with the claimant. But because he had made it in a true sense—in the honour of truth and holiness, in a universal and divine sense, as a teacher of moral and spiritual things which had power to renew and bless countless ages, and all humanity,—the claim lived, though the claimant perished; and Jesus has become indeed the Messiah not of the Jews, but of the whole world.

But there was another claim: Jesus' own common name for himself is "the Son of Man." The name sometimes given to him by his disciples is "the Son of God," and he accepted it. He must then be held responsible for this high title. The two phrases have been popularly supposed to refer to that inexplicable thing, the double nature of Christ. He was the Son of Man on his mother's side; the Son of God on God his father's side; having, by hypothesis, no human father. Now thoroughly believing, as I do, that neither earthly mothers nor fathers are the sources or authors of their children's souls, but only God himself, who is the Father of spirits, I fail to see what Jesus gains by the hypothesis of his exceptional birth, which all children of God do not possess by their natural birth. We are all, by our spiritual origins, sons of God by spiritual generation, and also sons of men by natural generation. If Christ had a double nature in this sense, so have we. What escape Jesus made from the infirmities of our common fleshly nature by being born of a woman only, one does not see. He was of flesh and blood, and the same flesh and blood as his mother, and partook her human and fleshly frailty. He hungered and thirsted, and ate and drank, and wearied and slept, and bled and died. He grieved and wept; he was sad and glad; he loved his mother, and had his chosen friends and haunts which he fled to in his fatigues and harassing cares. Whatever else he was, he was thoroughly human.

The Catholic Church, pressed with his ordinary humanity, has been, in this decade, forced to shut off his mortal liabilities by declaring his mother sinless—as if she had descended from her divine Son, and not he from his mortal, and, because human, not sinless mother. Such are the petty pretences into which superstition is forced when it leaves the plain ground of spiritual reason, and seeks nobility outside of moral and rational grounds. Jesus may have had no human father—although it is strange that he makes no such claim, and that Paul never makes it, and certain that it does not enter into the woof and warp of the three first gospels, and depends upon the suspected chapters of the openings in Matthew and Luke. But whether he had or had not does not, on the face of it, change the fact that he had, spiritually, the same Father we all have—God Almighty—and from his mother the same fleshly nature.

It is true, theologians in their creeds have attempted to show that Jesus was not made, but begotten. If this means anything, it means only what must be just as true of all other spirits. They are not made in the sense in which boxes and tools are made, but begotten; that is, they are effluents of the Divine Spirit that breathes them into conscious existence. In fact, even human bodies, properly considered, are not made, but begotten; that is, they owe their life and being to a derived, mysterious, creative something, that dates back to self-existent cause. It might be added that nothing that lives is made. It is only machines, furniture, lifeless objects than can properly be said to be made; and there is a growing reluctance to the application of the word "maker," even to God, in any mechanical sense. He begets the universe, which partakes his nature, and is a revelation of his mind, will, power, beauty, and might. But there is a difference, doubtless, of great meaning in the use of the definite article, the Son of man, the Son of God, in some transcendent degree. Bible means book; the Bible, the book; and it is a more expressive and distinguishing term than if the common word "book" had been abandoned, and some exclusive name originated for its title. What the Bible is among books, Jesus is among the sons of men and the sons of God,—the Son of man, the Son of God. But surely he is none the less a Son of man by being the Son of God. Now we know what a son of man is, and a son of God; and we are all such. Are we, when we attempt to reach up to the true conception of Jesus' nature and dignity, to put him out of the class which alone tells us in what direction to look for his excellency?

The truth is, the very object for which Jesus calls himself both the Son of man and the Son of God is, because they are really the same thing; and the very thing which, above all, it is to the purpose of a teacher come from God to tell us. "Now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be." The hidden glory and divinity of our origin, and the heavenly capacity of our nature, is the ground of all Jesus' and all Paul's appeals to the human soul. What is there lacking in the human soul, when fully lived out and completely ordered; when full of the spirit of its author as it was in our Saviour, to constitute all that Jesus was? Is it not created in the divine image, a partaker of the divine nature? Can archangels have a nobler lineage? Can they depart from the image in which we are made, and not descend in the dignity of their origin? There can be nothing in spiritual natures between the human and divine except degrees. The human is assumed to be finite,—it would be if it were not from God, and in God, and by God; but the human is not finite in its nature. It is infinite and divine; and the divine is not unlike the human, but only the human seen in its source and perfectness. Some think it profane to claim Christ as our brother; why not, then, to claim God as our Father?

If to claim to have the same nature as Christ is presumption, why not more so to claim to have the nature of God, which is expressly conceded to us, who are said to be made in his likeness, and to partake the divine nature?

The whole effort to separate God and man, and Christ and man—as if contact, resemblance, and unity of nature and mutual intelligibility, and common grounds of being were not the very crown and aim and glory of Christianity—is due to a childish weakness which clamours about the divine and the human, the finite and the infinite, as if they were opposites and antagonists, and not the same thing, considered now in part, and now in whole, now in its source, and now in its stream. Time and eternity are not opposites, but the same thing considered in sample and in bulk. The fruits of the spirit of love and holiness are of the same nature in God and in holy men, in Christ and his saints.

Jesus is a great teacher and messenger, "come from God." But let us not isolate God in time and place, and conclude that if Jesus comes from God, he must needs have come from afar off; come from some remote sphere of being; come from a previous existence. To come from God is to come from divine wisdom, love, and truth. We, ourselves, come from God. Everything comes from God that expresses God's will, love, and mercy. God is here. God is in the souls of his children. The bosom of God is still open, and is sending forth new births and nourishing new children all the time. He who lives in God and from God knowing his will and doing it, as Jesus knew and did it, is older than Abraham, inasmuch as what he knows and tells of God is more central and from a deeper source. This is the pre-existence of Christ, that he expressed truths and fulfilled purposes older than Abraham, because as old as God's love and holiness. This is Christ's oneness with God, his complete identification of will and heart with his Father. This is the reason why those who see him, see the Father; those who love him, love God; those who trust him, trust God. This makes him, Emmanuel, or God with us.

"Whom do men say that I am?" We might answer this question with many replies, which would contradict the simple truth as the Gospels teach it. "Men say you are the second person in the Trinity. They say you are your own father. They say you are a being of a different nature from your mother and your brethren. They say you are a visitant from another world, concerning which, if you were so, you refrained from telling us anything not known before, by faith and spiritual insight." But although the Church says these vain and incredible things, it doubtless says them only as an extravagant way of confessing a faith which we, who refuse these fables, share with them. Whom do men say that I am? We reply, the Church universal, all Christendom unites in saying that you are the all-sufficient Saviour; the light of the moral world; the pattern of all graces and perfections; the only perfect humanity the race has seen. They say, truly, that about you have crystallised the affections of all the purest saints, and the reverence of all the devoutest hearts. They say that you are nearest to God, and that you stand, and will stand, the blessed Mediator between your brethren and your Father and theirs. They say that your words remain true in all ages, and your example never grows antiquated or needless. They say that in your life and character and spirit, God has revealed all that can be considered necessary or useful for man to know concerning his moral purposes and spiritual affections. They say that your insight into your Father's will verifies itself by all who trust it; that your guidance never misleads a faithful follower, and that ages on ages only add to its significance and value. They say that every superstition and old theory which sought to make you great according to mere human standards, when it fades away, only discloses higher claims, until your authority is independent of doubtful testimony and all supports that are adventitious or questionable, and stands in its own self-evident weight and worth, more immovable than the mountains.

And we say—that doubting and denying the titles and deific ascriptions that the Church still offers you,—we say, that you are to us inexpressibly dear and venerable; that we will yield to none in the affectionate homage we pay you in our hearts, homes, and churches; that the songs of angels did not and could not exaggerate the importance and blessedness of your advent, or overstate the claim you have established in nearly nineteen centuries, during which your religion has been the chief light and consolation and guidance of humanity. You have taught us two inexpressibly glorious things, and taught them by illustrating them in your life,—the humanity of God, the divinity of man. You have authorised us to see in what was a dim, distant, dreadful unapproachable Being, called God, a Father, whose greatness and power do not render him inhuman, do not make him incapable of caring for and listening to, of pitying, pardoning, loving, and saving his children on the earth. You have proclaimed the humanity of God, and banished the dreadful feeling that God was too great, too distant, too mysterious to be known, approached, loved, and trusted. This alone made a religion of love and mercy possible among men; this alone has made God intelligible, as the living friend and father of his lowly, but his veritable human offspring. And you have made man conscious of his divinity, by revealing in your spirit and human life, and on the earth and among its temptations and sufferings, a faith, capacity, and holiness, a sinlessness and a superiority to all evil and all trials, that has not only glorified you, but us. In calling us to follow and resemble you, you have owned our divine capacity. You have brought God down to man; you have lifted man up to God. You are thus the Mediator indeed, the true Messiah, the Son of man and Son of God. And we hail your name and influence with inexpressible joy, and with songs of triumph and gratitude, throughout the Church and the Christian world.—Christian Register.

IN MEMORIAM.

A SISTER.

I.
AND shall we think of her that's gone?
Oh! can the beating heart forget
That soul on purest virtue set,
That noble life that now is done?

I cannot conjure up the words
To speak the feeling of my soul;
But let the wavering echo roll,
The wave of goodness she hath stirr'd.

II.
My task was done for love of her,
As well as for the joy it brought Into the chambers of my thought;
And now her memory lingers there.
The year had almost run its course;
I thought to write its parting hymn;
But she had gone! Mine eyes grew dim,
And all desire had lost its force.

Oh! fairest soul! how doubly blest
Art thou, who, having left the earth,
Abidest here in thy full worth,
And speakest from thy place of rest!

If ever, from some distant shore,
Thine eyes look back to gaze on me,
Oh! dearest! draw my steps to thee,
From day to day, from more to more.

III.
I never knew how great my grief
Until the year had almost run,
And I my task had just begun—
A task I fain again would leave.

At every advent of a year
I penn'd the thoughts that most I loved,
The passions thro' my heart that moved,
The joy, the pain, the hope, the fear.

But she for whom I loved to write,
Whose gentle influence, like a star,
Shone faintly, richly, from afar,
Had passed into the realm of night.

Oh! bitter grief! Oh! keenest pain!
A sense of numbness o'er the soul!

I ever sought the precious goal
Of her sweet smile! But now 'tis vain!

She cannot read the lines I pen;
She cannot hear the words I speak;
Mine utterance must be faint and weak;
She cannot touch the chords again!

IV.
I seldom wrote a single verse
But she was in my confidence;
Her sympathy and common sense
Forbade my tendency perverse.

I knew that every line I wrote
Would touch some feeling in her heart;
I could not bear to give one smart,
To sound for her one painful note.

And thus, o'er all my inward life
Her gentle influence sweetly came;
I courted neither praise nor blame,
But love, to cheer me in the strife.

And love she freely gave. Ah, yes!
How tender! Not one bitter word
The storm of anguish in her stirr'd.

Oh, love! 'Tis my delight to kiss,

In memory, still thy placid face;

To feel thine arms around me spread,

Thy blessing on my sinful head,

Oh, human love! Oh, heavenly grace!

Aberdeen.

GEORGE F. WALTERS.

The Unitarian Herald.

FRIDAY, APRIL 5, 1878.

ARE STORMS BREWING?

The Ritualists are in sore tribulation. Their dreaded foe, Lord Penzance, has aroused himself. A few days ago that ecclesiastical judge—usurping spiritual functions?—suspended Mr. Edwards, of Prestbury, for six months, for his proved illegal observances. In obedience to his order a new monition has been served upon Mr. Mackonochie, with the threat of "severe" measures in case of non-compliance, which is understood to point to suspension or imprisonment. The Bishop of London also steadfastly declines to appoint Ritualist clergymen to vacant churches, and the Bishop of Gloucester, after fruitless appeals and most exemplary patience, has withdrawn the licence of the defiant minister of St. Raphael's, Bristol. It remains to be seen what will be the ultimate result of this rigorous application of the Public Worship Act. Shall we witness another breakdown of the law, and see Mr. Mackonochie escape as triumphantly as Mr. Tooth? or will the High Church clergy be roused to a new expression of sympathy with their "persecuted" brethren, and regard disestablishment with increasing favour as the only effectual remedy against legal prosecutions?

THE LEICESTER-CONFERENCE PRINCIPLE IN AMERICA.

An influential Baptist Church in New York is about to welcome as its pastor the Rev. C. D. W. Bridgman, D.D., for fifteen years a minister in Albany, who takes his stand on the platform of the Leicester Conference. But Dr. Bridgman's preference for the religious spirit over agreement in theology is as unpalatable to some of the New York Baptists as the principle of the Revs. Allanson Picton, Mark Wilks, and T. Gasquoine is to some English Congregationalists. Accordingly, as our Boston contemporary, the Christian Register, facetiously puts it, "A heavenly breeze sends another ripple over the Baptist waters." The Register describes Dr. Bridgman as a man of fine grain, large attainments, rare devotion to his work, and much popular power. He stands squarely firmly, and joyfully on the Christian ground; but his interpretation of religion is very much like that of many Broad Churchmen, and he is too large-hearted and just to withhold fellowship from any who love God and man. In all this the New York Examiner scents a danger. In a recent sermon on "Pure and Undeified Religion," Dr. Bridgman says: "There is springing up in devout minds everywhere the conviction that the principle of true brotherly fellowship is not to be found in intellectual agreement; that the secret of unity is something deeper and more comprehensive than accordance of belief in some system of doctrine." But is not this a condemnation of those church systems which build fellowship on a common creed? Shall we not pray to be saved from too much brotherly love? Again, he says:—"To love God and man—this is the spirit of religion; and this is all the law and the prophets; and as this idea of religion prevails in the church and the world, and the fact of this relation is more broadly established, will humanity come into brotherhood." To be sure, Jesus taught the same; and Dr. Bridgman is his disciple; but, as it would prove fatal to narrow denominationalism, this sort of preaching arouses the same old antagonism which made a Jewish Christian hate to see the bars let down and the Gentiles flocking into the early church.

THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND AND FUTURE PUNISHMENT.

In a letter to the Christian Union of New York, Mr. R. W. Dale, of Birmingham, gives an analysis of Canon Farrar's Eternal Hope, and then endeavours to answer the question to what extent the clergy generally agree with the Canon, who, as most of our readers know, holds that "the vast majority of the lost will at last be found." The Canon says that his own belief is "the belief of multitudes, and of yearly increasing multitudes, of the wisest and most learned in our Church." Mr. Dale supposes that the Broad Church clergy are unanimously in favour of some such theory as Canon Farrar's. A clergyman would hardly be called "broad," whatever his opinions on other questions, who adhered to the doctrine of eternal torment. "The clergy," says Mr. Dale, "belonging to the Broad Church party are usually estimated at a tenth of the whole number of the clergy. As they are the literary party in the Church, they seem to have a strength far greater than their number would imply." Of the High Church clergy, Mr. Dale expresses the belief that they are profoundly dissatisfied with the popular theory, and some of them are assailing with vehement antagonism what they describe as the Protestant doctrine that forms an impassable gulf between the lost and the saved at the moment of death. They are trying to substitute for it a belief in some sort of purgatory. Mr. Dale describes the High Church clergy as "the learned party in the Church," and concludes that "if any considerable number of its members renounce the doctrine of an irrevocable doom at death and eternal suffering, the great body of the clergy are certain, sooner or later, to follow their lead." . . . "As they probably constitute a third, at least, of the whole number of the Established clergy, their action in relation to this controversy is important." The Evangelicals Mr. Dale estimates at a fifth, perhaps a fourth, of the whole number of the clergy. He thinks that for the most part they hold the traditional belief, though he is constrained to doubt whether "many of them preach the doctrine with anything of the old vehemence and earnestness, but they maintain it as an essential element of the orthodox evangelical creed." The few who have surrendered it have not accepted Dr. Farrar's theory, but have come to believe "that eternal life is given to those who are in Christ, and that the rest of mankind will without doubt 'perish'—literally 'perish'—everlastingly." Mr. Dale's opinions of the tendencies of thought in the Church of England on this subject, though those of an outsider, are those of a close observer of the signs of the times, and, as far as they are trustworthy, they show the abandonment of the doctrine of eternal torment and the general replacement of it by a belief almost indistinguishable from Universalism.

Jabez Robinson, of Padstow.

Our columns last week notified the death of Mr. Jabez Robinson, only surviving son of one of the two hand-loom weavers who founded here a congregation of "Cookites" in the year 1812. At that time Jabez must have been about four years of age, and would be speedily enrolled as a Sunday scholar. He was still quite a lad when he entered the choir, of which he remained a member till about 1865. Shortly after old Nazareth Chapel was opened in 1823, Dr. Beard made several preaching excursions from Padstow to Downham and Rimington villages about nine miles distant, to hold open-air services there, and preach the gospel of Unitarian Christianity; and on these occasions it was usually Jabez Robinson who accompanied him to set the tunes and lead the singing. He also accompanied the Revs. G. Harris (of Bolton) and J. Wilkinson (of Rochdale) to Blackburn, and at a later date went on similar excursions to Wheatly Lane, and afterwards to Higham, the Revs. Robert Shenton (of Ashford), James Taylor (of Rawtenstall), M. C. Frankland (of Chowbent), and, if we mistake not, John Wright (of Bury) being among the preachers. There also prevailed a custom, which has continued till comparatively recently, of going to sing a hymn at any house from which a funeral was to start, the coffin often being brought out and placed on a table in the street; and on these occasions the services of Jabez were as readily given as those of his father, or the latter's colleague, James Pollard, subsequently at the graveyard round the old chapel. As a Sunday school teacher he laboured for at least forty years. At the week night prayer meetings, instituted during the ministry of the Rev. A. Rushton, he was a regular attendant, and always ready to take an active part. And during the last few years, though feeling the infirmities of age and a hard life, he would still speak words of supplication and exhortation, very touching in their simplicity and humility, full of thankfulness for the changes he had been permitted to witness, and all the more inspiring, as he bade his hearers trust in the goodness and rejoice in the mercy of the Lord, because of the feebleness of the voice that uttered them. His prayers, too, were often sought, and were always welcome, by the bedside of the sick and dying; and in the absence of a regular minister he not unfrequently conducted a funeral service. In disposition he was extremely quiet, gentle, and trustful, embodying with wonderful truth Paul's description of charity, but at the same time cherishing a brave and independent spirit. At his funeral, which took place on the 27th ult., very large numbers of the congregation, including representatives of all the principal families, assembled to show their esteem and affection by walking in the procession; and last Sunday evening, when two funeral anthems were sung by the choir, largely augmented by old singers, and a sermon bearing on the occasion was preached by the Rev. H. S. Solly, a congregation of not less than 500 persons was present.

OUR SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

SHALL WE HAVE A MISSIONARY FUND?

THE question has been more than once pressed upon our attention of late, whether our schools and scholars do not suffer from the want of outlet to their potential activities. If there is no circulation vital organs become congested; and it must be allowed that the circulation of living force in our Sunday schools is very slow, where there is any at all. In some quarters a more lively exercise has been introduced in connection with the Examination Scheme, which, in its own place, has merits that demand a fair and full trial. But there are other directions in which we think a movement might be usefully attempted. In almost all Sunday schools of the orthodox denominations, the children are asked to contribute towards missionary purposes. This, like everything else, may be done in a bad as well as a good way. When children receive collecting cards and go begging from house to house for the wherewithal to fill them up, the case is about as bad as it could be. But when children are invited to give of themselves towards some object in which they can and do heartily sympathise, such an exercise of their better natures cannot but do good to them as well as to the cause which they assist.

In this, as in so many good things, we might learn a lesson from the Americans. We have just been reading a short report of the Dime Association. What sort of association is that? A dime is a little coin of ten cents; that is, about 6d. A year ago a lady, Mrs. Annie Bowen, of Tiverton, Rhode Island, set on foot a contribution among boys and girls of a ten-cent piece each for some Unitarian mission. Mrs. Bowen left the object to be determined when the sums collected in a year should be known. We now learn that the sum collected in fourteen churches, in Massachusetts, New York, Missouri, and Maine, amounts to one hundred and one dollars and seventy-one cents, which sum is to be divided among three missionary causes in which the children may be expected to take an interest. In conclusion, we are told that ONE CENT is reserved "as a nest-egg for another year."

In proposing that so excellent an example should be followed in our Sunday schools we would venture to suggest, as a purpose very appropriate for children's contributions, the establishment of one or two Ragged Schools for Sunday. The law now provides that the little arabs and waifs of our great cities should be cared for, in the matter of their education, during some part of the week-days. But what are their idle young hands to do on Sunday? We have before now directed the minds of our readers to this question, and we put it to them once more, in connection with the proposal that money to help in starting such a school or schools should be found, by asking the children of our present schools to give, out of love for their little brothers and sisters who are poor and needy.

THE MANCHESTER DOMESTIC MISSION: ANNUAL MEETING.

ON Wednesday evening last the annual meeting of this Mission was held in the Memorial Hall. There was a larger attendance than for some years past, and we noticed present the Rev. Wm. Gaskell, M.A. (president), Rev. S. A. Steinthal (secretary), Mr. R. D. Darbishire (treasurer), Revs. Jas. Harrop and Benj. Walker (missionaries), Chas. Beard, B.A., Chas. Hargrove, M.A., W. G. Cadman, W. H. Periss, Jas. Black, M.A., J. G. Evans (Preston), J. T. Marriott, E. C. Towne, Messrs. Alderman Heywood (ex-Mayor of Manchester), Benj. Heap, Robt. Nicholson, Jas. Bennett, Harry Rawson, E. C. Harding, W. Hadwen, John Hadfield, Richd. Wade, H. B. Wilkinson, W. G. Ord, Henry Shawcross, Thos. Worthington, John Kendall, B.A., Dr. Marcus, and others.

THE COMMITTEE'S REPORT, of which we give the following abstract, was taken as read:—

The Committee, in presenting their forty-fourth annual report, are happy that they can state that the various institutions connected with their two mission stations [Rochdale Road and Embden-street] are all in efficient working order, and fulfilling to a very satisfactory degree the objects for which the society was established. The Committee would simply express their continued satisfaction with the zeal and energy so unflinchingly displayed by the Revs. J. Harrop and B. Walker in their benevolent labours.

SCHOOLS.—They have great pleasure in calling attention to the very satisfactory report which Her Majesty's Inspector gives of the schools in Embden-street. The examination took place on the 2nd and 3rd of May, and resulted in the schools obtaining a grant of £347. 3s. Upon the boys' school the Inspector says: "The order and discipline are satisfactory."

But there is some want of intelligence among the children in the upper part of the school, especially in the fourth standard. With more experience Mr. Lord should remedy this deficiency. Certainly the school is already much better in all respects under him than it was before he took charge of it."

Girls' School.—"The order and discipline are very good, and the acquisitions are in a fairly satisfactory state. . . . The girls sew well and sing pleasingly. The pupil teachers, with one exception, have done well."

Infants' School.—"The order and discipline are very good, and the department is altogether in a very satisfactory state. It is numerously attended; the children are very orderly and well behaved, and they are well taught, and is highly creditable to Miss Weall. The pupil teachers, with one exception, have done well. It will be remembered that the deficiency of accommodation for the large infant school caused the Education Department to fine the school above £100 in 1875. Having a very efficient mistress and a good working staff of teachers, and also a large constituency of little children, the Committee have completed the erection of suitable premises. In order to do this they have borrowed £1,500 at 4 per cent interest, and submit a resolution to enable the trustees to complete the proper security. The accounts show that with an increased expenditure of £100 the contribution of the society is only £34 more than it was last year, which is a very satisfactory result."

The schools at Rochdale Road, while under the management of your Committee, were no less satisfactory in their results. But as the premises were not built originally for school purposes, and from their crowded condition were, especially in the infant department, anything but healthy for teachers or children, your Committee were obliged to take the question of their continuance into very anxious consideration. The School Board began the erection of very well-planned buildings in Abbot-street, very near the Mission House, and your Committee thought they would be best consulting the interests of the children if they could negotiate a transfer of their schools, with their excellent teaching staff, to the board. This was accomplished on satisfactory conditions. The joiners' strike has prevented the completion of the buildings in Abbot-street, so that the removal has not yet been accomplished, but your Committee trust that this hindrance will, before long, be overcome, and the schools will be conducted in healthier and more commodious premises. It is satisfactory to record that, notwithstanding a certain increase in the payments to teachers, and a larger expenditure on books and apparatus, the schools have this year contributed £10. 15s. 2d. to the society. There remains also to be realised the amount of Government Grant for seven months, before the accounts of the Rochdale Road Schools are closed.

Sale of Mission House.—The Mission House in Rochdale Road has for some years been found not only unsuitable for school purposes, but also ill adapted to the very varied agencies which, by degrees, have been connected with the Mission. The Committee have in consequence invited offers for the purchase of the building and site, but till very lately without success. Last month a bid of £2,500 was made, and the Committee decided to sell the property to the St. Michael's Ward Liberal Club. They submit to the society the necessary resolutions to enable the trustees to complete the sale. In the meantime, they are looking out for other less ostentatious premises in the neighbourhood, in which to carry on the operations of the Mission. The Committee, in conclusion, beg to call the attention of the subscribers to the treasurer's statement of accounts. They show a very large amount due to him; and though this sum will be reduced considerably when the grant for the Rochdale Road Schools is paid, yet they cannot but regard it as unsatisfactory that the treasurer should be asked to advance money in order to carry on the work which the society has undertaken, and which all connected with it must agree is of so truly Christian and benevolent a character. Every year there are unavoidable losses in the list of subscribers; but if the members of the society would kindly interest themselves in its behalf, new members could no doubt be found to fill the vacant places, and place the treasurer in a better position when next he has to place his statement before them. There are many persons, your committee feel assured, who would be glad to help in the good work which the missions are so unobtrusively accomplishing, if the need of their assistance were brought home to them. An earnest appeal is therefore made to all who now subscribe to lay the claims of the society before their friends.

Mr. R. D. DARBISHIRE read the treasurer's account, which showed receipts from subscriptions, £364. 3s. 6d.; collections at Cross-street and the annual meeting, £47. 2s.; donations, £113. 19s.; rents from both missions, £189. 3s. 4d.; building fund, £16. 6s. 1d.; total, £780. 13s. 11d. The expenditure, including a balance due to the treasurer at the beginning of the year of £254. 8s., had been £1,095. 5s. 5d., so that there is a balance due to the treasurer now of £314. 11s. 6d.

ROCHDALE ROAD MISSION.

The Rev. B. WALKER, in his report, states as to employment, that many poor families have found it very hard to live this past year. What with bad trade, short time, strikes, and improvidence, the outlook for the aged, sick, and infirm, who have been in the habit of depending on their families for the necessities of life, has been very gloomy indeed. After reciting a number of cases showing how some poor have to live, he writes:—

When I visit such cases, and find that old age, sickness, decrepitude, and accident are aggravated by the sad depression of the times, and that through no fault of their own they are plunged in a misery and distress of body and mind which no words of mine can adequately express, I feel that the simple prayer, the reading of the Scriptures, and the sympathetic word are something like mockery, unless, when amid such gloomy surroundings, I can accompany these with the more tangible blessings of something to eat and drink, which he, whose disciples we profess to be, no doubt would himself have given if he had had the means. This winter the means which the Committee have so kindly placed at my disposal for such a purpose—and which, no doubt, would have been more if it had been in their power—have been but a mite in the face of the misery and want which even now exists on all sides round about me.

As to drunkenness, he writes: I am not able to state anything new respecting this vice. The causes which lead to it are many and complicated in their influences. Bad dwellings, unhealthy employment, excitement, and mental distress, no doubt lead some to drink to excess. But people get drunk who are not afflicted with such things. However, I have found in my visiting among all classes of the poor that one man's poverty does not prevent another getting drunk. Amid poverty, bad trade, semi-starvation, people will persist in drinking. I have seen the most drunkenness, this last year, among those who have had the most wages and regular work.

Alluding to the late hours at which females are now employed, sometimes till one or two o'clock in the morning, Mr. Walker says: It is to be hoped that recent legislation will soon make it impossible for young women to work at such unreasonable hours, whether dresses for balls, parties, and entertainments be finished in time or not.

The morning religious service at the Mission is devoted to the religious culture of the young, and is chiefly attended by the scholars and teachers. The evening service during the past year has been very well attended, varying, according to the weather, from 50 to 130. The Sunday School has been doing its work quietly during the year. Mr. Walker has nothing special to report respecting it. There are 12 teachers and 155 scholars on the books, with an average attendance of 61 in the morning and 95 in the afternoon. A social club has been established, and the little room is as well attended now as when it first was opened. This is its fourth winter, and its existence has demonstrated one thing, viz., that when properly managed and with fair means of support, men who do not come under the direct influence of religion on a Sunday and during the week, and who are easily led to the public-house, may be prevented going to the latter. There are sixty names on the books, with an average attendance of 31. Referring to coffee and cocoa rooms Mr. Walker is assured instead of going into the public-house many now call in at these coffee houses, and, of course, go home sober. What the future of these places will be it would be out of place now to venture an opinion. True philanthropy will keep them open, whether they "pay" or not.

EMBDEN-STREET MISSION.

Speaking of the material and moral condition of his district, Mr. Harrop writes:—I am sorry to have to state that, in consequence of that dearth of employment which existed at the commencement of the year,—owing to the unsettled state of affairs in the East, an over-stocked market and other causes becoming gradually worse,—I have been called during the past twelve months to witness most distressing scenes of want and suffering, affecting not only the young and the strong, but also helpless children, women in delicate health, and aged and infirm people. He cites the joiners' strike as having caused much suffering and says, "The consequence of such strikes—and more particularly of the joiners' strike—in the shape of material privation, I have witnessed in more instances than one, and so know them to have been of the most distressing character. It is only fair, however, to say, that many of the more thoughtful and intelligent joiners have declared in strong and bitter terms their entire disapproval of this strike, throwing the responsibility of it upon thoughtless unmarried men, who, occasionally, rather like such a thing, and unprincipled agitators, to whom a strike is a considerable pecuniary advantage, and affords an opportunity for the exercise of a mean and selfish ambition. Speaking of drunkenness, he says:—

I have for years been earnestly and anxiously on the look-out for even the smallest indication of so desirable a change, but failed to discern it. I do, however, think that during the past year I have perceived a faint dawning of the brighter and better day of temperance and sobriety. I have certainly not met with so many drunken men and women staggering in the streets during the day time, nor heard so many drunken brawls at night, as in former years. The beerhouses, moreover, have been much less noisy, showing that there have been fewer customers."

The Sunday schools, which contain 150 scholars and 24 teachers, have been opened twice each Sunday during the year, and I know no previous twelve months that has been characterised by more zeal and unity of feeling and purpose among the teachers than has the past. We have held two religious services each Sunday, one at eleven o'clock after morning school, for the scholars and teachers, which has been invariably well attended, and which has afforded me opportunity for endeavouring to foster the religious nature of the young, and of warning them in a kind and friendly manner against the snares and temptations by which, in a large city like Manchester, the path of youth is beset, especially pointing out the importance of not contracting vicious habits. The evening service, which is for the public, has also been fairly attended throughout the year. At this latter service the offertory has been taken.

Evening Classes.—Besides the Provident Society, the Night School for boys, under the management of the School Board, has met three nights each week; an occasional singing class has met, and Saturday tea parties have been held; the Mutual Improvement and Recreation Society has held its meetings each Wednesday during the winter, at which many useful and practical subjects have been introduced for discussion by the members. To economise time, the lady members have generally occupied themselves in sewing or knitting during the reading of the essay and discussion, and then joined in the games of chess, draughts, dominoes, and bagatelle.

They have also a Penny Bank, into which during the past year £42. 1s. 1d. has been deposited in 1,064 separate sums.

The Rev. WM. GASKELL presided, and opened the meeting by saying: One reason, I suppose, why I have been asked to take the chair is that I am one of very few now left who took an active part in the formation of this Ministry to the Poor, five and forty years ago. I am glad to see another—Mr. Robert Nicholson—present, as he also, along with Mr.

Robberds and Dr. Beard, assisted in establishing the institution. (Hear, hear.) Another reason, perhaps, is the deep interest which I have always felt in its objects, and which I trust I have always been ready to show. (Hear, hear.) For a good number of years I held the office of secretary, and from the first I have very rarely been absent from the monthly meetings of the committee. I have thus been brought into intimate relations with the successive missionaries from the time of good John Ashworth to the present, and so have had good opportunities of gaining an insight into the nature of the work in which they were engaged. The result has been that my interest in it, and my sense of its importance have gone on increasing; and I feel more and more how deserving it is of support. (Hear, hear.) Indeed, I can say without hesitation, that if there is one institution amongst us more truly Christian than another, and about which I care more than another, it is our Ministry to the Poor. (Applause.) I need hardly say to those who have the least acquaintance with its operations, that its missionaries are not sent out at all in a sectarian character to increase the numbers of our denomination, but that they go forth to bring under the influence of religion those of our poorer brethren who are utter strangers to its blessed power, many of whom are living in a state little better, if at all different from that in which the apostle described the heathens in his day, "without God and without hope in the world." (Hear, hear.) Some of our orthodox friends appear to have what might be called a telescope benevolence. They require that some thousand miles should intervene between themselves and those for whom their compassion is to be excited—such as Australian or Patagonian savages. If some of the scenes which daily and nightly are taking place in many of our back streets, courts, and alleys, were described to them as taking place in some far-off land, their pity would be so called forth that they would not rest till something was done for their removal. Alas! we have dense masses of heathenism on every side of us here at home, which may well task all our powers to the utmost to make some inroads upon them. Sad to say, a large proportion of our labouring classes are utterly untouched by the ordinary ministrations of our churches. From year's end to year's end, they never enter either church or chapel, and seldom, if ever, come within reach of the elevating influences of religion. It is among such that they sought to do a good work, believing it to be their duty, as followers of Him who came to seek and save the lost, to bring these influences to bear upon them. Alluding to promiscuous almsgiving, Mr. Gaskell condemned it as evil, and remarked that it was better to send men with loving hearts to help the really needy and deserving, and so to lift men up rather than to degrade them; and he closed by urging that a larger number should take an interest in the work of the society, and help to put its finances into a sounder condition. (Applause.)

Mr. R. D. DARBISHIRE moved the first resolution empowering the trustees to give security for £1,500, money borrowed to extend the school accommodation at Embden-street Mission, and also empowering them to sell the Rochdale Road Mission Chapel for £2,500.

Mr. JOHN DENDY, jun., seconded the resolution, which was carried unanimously.

The Rev. CHARLES BEARD said: Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen,—The resolution which I have to move is this: "That this meeting adopts the reports of the committee and ministers and the treasurer's statement of accounts, and expresses its heartfelt sympathy with the ministers of the society in the self-denying labours they have devoted to their unassuming work of Christian benevolence." You have so many gentlemen in Manchester and the neighbourhood who are fully qualified to express your sympathy with the missionaries, that I only regard it as an act of peculiar kindness to myself that you have entrusted to me to-night this important resolution. I am sometimes inclined to think that it is one of the inequalities to be observed in the constitution of society that at all events in my profession the men who do the best and hardest work are not those who are most gaily wafted by the wind of popular applause, and sail their spiritual barque upon the smoothest seas. At least I am constantly led to the conclusion, when I read the reports of your missionaries and of the missionaries connected with our societies in Liverpool, that the work they do so unassumingly, so steadily, so faithfully, with so much Christian love and patience from year to year, is a work which very few of us, who meet in public meeting once a year to applaud and sympathise with them, could do or should be able to put our hands to. At least it is with a very genuine humility which approaches to self-reproach that I acknowledge that I do not think I could do the work of a domestic missionary in our large towns; and therefore, when I meet men, whom to know is to respect and to admire, spending their strength in this ill-rewarded labour, with scarcely any recompense of popular and general applause—a labour which demands the utmost faithfulness from day to day and from week to week, a labour which is spent under circumstances often of the most discouraging and desponding kind, a labour which brings them face to face with human nature and with human society in some of its most painful forms; and yet which they perform so steadily, so thoroughly, so well—when I see how, like the nightingale, they set their breast against the thorn and sing their song of faith in God and trust in human nature, I am compelled, not merely to offer them for myself and for you the tribute of our respectful admiration, but to say, in the name of our common master, that if they miss their reward here they have their reward in their own conscience, and we will hope in a better and a nobler world. (Hear, hear.) Now, my particular interest in the work of a domestic mission lies first in the effect that it is especially a religious work, and I mean by a religious work that it aims to redress the evils of our society, and aims to help men, women, and children, one here and one there, by strictly religious methods. I do not in the least mean to disparage other and indirect methods of doing the work I describe. The fact is that the direct and indirect methods are both united, and the results are co-mingled. It is impossible to over-estimate the value of efforts which have been made to provide better homes for the working classes than many in which they now live. It is altogether impossible to expect people to be decent and cleanly and self-denying if their homes are fit rather for the habitation of beasts than of men, and, if by being herded together with the base and the bad, the decent and the respectable suffer a constant moral contagion; and, again, I think it is impossible to over-estimate the work that may have been done for the working classes by such a measure as that with which Manchester has its name for ever associated, viz., free trade, although free trade may have done comparatively little for us. Cheapening a loaf and every necessity of life that has been made more accessible to the poor is a distinct and appreciative item in their life in a way which we can hardly understand. I think a great deal might be done by attention to the amusements of the people, and I was bold enough to declare from my own pulpit the other day—and, I dare say, I shocked some people by doing it—that I thought the man who would build and conduct a thoroughly good theatre in the lowest part of Liverpool, and should take care that that theatre should present nothing to those who enter it except of a refining and elevating kind, would be a great public benefactor. (Applause.) Therefore you will observe I am at least fully committed to the public amusement theory in its most extreme form. We are going to make a very interesting experiment on Good Friday. We are giving the "Messiah" in St. George's Hall, with that magnificent organ and its organist, to the halt and maim and blind—morally—of Liverpool. There are to be 150 young people singing, among whom, I am glad to say, are my own daughters. The best soloists that can be got will be got, and I am told by our conductor there will not be a respectable person in the place off the platform. We have great hopes that something may be done in this way to shed a brighter and holier ray on some darkened minds, and that those who come to listen to the music may not only have a pleasant recollection of an afternoon pleasantly passed, but that the divine music and the divine words to which they are wedded may perhaps sink deep into some hearts hitherto untouched by the exhortations of popular preaching. I recur to the statement with which I began, that my interest in these domestic missions arises largely from the fact that their method is emphatically a religious one—that those who support them, and those who carry them out believe in religion as the great purifier and elevator of human nature. Go to the poor with a story of a God in heaven who, in spite of the hardships and inclemencies of their lot, must be looked upon as infinitely wise and kind—of the story of a loving Christ going before them on the path of perfected humanity—go, I say, to them with this story, and you have a lever to lift them up which you cannot find in any other way or in any other department of human nature; and although this may be a very long and difficult way, although it is quite possible that we may never succeed in raising one of those waves of popular enthusiasm which, passing over the mass of the people, purify many lives, strengthen many hearts, console many sorrows, and leave behind them a distinct impression on the popular mind; yet, after all, it is a great thing to know that here and there some family has been lifted out of the mire, some young child has been taken from evil surroundings, some drunkard has been arrested in his downward way to the pit, some poor abandoned woman has been rescued from her sin and shame and allowed once more to tread the path of respected and honoured life. (Applause.) So long as these things are being accomplished from day to day, so long as these silent and obscure victories are being won in our streets and alleys, so long as we know it to be the case that our missionaries are doing a good work, it is for us to strengthen their hands by every testimony of respect and admiration that we can, and do something more, to put our hands into our pockets and see that they have every material supplied to them for the due execution of their work. (Applause.) But then there is something more than this. Mr. Gaskell has already said that these missionaries do an entirely unsectarian work. Now I am not going to dispute the value of the work which is done in another way, but I am profoundly convinced that the unsectarian way is the only way in which you can with good effect go to the hearts and minds of the very poor. For my own part I must say that, after an experience which is now of considerable length, I believe the changes of religious opinion produced simply by intellectual forces are very much rarer than we are apt to suppose. Men do not change one form of religion for another simply because they believe it is truer than another. Perhaps they ought to do, but they don't. I tell you why men change their religious opinions. They find out that their old theological opinions no longer give them religious forces and religious life. They find that their old system won't work. They cannot pray. They cannot worship. They cannot look up to God with clear unclouded eyes. They do not know where they are in life, and they are getting loose from their old moorings. What they ask for is not a truer doctrine because it is truer, but a doctrine that will restore to them if possible the hold upon spiritual life, which will enable them to pray, which will deliver them from craven and abject fears of the future, which will enable them to look up to God once more with frank confidence. This is not only so as a general case, but it is particularly the case in the great crises of life. I have known a good many instances lately of men who have been led to give up all, or almost all, religious belief under the influence of new scientific and philosophic views, with which I need not trouble you, and I have found in the majority of cases, if men return from that wandering in the desert of unbelief, it is because they have been met there by some great sorrow or disappointment that has pressed them very close to the realities of life, and has made them feel they wanted a rock higher than themselves on which to lean. Now, the poor are always in that condition. They always lie very close to the necessities of life. They have hunger waiting for them very often. Sickness means with them not merely a period of enforced leisure and calling in of doctors and very good nursing. It means stoppage of income and a very close and hard battle with life's fiercest realities and a prospect at last of absolute want and starvation; and I have always found, when you are in the presence of those great realities—for the most controversial of us, even the most rampant Unitarian or the most bigoted Trinitarian, for one is almost the same as the other, by the side of a death-bed or when it is a question of recalling a young man or young woman from impending ruin—our theological doctrines are entirely forgotten, and we just go back to those fundamental truths and basal principles and first established hopes and trusts which are common to us all. And so, my friends, if you want to go with any effect to the homes and to the houses of the poor, you must, I think, leave behind you those matters which are no doubt of very considerable intellectual importance, and which lie very close to our intellectual consciences, if I may so say, and you must speak things which are common to all Christians and to all religious people—a God above, and fine examples all around, and the contagious influence of goodness and saintliness of life, and the power that lies in the thrill of sympathy or the touch of friendship, and the help that comes of a good brotherly soul bearing the sorrows and being willing to take by the hand the weakest of those who stumble and suffer. I was struck to notice in one of the reports of your missionaries that he was able to report a very considerable diminution, I cannot give the exact words—of sectarian animosity to the mission. We in Liverpool have had a very remarkable testimony of the same kind borne to us within the last few days by our missionary at the North End—that throughout the district there is the strongest possible feeling both among Catholics and Protestants that whatever "these people" may be and whatever may be their doctrinal deficiencies, they are very earnestly intent upon everybody's good, without distinction of sect or party, and that they are rapidly winning trust and confidence in that way. (Applause.) There is something of the same kind in one of your Reports, but I should like your Missionaries to tell us whether they have not found their unsectarian method of conducting these missions recommend them into the houses and homes of the poor, and should like them to say whether or not they do not find it a strength that they have no doctrinal propaganda to urge, but simply to bring men to God, to bring men to Christ, to lead them into a higher and better and purer life, to rescue the fallen and to lead and educate the little ones; and as long as this is the case, as I believe it is, I not only am confident that this mission will have your hearty support, as it ought to have—(hear, hear)—but that from year to year its operations will widen, and the self-denying labours of its missionaries will be crowned with an ever larger success. (Applause.)

The Rev. J. T. MARRIOTT seconded the resolution, which was agreed to unanimously.

The Rev. J. HARROP returned thanks for the votes of sympathy just passed, and assured the meeting that it was gratifying to him to receive it at the end of 19 years' service as their missionary. There were, he said, three things essential to a man's happiness in this life—first, to be engaged in an occupation to which he could devote the whole of his powers; second, to find his work appreciated by those for whom he laboured; and third, to have the kind wishes and sympathy of good men and women whose opinion he valued.

The Rev. BENJAMIN WALKER also acknowledged the hearty vote of sympathy given to them, not so much as a personal matter to himself, but because he thought the resolution had a meaning for them all round, as they were under an obligation to encourage one another—(hear, hear)—and he hoped the words they had just heard would tend to inspire in their hearts a living interest in their work. (Hear, hear.)

Rev. CHARLES HARGROVE, M.A., moved the appointment of officers for the ensuing year, and said: Let me begin with a confession of somewhat too hasty conduct on my part. I received several weeks ago from your secretary an invitation to speak at this meeting, and I wrote back immediately, not absolutely declining, but asking to be let off. My impression was much too hastily formed; in fact, without any data at all to go upon. I thought your Mission was one which was intended for the preaching of Unitarianism to the poor. I am not going to say a word to-night as to Unitarianism either as to name or doctrine; but I did feel what I preach myself very often in my church was not what I could give to the poorest, and that I could not come to plead with you for any organisation for the spreading amongst the poor of the particular views in which we are agreed. After writing that letter I had the happiness of having some conversation with my very dear friend and neighbour Mr. Millson, of Halifax, and I heard about your Mission, and I wrote off by the same post, in haste, to retract my half refusal, when I knew what it was I was to have the honour of being asked to speak upon. I do not want to make a speech into a sermon, but I think I shall do best by proposing to you three propositions and saying some words about each. The first is that work for the poor must be personal work. The second is, it must be under the inspection and advice of skilled agents. The third is, that to be truly effectual, it must be religious. Let me say as to the first we have had morality preached to us for, I was going to say, 1,800 years, but I must say for many thousand years, and we have yet to learn the lesson, though it is not the fault of our great master we have not yet learnt it. There are sins in highly respectable society much more worthy of condemnation than the sins of the poor. I heard, with the greatest pleasure, one of your missionaries give a kind of excuse for the drunkard. I remember it was the master who was reproached for making the fellows of his table the drunkards and the notorious sinners; and we have this to learn, that the sins of Pharisaism, of self-righteousness, and the sin of idleness, of living simply for oneself and one's own pleasure, and the sin of a busy, industrious life from early youth on to old manhood given up simply to money-making, are sins as great, and, perhaps, more heinous than those sins we all look upon with such exceeding horror—the sins of the drunkard and the harlot. For our work amongst the poor we have to arouse ourselves from our idleness and selfishness, and ourselves, each one of us, look upon it, not as a charity but as a duty to do each one his work, and not to say that this or that person is very good because they do so much work, but to say that each one is bad who does not assist the poor by his personal efforts. "The poor ye have always with you." I have heard that sentence called to account, as if it were against social progress. I could not help thinking, on hearing of that most terrible catastrophe ten days ago, when a great ship and a complete crew of trained seamen in five minutes were lost, that man is not the master of his fate,—that do what we will and take what precautions we will, and make what progress we can, there are yet terrible accidents to which we are always liable. So will it be, in spite of all we can do. Accident, and sickness, and errors, and consequently poverty—and poverty in its extreme form—must be always with us. And how are we to meet it? It must be met by the individual effort of men and women free from the curse of pauperism, and from the fear of it. Breadwinners will die and leave widow and children to suffer. Children will to the world's end be left orphans and dependent—upon whom? They have no brothers to look after them, no father, mother, uncles, or aunts. Dependent upon their great brotherhood of the human race—their rich brothers and their brothers, but a little better off than themselves. I look upon this, therefore, as the very first principle to be preached, and also implanted in the soul of each, if any good is to be done to the poor, that I and you, each one of us, are responsible for, some one, are the keepers of our brother and our sister. When you see the drunkard in the street, or the poor lost girl at night, there is a brother and there is a sister, and you cannot plead to God that you are not their keeper. My second proposition is this: If effectual work is to be done amongst the poor, it is necessary we should have experienced agents to guide us. It is an old story, the amount of imposture to which all who desire to give charity are exposed. The virtues and vices of the poor combine together against the givers of alms. The virtuous of the poor are slow to make their wants known; the best of them will all but starve before they ask. They will sell everything they have in their houses, and be reduced to the greatest misery, knowing where alms are to be got, and will not go to ask, because with a noble pride they are ashamed to ask; and their vices, too, because poverty going on from generation to generation, oftentimes degrades, as slavery does, and by many alms are preferred to honest, hard earned money, so that wherever alms are to be given there are numbers who will immediately come forward to claim their share. If you merely go among the poor, and work on your own account without experience and assistance, you will help those who ought not to be helped, who try to manage to live without work, or by your help will more and more be enabled to shirk what they feel to be the curse of labour. Therefore, if we recognise this great duty of our work to the poor, and want to do it properly, we must needs have some who will act as your director and guide. He further quoted their experience in Leeds on these points. The third proposition is that work for the poor, to be thorough, should be religious. We may do a considerable amount of good, but we never meet the case wholly where we ignore religion. Mr. Hargrove went on to say that we could not go to the poor with such positive theories as some of the churches could; that we had doubts where other churches were positive; but we did all believe that in this wilderness journey there was a divine presence accompanying them. We could go to the poor with God's grand message unobscured by any system, for system required a sect. Were the poor ungrateful? He asked their missionaries, was the sinner ungrateful when he received the message that there was infinite mercy above? It had been said that the road to hell was paved with good resolutions. He rather took it that the roadsteps to heaven were paved with good resolutions. A good resolution broken was a thousand times better than no resolution at all; that as long as a poor miserable fallen wretch, whom they were tempted to despise, had it in him to say I wish I was like you: I would give all the world to be like you—as that wretched drunkard your missionary just told us of—he took it there was in him the divine seed, and that the light lighting every man was not yet utterly obscured in him. If they appealed to that light they would have gratitude, and the gratitude of the poor was worth having, not because they felt it was a pleasant thing, but because gratitude was a test of the value and worth of the gift. They wanted a recognition of their common humanity, that they were one really not by a dream of philosophers but in a real way in God's sight. Each one had his duty to the poor. If they wanted to deal with the poor of large towns they wanted thousands of helpers. One minister was quite lost. He would say, "Will you, young lady, who have nothing to do, go and look after this girl—she is your sister in God's sight—instead of seeking for amusement or excitement of what next party, what next invitation she could get and give?" He recommended to each a perusal of "Mary Barton" as illustrating the manners, the sufferings, the kindness, the love and the nobleness, the heroism, the dread temptation of the poor, and they would feel their hearts animated towards them, to do something for them, not as their superiors, but as their brothers and sisters. (Applause.)

Mr. BENJAMIN HEAP briefly seconded the resolution, which was carried.

Alderman Heywood then took the chair, when Mr. WM. HADWEN moved a vote of thanks to the Rev. Wm. Gaskell for presiding, which was seconded by the Rev. S. A. STRINTEAL, and carried with acclamation, to which Mr. GASKELL briefly responded, and the meeting terminated.

NEWS OF OUR CHURCHES.

NOTICE.—Our friends would oblige if they would kindly send their news paragraphs so as to arrive never later than Wednesday morning, otherwise we are compelled to cut them down.

MINISTERIAL APPOINTMENT.—The Rev. F. H. Jones, B.A., of Loughborough, has received and accepted an invitation to the pulpit at Oldham.

BOLTON: COMMISSION-STREET.—On Sunday, the annual sermons were preached by the Rev. William Gaskell, M.A., when the collections were upwards of £20. We would call the attention of our friends to the vigorous effort which is being made to remove a debt of £650, and we hope they will render such efficient help to the movement as will make it a perfect success.

BLACKLEY.—The experiment has been tried here this winter of having an essay and discussion society in lieu of week evening lectures. The first session was brought to a pleasant close by a soiree in the schoolroom on Saturday evening last. The report read stated that the effort had been completely successful, and congratulated the members on such being the case. An incident occurred a few weeks back of a very gratifying nature. Mr. Samuel Lindley presented to the committee of the school and chapel a remarkably fine photographic portrait of Mr. Thomas Cooke, one of the oldest members of the congregation. The portrait is intended to be hung in the vestry of the future new chapel. It is taken by Lafosse, and is large and in a massive gilt frame.

BELFAST: CHURCH OF THE SECOND CONGREGATION, ROSEMARY-STREET.—The annual meeting of the above congregation was held in the Lecture Hall on Thursday evening, the 27th ult. Tea was provided by the ladies of the congregation. George Fisher, Esq., presided, and, in the course of an appropriate address, referred to the report from the committee, which presented many encouraging features. The past year had been one of development and hard work; their minister was growing more and more in the affection of his people; and everywhere did he see encouragement for the future. The various reports from the different committees were formally laid before the meeting. The Sunday-school Committee reported a better attendance, and, if possible, more efficiency and regularity. The teachers and scholars raised the sum of £10 on behalf of the Children's Hospital, and a number of books had been purchased as the nucleus of a Sunday-school library. The reports from the Music and Library Committees were equally satisfactory. A new committee had been formed early in last autumn, composed of the young men in connection with the congregation, for the purpose of more efficiently attending to the comfort of strangers. This vigilance committee has had a not by any means easy task during the past winter, in consequence of the influx of strangers to the Sunday evening lectures delivered by the Rev. J. C. Street, and it is a pleasing feature in the report to find that such valuable aid has been afforded by the young men belonging to the congregation. After the financial and other reports had been duly passed, and the election by ballot of gentlemen to serve on the committee in place of the retiring members, Mr. J. M. Darbishire moved a special vote of thanks to the Rev. J. C. Street for his services in connection with the cause, and especially for his earnest labours in the church during the past year, and in the course of his remarks he referred to the affection which existed for their minister from all the members of the congregation. Mr. Neill seconded the resolution in a very feeling address. The Chairman was about to put the resolution to the meeting, when Mr. R. McCalmont begged to be allowed to say a word or two, and referred to the success which had attended Mr. Street's Sunday evening lectures, and to the value of his ministry generally, and heartily wished him a prolonged career of usefulness and happiness. Mr. Mulligan also spoke of the pleasure it gave him to have the privilege to listen Sunday after Sunday to their minister, and said that since he had been a member of the Second Church he felt it a great misfortune to be absent. Mr. Herbert Darbishire, in begging permission to support the resolution, spoke of their pastor as not only an eloquent preacher, but as a kind and affectionate friend to every member of the congregation. The Chairman also supported the resolution, and could fully endorse every word that had been spoken, and it gave him the most intense pleasure to convey to Mr. Street such a hearty and unanimous vote as that which had just been passed. He was quite sure Mr. Street would appreciate the feeling which suggested such a manifestation; it was entirely voluntary and spontaneous, and therefore all the more valuable. The Rev. J. C. Street, in reply, said that unprepared as he was for such an expression of feeling from the meeting he was quite unmanned. In debate or in fighting for some principle he felt at stake he could stand his ground; but when one after another rose and spoke in the strains they had of his connection with them, he must confess himself as totally inadequate to convey his deep feelings of appreciation. Mr. Street then referred to the unanimity with which he had worked with them since his settlement, and he could assure them that he should now go fresh to his labours, accompanied by the inspiring thought of the sympathy which had been evinced that evening. The meeting was closed with a vote of thanks to the chairman.

LYDGATE CHAPEL.—Thursday, March 28th, was the 183rd anniversary of the opening of the first chapel at Lydgate by Oliver Heywood, and the event was celebrated by a tea party and public meeting. There was a good attendance, and amongst others the following gentlemen took part in the proceedings:—Revs. J. Thomas, B.A., C. Hargrove, M.A., J. H. Smith, and E. Allen; and Messrs. H. J. Morehouse, J. W. Mellor, and Isaac Lee. Recitations were given by friends, the chapel choir rendered efficient service, and a most happy meeting was brought to a close by all joining in the evening hymn.

LONDON DISTRICT UNITARIAN SOCIETY.—Under the auspices of this society two courses of lectures, explanatory of Unitarian views, have been delivered during last month, at Essex-street Chapel and in the Town Hall, Hammersmith. The lecturers were the Revs. C. Howe, R. Spears, J. T. Whitehead, and T. W. Freckleton, and from the questions asked at the close of each lecture, it was manifest considerable interest had been excited by the views put forward, and that there is still much work to be done in giving people more liberal ideas as to the Christian religion. The audiences at Essex-street numbered from 100 to 130, and at Hammersmith from 50 to 60, almost all strangers, and this being entirely new ground, it was considered so satisfactory that a desire has been expressed that a further trial may be made.

MILES PLATTING.—The Band of Hope held its fifteenth half-yearly tea party and festival on Saturday evening last, when over 130 members and friends were present. The chair was occupied by Mr. Peter Turner, president. Addresses were delivered by the chairman, Rev. Wm. Hubbard (Congregationalist minister), Messrs. J. E. Benson and D. Thompson. Petitions in favour of stopping the sale of intoxicating liquors on Sunday in Ireland and in England and Wales were adopted unanimously and signed by the chairman on behalf of the meeting, and ordered to be forwarded to Sir Thomas Bazley, M.P., for presentation in the House of Commons.

MANCHESTER UNITARIAN SUNDAY-SCHOOL UNION. The seventh united teachers' meeting was held on the afternoon of March 31st, in Embden-street Schoolroom, Hulme, when fully sixty persons were present; Mr. John Heys, president, in the chair. After reading the minutes, the Rev. James Harrop read a paper on "Our Sunday Schools: As they are, and as they might be." He said Sunday schools had accomplished more than was generally acknowledged. Were they utilized more, better would the results be. It was a fact that nearly one-half of the population of this country are within the range, in point of age, of Sunday-school instruction, and yet not 1-34th in some districts are in actual attendance! The majority of those who do attend do so irregularly and unpunctually, besides being noisy and troublesome scholars. After thirty years' experience of Sunday-school work, he had come to the conclusion that the greater evil was the irregular and unpunctual teacher. The practice of gossiping with the teacher of one class with another he condemned, and the want of a sufficiently high aim in the work of a Sunday-school teacher. As a remedy for this lax state of things, he would, in the first place, make the premises clean and attractive, and by means of classrooms choicely decorated with portraits and paintings for the walls, supply instruction and inspiration, a good store of books being a necessary adjunct. In the second place he would have the teachers rise to the importance of their work, be punctual and regular in attendance, never failing to provide suitable substitutes if ever absent. Going in their classes as friends of the scholars, home visiting, and summer excursions of teacher and class would be very beneficial. In the lively discussion which followed the reading of the paper, Messrs. J. H. Pimley, David Baxter, Thomas Parry, William Lord, David Thompson, and the chairman took part. Mr. Harrop replied, and the proceedings terminated with prayer being offered by the President.

POOLE.—An interesting meeting of the congregation was held on Tuesday evening, on the occasion of a welcome being given to the Rev. William Agar. The meeting was well attended, a large party from the Southampton and Ringwood congregations helping to swell the numbers. We are informed that the services at this place have since the removal of the Rev. Mark Rowntree, in consequence of ill-health, been conducted by lay members of the congregation, and for the last nine years almost entirely by our worthy Mayor (Mr. Balston), to whom the society owes a lasting debt of gratitude, and the present occasion was taken advantage of to give expression to this feeling, in asking Mr. Balston's acceptance of a handsome silver inkstand. This he did in a graceful and feeling manner, and the hope was expressed by the various speakers that in their new relationship, both minister and people might work harmoniously together in striving to advance the cause they all have at heart, viz., that of truth, virtue, and righteousness.

WELLINGTON: SOMERSET.—Mission services, with addresses in exposition of Unitarian principles, by the Rev. J. Birks, of Taunton, and Mr. Batstone, of Wellington, have been held in the Town Hall, and were concluded on Tuesday last, when a good audience assembled, and joined heartily in the meeting. A party of friends went over from Taunton with their minister on each occasion. The Sunday-school hymn-book was used, and tracts, which were anxiously sought after, were distributed at the close of the proceedings. The expenses of these mission services have been defrayed by a gentleman in London, who has done much for the liberal yet definite presentation of Unitarian views in places not aided by the British and Foreign Unitarian Association.

WALSALL.—On Sunday last the Rev. P. Dean concluded two courses of discourses, which have extended over the mornings and evenings of the last seven Sundays. The morning discourses have been on "English Idolatry," and have included the worship of "Jesus," "the Virgin," "the Bible," "Wealth," "the Customary," "the Sensual," and "the True Worshipers." The evening discourses have been on "Certain Distinguishing Foundation Principles of Modern Unitarianism." They were thus announced: 1. "The absolute right of individual private judgment, even over creeds, churches, and bibles;" 2. "The absolute goodness of God, denying all in church decretals, creeds, sacred scriptures, and religious teachers to the contrary;" 3. "Man not a fallen, but a rising creature, and endowed with a nature adequate to all his Creator requires of him;" 4. "The non-necessity of mediators between man and God;" 5. "That religious truth has not been given to man by miraculous means, but natural, and is gradually improved and increased as is all other truth;" 6. "That all is of God, so-called evil as so-called good, and that all is working together for ultimate universal holiness and happiness;" 7. "That faithfulness to individual light, not acceptance of second-hand beliefs, is the true ground of salvation and acceptance with God." On the whole the courses have been well attended, many strangers having been present.

CORRESPONDENCE.

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Letters, articles of intelligence, &c., should be addressed to the Unitarian Herald Office, New Cannon Chambers, 55, Market-street, and not to the private addresses of the Editors.

T. W.—Received.

THE PAPACY.

To the Editors.—Your correspondent. Mr. Steele, is unfortunate in his attempt to define a "Protestant." Things are often much better understood than defined. At any rate I have no doubt but the majority of your readers understood perfectly who the Protestants were to whom I referred in my last.

I am a Protestant—perhaps not a very orthodox one, but one nevertheless; and yet I am not "actively opposed to the principle and practice of the Church of Rome." In fact there is much within the Church of Rome both in principle and practice, but particularly the latter, which I heartily endorse, and which I wish were more generally adopted by Protestants. I would recommend Mr. Steele to make himself acquainted with what some eminent Scotchmen are saying just now—Mr. Macrae for instance.

I would at the same time ask him to consider for a moment what is the cause of all the divisions on doctrinal points amongst Protestants—for they have all got their diverse doctrines from the same source, and I doubt not by that same reverent and prayerful seeking which Mr. Steele recommends. Does this state of things not point conclusively to this—either that the Book is not infallible, or, if it is, some one possessing infallibility is needed to proclaim its infallibility and tell the truth to this benighted world?

Rather than be forced to the necessity of an infallible man, I prefer to believe that the Book is not infallible—as a whole, of course.

Undoubtedly it is infallible, like anything or anybody else, when it speaks the truth—and I am inclined to think that a good deal more of it would have passed for truth, and have met with the general approval of mankind, if the theologians could have been satisfied with a little less definition.

In matters metaphysical—of which the Bible writers so often treat—too much definition is not good. We get very little of definition in the Bible.

Here are all our sharp dividing lines;—the Protestant Episcopalians preach this, the Protestant Baptist that, and the Protestant Methodist something else—not mind you, different departments of the same truth, but directly opposite doctrines on questions, we are told, of more than life and death.

It is impossible for them all to be the truth. Here is a difficulty which no believer in Bible infallibility as a whole can possibly get over. So long as he believes in it, he is bound, if he will follow his belief to its logical conclusion, to go in for an infallible authority; his Book-Pope is useless without his Man-Pope.

I regret to observe the advocacy of State interference in matters theological. If the Church of Rome chooses to be unscrupulous let her be so. If she elects to "cast out devils by Beelzebub" we may be certain that her doom is sealed.

No evil can exist eternally. Sooner or later it will work its own destruction. I would therefore advise your correspondents not to be over anxious about the Church of Rome in this particular.

Many Protestants would find it much to their advantage to imitate the patient industry and devotion to duty which characterises so many of the Roman Catholic clergy.—Yours respectfully,
Near Wigan, Mar. 30, 1878.

PAUL PARTINGTON.

COMING WEEK.

BOLTON: COMMISSION-STREET.—On Wednesday, Thursday, Friday, and Saturday, Bazaar.

BIRMINGHAM.—On Sunday, annual sermons, special services.

Preachers, morning, Mr. G. R. Twinn; evening, Mr. W. Clarke.

MANCHESTER: STRANGEWAYS UNITARIAN FREE CHURCH.—

On Saturday, annual service of Mutual Improvement Society.

MANCHESTER: UPPER BROOK-STREET.—On Sunday, annual sermons in aid of Lower Mosley-street Schools, morning and evening, by the Rev. J. Page Hopps.

BIRTHS.

JAMES.—On the 1st inst., at 4, Park Villas, Aberdare, the wife of the Rev. W. James, B.A., of a daughter.

NETTLEFOLD.—On Monday, the 1st inst., at 20, York Terrace, Regent's Park, the wife of Frederick Nettlefold, Esq., of a son.

MARRIAGES.

ELLIS—BENNETT.—On the 27th March, at Unity Church, Islington, by the Rev. E. R. Grant, of Maidstone, Henry Charles Ellis, of Gabriel's Hill, Maidstone, to Mary Bennett, eldest daughter of W. C. Bennett, LL.D., Hyde Vale, Greenwich.

JECKES—MARTIN.—On the 28th March, at the Congregational Chapel, Trowbridge, by the Rev. W. J. Odgers, uncle of the bride, Charles Jeckes, Esq., of Northampton, to Anna, youngest daughter of the late Rev. Samuel Martin.

DEATH.

HUGHES.—On the 2nd inst., at Cefn Coed, his native place, the Rev. William Hughes, late Unitarian minister at Pen-mannawr, North Wales, leaving a widow and five young children.

NEW SUNDAY SCHOOLS

FOR

KING'S LYNN FREE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The Committee of above Church make this appeal to the Unitarian public from sheer necessity, having been bitterly persecuted, and refused the key of a hired school, by those opposed to Free Christianity, without even a week's notice. £500 will build Sunday-school, class-rooms, and pay off a small balance from Church building fund—having land enough behind the Church for the new schools. For three months the children met in the garden of the superintendent of the school, and are now crammed in a room, not half large enough. The Committee most gratefully acknowledge past support, and are hopeful that this appeal will meet with a similar response.

Subscriptions may be sent to

The Rev. BARNARD GISBY, Pastor.

Mr. E. GRUNDY, Treasurer, } to the Church.

Mr. J. FOX, Secretary,

Mr. E. GREEN, Treasurer,

Mr. A. P. ALLEN, Secretary } to the Building Committee

and Supt. of Sunday-school

SUBSCRIBERS' NAMES.

	£	s.	d.
The Mayor of Lynn.....	2	2	0
Mrs. Aickman	0	5	0
Mr. J. W. Aikin	5	0	0
Mr. A. P. Allen	50	0	0
Mrs. C. W. Alexander, Dereham.....	0	10	6
Mrs. C. W. Alexander	0	10	6
Mr. J. Bayes	10	0	0
Mr. G. Bridges	1	1	0
Mr. J. Barton	1	1	0
Mr. T. Cook	2	2	0
Mr. Cawston	1	0	0
Mr. J. Fox	1	0	0
Mr. J. W. Dowson, Norwich	1	0	0
Mr. E. Green	25	0	0
Mrs. E. Green	5	0	0
Rev. W. Gaskell	5	0	0
Rev. B. Gishy	1	1	0
Mr. E. Grundy	10	0	0
Mr. Girling, Wisbeach	0	10	0
Mrs. Girling, Wisbeach	0	10	0
Mr. James Hopgood, London	10	0	0
Mrs. Haddock, Horncastle	0	5	0
Mr. T. A. Jackson	1	1	0
Mr. E. C. Knight	5	0	0
Mr. R. Leach	1	0	0
Mr. J. H. Nokes, jun.	1	0	0
Dr. Pearce, Wisbeach	1	0	0
Mr. W. Rippling	10	0	0
Rev. E. Sharpe, London	10	0	0
Rev. E. Spears (to collect)	10	0	0
Mr. J. Towler	0	10	0
Mrs. J. Towler	0	10	0
Mr. Thomas, Bristol	2	2	0

KNUTSFORD.—The NEXT TERM will begin in Miss ARDERN'S School on Monday, April 29th.

HOLLY BANK SCHOOL, BIRKDALE, SOUTHPORT.—The NEXT QUARTER will begin on Thursday, April 4th.
B. TEMPLAR, F.R.A.S., Principal.

SOUTHPORT.—BOARDING SCHOOL for GIRLS.—The NEW QUARTER begins April 2nd.—For prospectus, apply to Miss CURTIS, Principal, Westbourne, Grosvenor Road, Birkdale.

EDUCATION.—BATH.—MRS. JEFFERY'S SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.—Mrs. Jeffery RECEIVES as BOARDERS girls attending the Classes of the Bath High School. The next term will commence April 30th.—9, Norfolk Crescent, Bath.

HOPE LEA, HEATON NORRIS, STOCKPORT.—HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.—Conducted by Dr. and Mrs. MARCUS, assisted by able masters. The majority of the Senior Girls who passed the last Oxford Examinations in the Manchester centre came from this school.

SCHOOL TRANSFER.—A long-established and well-known Boarding School for Boys may be shortly TRANSFERRED to a competent person with means: capital required, £800: a good opening for a Unitarian or Liberal Churchman, or for a proprietary school.—Apply, with real name and address, to Scholastics, at the office of this paper.

LINDOW GROVE SCHOOL, ALDERLEY, EDGE.—The premises have been erected for a First-class BOARDING SCHOOL, with extensive grounds for recreation, in a delightful country district. Every effort is made to educate the character, to have work done thoroughly, and to adapt it to the pupil's capacity, physical and mental. References and prospectus on application. JAMES WOOD.

BROOK HOUSE, KNUTSFORD, CHESHIRE.—BOARDING SCHOOL for GIRLS, conducted by Mrs. FRANK SHAWCROSS, assisted by Resident English and Foreign Governesses. Teachers of eminence attend for instruction in Music, Singing, Harmony, Drawing, Dancing, &c. Prospectus and references forwarded on application.

MOUNT VERNON HIGH SCHOOL, NOTTINGHAM.—Established 1864.

Mr. EDWIN SMITH, M.A., with competent assistance, thoroughly prepares Boys for College, the University Local Examinations, or for Business. For prospectus address Sandy Knoll, Forest Road, Nottingham.

EDUCATION IN GERMANY.

Miss M. WAGNER (17, Heinenstrasse, Weisbaden, Germany), who has passed the Prussian State Examination, and possesses the experience of several first-class English schools, receives a limited number of YOUNG LADIES for Private Education, or to visit the excellent College of the town, with home assistance. Climate very healthy, with mild winter. Hot and other mineral springs. English and German references. For terms and further particulars address as above.

YORK: 26, HIGH PETER GATE.—Miss AMY HERRING begs to announce that she has OPENED, at the above address, a SCHOOL for the Instruction of Young Ladies in all branches, comprising a first-class education with liberal views. References kindly permitted by the following:—Dr. G. Vance Smith, The Parade, Carmarthen; the Rev. C. Welbelove, 38, Monkgate, York; Miss Swaine, 1, The Crescent, York.—Terms on application.

Pupils are prepared for the University Examinations, several having passed most successfully.

Price 6d., post free from the writer.
A CONTINENTAL HOLIDAY.
By W. HARRISON, Swinton, Manchester.

Just published, price 2d.
A GOOD OLD AGE: a Sermon preached in Cross-street Chapel, Manchester, March 3, 1878. By WILLIAM GASKELL, M.A.

Just Published, 2nd Edition, sewed, 6d.
THE PASSOVER MOON. By HENRY HAWKES, B.A., F.L.S. 2nd Edition, sewed, price 6d. post free.

WILLIAMS & NORRIS, 14, Henrietta-street, Covent Garden, London, and 20, South Frederick-street, Edinburgh.

THE TRUTHSEEKER, Edited by the Rev. JOHN PAGE HOPPS, and published on the first of every month, is a free and unsectarian Review of all books and events relating to the development of religious life and liberty in the Christian Church. Every number contains original lectures and essays, together with reviews of present and permanent interest. Price Threepence.—London: Williams and Norris, Covent Garden. Manchester: Johnson and Rawson, 89, Market-street; and John Heywood, Deansgate.

Now Ready, No. 28
YOUNG DAYS, for April: Numerously Illustrated. Price One Penny.

Contents: A Chat about Eagles—Ira Mayhew, by Mrs. Herbert Martin, author of Daisy Root, &c.—The Approach of Spring—Our New Pet—Kindness to Animals—The Discontented Boy—This is not a Bad World—Perils of the Sea—Edystone Lighthouse—The Parsees—My Dog Rough—Puzzle Bag.
Published by the Sunday-school Association, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand.

LONDON: SHIRLEY'S TEMPERANCE HOTEL, 37, Queen's Square, Bloomsbury. Beds from 1s. 6d. Plain Breakfast or Tea, 1s. 3d.

E. IRELAND begs to call attention to all lovers of Old Dob Lane Chapel to his PHOTOGRAPHIC VIEWS of the old spot. Large size, 9in. by 7in. (mounted), 3s. 6d.; carte size, 6d. each.—E. IRELAND, 105, Market-street.

RUPTURES.—Exhibition Prize Medal, 1862. was awarded to R. WESTBURY, inventor and sole maker of the IMPERCEPTIBLE CURATIVE TRUSS.
Deformity Instruments, Artificial Limbs, Crutches, Elastic Stockings, and Ladies' Supporting Belts, Chest Expansors for round shoulders, &c., 26, Old Millgate, Manchester.

THE DINNER SHERRY. 24s. PER DOZEN.

The season of the year having arrived when light wines, so agreeable in warmer weather, give place to those of a more generous character, we beg to draw attention to the above wine. For years we have given great attention to keep up and improve its quality, and those who require a delicate, clean-flavoured sherry, free from spirit, we submit it with confidence, and ask comparison with wine usually sold at 30s.

A considerable saving can be made taking Quarter-cask, 27 gallons, at £14s. 5s.; cask included. Octave, 13½ gallons, at £7. 5s. Samples can be tasted. Price list of 32 Sherries and other Wine free by post.

JAMES SMITH & COMPANY, Wine Merchants, 26, Market-street, Manchester; also at Liverpool and Birmingham.

Printed for the Proprietors by WILLIAM EVANS, of Apsley Villa 377, Waterloo Road, Caeatham Hill, at his Printing Offices, No. 3, Cross-street, Parish of Manchester; and Published by JOHN PHILLIPS, at New Cannon Chambers, 55, Market-street, in said Parish of Manchester.—London Agents: Messrs. Smart and Allen, 2, London-house Yard, Paternoster Row.—Friday, April 5, 1878.

DOINGS AND SAYINGS.

Lord Melbourne took great interest in theological questions, and found infinite amusement in startling orthodox convictions from what he used to call their unsafe roost.

The Pavilion at Brighton is still the Palace of Contrasts. On one night Mrs. Scott-Siddons enchants her audience by her refinement and passions; on another, a person in a monk's dress preaches the Gospel "for Jesus only," at 4s., 2s. 6d., and 1s. admission, with opportunity to buy his photograph if you are so disposed.

M. Renan, rumour says, intends to compose a sequel to Tempests; but we really think he had better leave Shakespeare and Shakespeare's subjects alone. M. Renan is a very clever man, no doubt, and so was Davenant a very clever man, and Dryden a still cleverer. Yet the unlucky performance in which Davenant and Dryden took liberties with the Tempest remains one of the most disastrous failures in English literature.

Ayrshire possesses in a Dr. Skae a specialist in the subject of insanity. Dr. Skae declares that a man who has an impulse to kill another, and resists it, is insane; while if he has an impulse to kill himself, and resists it, he is sane. He does not pretend to understand this singular state of things. If a man has once killed himself, it seems obvious that we know no more about his impulse, or about what may be called his subsequent state of mind.

Lord Houghton, Mr. W. M. Torrens, M.P., tells us, blamed the Whigs for not having made Sydney Smith a bishop. If ever the facetious Canon deserved that promotion it was for the rebuke he is said to have administered to the habit of profane swearing which was fashionable in the days of the Regency, and which Lord Melbourne never laid aside. "My Lord," he said, "let us suppose everything and everybody to be d—d, and come to the point."

The Methodist Recorder says that a worthy vicar who was supposed to have liberal and evangelical principles was recently asked to be present at a Wesleyan missionary anniversary held in a public building; and that he was somewhat ruffled by being supposed to be capable of such an indiscretion. He is said to have quoted Punch, no doubt unconsciously, "One must draw the line somewhere;" and then, as if he feared his stiff refusal might seem too ungracious, to have distilled a drachm or so of concession: "I believe, however, that your society has done some good, especially in the South Sea Islands."

Mr. Justice Lopes, remarking at the Liverpool Assizes on the difficulty of deciding when a man was drunk, said he once read as proof of the drunkenness of a person the following lines:—

Not drunk is he who from the floor
Can rise again and drink some more;
But drunk is he who prostrate lies,
And who can neither drink nor rise."

On one occasion he asked a person what was the difference between an intoxicated person and a drunken one; and he answered, "A man is intoxicated when he knows what he does, and does not care; and he is drunk when he neither knows nor cares what he does."

"I may well affirm," said Professor Virchow, at the German Association of Naturalists at Munich, "here in the very midst of the conference of students of nature, that all human knowledge is but fragmentary. None of us can come here and with equal accuracy represent every department and take part in the discussions of each. . . . In other provinces we all find ourselves in the predicament of half-knowledge. . . . If each of us were sufficiently clear on this point many a man would smite upon his breast, and confess that it is a serious matter to draw universal conclusions in respect of the history of all things, while the theorist has not yet himself completely mastered the very materials from which he attempts to draw these conclusions."

Mr. W. M. Torrens, M.P., in his Memoir of Lord Melbourne, mentions that Dr. Arnold had strong claims on the Whig Ministry, but he omits to refer to his pamphlet on Church Reform, which was probably the obstacle to his promotion. He had suggested that the parish churches in England should be used for all forms of Christian worship in rotation. Such opinions were extreme—as they are now—and he was somewhat aggressive in the display of them. Melbourne thought his theological opinions excellent, and agreed with him on church property in Ireland; but when asked why Arnold was not appointed, he once banteringly replied, "What have Tory Churchmen ever done for me that I should give them such a handle against my Government?" And there cannot be a doubt that he believed that to make Arnold a bishop would have cost the Administration very dear.

In 1726 India was visited by the first Danish missionary, and 1792 the Baptist missions were commenced. In 1793 Carey began his translation of the New Testament, and before his death had set his hand to no less than forty translations of the Bible. Since then the Bible has been translated into 212 languages, spoken by 850 millions of human beings, and distributed at the rate of nearly twelve every minute, and each year the work is being accelerated, so that very soon there will not be a language on the earth in which the Bible will not have been translated, nor a single country in which it will not be widely disseminated. Thirty-nine of these languages never had a written form until the missionaries created it. At present, with 240 millions of people, there were 240,000 persons numbered as Christians in India. Last year the Baptist society received 300 or 400 additions, and the other different societies must have received from 14,000 to 15,000 amongst the people of that land.

Vice-Chancellor Malins has a poor idea of clergymen as men of business. The other day a barrister was moving the court to appoint three trustees for certain property to be held for the benefit of a widow and her children, and in accordance with his instructions he suggested the names of three gentlemen for the approval of the court, all of whom happened to be in holy orders. "No," said his lordship, "I won't appoint one of them. I will never appoint a clergyman as a trustee. I know better. My experience is that they are utterly unfitted by the nature of their lives for the transaction of business matters. They have more to do with the next world than this. You must make further inquiries, and find three laymen to undertake the trust." "Has your lordship a preference for any particular class of the laity?" inquired the counsel, rather facetiously. "No," replied the Vice-Chancellor, "only that they mustn't be women."

AMERICAN NOTES.

We have received the first number (for March) of a quite novel undertaking—"The Pamphlet Mission, for Freedom, Fellowship, and Character in Religion;" a semi-monthly magazine, which its promoters hope may go, as Robert Collyer says, in the "Greeting" with which it opens, "like a benediction among Liberal thinkers all through the West." In this greeting, the purpose of the Pamphlet is thus described:—

It has been a cherished thought with some of us for a long time that some such pamphlet might be printed, as the good seed of Sunday services where Liberal thinkers have none, and want to meet for worship and a sermon. If the Pamphlet Mission should strike this fine use, the editors will be glad to print a short service in connection with it, which may be used for this purpose, and will be glad to hear, at any rate, of a desire for such services far and wide among the people, and do their best to meet it. The present number contains a sermon by Dr. Collyer, on the motto—"Not Retreat, but Victory," in which he pleads for the true meaning and worth of vicarious suffering and sacrifice. Taking for his text John xii., 27, the preacher says of Christ, "He has not bought us off, he has bought us in." We find out through his passion the meaning of our own; through his faith, what faith can do; through his God-likeness how we may become God-like. It pleased Him in whom all fulness dwells to make the Captain of our Salvation perfect through suffering, and as the Captain was made perfect so may the poorest private." A department of the Pamphlet devoted to "Current Thought" is occupied, in this number, with an exposition of "The Liberal's Mission," by W. C. G., which initials it is easy to fill out with the name of "William C. Gannett." Half a dozen pages of Notes and News complete this beginning of an experiment to which we heartily wish God-speed.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

PROFESSOR FLINT ON PANTHEISM.

Professor Flint's lecture on "Pantheism" was, it is said, decidedly the ablest he has yet delivered on Anti-theistic Theories. He said that the system had obviously one merit, which was sufficient to account for its wide acceptance wherever Christianity was not realised in its spirit and power, but was merely accepted by the intellect as a creed. It was the expression of a sense of Divine presence in the universe, and further helped towards devout emotion by sacrificing all to the one absolute existence. But Pantheism most signally failed on account of its non-recognition of the moral relations on which the communion of a sinful man with a holy God ought to rest. Religion supposes faith, love, and hope, but Pantheism does away with these when it does away with the personality of God, for no people can ever conceive or worship an impersonal being. Thus, most Pantheists are also hero worshippers. The lecture abounded in cogent argumentation and philosophic insight, which will be duly appreciated when the course is submitted to the public in a published form.

STAND.—A petition against war between England and Russia, numerously signed by adult members of the Unitarian congregation, was presented to the House of Commons on Monday last by Mr. Harcastle, M.P.

BOOKS AND AUTHORS.

A Continental Holiday: Described in a series of Lectures. By W. Harrison, of Swinton, Manchester.

A few years ago the idea of travelling on the Continent of Europe would never have crossed the mind of anyone who could not boast of a long and well-filled purse. The thought of spending a few weeks in Belgium, Germany, Switzerland, and France would have been regarded as a wild dream by the minister of a small country congregation or a well-paid clerk in a counting house. But railways and steamboats have changed everything so completely, that with a little judicious economy it is quite as easy to spend a holiday abroad as at home. We do not mean to say that English, Scotch, or Irish scenery will not well repay the traveller, but we do emphatically assert that if any one wishes to have a real and entire change not only of scene but also of manners and customs, he cannot do better than follow Mr. Wm. Harrison's example, and start off as soon as he can get away next summer for a pilgrimage across the channel. How it can be done pleasantly and to good purpose, and yet at a surprisingly small cost, the little book, whose name stands at the head of this article, will tell, and will tell so agreeably and instructively, that we cordially recommend them to procure a copy of Mr. Harrison's unpretentious little pamphlet as soon as possible, and read it as a ready-made plan for a summer trip, which will be trebly delightful. The next best thing to going to Switzerland is scheming how to get there, and the delight when there will exceed every expectation, while ex parte crede, the remembrance of the journey will be a never-failing spring of recollection that will remain precious for a life-time. Mr. Harrison has a pleasant knack of telling his tale graphically, and with a subcurrent of humour which makes the description of his tour agreeable reading. Having gone over the greatest part of the ground he describes, we can recommend him as an accurate guide, and as one who never raises expectations which will not be even more than fulfilled. If any reader of the Herald is doubting as to how he should spend a summer holiday, let him read Mr. Harrison's "Continental Holiday," and we feel almost sure he will be tempted to see whether he cannot spend a few weeks as agreeably as did our author.

The Congregationalist for April. London: Hodder and Stoughton.

THE Rev. J. Gilbert, in an article on "Three Views of the Atonement," reviews the essay of the Rev. S. Cox in that gentleman's recently published Expository Discourses. Mr. Cox, having taken up several aspects of the atonement, comes practically to the conclusion that the death of Christ is "a great appeal of the Divine love to the human race." Mr. Gilbert cannot rest in this conclusion, and contends that to stop here is to rob the Cross of much of its truth and to weaken proportionally its moral power. Mr. J. A. Clapham puts in a plea for Gothic Congregational Churches in a pithy little paper. "Three Worthies of Oxfordshire" is a resuscitation of the memory and a tribute to the varied worth of the Rev. William Brice, rector of Henley-on-Thames, who was one of the ejected, of Rev. John Gyles, and Rev. Humphrey Gainsborough, ministers of the congregation that met in a beechwood near the village of Harpsden, about a mile from Henley, after the ejection of Mr. Brice. The Rev. T. C. Finlayson continues his pleasant comments on the Golden Texts of the Sunday-school Union Lessons. A writer on "France and the Gospel" gives some facts to show that considerable additions are being made to the Protestant Church in France. We agree with the writer that the most formidable obstacles to be overcome are Popish superstition and the infidelity which are the natural reaction from this. "The Parochial System" is a very keen discussion of that particular feature of the Establishment which is so often presented to us as a blessing to the country. Some brief remarks on the Increase to the Episcopate, the new Burials Compromise, the Society of the Holy Cross, and the "S. P. G." make up the ecclesiastical affairs of the month, and with them the number concludes.

The Expositor for April. London: Hodder and Stoughton.

THE first paper opens a series upon the Prophet Jeremiah by the Dean of Canterbury, who thinks that the personal character of no one of the prophets stands out so plainly and distinctly as that of Jeremiah, and that the interest of the prophecy centres in the man. The Dean treats now of the parentage and call of Jeremiah, and points out with great clearness the remarkable contrast which exists between his call and those of Isaiah and Ezekiel. Canon Perowne has a careful, exhaustive, and, on the whole, large-minded exposition of Matt. xi., 27, in the course of which he frankly and thankfully admits that revelations of God have not been confined to the Jewish race, though bestowed upon it in a larger degree than upon others. "Teachers like Plato and Socrates had an insight and a wisdom not their own." "It is indeed impossible to read the sayings of Indian sages containing so many striking parallels to our Lord's words in the Gospels, or the Divine guesses of Plato, without feeling that God did not leave Himself without witness in human hearts, as well as in the order of creation." The editor gives us another of his valuable and suggestive elucidations of the Book of Job, chap. xii. being the one now under consideration. Professor Roberts is not convinced by Dr. Sandy as to the language used by Christ, and still maintains that Christ usually spoke in Greek. Canon Farrar, in an article just now of special, and even absorbing interest, brings together from Rabbinical lore what he calls a register of facts on the Jewish eschatologies. We hope to refer to this article at some length on an early occasion, and, meanwhile, we can only say that it is a helpful contribution to the now-prevailing discussion of the subject of future punishment, and it shows what little ground there is in either Old Testament or Talmudic literature for the traditional belief.

The University Magazine for April. London, Hurst and Blackett.

Readers of the University cannot help turning first to the "Contemporary Portrait," for the number falls open at the photograph, and the photograph is always a good one. This month the subject is the one we all want to see, the Earl of Rosebery, whose firm, intellectual, and manly features are given with artistic breadth and simplicity. The letter-press, describing the points of character and career of one of the most thorough-going young liberals, or, say, radicals, will be still more attractive not only to the gossiping world but to those who have at heart the good of their fellows by its brief and admirable notice of the lady who is now Countess of Rosebery. A special value attaches to the present number from its opening article, Mr. Ruskin's Autobiographical Reminiscence of his first editor, the late William Henry Harrison. But altogether the magazine for April is exceptionally good, as the following list from the table of contents will show:—The Ethic Ideas of the Eddu, a first paper, by Karl Blind; Middle Class Education, part iii, by Alsager Henry Hill; The Other Half (of course the better and fairer); Home-side, of a Scientific Mind, which here comes to its conclusion; The Empire, and Ireland's place in it, by E. S. Robertson; On the Religious Imagination in the East, by F. R. Conder, C.E.; Human Harriers, by Thomas Shore; the continuations of serial stories; some good verses; the new department, "Spirit of the Universities," which is well-sustained; and notes on current literature.

The Rev. A. A. Miner, D.D., of Boston, Mass., ex-president of Tufts College, and the successor of the Rev. Hosea Ballou, who largely shaped the theology of American Universalists, is about to publish his "Lectures on Endless Punishment." It will make a small book, but will embody much information. The topics are:—1. Endless Punishment: The Old Forts taken. 2. Endless Punishment: The New Forts indefensible. 3. Endless Punishment: Is he who seeks defences for it a Christian? 4. Endless Punishment: If moral in its influence, why did God reject it, as a motive to obedience, for at least four thousand years. 5. What Universalism has to say of the Future Life." From the doctor's well known ability we expect an effective as well as a timely book.

EXAMINATIONS IN SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

BY REV. H. ENFIELD DOWSON, B.A.

AFTER the many discussions we have had on the aim of Sunday Schools, and on the question of religious and secular teaching, I am happy to believe that we have come to understand one another pretty well, and that we are all in very near agreement as to the character of our common work and the spirit in which it should be prosecuted. I propose, therefore, to sum up the sentiments as to our Sunday School work in which I think we are all at one; and then to make the inquiry whether or no Sunday-school examinations are in harmony with these sentiments.

In the first place, I fancy we are all agreed as to the proposition that the work of the Sunday school is religious. But this is rather a vague agreement. What do we mean by religion? I believe we all really mean very much the same thing. We do not interpret religion in the narrow sense in which it used to be interpreted. Religion to us is not to be found only in the reading of one book, the Bible. So, when we say that a Sunday school should be religious, we do not mean that all the time should be spent in reading the Bible. We mean something very different. To us religion is that which brings us nearer to God, which touches our hearts with something of His spirit, and fills our minds with deeper consciousness of His ways; and renders our lives a living sacrifice to Him. And where do we find this religion? Whence does its influence reach us? Certainly from the Bible. There is no book in all the world which has such power to lay hold upon the spirit of humanity and lift it up to God. It is full of the deeds and thoughts of many of the best and greatest of mankind. There are examples there which fire the human soul with a longing to follow them; there are whispers as of a heavenly voice of Divine righteousness and love breathing on many a page. It is a book which does more than any other to pitch the tabernacle of God amongst men. But, God be praised, it is only one, after all, of countless religious influences that beset every child of God. God dwells in every age and in every clime; His Spirit is everywhere abroad. He is the Universal God of truth and goodness, and every true word that has been spoken anywhere is an echo of His voice, and every good deed that has been done is a manifestation of His holiness. Nature, with its beauty and its majesty, is all His, and to know its laws is to read there the writing of His hand. God speaks to us from all things around, above, and within us; and His Spirit pours itself into us from every side of His great besetting life. If we then ask where religious lessons can be found, the answer is wide as God's universe itself. Where? Why, everywhere. There is not a truth but lets fresh light into the soul from the great Sun of infinite power and wisdom and righteousness; there is nothing good in earth or heaven but is born of the inspiration of His Spirit. What should be taught, in a Sunday school? We can only answer, "Anything you please that is true and good." If you teach science, you withdraw the veil from God's face in nature: if you teach history, you teach the workings of His Spirit in humanity; if you untold the story of noble human lives, you touch your scholars with a new sympathy for the divine goodness that shone forth in them. The difficulty is not to say what may be taught, but to say what may not be taught. I myself hate the old distinction between things sacred and profane, between things secular and religious. In God's universe there should be nothing profane and nothing through which religion cannot breathe.

I think there is but one rule as to what should or should not be taught, and that is: that each teacher should take the lesson in which his own heart and soul and mind are most deeply interested; depend upon it that is the lesson into which he will pour the most religion, even as it is that from which he will draw out the largest measure of divine truth.

And this brings me to that which is the one thing needful for religious teaching, namely, religion in the teacher. If the teacher does not love God, and feel burning in his breast the earnest longing to inspire his scholars with a divine life, it makes little difference what he teaches. The Bible in his hands will be no more religious than the multiplication table. But if he goes to his class with a heart that overflows with religious earnestness, and if it breathes in every word and action of his own life, why then he may set his class an addition sum or a copy, and the living spirit of God that dwells in him will shine forth on them in his presence amongst them. This is the root of the matter. If God's Spirit lives in books that men have written, and in the beauties of the nature that God has created, it lives most of all in the pure hearts and earnest minds of living men and women. Contact with good and noble children of God, the grasp of their hand, the meeting of their eye, and the listening to their voice, this is the profoundest of religious influences. And the teacher who, with deep love to God and his young brothers and sisters in his heart, goes about amongst his scholars, not as their Sunday teacher only, but as their constant friend, sympathising in their joys and sorrows, and ever trying to promote their happiness, will, without a word said about religion, do more to draw out their affections, and to lead them to the God he serves, than if he spent his whole life in delivering to them religious discourses.

I think I have stated that upon which we are all agreed. I now proceed to ask how far examinations in Sunday schools are in harmony with the spirit of what has been laid down.

What is it that examinations do? They act as an incentive to teachers and scholars to teach and to learn with greater diligence and accuracy. They involve, on the part of those who go in for them, real application to the subject taught and learnt. They enforce the selection of subjects and their consecutive study. Clearly, they mean the doing of more, and more steady, work. As far as examinations operate, they operate in the way of making the teachers prepare their lessons more carefully, and the scholars give their minds to them more earnestly. Well, it may be said, this is not religion. It is intellectual exercise that is stimulated; the heart is not touched; the religious affections are not aroused. Supposing that I grant this, for the sake of argument, I reply that, at all events, there is nothing to chill religious warmth, and to stifle the better feelings of the heart, in trying to rouse the mind to greater industry. If you say that examinations alone will not make Sunday Schools religious, I agree with you; but you cannot possibly affirm that they will take the religion out of them. How can religion be hindered in its growth by a more eager study of things that are good and true? Is it possible that the more scholars learn about God's universe, and His dealings with mankind, the less they will love Him? If so, examinations will stifle religion in Sunday Schools, and not else. Or, to put it in another way: Is it possible that the more carefully teachers prepare their lessons, and the more interesting they make them, the less will be their religious influence? Will teachers lose their hold on the scholar's affections just in proportion as they are led to improve the excellence of the lessons that they give them? If so, examinations will destroy religion in Sunday schools, and not else. Now, I am at a loss to conceive how anyone can make such extraordinary affirmations as these. I admit fully and completely that if a teacher is not religious to begin with, if his heart is not in the work of lifting up and strengthening and beautifying the lives of the children of God whom he has to teach—I admit fully, in that case, that any amount of examining will not put religion into his work. But I affirm, without the slightest hesitation, that if religion be there in the teacher's heart, the more earnest and faithful and diligent he is made in his teaching, the more strongly will his religion make itself felt by his scholars. They will be more attached to a teacher in proportion as he gives them lessons of greater interest; they will esteem him more highly, the more he teaches them; they will be more grateful to him, the more the value of the instruction they receive from him. Which do you think would be likely to have the greatest influence with scholars, a teacher who never let them pass a dull moment, but kept their minds constantly aroused and awake with fresh stores of knowledge brought out for their benefit; or a teacher who sent them to sleep with lessons from which they learned nothing new? You cannot doubt that the influence of a teacher must increase with the care and fulness with which he prepares his lessons: and if, accordingly, it be true that examinations tend to keep teachers up to the mark, they most unquestionably add to the hold which they gain upon their scholars.

And, as to the scholars themselves, the case to my mind is equally clear. Not only will the increased diligence with which they study, and the increased measure of what they learn, not prejudice the religious influence of their Sunday school, but it will act all the other way. Earnestness, and industry—these are virtues which bring a child of God somewhat nearer to its Heavenly Father; and surely knowledge, which is nothing else than acquaintance with the methods of God's Providence, is all religious. If, then, examinations increase the industry and the knowledge of scholars who take part in them, they do not diminish—they enlarge the growth of religion in their lives.

There remains one consideration to be looked at, that of the competition which examinations introduce. Well, I am one of those who believe in competition. I believe in the ambition to excel; I know that it has led to some of the noblest deeds and the greatest lives that have ever been witnessed on this earth. I am confident that I am right when I say that a young life in which no high ambition is found, which does not care whether it is better or worse than its neighbours' lives, is a life for which there is vastly little hope, and which is sure to be barren of good fruit. And if there is one good more than another that I look for from examinations, it is that they encourage and stimulate the growth of a desire to excel. He who does not desire it, and strive after it, and work for it, will never do it. The desire cannot be too strong or keen, and anything which can strengthen it is a great boon. But I may be told that examinations introduce a spirit of jealousy. I do not believe it; or, if it be true, it is the fault of those who are jealous, and not of the examinations. What is the natural feeling of one who has been passed by another in excellence? Is it jealousy? Not a bit of it. It is admiration and respect. I have been into many examinations myself, and I never yet had any other feeling towards those who stood higher than myself than a new regard for their attainments and a new pride in their friendship. There is nothing on this earth healthier than friendly emulation. There is nothing meaner or more contemptible than the idea that it must breed jealousy.

For every reason, then, I hold that there is nothing inconsistent between the great principles as to the religious aim and work of Sunday schools, in which we are all agreed, and the examinations recently introduced. I believe that where teacher and scholar work hardest, and where the greatest light of knowledge shines upon their efforts, there God draws the most near; and that so the examinations which increase their diligence do much to quicken their religious life. If the essence of the whole thing, the spirit of God in human hearts, the love binding teachers and scholars to each other and to God as all children of God's great family,—if the earnest religious aim be there, I am as certain as I can feel of anything, that examinations will help it to achieve its high purpose; if it be not there, there is no high purpose to achieve, and examinations can neither make nor mar its success.

Mr. G. W. Rayner Wood, of Singleton, Manchester, has been appointed a magistrate for the county of Lancaster.

WAR.

WAR! War! War! War!
The cry re-echoes from shore to shore
Of this, our Christian land;
A cry for men to unsheathe the sword,
For the demon of battle is abroad,
And the spark to a flame is fanned,
By those who, by word, and deed, and pen,
Prey on the passions and fears of men,
And a madness has filled the air—
A madness that thirsts for a brother's life,
A restless fever of war and strife,
Till we bow 'neath a deep despair;
For men caress the horrible thing,
And songs of praise in its glory sing,
And its mighty deeds rehearse,
As though 'twere an angel from heaven that came,
Instead of a devil of sin and shame—
A blessing, instead of a curse.

War! War! War! War!
As they glibly talk the subject o'er,
Do they think of what it means?
Do they think of the heaps of mangled slain
Bestrewing the horrible battle plain,
Of the ghastly, terrible scenes?
Of the dying soldiers' pitiful cry
For help, when no human help is nigh,
And, mixed with the cannon's roar,
The groan of the dying, the barbarous yell,
The things that make up that earthly hell,
The glorious field of war?
Of the widow and children, whose piteous moan
Rises aloft from their cold hearth-stone;
Of the mother who mourns her boy;
Of the maiden, who weeps for a lover slain,
The touch of whose hand shall never again
Thrill her whole soul with joy?
Of the houseless, hungry, suffering band
In every city throughout the land,
Crying in vain for food,
While wealth and treasure—a costly price—
Are offered up as a sacrifice
On the cruel altar of blood?

War! War! War! War!
Treading in footsteps steeped in gore,
Bringing famine and misery;
Lighting the earth with a lurid flame,
And making even Christ's holy name
But a ghastly mockery.

Would that we all who profess that name
Would ponder well on the sin and shame,
On the terrible guilt, before,
With a false desire and selfish aim,
And a feverish thirst for that thing called fame,
We plunge in the sea of war.

April 2, 1878.

ALFRED C. JEWITT.

The Unitarian Herald.

FRIDAY, APRIL 12, 1878.

THE RIGHT OF VERY PRIVATE JUDGMENT.

Much amusement has been caused by the curious position which the Rev. Fergus Ferguson now occupies in the Scottish United Presbyterian Church. He was one of a committee appointed at last year's annual Synod to consider the question of revising the Confession of Faith. But, being one of those who see most clearly the necessity for its revision, he stated his opinion from the pulpit. For this the Presbytery suspended him from his ministerial charge. At the same time his fellow committee-men have expressed their confidence in him, and he remains among the select scholars and divines who may press upon the Supreme Ecclesiastical Court whatever view of revision they think proper. It is an old maxim that law-makers should not be law-breakers, but it is a new situation for a law-breaker to be set on high that he may suggest alterations in the law which has condemned him. From another point of view the ways of Church Courts will be seen to differ considerably from those of the secular world. It is plain that a matter which may be fully discussed in a duly appointed Synod's committee must not be whispered to the people, "who," as a scripture says (for we may quote a text, like our neighbours), "knowing not the law, are cursed." It is the boast of the United Presbyterians to be free from the delusions of a connection between Church and State. They render to Cæsar the things which are Cæsar's, and to God the things which are God's. Presumably, it is an outcome of their discriminating thoroughness that they render to the Synod the things which are the Synod's, and to the congregation the things which are the congregation's.

There are people on the south side of the border, however, who appear to have the same general idea as to the impropriety of a revisionist bringing any new-fangled heresies to the ears of the public. Dr. Vance Smith is not under the authority of a divinely-constituted Church Court which might deal with him as the Presbytery did with Fergus Ferguson. But his public conduct is open to all men's judgments; and in the exercise of this liberty, through the correspondents' column of the Carmarthen Express, a Methodist minister, Mr. L. Railton, has taken him to task for his recent lectures on the Bible. Mr. Railton began with challenging Dr. Smith's consistency "in pressing his peculiar views upon others, while retaining his seat as one of the revisers of the Scriptures." Mr. Railton does not object to the presence of Dr. Smith in the New Testament Company; and in a second letter he goes so far as to say: "In common with all your thoughtful readers, I feel that our town is honoured in having the presence in it of so distinguished a scholar." But when Dr. Smith comes forward, "with all the added weight which his position in the Revision Committee gives him," to press his views upon the public, Mr. Railton "cannot allow his action to remain unchallenged."

The thought of the Wesleyan minister obviously is that the public is incapable of taking care of itself. He sees that we have reached a very critical point in the religious history of the country. "What between the spread of Popish superstition on the one hand, and of infidel principles on the other, the spiritual life of the nation is being eaten out." And it is because he believes that the Bible provides the only efficient instrument for the rescue and elevation of the masses that he feels bound to resist "any attempt to lower its Supreme authority over the consciences of men."

Now, we shall not here go into an argument about the Bible; and we do not deny that there is much scepticism abroad as well as much superstition. But whatever might be the result on the side of superstition, it is quite certain that the scepticism would become vastly more dangerous if, in an age like ours, when everything else is discussed in the light of open day, questions which concern the foundations of Church doctrine should be kept close within the cedar panels of the Jerusalem Chamber.

JOHN WESLEY'S LIBERALITY.

In the correspondence to which we have above referred, on Dr. Vance Smith's lectures, Mr. Railton took occasion to hold out a warning to those "who deny the Lord that bought them, bringing on themselves swift destruction." Mr. John de Maine Brown has taken up this point, in the course of a long letter addressed to the same paper, and for the benefit of Wesleyans recalls the example of their great leader in the closing years of his long experience. Referring to Mr. Railton's comminatory warning, he writes:—

In this small hope for the rejectors of his "peculiar views" he (Mr. Railton) is not a whole-souled follower of the large and Christ-like-hearted Wesley. In the maturity of his days he rose to a "cloudless expansion of Christian liberality from which he never afterwards consciously receded," as the following testimonies from his journal, &c., are efficient proofs. The first bearing date, "Dec. 1, 1767," nearly quarter of a century before he passed away:—

"Being alone in the coach, I was considering several points of importance, and this much appeared clear as day: That a man can be saved who cannot express himself properly concerning imputed righteousness; therefore to do this is not necessary to salvation.

"That a man may be saved who has not clear conceptions of it, yea that never heard the phrase; therefore, clear conceptions of it are not necessary to salvation, yea, it is not necessary to use the phrase at all.

"That a pious Churchman, who has not clear conceptions even of justification by faith, may be saved; therefore, clear conceptions even of this are not necessary to salvation.

"That a mystic, who denies justification by faith—Mr. Law, for instance—may be saved. But if so, what becomes of Articulus stantis vel cadentis ecclesiæ? If so, it is high time for us—Projicere ampullas, et sesquipedalia verba [to lay aside bombastic speeches, and words half a yard long], and return to the plain word, He that feareth God and worketh righteousness is accepted with Him."

From one of the latest entries he made in his journal we learn that he lent one of his chapels in Bristol to the Unitarian congregation, and went himself to hear the minister preach. Dare, or would, Mr. Railton be so far a practical follower as to lend his chapel in Carmarthen to Dr. Smith's congregation, and take part in the service? See, too, the touching account given by Crabb Robinson, under date in his Diary (1790), of a service he witnessed a few months only before the death of Wesley: "He addressed the people on liberality of sentiment, and spoke much against refusing to join with any congregation on account of difference of opinion. He said, 'If they do but fear God, work righteousness, and keep his commandments, we have nothing to object to.'"

The Rev. W. B. Hughes.

We regret to announce the death of the Rev. William Beynon Hughes, of Cefncoedycymmer, which took place on the 1st instant, after a protracted illness extending over more than eight years. Mr. Hughes was born on the 17th of February, 1840. He spent the early part of his life under the able instruction of the late Rev. Owen Evans, and while yet a mere youth entered the Carmarthen College. Having passed in this, his alma mater, the usual curriculum of four years in a most praiseworthy manner throughout, he received a cordial invitation to become the minister of Penrhin and Panteg, where the Rev. William Davis is the present respected pastor. From here he removed to Tarbach, North Wales, where he officiated with remarkable success for many years, until at last he was compelled to relinquish the position through ill health. Having utterly broken down, he returned to his native place some six years ago, from which time till Monday evening week he suffered greatly from a weakness in his limbs which had rendered him quite helpless, but he bore all with a patient and serene mind. He leaves a widow, who has lost a good and faithful husband, and five children who have lost a kind and tender-hearted father. And thus has expired one of the sincerest of friends, and one whose life had been most successful and useful throughout. The funeral took place on Saturday afternoon, when the Rev. R. J. Jones, M.A., of Aberdare, a faithful friend of the deceased, officiated.

THE HIBBERT LECTURESHIP.

(From the Jewish Chronicle.)

The announcement that the subject of the Hibbert Lectures this year will be religion in general is a novelty which will be hailed with great satisfaction by all sincere friends of theological science. Hitherto all lectureships for the promotion of religious knowledge or the elucidation of religious subjects were founded in the interest of Christianity. Christianity was assumed to be the only true religion, and lectureships were founded either to prove its truthfulness in the broadest sense or some of its tenets, and able men were selected to institute fresh researches in order to establish anew the thesis handed over to them. The lecturer in fact, whether a Mansell or some other light of the church, was a special pleader. He received a brief from the trustees of the endowment to advocate a certain cause to the best of his ability, and received his fee in one shape or another. It was not for him to inquire into the truthfulness of the thesis. He had simply to find out new arguments in its defence. The results were exceedingly clever pleas, the plausibility of which were sometimes so great that it even misled able theologians, especially as it was nobody's interest to put in a counter plea, as is the case in law courts. The consequence was, in the first place, that religious science was by these lectures not only not elucidated but very often obscured, since the lecturer at the bar of public opinion did not contend for truth but for victory; and, secondly, that unbiassed scholars, when sitting down to read such lectures, partook somewhat of the feeling of the judge when he takes his place on the bench. He knows that the barrister before him, brief in hand, is a special pleader who is engaged for the cause he is about to advocate, and who might probably have managed it as ably had he pleaded on the other side. It is, therefore, no wonder—marvels of industry, erudition, and ingenuity as many of these lectures are—that their efforts should not have been so penetrating and so wide-reaching as the founders of these lectureships no doubt expected. It will be different with the Hibbert Lectureship if the endowment be used for engaging competent scholars, not to establish any special doctrine or to arrive at some foregone conclusion, but to investigate the sources of religion in the human mind, to elucidate its origin, and to follow it in its development among the human family in general, and among the various races in particular, and expound the result arrived at, whatever it may be, in a series of lectures. Such investigations cannot but promote religious science and cannot but inspire confidence. The public will receive them just as it would receive analogous inquiries, say into the origin of the æsthetic idea in man or his idea of justice, and will estimate them at their true value. If such be the object of the Trustees of the Hibbert Lectureship, we may one day have a series of lectures on Judaism and its development, just as Professor Max Müller intends this year to discuss the religious idea as manifested in Hindooism. We look forward to these lectures with great interest, moving as they will on neutral grounds.

MANCHESTER DISTRICT SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION.

THE report for the forthcoming annual meeting of this Association, to be held in Manchester on Good Friday, has been printed for circulation in the various schools of the district, and we give the following abstracts:—

The committee are glad to think that a useful year's work has been done, and although the activities of the year have probably been somewhat less numerous than usual, still plans have been put into operation which must eventually result in permanent good to the Association schools.

Finance.—The income of the Association for the past year, including a balance of £6. 9s. 8d. in hand at its commencement, has been £125. 15s. 2d.; the expenditure £116. 2s. 9d., leaving a balance in hand of £9. 12s. 5d. At the end of 1876 the debt on account of the Publishing Fund had been reduced to about £100. The collections this year and the proceeds of the sale of old stock have enabled your treasurer to pay off all the old debts, and the balance due to him has been reduced to £31. 11s. 2d.

The sale of the remaining stock of publications must necessarily be slow, and it has therefore been decided again to make a collection on Good Friday in the hope that the result will be as favourable as last year. Once clear of this debt the proceeds of the old stock as they come round can be used to forward the general work of the Association.

Teachers' Notes.—The first number of the new periodical under the name of Teachers' Notes appeared in October last, and in accordance with the understanding come to, your committee has assumed what it considered its fair share of the risk attending this venture, viz.—the responsibility for 1,000 copies, at a charge of threepence per copy, but from some cause or other the sale has so far only reached some 500 copies, or one-half the number for which this Association is liable. If this state of things continues a heavy loss will be incurred, and this subject will call for the serious consideration of the new committee. Your committee distributed the first number gratis, and realising how useful the lessons given might be made, it is a matter of deep regret that this effort has not met with greater support.

Examinations in Sunday Schools.—At its first meeting your committee appointed a sub-committee to prepare a scheme of general examinations, and the object of them was stated to be in a circular issued to issued to the Associated Schools in October last "to aid the teachers in giving systematic, thorough, and therefore valuable instruction to their scholars. Subjects of examination will be announced at least six months beforehand, and information upon these subjects will either be provided by the Teachers' Notes, or else ample references to books, &c., will be supplied. Teachers may also, under the simple conditions given in the rules, select their own subjects for their scholars to be examined in, and scholars examined and approved of in these subjects will receive the same certificates as the other candidates."

A very fair number of schools applied to participate in these examinations which were fixed to be held on the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd April instant, but it will not be in the power of the committee to report upon the results before the annual meeting, and possibly not then.

Repository of Book and Teaching Apparatus.—During the past year a sub-committee was appointed to consider and report upon the suggestions made by the Rev. Halliwell Thomas, which would render necessary the continuance of the present, or more convenient rooms, the appointment of a curator, and the purchase of an expensive stock of books, apparatus, and would involve a somewhat heavy expenditure of money. The sub-committee did not see its way to recommend any action; it, however, recommended the appointment of a standing committee to be composed of practical teachers, to advise with any school as to its wants in the direction indicated by Mr. Thomas.

Collection of Hymns and Choral Songs.—Encouraged by the reception given to previous collections, your committee has in preparation a fourth issue, which will be ready for Good Friday, and trusts that the labour of those who devote much time and talent to this work will meet with the reward so well deserved, viz., a large sale. This publication will be supplied at the price of one penny per copy, with an allowance of 25 per cent discount when quantities are taken.

Your committee, early this year, received from the Monton school and congregation a most cordial invitation to hold the annual meeting at that place. The sudden and lamented death of the Rev. T. Elford Poynting explains why the invitation made has not been accepted. By Mr. Poynting's death this Association loses one of the oldest, most faithful, and indefatigable of its friends and workers. As a member of the committee, as a lecturer on Sunday-school work, as a contributor to numerous periodicals of matter to help Sunday-school teachers and Sunday-schools, as a president of the Association, and above all, by his long-continued labours as a writer for and editor of the Sunday-school Penny Magazine and Sunday Stories, he has laid this Association, and all interested in it, under a heavy debt of obligation and gratitude. Your committee has forwarded to the deceased gentleman's family a resolution expressive of sincere sympathy.

Visiting.—Mr. John Chadwick was appointed General Visitor of the Association, and at the request of the committee, Messrs. John Reynolds and George Smith visited such schools as time would not permit him to go to. The number of schools visited by Mr. Chadwick is 31, and by Messrs. Reynolds and Smith 16.

Statistics.—The number of schools forming the Association is 53. Returns have been received from 52 schools, showing that on December 31st, 1877, there were on the books 1,226 teachers; 677 classes; 8,904 scholars, including 2,477 adults. In average morning attendance there were 570 teachers; 4,911 scholars; in average afternoon attendance, 643 teachers; 6,284 scholars. On December 31st, 1876, there were in 47 schools (which alone made reports), on the books, 1,181 teachers; 619 classes; 8,213 scholars, including 2,305 adults; in the average morning attendance were 517 teachers and 4,779 scholars; in the average afternoon attendance were 587 teachers and 5,905 scholars. There is a real increase in those schools which supplied figures this year and last of 19 teachers in average morning, and 10 teachers and 48 scholars in average afternoon attendance; of 118 scholars on the books, and 61 adults. There is a real decrease in such schools of 47 teachers on the books; of 12 classes, of 105 scholars in average morning attendance. The average morning attendance per cent of scholars was 55, against 58 in 1876; and 70½ in the afternoon, as compared with 72 in that year.

An examination will show that on an average there are, in 35 schools, 137 classes each Sunday morning without teachers (and the number will not be much decreased by the fact that there are in some schools fewer morning than afternoon classes). In 24 schools, each afternoon, some 78 classes are regularly without teachers. Your committee would urge upon schools where such a state of things exists the striking off their lists sham teachers, and adapting the organisation and classification of the schools to the ordinary teaching staff.

Lectures, Rambles, &c.—The Rev. Joseph Freeston kindly acceded to the request of the committee to accompany schools during the summer in rambles, which were followed by a lecture. The following schools benefited by his services:—Todmorden, Sale, Mottram, Knutsford, Astley, Padiham, Congleton, Rochdale, Heywood, Bury, Walmsley, Ainsworth, Swinton, Monton, Pendleton, Burnley, Mossley, Newchurch, and Bolton. He also gave lectures on one or other of the following subjects at the places mentioned below: (a) The Systematic Training of the Moral Sentiments of the Young; (b) Religious Lessons from Natural Objects; (c) The Planets, Venus and Mars; Liverpool, Bolton, Rochdale, Failsforth, Congleton, Oldham, Padiham. Mr. Freeston reports "that the attendance has varied, but, on the whole, been satisfactory."

With the forthcoming annual meeting Mr. Jesse Pilcher terminates a period of more than fifteen years' faithful service as one of the secretaries of the Association. Your committee feels bound to place upon record its sense of the courteous, thoughtful, and zealous manner in which he has ever discharged his duties, and of the heavy debt of gratitude which its friends owe to him. The Rev. F. Ashton, M.A., of Glossop, has kindly consented to allow himself to be nominated to the annual meeting with Mr. J. Reynolds as co-secretaries of the Association.

The committee next reports the work done by various Local Unions, accounts of which we have printed as it has been done.

In conclusion, the committee expresses its firm conviction that the work done by our Sunday schools and their managers shows gradual improvement both in matter and manner each year. But this improvement is but slow in growth.

VISITORS' REPORT, 1877-78.

School Premises, Accommodation, &c.—Experience of such schools as have and such as have not classrooms convinces us of their great value in securing quietness and freedom from distraction, and therefore in enabling a teacher to make the most of what he has to teach. We would advise all about to rebuild, or to enlarge their premises, to secure not only a good assembly-room, but a set of numerous teaching rooms.

Organisation, Discipline, &c.—Generally there is little to complain of—on the contrary, much to praise—under this head. As a rule, schools are well classified, and are conducted on well-considered methods. If there be any change as compared with former years, it is for the better. The chief fault we have to find is the want of adjustment of the number of classes to the number of teachers, whom experience shows likely to be present. In a few cases we have seen how confusion, arising from the absence of teachers, has worried and disheartened the superintendent, annoyed and infected with disorder the neighbouring classes, and spoiled what might otherwise have been a good morning's work. A much better plan than that of obtaining for the class of an absentee the unprepared lesson of an unwilling substitute from the adult class, would be to have an unattached teacher who would be ready and willing to take as one large class for a collective moral, or object lesson, all classes without teachers. In one or two schools there is what seems to us an objectionable practice of locking out during the opening religious service and the marking of the names, of all late teachers and scholars. We suggested that the names should first be marked, and the late-comers then admitted to join in prayer and singing with the rest.

The discipline maintained in most of the schools is very creditable. In a few instances, where the classes meet for lessons in one huge room, often with a disagreeable echo, there has been seen and heard the most deafening disorder. Not that the building is altogether to be blamed; for there are numerous schools without classrooms where the order and quietness of work are worthy of all praise.

Teaching Power.—As usual we have to report that this varies much. Some of the large town schools, as well as many country schools, are suffering very much from the want of such cultured aid as might readily be afforded by the younger members of the congregations with which they are connected. It sometimes happens that there is an abundance of lady help, but little or none from the gentlemen members.

Matter and Method of Teaching.—The lessons taught in the schools do not much vary as to their subjects from year to year. Less and less is seen, no doubt, of mere mechanical day school work, for in this, as some teachers confess, "their scholars beat them." The subjects taught during school hours are as various as the attainments, tastes, and wants of the teachers and scholars. "Some of the teachers who take the more difficult subjects have either had the advantage of superior teaching when young, or of good teaching in science classes. It is not at all surprising, therefore, to see how skilfully some of the subjects are handled, and in a few cases how thorough and complete is the cross-examination and recapitulation of the work already done. We wish we could report that all the work taken is well chosen and well taught. We may be excused in once more calling the attention of such teachers to the often-repeated rules which ought to guide them: (1.) Teach nothing you and your scholars have not or may not readily acquire a taste for. (2.) Having chosen your subject, thoroughly master it, and divide it into lessons. (3.) Prepare each lesson thoroughly, anticipating the scholars' difficulties, and beforehand determining what explanations to make, what questions to ask, what illustrations to use, what maps and pictures to exhibit. (4.) When teaching, make this your endeavour: to arouse and maintain the interest of your scholars by continued questioning. (5.) Endeavour to persuade your scholars to give you on the succeeding Sunday a short abstract of at least one of the lessons. There is hardly a school in the Association which is not supplied with suitable books; and it may be pleasant to hear how commonly those issued by the London Association are to be found.

Examination Scheme.—We have frequently taken the opportunity of urging upon teachers to join in the Examination Scheme promulgated by the Association. There is much misunderstanding in this matter—misunderstanding which time and experience only can remove; but we are bound to bear witness that, where we have seen classes at work which intend to be examined in April, we have not been able to detect any trace of the anticipated evils. Though we often see good work, evidently systematic, where no such end was aimed at, we have oftener found good work where the teacher had called into co-operation the assistance of the well-planned work-table, sustained effort, increased interest, and greater earnestness on the part of his pupils, necessitated and evoked by the prospect of an examination.

Week Evening Work, &c.—Though we could judge of the week-evening institutions of the Sunday-school by hearsay only, still we heard what would warrant us in again urging upon managers the necessity of carrying out the Sunday-school idea for other times than the first day of the week. If it is of importance to secure the suitable use of leisure time on the Sunday, surely it is as necessary to do the same on the evenings of the week and on Saturday afternoon. Nor should this suitable use be restricted to mental and moral training only, but opportunity of meeting together for innocent amusement should also be afforded. The Sunday-school should be for the adult a sort of club as well as institute, with its reading society, its chess club, its debating union, its cricket and football club, and occasional social meetings.

Visiting.—We are sorry to report how little the good old fashion of visiting the absent scholars is practised. We would strongly urge upon schools the necessity, if they are to do their best, of establishing, either by paid or voluntary visitors, or by their minister, a proper system of visitation.

BOLTON: COMMISSION-STREET BAZAAR.

On Wednesday morning a large company of friends assembled in the Bank-street Schools for the purpose of rendering assistance to a bazaar for the removal of a debt of £650 on the Commission-street chapel and schools in Bolton. Alderman HEYWOOD (ex-Mayor of Manchester) was announced to open it, but a telegram was received from him in the morning announcing his inability to be present. Shortly after eleven o'clock the proceedings were opened by a hymn; after which, at the request of the Rev. A. Lazenby,

Mr. JOHN HARWOOD explained that the Commission-street movement was first begun in Hulton-street day school by a Sunday school. Then by the help of laymen, evening service was started; but as such service could not be continued in harmony with the trust of that school, the premises in Commission-street were bought and enlarged, and a final debt of £650 was left, which it was now sought to remove by an appeal to friends more wealthy than the members of the congregation.

The Rev. C. C. COE followed wishing the effort God-speed, and recommending all present to empty their pockets as soon as possible.

Mr. JOSEPH CROOK, one of the magistrates of Bolton and formerly one of its members of Parliament, then formally opened the bazaar, expressing his pleasure at the beautiful display before him, and his approbation of the work done by the ladies, adding that he thought it very desirable that the debt should at once be removed, and he urged those friends who had not supplied articles for the bazaar to purchase freely, and concluded by declaring the bazaar to be opened.

Immediately the ladies at the various stalls—seven in number—began their work, and at the close of the day £360 had been realised. Among the company we noticed the following ministers:—Revs. H. Hill, C. H. Osler, T. L. Jones, E. Turland, and G. Ride. The large schoolroom was well filled all round with stalls, and the Committee of the Congregation, in a printed programme of considerable size filled with advertisements, "acknowledge the kindness of those friends who have materially helped the bazaar, not only by working but by undertaking the more onerous task of begging and receiving goods; and of those who have so faithfully attended and supported the periodical sewing meetings for upwards of fifteen months; and also of those who are devoting their time and care to presiding at the stalls. And they also wish to express their obligation to the Bank-street congregation for kindly allowing them the use of their handsome schoolroom for the purpose of holding this bazaar. This is but one of the numerous favours which the mother Church has bestowed upon her foster child." It is to be hoped that our friends will help this congregation to get rid of its building debt, and so prepare the way for Mr. Lazenby's successor to continue the earnest work he has fostered at this place.

NEWS OF OUR CHURCHES.

NOTICE.—Our friends would oblige if they would kindly send their news paragraphs so as to arrive never later than Wednesday morning, otherwise we are compelled to cut them down.

HOME MISSIONARY BOARD.—The Rev. J. Edwin Odgers, M.A., has accepted the unanimous invitation of the Executive Committee of the Board to the Theological Tutorship vacant by the deeply-regretted death of the Rev. T. Elford Poynting. Mr. Odgers will commence his lectures at the beginning of next session, in September. Meanwhile the duties of the chair are divided between the Rev. Charles T. Poynting, B.A., who takes Old and New Testament Criticism, and the Rev. James Black, M.A., the Missionary Tutor, who takes the department of the Philosophy of Religion.

BELFAST: CHURCH OF THE SECOND CONGREGATION, ROSEMARY-STREET.—On Monday evening the annual soirée in connection with the Mutual Improvement Society was held in the Lecture Hall. Tea was provided in the schoolrooms. Amongst those present were the Rev. Dr. Chotzner (Jewish Rabbi), the Revs. T. Leyland and R. C. Smith, Messrs. J. M. Darbishire, T. McClelland, Geo. Fisher, and H. Darbishire. The Rev. J. C. Street presided. Great interest was added to the meeting by the loan of a galvanic battery by Mr. Davids, and a most excellent microscope by Dr. Burden, each of these gentlemen superintending the instruments. Other attractions in the shape of pictures, photos, piano pieces, part songs, solos, &c., made the evening both most interesting and instructive. The secretary (Mr. Greenfield) gave a brief account of the present position of the association, now in its sixth year. Everything in connection with its working seems most satisfactory. During the evening short addresses were delivered by Mr. J.

M. Darbishire, Dr. Chotzner, Revs. J. C. Street, T. Leyland, R. C. Smith, Mr. Davids, &c. The usual votes of thanks brought to an end one of the most successful soirées given by the society. The Rev. J. C. Street on Sunday evening concluded a course of lectures, ten in number, which have been exciting a good deal of interest, and have drawn large congregations night after night. The following have been the subjects:—"The religion which the world needs to-day," "The world's search after true religion," "Ancient nations and faiths," "Dead and living Judaism," "Moses and Christ," "Practical religion and the life of Jesus," "The Arabian Prophet and religion," "Christendom, past and present," "Eclecticism," "The Religion of the Future."

BELPER.—On Sunday evening, the Rev. Rees L. Lloyd delivered a lecture in the Unitarian Chapel. The large chapel was crowded by a congregation composed of persons belonging to all denominations in the town, as well as those who did not belong to any of them. Mr. Lloyd observed that the excitement in the town on the question of auricular confession had influenced him in taking part in the controversy, inasmuch as both High Church and Low Church lecturers had looked at the question from a Prayer-book (Church of England) point of view only. He took for his subject, therefore, "Auricular Confession: Did Christ teach it? Did the Apostles practice it?" In the first place, he showed that the question whether a High Church priest had the power to forgive or retain sins, was a question not to be decided by English clergymen alone, but affected every Englishman, inasmuch as priestly domination was fatal to liberty. After briefly stating the High Church claims with regard to the subject in the words of the High Church party, he proceeded to contrast those claims with the entire spirit and teaching of Christ and his apostles. The main purport of his observations was to prove that both Christ and his apostles distinctly disavowed all pretensions to priestly authority; they brought God and His spirit in direct contact with all men, instead of thrusting themselves and their official power between man and God. After quoting many passages both from the gospels and the epistles to prove that proposition, he proceeded to criticise and explain the true meaning of the very few Scripture passages which were adduced by High Churchmen in support of their claims, and concluded with an earnest exhortation to his hearers to maintain that liberty wherewith Christ had made all men free. An application has been made to Mr. Lloyd to have it printed.

BIRMINGHAM: FREE CHRISTIAN SOCIETY.—A tea meeting, to celebrate the first anniversary of the opening of the church in Lower Fazeley-street, was held on Monday evening, and was followed by a public meeting in the lower school room. The Mayor (Mr. W. Kenrick) presided, and there were also present the Rev. C. Clarke, Councillors R. Chamberlain, R. F. Martineau, R. D. Kneebone, and S. B. Whitfield; Messrs. Hewins, Cooper, Marsh, Whitehouse, Windridge, Shakespeare, and Bland. Mr. George R. Twinn, secretary to the society, read the report, which stated that, after maintaining the schools for a period of fifteen years, a church was built, and on the first Sunday in April last it was opened for public worship. Though at that time there was a debt on the building, by Midsummer every obligation was removed. There were now nearly 200 bona-fide members; during the year a total amount of £63. 19s. 4d. had been raised; and seventy-five tickets had been distributed for medical attendance at the dispensary. In the Sunday schools there were 402 scholars and 26 teachers, and the total amount of their deposits in the saving club for the year had been £221. 0s. 2½d. deposited by the boys, and £25. 9s. 6½d. by the girls. The library contained about 700 volumes for circulation. The Mayor said he had listened with great pleasure and satisfaction to the report, and he congratulated the society on the progress which had been made. This was peculiarly a church of the people; its members were under no hierarchy, they had no bishops, archdeacons, or others placed in authority over them, and had none of the church government which was supposed to be necessary in ecclesiastical affairs. The Rev. C. Clarke expressed his high appreciation of the work done by Mr. Twinn and the other friends connected with the church.—Messrs. Councillors R. Chamberlain, Whitfield, and Kneebone and Mr. Hewins addressed the meeting, and the performance of instrumental music completed the programme.

BOLTON: FREE CHRISTIAN CHURCH, TEMPERANCE HALL.—On Sunday evening the Rev. A. B. Camm delivered his farewell discourse to a large congregation, founding his remarks on Acts xx. 32. After referring to the beauty and uniqueness of the farewell of Paul to the Ephesians, Mr. Camm disclaimed any close analogy, while showing there were some interesting points of correspondence in the two cases. Although there was no hope of the renewal of friendship, there was affection in the last hour. A minister's relation to his Church was not a mere arrangement, but a union for carrying on a great purpose, and in parting they were still one in the rejection of effete systems, in the denial of creeds the world had outgrown, and in devotion to that rising faith which was coming to men with the glory of a new dawn. In speaking of the causes of his departure from Bolton, Mr. Camm said the accident to his foot had been so often referred to that he had taken the best advice in London, and was going to submit to an operation, after which he hoped to recover tone. He came to Bolton in love with an ideal, one elastic enough to expand and brighten with the new and true influences of the age, and from the measure of success that had attended his labours, he was warranted in saying that if he had been blessed with the fulness of physical strength he would not have despaired of making, with the co-operation of his friends, the work an ensured success. After speaking of the subtle forces (not to be estimated by ordinary statistics) which are silently dissolving old creeds, and at the same time, the eternal truths enshrined in dogmas, constructing a richer faith for humanity, reference was made to encouraging signs of the progress of Liberal religion in Bolton. Mr. Camm concluded with expressions of good feeling to the friends he was leaving, saying they were co-workers still in the bond that united them to the cause of truth and religious freedom. He assumed no priestly sanctity, no tone of superiority, but spoke as a friend and as a brother in saying that he commended them to the God of all good; and he prayed that He might help them all to make their highest mood give tone to their ordinary duties, to turn their best impulses, which they felt in moments of high visitation, into instincts of higher life, so would they realise more and more the joy and power of those whom the truth had made free indeed.

CREWE.—The first of three Lenten lectures was delivered on Sunday evening last, at the Free Christian Church, Beech-street, Crewe, by the Rev. W. Mellor, the subject for the evening being "Confession and the Confessional," with special reference to its place in the Established Church. The Crewe Chronicle reports that the seating in this church is now being altered and made much more comfortable. This is a move in the right direction.

CHESTER.—In the Cheshire Observer we find printed a correspondence in which the various Nonconformist ministers of Chester express their regret that the new Chester School for Girls has not been placed upon a broad unsectarian basis like similar schools established at Liverpool, Manchester, Clifton, Nottingham, and many other places, and they add it would have been "more correct to call such sectarian school 'The Church of England School for Girls.'" In a separate letter our minister at Chester—the Rev. J. K. Montgomery—adds: "Whilst giving all credit to yourself and others for desire to promote a better education for girls of our 'middle classes,' I yet deeply regret that you have not been able to rise above sectional considerations, and to adopt the broad principle of supplying in common that which all want—and of leaving that which is special to particular sections to be taught separately—at other times, and by such teachers as may be approved by parents." He further describes a proposed conscience clause as "a delusion and a snare."

DEWSBURY: UNITY CHURCH.—On Monday evening, April 8th, the annual congregational meeting of this church was held in the schoolroom, the Rev. J. Henry Smith in the chair. The treasurer's account for the past year was read, adopted, and ordered to be printed. The account showed an increase of upwards of £40 more than the account of the previous year, several subscriptions also being yet uncollected. A resolution was passed in accordance with a communication from the committee of the West Riding Unitarian Mission Society accepting the position of "complete independence" of the Mission on condition of receiving in future a regularly decreasing annual grant. It appeared that a good work had been done during the past year. Many new subscribers had been added to the list, and many old subscribers had increased the amount of their subscriptions. During the winter a successful course of lectures had been delivered in which the Revs. Goodwyn Barmby (Wakefield), Thomas Holland, B.A. (Southport), and J. Henry Smith had taken part. A complete set of tea urns and crockery, with the name of the church inscribed on them in a suitable device, had been purchased. The schoolroom had been thoroughly redecorated; and a resolution was passed for the holding of a bazaar, in the course of about two years, for the purpose of redecorating the church and cushioning uniformly the pews, which was considered to be necessary in consequence of the open church and offertory system, which had proved a great success. Sermons on behalf of the Dewsbury Hospital and Dispensary had been preached by the former minister, the Rev. Charles Howe (London), and the collections had amounted to a very creditable sum. Finally some proposals were made for the enrichment of the devotional services of the church, and a very pleasant evening was concluded by a vote of thanks to the chairman.

GORTON.—The singing class in connection with Brookfield Church Sunday School, which is under the leadership of Mr. C. H. Wrigley, organist of the church, held their concluding party, along with a few of their friends, on Saturday, April 6th. After tea an entertainment was given by the class. The programme opened with a few remarks on singing, by the conductor and the minister, the Rev. G. H. Wells, after which several part songs were sung by the class in good taste. The remainder of the evening was spent in innocent amusements.

HALE, CHESHIRE.—On Monday evening, April 8th, the second of winter-evening entertainments was held at Hale Chapel Schoolroom, under the presidency of John Hall, Esq., The Grange. The programme, which was long and varied, consisted of readings by the Revs. J. B. Lloyd, Knutsford; P. M. Higginson, M.A., Styal; E. S. Howse, B.A., Altrincham; and T. Lloyd Jones, Songs, duets, and glee, and pianoforte pieces by Mr. and Mrs. Kendal of Manchester, Mrs. Baldstone, the Misses Heald of Altrincham, Misses Valentine and Dobson, were then effectively rendered. A very hearty vote of thanks, proposed by the chairman-and seconded by the minister, was given to all these who had taken so much trouble to come from long distances and so carefully prepared themselves to render the evening pleasant and instructive to the inhabitants. This meeting concluded with a warm vote of thanks to the chairman for presiding.

BRIDPORT.—On Sunday last the Rev. R. L. Carpenter preached on war. A full report appears in the Bridport News. After service a petition to the House of Commons, that they would "use all constitutional means to preserve the peace of this empire," was signed by attendants at the chapel. It was presented next day by Mr. Ralli, M.P. for Bridport.

KING'S LYNN.—The annual soirée of the Free Christian Church took place in the Blackfriars Hall on Friday last, and was in every way successful and encouraging. About 120 sat down to tea, but many more attended the subsequent meeting. Invitations had been sent to the neighbouring churches, and the following representatives of them, and friends from a distance, were present:—The Revs. H. W. Perris, W. A. Pope; Messrs. James Freeman (Norwich), G. D. Davies, B.A. (Queen's College, Cambridge), J. Selby (Shouldham), and Mr. and Mrs. Girling (Wisebeach). During the evening most interesting and thoughtful addresses were delivered by Mr. James Freeman, who occupied the chair, on "Hopeful Aspects of our Work," by Mr. Charles B. Ploughright, F.R.C.S., on "Recent Researches on the Beginnings of Life," and by the Rev. H. W. Perris, on "Religion, the Fruit of Personal Investigation." The Misses Grundy, Quinn, Gage, Eglingtons, Bronbeck, Archers, Nurse, and Green, and Messrs. Towler, Green, and B. Allen contributed much, in the way of musical entertainment, to the pleasure of the evening. The vote of thanks to the ladies, having been proposed by Mr. Selby, and seconded by the Rev. Barnard Gibby, and that to the chairman by the Rev. W. A. Pope and Mr. A. P. Allen, the proceedings were terminated by singing the National Anthem.—On the Sunday following, the Rev. William A. Pope preached anniversary sermons in the church. The subject in the morning was "The Cross of Christ," that in the evening "Sin and Suffering, Here and Hereafter." Both discourses were admirable; and it is expected that they will be in print before long for general circulation. The congregations were good.

LEICESTER: FREE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.—The Rev. J. J. Wright has just concluded a course of lectures on "Sunday Evenings with Unbelievers." These embraced (1) Harriet Martineau, the Englishwoman; (2) Harriet Martineau, the Agnostic; (3) Voltaire, the Iconoclast; (4) Thomas Paine, the Freethinker. Each lecture has been unusually well attended.

LEEDS.—On Tuesday evening, April 2nd, the Rev. C. Hargrove, M.A., minister of Mill Hill Chapel, delivered a lecture to the members of the Leeds Philosophical and Literary Society, on "Cædmon, the first great poet of England." The chair was occupied by the Rev. J. H. McKeane, the president. There was a large attendance. At the conclusion a vote of thanks was passed to the lecturer, on the motion of Dr. Eddison, seconded by Mr. Reynolds.

LONDON: CLARENCE ROAD, KENTISH TOWN.—Since our last notice of the Social Institute several meetings have been held, which we briefly chronicle. On Feb. 21st Mrs. Rix, of Stratford, gave a very interesting paper on "Bees versus Humanity,"—full of anecdotes and characteristics of these wonderful insects. There was a good attendance of members present, who evidently appreciated the paper read. On March 14th a paper was read by Mr. Philemon Moor on "The Origin and Functions of the English Parliament," who treated his subject in a most able manner. This was followed by a good discussion, in which Messrs. Noel, Midworth, Coleman, Dakin, Read, W. J. Noel, and F. Allen (chairman) took part. A lecture on Martin Luther was to have been given on March 21st by Dr. Mummery, but an attack of illness preventing the doctor doing so, Mr. Noel again gave his paper on "Self Helps." On March 28th a dissolving view entertainment was given at the Camden Lecture Hall by Messrs. G. Callow and F. Glover, of Stamford-street Chapel, the subject being "Captain Nares and the Arctic Expedition." Mr. F. Allen giving the descriptive readings. The hall was well filled in spite of the weather, which was thoroughly Arctic in its character. On Thursday last, April 4th, a most interesting account of the "Telephone" was given by Mr. A. Bakewell, who gave some practical illustrations which greatly pleased his audience. This was followed by a short paper on the Paris Exhibition of 1867 by Mr. Noel, and readings from the Poets by Messrs. C. C. Starling, J. H. S. Cooper, and Jolly; Mr. Goodwin in the chair. It is intended to conclude the present session by holding a soirée and conversations.

LIVERPOOL: NORTH END MISSION.—The annual meeting for the distribution of prizes in connection with the Sunday school was held on Monday evening in the Mission Room, Bond-street. There was a large attendance of scholars, parents, and members of the congregation. Several of the scholars gave recitations, which were interspersed with hymns, very pleasingly sung by the choir. Mr. Thomas Hague presided at the harmonium. The prizes, which consisted of judiciously-selected books, were distributed to scholars who had made the qualifying number of attendances by the chairman of the evening, the Rev. S. Fletcher Williams, who, with the minister at Bond-street, the Rev. H. W. Hawkes, addressed the scholars and parents in some remarks adapted to the occasion. The meeting, which was of an interesting and successful description, was closed with a vote of thanks to the chairman and the hymn "God leads us on."

MANCHESTER: STRANGEWAYS.—On Saturday evening last, the annual meeting of the Mutual Improvement Society was held in the schoolroom, the Rev. J. T. Marriott presiding. From the annual report read, it appeared there had been twenty-one meetings. There was a good attendance, and the objects for inspection on the tables and walls were very numerous. An interesting lecture on "Sound," illustrated by the magic lantern and various experiments, was given by Mr. T. Harrison, showing that the vibrations in the air produced by tones in union were regular, and by tones in discord irregular. By the aid of the lantern, this was proved by throwing the air vibrations from reed notes upon the screen. Corresponding representations were also written on white cards by a recently invented machine, which there is every reason to suppose may yet become of great artistic value to designers some time hence. Mr. Harrison very kindly devoted himself a large part of the evening to replying to questions. Amongst the other sciences represented were physiology, geology, botany, crystallography, photography, and electricity. There were also 14 microscopes, showing various objects, a polariscope, a stereoscope, and several telephones in full operation. The evening was delightfully spent by all present, and was brought to a close by a vote of thanks, moved by the chairman and seconded by Mr. J. Leach, to Mr. Harrison and friends for microscopes and other objects of interest.

MOSSLEY.—During the winter a course of week-night lectures in connection with the Free Christian Church and Sunday school has been delivered in the schoolroom. The Rev. J. G. Slater lectured on "Robert Burns" and "The Lands and Peoples under the Turkish Rule," the Rev. F. Ashton, M.A., on "Italy," Mr. J. N. Lawton on "A Visit to Loch Katrine," with readings from the Lady of the Lake; and the Rev. S. A. Steinthal on "Voltaire." On each occasion pieces of music were sung at intervals by the chapel choir. On Thursday evening the course was brought to a close with a concert and entertainment. The music was furnished by the choir, and readings were given by Mr. Slater and several members of the church. The attendance throughout the course has been fair and encouraging.

PORTSMOUTH.—Just as we were going to press last week we received a report that on Sunday week the Rev. Thomas Timmins delivered a discourse in the evening on "Jesus of Nazareth passeth by," in which it was sought to read a lesson from the loss of the Eurydice. It may be mentioned that three of the young men lost, occasionally attended the Thomas-street Church, and were present on the last Sunday evening they were ashore before they left England.

RAWTESTALL.—On Saturday evening last the members and friends of the Improvement Class brought their labours to a close by partaking of a good cup of tea, spending a pleasant evening together. Between sixty and seventy joined the party. An excellent programme was gone through, including piano-forte solos, duets, violin solos, songs, recitations, readings, &c. All present appeared to thoroughly appreciate and enjoy the attempt to contribute to the pleasure of those present. The chairman and president of the class stated in his opening remarks that there had been an average attendance of the class during the winter months of 17 members per week.

STOCKTON-ON-TEES.—On Sunday evening last the Rev. W. Elliott preached his farewell sermon in the Unitarian Church to a large congregation, taking for his text the words—"And now, brethren, I commend you to God, and to the word of His grace, which is able to build you up, and to give you an inheritance amongst them which are sanctified." On Wednesday evening the members of the congregation entertained Mr. and Mrs. Elliott to a substantial supper in the schoolroom, after which, a testimonial, consisting of a purse of gold and a silver tea and coffee service, was presented by Mr. T. J. Robson, who spoke in feeling terms of the valuable and faithful services which they had rendered to the congregation, and assured them that in leaving Stockton they would carry with them their good wishes and esteem. A presentation of a couple of volumes was also made by Mr. E. B. Clephan, on behalf of the choir.—Mr. W. I. Watson referred to the great esteem in which Mr. Elliott was justly held by the townspeople at large. On the Free Library Committee he had rendered a noble service to the town, as it was mainly through his instrumentality that the Free Library had been established. Votes of thanks to the ladies, the choir, and the chairman brought the meeting to a close.

WHITCHURCH FREE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.—On Sunday last the Sunday School sermons were preached by the minister of the church, the Rev. W. Carey Walters. There were good congregations, and the collections, together with several donations from friends at a distance, amounted to £34 14s. 1d. After defraying the necessary school expenses the proceeds are to be devoted to the purchase of a school and chapel library. Several valuable promises of books have been received. On Tuesday evening an entertainment was given by the members of Mr. Walters' children's class in aid of the harmonium fund. One hundred and seventy-five persons were present. The following took part: Misses Haines; Bolton; Day; Martha, Emily and Nellie Caulcott; Black; Mary; Annie Laura and Ada Porter; Gardner and Wilkes; and Masters Downing, Porter, Finn, Burgess, Black, Martin, Enoch and Alfred Briscoe, and Norton. The accompaniments to all the songs were played by Miss Haines, organist of the church.

CORRESPONDENCE.

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Letters, articles of intelligence, &c., should be addressed to the Unitarian Herald Office, New Cannon Chambers, 55, Market-street, and not to the private addresses of the Editors. No anonymous letters inserted: the writer of every letter must append his name for publication. No letter should be more than half a column.

Lawrence-street Mission too late for this week.

A SUNDAY-SCHOOL MISSIONARY FUND.

To the Editors.—I read the remarks in your last week's issue regarding this subject with feelings of pleasure and approval. I cannot think that I am the only teacher who deplores the want of zeal and activity in our Sunday Schools. The feeling I believe is widely spread. For a considerable period it has been my firm conviction that a missionary fund would do a vast amount of good in the way of presenting an object to the scholars in which they could take a lively interest, and many I believe a special delight. Some of the happiest recollections of orthodox Sunday-school life are connected with Missionary funds and missionary meetings. If the children in our schools can participate in such pleasures, why not encourage them? The principle involved is good: the effect upon the character of the giver is also good. Such a fund would tend to unite our various schools up and down the country in closer bonds of intimacy and friendship. At present we know little of each other. We are therefore unable to enjoy those higher and sweeter feelings of brotherly sympathy which Christianity so peculiarly inculcates. With regard to the application of the fund there may be some difficulty, but I am hopeful of some competent persons solving it. A ragged children's Sunday-school in Manchester has been suggested; the idea is good, and I believe practicable. Would a home mission fund for the support of missionary congregations be practicable? Apart from the selection of any particular object I think the suggestion demands the attention of our earnest superintendents and teachers. Such a fund need not necessarily interfere with local ones. To my mind it would open up a great field of work, and I am convinced that work, when done by the scholars, has nearly as great and as good an effect upon them as teaching has.—Yours respectfully,

W. R. SHANKS.

Stockport, April 8th, 1878.

CONGREGATIONAL SINGING.

To the Editors.—Those who have at heart the state of music in our churches and schools will thank the editors of the Herald for the recent article on congregational singing and for the correspondence which has followed it. The subject is a most important one. Could we attain to real congregational singing doubtless the reproach that our services and ourselves are "cold" would soon cease to apply. I am quite convinced that at any place of worship where the singing is general and hearty there also is to be found a healthy and active church life. Many of your readers can test this assertion by their own experience. I have long thought it a grave mistake that we do not pay more attention to music in the Sunday school, where, after all, any effectual reform must commence. Why is it that, if we want a good children's hymn for special occasions, we are almost always compelled to seek it from other denominations, perhaps to be embarrassed with the doctrinal allusions with which almost all are so persistently loaded? Could not our Sunday-school unions or associations take up this matter, and try to procure some good and original hymns and tunes for this purpose? I am sure there must be amongst us many who are able to assist if it be only brought forward.

In the endeavour to get good congregational singing there are several things to be avoided, all productive of indifference on the part of the congregation. First, where the music is too good, being "rendered" by a paid choir of ability. In this case, though really excellent, it is perhaps too difficult. A congregation in such case will not sing, it may be, from fear of spoiling the music, or from a desire to listen. Such a fine display of music is altogether out of place. Imagine a church full of people silently listening to a small choir singing—

"We'll crowd thy gates with thankful songs,
High as the heavens our voices raise,
And earth, with her ten thousand tongues,
Shall fill thy courts with sounding praise."

Can this be called "worship"?

Again, the music may be too bad, the organ out of tune, and, perhaps, the organist also! Instances of this kind are not unknown amongst us. And if there be a choir to match, they will, when the anniversary or "singing-day" comes, indulge in one of Handel's, Mendelssohn's, or Haydn's choruses, with a woeful result to any one with a cultivated ear, especially if, in addition, there is a tenor with a "top-note," and perhaps a small crack in it. In some of our country churches the range of hymn tunes is so limited, no effort being made to extend it, though now there is a great variety of tune-books, published at prices which the poorest congregations might easily pay. In such places, good old tunes get worn threadbare from frequent repetition; and so we are told that our tunes sound all alike. Occasionally, perhaps, a little—undesirable—variety is obtained by the alliance of a joyful hymn to a minor tune, or vice versa.

To get good congregational singing, we want first a fair instrument, be it organ or harmonium, and a player and choir of fair ability. The minister, too, may do a very great deal in helping or retarding by the choice of hymns appropriately selected with some reference to his discourse. Some ministers appear to be lamentably indifferent to this matter, selecting a miscellaneous list of hymns with no particular object in view—whence ensues a miscellaneous jumble of incongruity which cannot possibly be any aid to worship or possess any interest to anybody. Or the same hymns may be too frequently repeated with a like result.

With a carefully selected list of hymns, commencing ordinarily with one of a joyful character allied to a suitable tune, a hearty and devotional leading hymn will tempt the congregation to join. I remember a remark once made on this subject "you should give us a tune like that every Sunday morning. I should never be late then." Due attention to the spirit of the words, by singing loud or soft as necessary, is a help, and is soon caught by a congregation. Thus the result will be increased interest and more general singing. Where a congregation, say in the morning is mostly of men, care should be taken that the tunes are not too high—getting beyond the ordinary range of male voices; and here I think we probably touch the greatest obstacle to general congregational psalmody. Women and children can, without much difficulty, be induced to sing, but the men are not so easy to deal with. Added to perhaps a general indifference, it should be considered that many of them cannot reach a good number of the tunes in ordinary use, so that until part singing becomes a more general acquirement a careful selection of music suitable to the male portion of those present is the best that can be done.

Limiting the tunes to those which are exclusively or mostly of a syllabic character will not do. It would be a grave mistake, and would exclude many beautiful and well known tunes. In the introduction of new music a congregation will often be encouraged to join, if the choir will sing in unison—perhaps concluding by singing the last verse in parts. Henry Ward Beecher, who evidently knows something about this subject, says, in his church the singing, which is joined in by almost every man, woman, and child, is most impressive. The best church music is not the most difficult—often the most simple, and may, when joined in by a whole congregation, lead to devotion when no single human voice can do so. And when a congregation does sing it encourages its minister and itself, and no one there but will leave the church better and happier than he entered it.

In concluding this already too long letter, may I take the liberty of suggesting that in Manchester and the surrounding district there is a great opportunity of doing something to promote the cause of church music. I mean that if there could be formed an association of our choirs for musical purposes, meeting occasionally together in the Memorial Hall, or elsewhere, for the practice of good music, and holding annually a festival at some of our places of worship, a great and valuable help would be given to the cause or music in our churches. Perhaps those who are in charge at our various places of worship in the neighbourhood will consider the possibility and desirability of some such step.—Yours truly,

F. S. PHILLIPS.

Howard-street, Salford, March 13, 1878.

THE BOSNIAN REFUGEES.

To the Editors.—Indisputable testimony has been given to the value of the work of Miss Johnston and Miss Irby in relieving the terrible sufferings of the Bosnian refugees.

Letters recently received from those ladies urgently plead for more help; and the following extract will show its pressing necessity.

The following letter has just been received from Miss Johnson, who, with Miss Irby, is now engaged in relieving the distress of the unfortunate Bosnian refugees:—

"Knin, Dalmatia, March 15, 1878.

"We had hoped that all the inmates of the wretched caves were comfortably housed at Plevna huts, but it appears that a fresh band of fugitives crossed the frontier in December last, and could find no better shelter than some caves about two hours distant from Knin, in a rocky barren valley. Last Saturday we discovered these dismal dwellings. We had nothing with us then, and darkness was quickly coming on, but we saw enough of the miserable inmates to make us take an early opportunity of carrying them some help. Human beings so brought down, so nearly naked, I had never seen. One old man, his poor limbs showing through many holes, seemed more anxious to make us notice his only child, a tall pretty girl of about fifteen, shivering in a ragged shirt, telling us she could not ask herself for she was deaf and dumb, and imploring us to give him something warm to cover her with. To-day, with blankets, ready-made clothing out of empty sacks, new strong linen, children's clothes, and bread, all carried in sacks by two horses, we set off up the valley, and soon came to the first dwelling, half cave, half a ruined mill or bridge, I can't tell which. Out of the entrance streamed thirty-five poor creatures, some hardly able to crawl, and stood or sat on the ground round us. We asked them to group themselves in families and all keep in their places, and first produced the beautiful warm blankets, wrapping the shivering invalids and mothers with naked crying babies in their thick folds. Then one or two blankets were given in each family, according to the number of its members. One blanket we consider enough for three or four, for they must lie so close in the crowded dwellings. Soon the little horses were reloaded, and we were on our way about two miles further up the valley, to a veritable cave in the side of a hill, out of which one after another crept sixteen human beings, looking, if possible, more miserable than those we had left; but this was because there was such a large proportion of sick and very old. These sixteen were soon joined by some families from a cave across the river, which was crossed on a narrow plank by mothers and fathers carrying and dragging bunches of white thin-limbed children, and again we separated them into families, and gave to each and all. One touching little party standing alone, consisted of a man and little boy of three, both with as little on as it was possible to have. The mother had died two years ago, the man explained, as he proudly and tenderly dressed his little boy in his red flannel garment, and wrapped the blanket round his own almost bare shoulders. Next to them was a family, consisting of a young man and wife and three sickly children, the youngest crouching in the arms of the old tottering grandfather and sharing his blanket, while he carefully fed it with tiny morsels of the loaf we gave him. Many trembling voices asked God to bless us for coming to help them. A long way beyond, too far for us to reach to-day, are other caves and miserable dwellings, but stores have already been sent to them. To-morrow we are going to find other caves reported to us in another direction.

"I must open my letter and put in a few violets from a bunch brought us to-day by a poor little orphan boy, who, with two little sisters, was left utterly destitute and alone in one of the caves, and is now provided for with a kind Dalmatian woman."

With regard to the return of the refugees, which may possibly soon take place, Miss Johnston writes:

"March 11.

"If, and whenever, a safe return to their own country is permitted, we shall help to our utmost with seed, implements, cattle, and building materials; but money is going fast now to keep them alive. Of this, however, we are certain—the Bosnian fugitives cannot return as they are, even if order is restored; for they have neither implements nor horses, and the land is a waste, 'sown only with blood' for the last two years."

Should any of your readers be willing to assist, I shall be happy to receive their contributions and forward them through the Committee sitting in this town. The misery to be, if possible, alleviated, is beyond the power of words to picture.—Respectfully yours,

HANNAH CROSSKEY.

28, George Road, Birmingham, April 8th.

COMING WEEK.

BIRMINGHAM: OLD MEETING.—On Sunday morning and evening, sermons by the Rev. R. R. Armstrong, B.A.
MANCHESTER DISTRICT SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION. meetings on Good Friday. (See Advt.)
MANCHESTER: UPPER BROOK-STREET.—On Sunday, vesper services, and address by Rev. Silas Farrington, on "The World's Triumph over the Man of Sorrows."
PRESTON.—On Sunday, morning and evening, school sermons, by the Rev. F. W. Walters.
WESTERN UNITARIAN AND FREE CHRISTIAN UNION.—Sermons and collections on Sunday in aid of the funds at Bath, Bridport, Bristol, Crewkerne, Devonport, Gloucester, Shepton Mallet, Stroud, Tavistock, and Trowbridge.

DEATH.

AINSWORTH.—On the 4th inst., at Church-street, Padham, Marie Antoinette M. Ainsworth, second daughter of the late Andrew Ainsworth. Was interred April 5th at Padham Church Cemetery, the Service having been read at the residence of the deceased by the Rev. H. S. Rolly, M.A. Sincerely regretted by her family and a large circle of friends.

MIDLAND RAILWAY.—EASTER HOLIDAYS.—CHEAP EXCURSION TO LONDON, on Thursday, April 18, leaving Manchester (London Road), 9 15 a.m.; Guide Bridge, 9 33 a.m.; returning from St. Pancras on Tuesday, April 23, at 10 5 a.m.; and Kentish Town, 10 10 a.m.
CHEAP THREE DAYS' EXCURSION TO LONDON, on Saturday, April 20, leaving Manchester (London Road), 12 5 a.m. (five minutes after Friday midnight); Guide Bridge, 12 15 a.m.; returning from St. Pancras on Monday, April 22, at 11 15 p.m.; and Kentish Town, 11 20 p.m.
CHEAP EXCURSION TO THE WEST OF ENGLAND, on Thursday, April 18, leaving Manchester (London Road), 9 50 a.m.; Guide Bridge, 9 26 a.m. for BIRMINGHAM, Evesham, Worcester, Malvern, Gloucester, Cheltenham, Bristol, and Bath, at the usual excursion fares; returning on Monday or Tuesday, April 22 and 23. JAMES ALLPORT, General Manager.

LONDON: SHIRLEY'S TEMPERANCE HOTEL. 37, Queen's Square, Bloomsbury. Beds from 1s. 6d. Plain Breakfast or Tea, 1s. 3d.

E. IRELAND begs to call attention to all lovers of Old Dob Lane Chapel to his PHOTOGRAPHIC VIEWS of the old spot. Large size, 9in. by 7in. (mounted), 3s. 6d.; carte size, 6d. each.—E. IRELAND, 105, Market-street.

RUPTURES.—Exhibition Prize Medal, 1862, was awarded to R. WESTBURY, inventor and sole maker of the IMPERCEPTIBLE CURATIVE TRUSS. Deformity Instruments, Artificial Limbs, Crutches, Elastic Stockings, and Ladies' Supporting Belts, Chest Expanders for round shoulders, &c., 26, Old Millgate, Manchester.

THE ONLY PERFECT MARKING INK.

NO HEATING; no mixing or trouble. Does not injure the most delicate fabric. Absolutely indelible. Fletcher's Jet Marker, 1s., from drapers, or post free from THOMAS FLETCHER, Musoum-street, Warrington.

KNUTSFORD.—The NEXT TERM will begin in Miss ARDERN'S School on Monday, April 29th.

SOUTHPORT.—BOARDING SCHOOL for GIRLS.—The NEW QUARTER begins April 2nd.—For prospectus, apply to Miss CURTIS, Principal, Westbourne, Grosvenor Road, Birkdale.

EDUCATION.—BATH.—MRS. JEFFERY'S SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.—Mrs. Jeffery RECEIVES as BOARDERS girls attending the Classes of the Bath High School. The next term will commence April 30th.—9, Norfolk Crescent, Bath.

HOPE LEA, HEATON NORRIS, STOCKPORT.—HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.—Conducted by Dr. and Mrs. MARCUS, assisted by able masters. The majority of the Senior Girls who passed the last Oxford Examinations in the Manchester centre came from this school.

SCHOOL TRANSFER.—A long-established and well-known Boarding School for Boys may be shortly TRANSFERRED to a competent person with means: capital required, £200: a good opening for a Unitarian or Liberal Churchman, or for a proprietary school.—Apply, with real name and address, to Scholasticus, at the office of this paper.

LINDOW GROVE SCHOOL, ALDERLEY EDGE.—The premises have been erected for a First-class BOARDING SCHOOL, with extensive grounds for recreation, in a delightful country district. Every effort is made to educate the character, to have work done thoroughly, and to adapt it to the pupil's capacity, physical and mental. References and prospectus on application. JAMES WOOD.

BROOK HOUSE, KNUTSFORD, CHESHIRE.—BOARDING SCHOOL for GIRLS, conducted by Mrs. FRANK SHAWCROSS, assisted by Resident English and Foreign Governesses. Teachers of eminence attend for instruction in Music, Singing, Harmony, Drawing, Dancing, &c. Prospectus and references forwarded on application. The NEXT TERM begins May 2nd.

MOUNT VERNON HIGH SCHOOL, NOTTINGHAM.—Established 1864. Mr. EDWIN SMITH, M.A., with competent assistance, thoroughly prepares Boys for College, the University Local Examinations, or for Business. For prospectus address Sandy Knoll, Forest Road, Nottingham.

EDUCATION IN GERMANY.—Miss M. WAGNER (17, Helenenstrasse, Weisbaden, Germany), who has passed the Prussian State Examination, and possesses the experience of several first-class English schools, receives a limited number of YOUNG LADIES for Private Education, or to visit the excellent College of the town, with home assistance. Climate very healthy, with mild winter. Hot and other mineral springs. English and German references. For terms and further particulars address as above.

YORK: 26, HIGH PETER GATE.—Miss AMY HERRING begs to announce that she has OPENED, at the above address, a SCHOOL for the instruction of Young Ladies in all branches, comprising a first-class education with liberal views. References kindly permitted by the following:—Dr. G. Vance Smith, The Parade, Carmarthen; the Rev. C. Welbeloved, 38, Monkgate, York; Miss Swaine, 1, The Crescent, York.—Terms on application. Pupils are prepared for the University Examinations, several having passed most successfully.

FREE WORD: Monthly Free Thought Magazine. One Penny, 9d. per doz.

Price 6d., post free from the writer, A CONTINENTAL HOLIDAY. By W. HARRISON, Swinton, Manchester.

Now Ready, (No. 3) for April, TEACHERS' NOTES, for Moral and Religious Lessons, containing papers by Rev. F. H. JONES, B.A., and Rev. C. D. Badland, M.A. Published by the Sunday School Association, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, London, W.C.

Just Published, 2nd Edition, sewed, 6d. THE PASSOVER MOON. By HENRY HAWKES, B.A., F.L.S. 2nd Edition, sewed, price 6d. post free.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE, 14, Henrietta-street, Covent Garden, London, and 20, South Frederick-street, Edinburgh.

Just published, price 2d. A GOOD OLD AGE: a Sermon preached in Cross-street Chapel, Manchester, March 3, 1878. By WILLIAM GASELL, M.A.

Just Published, Price Twopence. BAD TIMES AND HOW TO MEET THEM: A Sermon preached at Hyde Chapel, Gee Cross, on Sunday, January 13th, 1878. By H. ENFIELD DOWSON, B.A. Published by request.

Manchester: Johnson and Rawson, Market-street; Cartwright, Ratray, and Co., 56, Deansgate, and Caxton Works, Hyde.

THE TRUTHSEEKER, Edited by the Rev. JOHN PAGE HOPPS, and published on the first of every month, is a free and unsectarian Review of all books and events relating to the development of religious life and liberty in the Christian Church. Every number contains original lectures and essays, together with reviews of present and permanent interest. Price Threepence.—London: Williams and Norgate, Covent Garden. Manchester: Johnson and Rawson, 89, Market-street; and John Heywood, Deansgate.

Now Ready, No. 28. YOUNG DAYS, for April: Numerous Illustrations. Price One Penny.

Contents: A Chat about Eagles—Idea Mathew, by Mrs. Herbert Martin, author of Daisy Root, &c.—The Approach of Spring—Our New Pet—Kindness to Animals—The Discontented Boy—This is not a Bad World—Perils of the Sea—Eddystone Lighthouse—The Parsees—My Dog Rough—Puzzle Bag. Published by the Sunday-school Association, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand.

THE DINNER SHERRY.

24s. PER DOZEN. The season of the year having arrived when light wines, so agreeable in warmer weather, give place to those of a more generous character, we beg to draw attention to the above wine. For years we have given great attention to keep up and improve its quality, and those who require a delicate clean-flavoured sherry, free from spirit, we submit it with confidence, and ask comparison with wine usually sold at 50s.

A considerable saving can be made taking Quarter-cask, 27 gallons, at £14. 5s. {cask included. Octavo, 13½ gallons, at £7. 5s.

Samples can be tasted. Price list of 32 Sherries and other Wine free by post.

JAMES SMITH & COMPANY, Wine Merchants, 26, Market-street, Manchester; also at Liverpool and Birmingham.

Printed for the Proprietors by WILLIAM EVANS, of Apsley Villa 377, Waterloo Road, Chesham Hill, at his Printing Offices, No. 3, Cross-street, Parish of Manchester; and Published by JOHN PHILLIPS, at New Cannon Chambers, 55, Market-street, in said Parish of Manchester.—London Agents: Messrs. Smart and Allen, 2, London-house Yard, Paternoster Row.—Friday, April 12, 1878.

The Unitarian Herald.

EDITED BY

REV. JAMES BLACK, M.A., & REV. S. FLETCHER WILLIAMS.

Vol. XVIII.—886.

FRIDAY, APRIL 19, 1878.

PRICE 1d.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE.
Doings and Sayings	130
Scottish Notes	130
Books and Authors	130
Francis Washburne	131
Resignation of the Rev. W. M. Lewis, Baptist minister	131
Alone	132
Virehow on Scientific Dogmatism	132
Heresy Made Easy	132
The Marriage at Cuch Behar	132
The Rev. Frederick Ashton, M.A.	132
Anthony Martin, Esq.	133
The Communion Service	133
The Belfast Unitarian Society	134
The Midland District Sunday School Association	134
News of our Churches	135

UPPER BROOK-STREET FREE CHURCH.
The Rev. S. FARRINGTON will Preach on Sunday morning, at 10.45, subject, "Rising Again." Evening at 6.30, Musical VESPER SERVICE. Subject of Address, "The Triumph of the Man of Sorrows over the World." All seats free. Offertory.

CROSS-STREET CHAPEL.—On Sunday morning next, April 21st, the Rev. S. A. STEINTHAL will preach on "Co-operation." Service at 10.30.

BANK-STREET CHAPEL, BURY.—The ANNUAL SUNDAY SCHOOL SERMONS will be preached on Sunday, April 21st, 1878, by the Rev. JOHN WRIGHT, B.A., of Bath, when collections will be made in aid of the School Funds. Service to commence in the morning at 11, and in the evening at 6.30.

Tea will be provided in the school at five o'clock, price 6d. each, for friends from neighbouring congregations.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE.—The Anniversary SERMONS of the Church of the Divine Unity will be preached on Sunday, April 21st, by Rev. J. C. STREET, of Belfast.

On Monday, April 22nd, the Annual SOIREE will be held. Tea at 5.30. Social Meeting at 6.45; Rev. A. PAYNE in the chair.

STAMFORD-STREET UNITARIAN CHAPEL, BLACKFRIARS ROAD, LONDON. Will be RE-OPENED for service on the 21st April, and on Sunday, 28th inst., SPECIAL SERVICES will be held, and Collections taken, to assist in meeting the cost of repairs and improvements. Morning at 11 a.m.; evening at 6.30 p.m.

STAMFORD-STREET CHAPEL SUNDAY SCHOOL, LONDON.

Old Scholars are invited not to forget to attend their usual ANNUAL SOCIAL MEETING, Wednesday, May 1st. Tea at 6.30.

CROFT.—ANNUAL SERMONS, July 7th. Preacher, Rev. J. POLLARD, of Belfast.

DOB LANE, FAILSWORTH.

On Saturday, May 4th, 1878, the ceremony of LAYING the FOUNDATION-STONE of the New Chapel will take place at half-past four o'clock in the afternoon.

A PROCESSION of the Members of the congregation, Teachers, Scholars, and Friends, will start from the Chapel Gates at three o'clock, and a PUBLIC TEA PARTY will be held in the Co-operative Hall, Failsworth, at half-past five o'clock.

Further particulars next week.

MONTON CHURCH.—On Sunday, May 5th, TWO SERMONS will be preached by the Rev. D. WALMSLEY, B.A., of Bury, and collections made in aid of the Sunday School. Morning service, 10.45; evening, 6.30.

MANCHESTER DISTRICT SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION.

The THIRTY-THIRD ANNUAL MEETING will be held on GOOD FRIDAY next, the 19th April, at Manchester.

The day's proceedings will commence with a RELIGIOUS SERVICE in Cross-street Chapel, when a Sermon will be preached by the

Rev. WILLIAM GASKELL, M.A.

Service to commence at eleven o'clock.

After the Sermon, a Collection will be made in aid of the Publishing Fund, as the Committee is most desirous of paying off the debt due to the Treasurer.

After this service, Dinner will be provided in the Lower Mosley-street Schools, at a charge of Ninepence each person.

The BUSINESS MEETING will be held in the Memorial Hall, Albert Square, at two o'clock. The chair to be taken by the President of the Association, EDWIN WINNER, Esq.

Tea will be provided, at four o'clock, in the Lower Mosley-street Schools, at a charge of Sixpence each person.

As ample accommodation will be provided by the friends at Mosley-street, both for dinner and tea, the Committee trusts that all friends will avail themselves of the same, and thus avoid the possibility of a loss.

The EVENING MEETING will be held in the Memorial Hall. The chair to be taken, at six o'clock prompt, by the Rev. S. A. STEINTHAL.

The following Papers will be read, to be followed by discussion:—

Mr. GEORGE CUNLIFFE, of Bolton:

Subject:—"Our Elder Classes and their Teachers."

Mr. JOHN REYNOLDS:

Subject:—"Week Evening Amusements for Sunday Scholars."

Deputations from the London, Midland, and Yorkshire Sunday-school Associations are expected to be present.

JESSE PILCHER, } Hon.

JOHN REYNOLDS, } Secs.

NORTH MIDLAND SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION.

The THIRTY-FIRST ANNUAL MEETING will be held at the High Pavement Chapel, Nottingham, on Easter Monday, April 22nd, 1878, the service will be conducted by the Rev. C. D. BADLAND, M.A., of Derby, and the Annual Sermon will be preached by the Rev. D. WALMSLEY, B.A., of Bury. Service to commence at 11.30 a.m.

The BUSINESS MEETING will be held in the Girls' School-room, immediately after the close of the service, Mr. Alderman KEMPSON, president, in the chair, when the various reports will be presented, the usual business of the annual meeting will be transacted, and the certificates gained in the recent examinations will be distributed. Luncheon will be provided in the boys' schoolroom, at 1.30, tickets 2s. each.

The AFTERNOON MEETING will be held in the Boys' Schoolroom, when a Paper will be read by the Rev. ROWLAND HILL, of Bedford, on "Confident Teaching." The chair will be taken by the Rev. R. A. ARMSTRONG, B.A.

The High Pavement friends invite Visitors to Tea in the Girls' Schoolroom at the close of the meeting.

The various Sunday School Associations will be represented by Mr. R. Bartram and Mr. C. J. Perry, B.A., of London; Rev. J. Freeston, Manchester District; and Mr. W. Barrett, West Riding District.

BEARD MEMORIAL UNION.

On Monday evening, 29th inst., Rev. WILLIAM HENRY CHANNING will read a paper on "Some of the Religious Problems of our Age," to be followed by discussion. The chair will be taken at seven o'clock.

W. C. BOWLE, Hon. Sec.

Memorial Hall, Manchester.

MILES PLATING UNITARIAN FREE CHURCH SCHOOLS.

VARLEY-STREET, OLDHAM ROAD.

Rev. W. G. CADMAN, Pastor.

The Committee earnestly invite the patronage and support of friends for a

B A Z A A R

IN AID OF THE CHURCH FUNDS, to be Opened in the above Schools by

His Worship the MAYOR OF MANCHESTER, (C. S. Grundy, Esq.,) on Thursday, 25th April, at 2 p.m.

Mr. Ald. Heywood (ex-Mayor of Manchester.) Mr. Ald. Harwood (ex-Mayor of Salford.)

Mr. Councillor Ben Brierley. Mr. Councillor Hugo Shaw.

Mr. Councillor T. Bright. Mr. Councillor Walton Smith.

Mr. Councillor Wm. Brown. Mr. Councillor C. Stewart.

and other gentlemen are expected to be present.

The object of the Bazaar, which will be continued on Friday and Saturday, April 26th and 27th, at 2 p.m., is to raise funds to clear off the Paving, Class Rooms, and other unavoidable debts, which press heavily upon the church. Besides meeting current expenses, the members of the congregation have been lately called upon to meet bills for alterations, &c., amounting to about £400, and ask for a little kindly assistance to enable them to pay off what remains of these debts.

Mr. Councillor BRIERLEY has kindly consented to give a Reading on Thursday evening. Vocal and Instrumental Music, and other entertainments and amusements will be provided each day. Refreshments at moderate charges.

The stalls will be presided over by the lady members of the congregation and teachers of the Sunday school. All articles at reasonable prices.

ADMISSION:—Thursday, 1s.; Friday, 6d.; Saturday, 3d.; Season Tickets, 1s. 6d. Children half-price, except on Saturday. Contributions in money or goods will be gratefully received by

Mrs. W. G. CADMAN, Westbourne Grove, Harpurhey.

Mrs. ROBT. FIELDING, Beech Mount, Harpurhey.

Mrs. JOS. HULME, Hulme Hall Lane, Miles Plating.

Mrs. HAROLD BERRY, 32, Smedley Road, Cheetham.

N.B. The Newton Heath 'Bus passes the end of Varley-street, within a few yards of the church.

ROTHERHAM NEW CHURCH.

On Wednesday, May 1st, 1878, the ceremony of Laying the FOUNDATION STONE of the New Church for the Rotherham Unitarian Congregation, will take place at twelve o'clock at noon.

The Stone will be Laid by

JOHN HOBSON, Esq., of Tipton Elms, Sheffield.

On the same day, at one o'clock,

A B A Z A A R

At the Mechanics' Hall, Rotherham, for the Sale of USEFUL AND ORNAMENTAL ARTICLES, will be OPENED by

JOSEPH LUPTON, Esq., J.P., of Chapel Allerton, Leeds.

Admission on Wednesday, One Shilling each; after six o'clock p.m., Sixpence each.

The Bazaar will remain open on the Thursday and Friday following. Admission Free.

The Stalls will be presided over by Ladies of the Congregation. Goods Marked at Lowest Figures. Proceeds to be devoted to the Building Fund.

After the Opening of the Bazaar on Wednesday, at half-past one o'clock, a LUNCHEON will be provided in the Hall. See bills of fare.

N.B. A Refreshment Stall. All articles at moderate charges. Goods for the Bazaar will be thankfully received by the Rev. W. Blazey, 41, Hollowgate, Rotherham; Mr. Wm. Leggoe, Treasurer, Moorgate, Rotherham; Mr. John Hill, Secretary, 1, Westfield Terrace, Rotherham.

NEW SUNDAY SCHOOLS

FOR

KING'S LYNN FREE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The Committee of above Church make this appeal to the Unitarian public from sheer necessity, having been bitterly persecuted, and refused the key of a hired school, by those opposed to Free Christianity, without even a week's notice. £500 will build Sunday-school, class-rooms, and pay off a small balance from Church building fund—having land enough behind the Church for the new schools. For three months the children met in the garden of the superintendent of the school, and are now crammed in a room, not half large enough. The Committee most gratefully acknowledge past support, and are hopeful that this appeal will meet with a similar response.

Subscriptions may be sent to

The Rev. BARNARD GISBY, Pastor.

Mr. E. GRUNDY, Treasurer, } to the Church.

Mr. J. FOX, Secretary,

Mr. E. GREEN, Treasurer,

Mr. A. P. ALLEN, Secretary } to the Building Committee

and Supt. of Sunday-school

SUBSCRIBERS' NAMES.

	£	s.	d.
The Mayor of Lynn.....	2	2	0
Mrs. Aickman.....	0	5	0
Mr. J. W. Aikin.....	5	0	0
Mr. A. P. Allen.....	50	0	0
Mr. C. W. Alexander, Dereham.....	0	10	6
Mrs. C. W. Alexander.....	0	10	6
Mr. J. Bayes.....	10	0	0
Mr. G. Bridges.....	1	1	0
Mr. J. Barton.....	1	1	0
Mr. T. Cook.....	2	2	0
Mr. Cawston.....	1	0	0
Mr. J. Fox.....	1	0	0
Mr. J. W. Dowson, Norwich.....	1	0	0
Mr. E. Green.....	25	0	0
Mrs. E. Green.....	5	0	0
Rev. W. Gaskell.....	5	0	0
Rev. B. Gisby.....	10	0	0
Mr. E. Grundy.....	10	0	0
Mr. Gilling, Wisbeach.....	0	10	0
Mr. James Hoggood, London.....	10	0	0
Mrs. Haddock, Horncastle.....	0	5	0
Mr. T. A. Jackson.....	1	1	0
Mr. E. C. Knight.....	1	1	0
Mr. R. Leach.....	5	0	0
Mr. J. H. Nokes, jun.....	1	0	0
Dr. Pearce, Wisbeach.....	1	0	0
Mr. W. Rippingale.....	1	0	0
Mr. S. Sharpe, London.....	10	0	0
Rev. R. Spears (to collect).....	10	0	0
Mr. J. Towler.....	0	10	0
Mrs. J. Towler.....	0	10	0
Mr. Thomas, Bristol.....	2	2	0

FURNISHED HOUSE TO BE LET, for two or three months: two sitting-rooms and three bedrooms: two servants will be left: terms four guineas: no children.—Address L. S., Miss Woodward, 14, Rosslyn-street, Hampstead.

WANTED, a SERVANT, in a family of two: a good washer.—E. T. L., 148, St. George's Road, Bolton.

WANTED, by a Lady of experience, a Situation as RESIDENT GOVERNESS: English, French, Music, and Calisthenics: excellent references.—Address M. A., Herald office, 55, Market-street, Manchester.

WANTED, an ex-P.T. as ASSISTANT MISTRESS in the Chowbent British School (boys' mixed): salary £35 and a share of any surplus income of the school.—Address Rev. M. O. FRANKLAND, Chowbent, near Manchester.

WANTED, a Certificated English GOVERNESS over 20 years of age, to assist in a Ladies' School: salary, £30: all found and gradual increase: good drawing essential.—Apply to Miss Amy Herring, 26, High Peter Gate, York, by letter only, enclosing carte de visite.

A Lady having a larger house than she requires, at a short distance out of Paris, is desirous of meeting with Two Youths, or Two Young Ladies, whose parents wish them to attend the excellent Colleges in the neighbourhood: conversation in French, English, and German: home comforts are offered upon reasonable terms: references given and required. For information, address Johnson and Rawson, Market-street, Manchester.

HEATH BROW SCHOOL, HAMPSTEAD, LONDON, N.W.—The NEXT TERM will begin on Thursday, May 9th. Boys from the country are expected the evening before.—Prospectus on application to Mrs. CASE.

EDUCATION.—BATH.—MRS. JEFFERY'S SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.—Mrs. Jeffery RECEIVES as BOARDERS girls attending the Classes of the Bath High School. The next term will commence April 30th.—8, Norfolk Crescent, Bath.

HOPE LEA, HEATON NORRIS, STOCKPORT.—HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.—Conducted by Dr. and Mrs. MARCUS, assisted by able masters. The majority of the Senior Girls who passed the last Oxford Examinations in the Manchester centre came from this school.

BROOK HOUSE, KNUTSFORD, CHESHIRE. BOARDING SCHOOL FOR GIRLS, conducted by Mrs. FRANK SHAWCROSS, assisted by Resident English and Foreign Governesses. Teachers of eminence attend for instruction in Music, Singing, Harmony, Drawing, Dancing, &c. Prospectus and references forwarded on application. The NEXT TERM begins May 2nd.

MOUNT VERNON HIGH SCHOOL, NOTTINGHAM.—Established 1864. Mr. EDWIN SMITH, M.A., with competent assistance, thoroughly prepares Boys for College, the University Local Examinations, or for Business. For prospectus address Sandy Knoll, Forest Road, Nottingham.

DOINGS AND SAYINGS.

The extraordinary prices obtained at the sale of the collection of pictures which belonged to the late Mr. Munro, of Novar, certainly do not point to a period of national poverty. Nine of Turner's paintings fetched forty thousand guineas; six thousand guineas were paid for two pictures by Bonington, and a portrait by Sir Joshua Reynolds was bought for three thousand guineas.

Monseigneur Dupanloup is an unfortunate prelate. His Liberal opposition to Infallibility and to M. Veuillot lost him a cardinal's hat under the last pontificate; and now, when Leo XIII. seems disposed to confer the high dignity upon him, the recommendation of the French Government is wanting. Considering the reactionary part he played in the recent crisis, it is scarcely in the human nature of a Republican Government to heap such coals of fire upon his head.

The German correspondent of the Guardian says that in Berlin, notwithstanding the signs of life lately manifested, the influence of the Protestant Church upon the masses is very small; the parochial statistics of the capital are far more depressing than those of London "spiritual destitution." Thus, there is in Berlin a population of about 804,000 Protestants: for these there are only thirty-four churches in which ninety-five pastors minister. So the average population of each parish, or "congregation," is 23,647, and if we divide the numbers out, we shall find that each pastor is supposed to have the charge of 8,463 souls. There is so small a body of Dissenters from the Established Church that their presence hardly diminishes the average.

The late Bishop of Lichfield was for twenty-six years Bishop of New Zealand, and had a very large share in the development of the colony. He sometimes told a story which forcibly illustrated the means by which he had got so firm a hold on the New Zealand people. He and one of his clergy were one day passing a couple of newly-arrived settlers who were vainly endeavouring to build their hut. The Bishop and the clergyman bid the men stand aside, took off their coats, and in a short time completed the wooden house with their own hands. The eleven years' superintendence of his English diocese have left no such mark on the district as the twenty-six years at the Antipodes. The most fruitful period of his life was that spent in his distant diocese, and it is by that he will be remembered by posterity.

The Rev. Charles Tamerlane Astley, M.A., vicar of Gillingham, Chatham, has resigned his benefice and has announced his intention of quitting the Church of England. In a sermon preached on Sunday week, Mr. Astley referred to the rapid strides made by the Romanising party within the Church of England, which was fast surrendering its title to be considered Protestant, and said he had come to the determination to leave a church many of the doctrines of which he entirely repudiated, especially those relating to baptismal regeneration and priestly absolution. The value of the living is £680 per annum, with residence and fifteen acres of glebe land. The Rev. C. T. Astley was a scholar of Jesus College, Oxford, and was formerly vicar of Margate, and rector of Brasted, Kent.

The Liberal party in the Swiss Protestant Church has arranged to hold a union meeting after the manner of the German Protestantenverein. The place selected is Basle, and the proceedings will occupy part of two days, the 20th and 21st May. On the afternoon of Monday, the 20th, delegates will assemble in the Hall of the Museum, where the business-meetings will be held. In the evening there will be divine service in the Cathedral, the preacher being "Deacon" Mayer of St. Gall. The rest of that evening will be devoted to a social gathering and reception of the guests. The following morning will be chiefly occupied with the president's address and a conference upon two subjects which are announced as follows:—"The Signification of the National Church and the Problem of Free Thought therein." First speakers: E. Frei of Basle, and Pastor Schaffroth of Langenthal.—"The Various Aims of the Church and their Relation to the Needs of Society to-day." First speakers: Dr. Göttsheim of Basle, and Pastor Bion of Zurich.

The Council of the Church Association have issued a statement in which, while disclaiming any intention to become a centre of political organisation, they urge that Protestant electors are bound to use every constitutional effort to secure the return to the next Parliament of such candidates only as shall, as a primary qualification and irrespective of party politics, be found to be true and staunch Protestants, and who will distinctly pledge themselves to do their utmost to stem the torrent of sacerdotal pretension within the Church of England, as well as to secure full obedience to the law on the part of rebellious clergy. The council of the Church Association therefore submit for the consideration of the branch associations throughout the country, and Protestant bodies in general, a series of suggestions as supplying a mode of action suited to the present emergency. These include local organisation to influence the selection of candidates for Parliament; the education of electors on the danger to the liberties of the Church and nation involved in the present situation; and the preparation—in readiness for every recurring election—of a carefully framed basis of inquiry to be formally submitted in every county and borough in the kingdom.

The Hossbach case, which kept the Protestant Church in Prussia in a state of suspense for many months, has been productive of wider consequences than those merely affecting the preacher himself. It will be remembered that the Supreme Church Council vetoed his appointment to St. James' parish, and said that if a preacher denied the consubstantiality with God of the Saviour, miracles, and the normative authority of the Bible, his position in the Protestant Church as one of her ministers became impossible. Hossbach was urged to take up this challenge, but he prudently refused, and withdrew his candidature from the Church board of St. James, much to their annoyance, for they wished to fight it out with the council. But another pastor has accepted the challenge, with considerable success. On the issue of the above-mentioned document, Dr. Kalthoff, pfarrer of Nickern, and formerly a preacher at Berlin, wrote to the Supreme Church Council, informing them that he was a transgressor in those very points which they declared to be inconsistent with the Protestant ministry, and that he did not regard the Bible as a doctrinal authority, but only as "the source of a Christian life," that he only acknowledged spiritual miracles, and that he valued the humanity of Christ too highly to dogmatise about it. The council accepted this challenge immediately, suspended Dr. Kalthoff from office, and ordered a disciplinary examination into his teaching. His congregation are highly excited, and threaten to secede in a body, and constitute themselves a "Free" separatist community, but the orthodox rejoice over the prompt action of the council, and the Church papers are beginning to discuss the question, "Is it the Gospel which constitutes the congregation, or is it the congregation which has the right of settling the Gospel?"

SCOTTISH NOTES.

PROFESSOR FLINT OR "POSITIVISM."

Prof. Flint dealt with "Positivism" in his last lecture. He entered fully into the discussion of the philosophy of Comte, whom he described as a man of immoderate intellectual self-conceit and arrogance, but also of great intellectual power. He showed that nothing but scepticism was the logical result of Comte's teaching. When he argued that causes were absolutely inaccessible to the human intellect, he could not consistently believe in himself as a cause. In the latter part of his career, Comte felt that the heart needed satisfaction as well as the head, so he invented an elaborate system of religion, of which the lecturer gave a rapid sketch. He observed that the character of the religions which had been invented in the present day was no slight indirect proof of the Divine revelation they would displace. Take Divine revelation away, and we should be left even at this hour in absolute spiritual darkness and helplessness.

FREE TEACHING IN THEOLOGY.

At the last meeting of the General Council of the Aberdeen University the Rev. Mr. Smith, Tarland, proposed a motion in favour of the restrictions being removed from the qualification for theological chairs. He maintained that there was no valid reason for having these chairs filled by professors who must belong to a Church which did not represent more than about 20 per cent of the population. The chairs were thus made sectarian, while able men were excluded from becoming professors. The Rev. Mr. Davidson, of Inverurie, moved a negative. He argued that no practical results could arise from the adoption of Mr. Smith's motion until the Church of Scotland was disestablished and its connection with the University severed. Principal Brown was opposed to the study of theology being removed from the Universities, and Principal Pirie held that a theological test was necessary for a professor of theology, just as a professor of medicine must have a medical degree. On a vote being taken the amendment was carried by 59 votes to 16.

A VOICE FROM EDINBURGH IN LEEDS.

At a recent public meeting of the Leeds Nonconformist Union, Mr. J. Dick Peddie, from Edinburgh, set forth arguments in support of the disestablishment movement in Scotland, and went on to say that in that country Liberal principles prevailed, as shown by the fact that even in the present Tory Parliament, elected at a time of reaction, forty out of the sixty Scottish members were decided Liberals. The vast bulk of the voters were Liberals, and the vast bulk of the Liberal voters in Scotland were in favour of disestablishment, especially in the boroughs, as indicated by the result of recent elections at Perth, Greenock, and Leith. Efforts were being made in Parliament to obtain a commission to inquire into the state of the Scottish Church, but the whole object of that was delay. The proposal was gratifying to weak-kneed and hesitating Liberals, but no such commission was required to satisfy any intelligent person in Scotland. The state of the Scottish Established Church was plain and patent to all. The question there lay in a nutshell, and there was no man of ordinary intelligence in Scotland who did not know all about it. He therefore trusted that English Liberals and Nonconformists would lend their help to make known that they would be satisfied with nothing short of immediate and complete disestablishment and disendowment in Scotland.

SERMON ILLUSTRATION.

It used to be a fashion at the Dundee Theatre for the manager to announce before the close of the performance the play which would take place the next evening. The well-known and famous Bruce Norton one Saturday night came to the front of the curtain and began, "To-morrow night—" "The morn's Sabbath!" called out a small urchin in the gallery. "I know it," was the mild reply. "To-morrow night a sermon will be preached in Ward Chapel, when a collection will be made for the conversion of the Jews. On Monday night will be performed here, with grand new scenery and effects, Shylock the Jew, whom Shakespeare drew. Prices as usual!"

BOOKS AND AUTHORS.

A Good Old Age: A sermon preached in Cross-street Chapel, Manchester, March 3rd, 1878. By William Gaskell, M.A.

This is a Memorial Sermon, dedicated to the family of the late Stephen S. Schwabe, in whom a Good Old Age had its gentle and noble exemplar. The voice of hope and cheer speaks in these pages from the experience of long years which have still each their spring-tide. The sermon is one not for us to commend, but to recommend—if even that were wanted. It was not sent to us for review here, but we cannot let its publication be announced to our readers only in the form of an advertisement.

A Sermon preached in the Croydon Free Christian Church, January 13th, 1878. By the Rev. E. M. Geldart, M.A.

For brilliant, fervid passages; for scorn of the meaner nature in us, which takes refuge in compliance with customary terms, however unbelievable they have become to our active thoughts; for a religious longing after a surer faith, that may give us all the strength and joy which were ever known to the saintly aspirations of past ages; for these and other high characteristics we look in a sermon from Mr. Geldart, and we find them in this one. Many readers will wish that he had attained a more perfect victory in the conflict he has dared, than yet appears. But our only word here will be to wish him God-speed.

The Unitarian Review, for March. Boston, United States: 101, Milk-street.

THE first contribution, by Mr. Christopher P. Cranch, is an elaborate essay on what the author conceives to be false and true symbolic conceptions of the Deity. The Rev. George Batchelor writes a paper in which he traces the genesis of the moral ideal and its gradual purification, dealing with it solely as a product of human experience, without entering into the question what principles, ideas, purposes, and final causes may lie back of the genesis of the human conscience in history. The "Christology of Swedenborg and Channing" is an attempt by the Rev. B. F. Barrett to harmonise the views of Dr. Channing concerning Christ with the New Church doctrine of Christ's Humanity. The paper is broad and catholic in temper, but, as the Editor shows in some brief criticisms upon it, the arguments of it are anything but conclusive. The Rev. Dr. Putnam gives the first part of a most interesting sketch of Helen Maria Williams, the gifted songstress; and Dr. Hedge sends a thoughtful sermon on "The Idealist and the Realist," based on John xx., 11, 12. The number is one of varied interest, and the contributions of Mr. Cranch and Mr. Batchelor are of permanent value.

Hymns and Choral Songs for Whitsuntide and Anniversary Services. Manchester District Sunday School Association.

THE committee of the Association have just issued the fourth series of this interesting and useful little publication, and we are glad to give it a welcome as another very good number. The music is, on the whole, very good. There is another contribution from the pen of Mr. Henry Farmer, whose tune, "Angels Holy," of last year was so deservedly appreciated; and we have no doubt the new tune, "I know, O Father," will in its turn win its way with our young people. "The Rose is Queen," an American song, graceful and beautiful both in music and words, will also doubtless soon become a favourite. "Eugeni," arranged by the late Rev. Frederick Ashton, M.A., will be cherished now with a sacred recollection as one of the last of those labours of love in which he was always engaged for the benefit and delight of our scholars and their teachers. Of Mr. Ashton we will not say more here. His friend and comrade in many of those endeavours, Mr. O. E. Heys, gives us a new arrangement for the well-known words, "Sunny days of childhood." We had become accustomed to the one introduced in a former series of Hymns and Choral Songs, and cannot yet make up our minds to a change. But our maxim is to be always open to improvement; and as to this new series, we cordially recommend it to our readers, and wish the enterprise year by year an increasing success.

The Psychological Review for April, 1878. London: Edward W. Allen.

THIS is a new quarterly devoted to a branch of psychology which has not yet established itself in the place to which it aspires among the Theoretical Sciences, though it is theoretical enough in all conscience. Its aim is to be "an organ of communication between Spiritualists and the public." The writers being men as well as Spiritualists, and, so far as appears from the present number, men of parts and good learning, there are many very readable columns here; among which we are specially interested to find an article by John Page Hopps on "Modern Materialism." Mr. Hopps will blame us for the careless and obviously ill-informed way in which we refer to Spiritualism. He may be assured that we have read his own article with attention and much approval—whatever our approval, after such a confession, may be worth. If only the attempt fairly to address "the public" might bring some rays from the open sky upon the shaded rites of our modern ghost-seers, we should rejoice greatly over the apparition of the Psychological Review.

FRANCIS T. WASHBURN.

AN unpretending little volume, entitled "Sermons and Essays," by Francis T. Washburn, which some time ago found its way across the Atlantic, deserves a cordial and sympathetic reception. It has been compiled as a tribute of affection to a singularly beautiful personality, and as a memorial of a deeply interesting, though brief and uneventful career. One feels, on turning over its pages, as if treading on holy ground. And in bringing it under public notice, a strong reluctance is felt to deal with its contents according to the conventional modes of ordinary criticism. The book has few faults or shortcomings, but even were it open, from a literary point of view, to an adverse verdict, discontentment would give place to sincere sympathy and regret. Instead therefore of subjecting the "Sermons and Essays" to a severe and searching review, it will be the aim of this notice to give some insight into a nature so saintlike, so faithful and wise, that it seemed to approach perfection almost as nearly as human frailty will allow.

Our co-religionists in the United States have been unfortunate in recent years in reference to what may be called denominational bereavements. Starr King, Nahor A. Staples, and Charles Lowe died in the prime of life, Mumford had but passed the meridian, and Washburn was summoned while still on the threshold of his career. The death of men such as these, endowed with uncommon gifts and remarkable personal influence has been a serious loss not merely to their own immediate circles but to the cause of liberal Christianity. The testimony of those who knew them, and the fine taste and thought and feeling displayed in their published discourses show what a high place they would have taken had health and longer life been granted them. American Unitarianism is no doubt richer than ours in the finer elements of mind and culture, but it could ill afford to lose the services which these men were peculiarly adapted to render. They were ministers, not merely of man's choice, but of God's own consecration, and their loss can scarcely be overestimated. "In this exigent time," as Edmund Burke said in reference to the death of his son, "the loss of a finished man is not easily supplied."

The story of Mr. Washburn's life may be speedily told. His short span of thirty years was nearly all occupied with work of a preparatory nature. His days for the most part were spent in quiet study, amid attached friends and enviable surroundings. Born in Boston in 1843, and educated in the schools of that city, he grew up somewhat slight and fragile in body, with a face of almost womanly refinement and delicacy, a clear but cautious intellect, a kind and affectionate disposition, and with a demeanour at once unassuming, dignified, and reserved. Entering Harvard in 1860, he graduated in 1864, and after six months' study of law in his father's office, he wisely yielded to an attraction for the ministry, and began the study of theology in the Cambridge Divinity School. Here he passed a year in congenial work, and then found it necessary to accompany an invalid sister to Europe. The three following years, which were spent chiefly in France, Germany, and Italy, contributed largely to the development of his mind and character, and it is to be regretted that no extracts from his letters and papers belonging to that time have been given to the public. We have, however, contrived to glean a few facts from other sources than the book before us. It appears that during his stay in Europe he continued his studies as diligently as his extreme solicitude for his sister's health permitted. After studying French in France, and German in Germany, he was apparently desirous of mastering the Dutch language for the sake of its religious literature. But probably, fearing that Miss Washburn's health would suffer on the moist flats of Holland, he carried on the study of Dutch in Italy—a notable triumph, certainly, of professional conscientiousness and zeal. After his return to Boston he felt ready for a settlement, and was ordained and installed as junior minister of the Unitarian Church (or as it is locally styled the first Congregational Society), of Milton, Mass., on March 2nd, 1871. In this position he speedily formed the closest and happiest relations with his colleague Dr. Morrison and the whole congregation. Naturally he found the work of the ministry by no means free from difficulties, and his extreme conscientiousness, and reluctance to utter anything of which he was not fully convinced, increased the labour of preparing his pulpit work. Moreover his theological training had not been of a kind to aid him greatly in the selection or treatment of subjects. His studies had been protracted and his reading extensive and varied, but there had been throughout a want of continuity, perhaps also of system, and time had scarcely elapsed for his knowledge to be thoroughly digested and assimilated. Consequently his first year's discourses were rather experiments in sermon writing, than well-designed and finished productions. But to the more thoughtful and sympathetic of his hearers they afforded interesting glimpses into the processes of investigation and self-discipline by which he was gaining a firmer foothold on the heights of truth and faith. And after he had felt his way with scrupulous conscientiousness through these preparatory stages of thought his discourses became so clear and impressive, and so devoid of all partisan bias and everything approaching to false sentiment or overstatement that his hearers felt they could surrender themselves to his guidance with a sense of spiritual security. The eleven "Sermons and Essays" selected by his widow for the memorial volume are not all of equal merit, but have the common excellence of breathing an intensely earnest and truth-loving spirit. They are for the most part on great subjects, such as "Immortality," "Prayer," and "Communion of the Soul with God." These themes are dealt with in a manner quite unlike that usually followed by American preachers. The illustrations are few, there is no approach to the glare and glitter of a sensational style, and personal allusions are scrupulously repressed. The sermon last mentioned is the finest in the book, and its excellence may be judged from the fact that it has been translated and largely circulated in Germany. In treating such a subject his introspective temperament and his clear spiritual vision enable him to reach down into many a hidden depth, and to rise to heights inaccessible to all save the pure in heart. A careful study of these eleven discourses leaves the impression that there must have been a singularly close resemblance in subjectivity of mind, in religious depth and tenderness, and in perception of religious truth, between Washburn and Scougal, the gifted author of "The Life of God in the Soul of Man." Mr. Washburn could scarcely be said to excel as a public speaker, a circumstance due in some degree to his instinctive shrinking from everything approaching to display. It was quite opposed to his nature to assume the easy and confident attitude of conscious superiority and power. His disinclination to dogmatise, and his fear of uttering an unfair word or pronouncing a hasty judgment sometimes marred his delivery, and left an impression of hesitancy and indefiniteness. But the charm of his personal presence atoned for any shortcomings of this kind. "His face," as a friend writes, "was the face of a saint and a scholar, and was always in itself a beautiful sermon." The admirably-executed photograph in the memorial volume happily perpetuates its characteristic expression. Its humility, refinement, gentleness, and spirituality are, however, but the dim reflection of the grace and truth that filled his soul and consecrated his thought and life.

With such fine abilities, and such culture and personal influence, Mr. Washburn speedily became a power for good in Milton. He accepted service on the school committee, and performed other duties of a public-spirited citizen. A fine clock was placed by his exertions on the front of the old meeting-house, and various other little schemes accomplished. A number of the poor, infirm, and unfortunate soon learned, with good reason, to regard him with almost filial affection. His marriage with Miss Appleton, of Roxbury, on New Year's Day, 1873, brought with it new happiness and abundant proof of his growing popularity. The richest promises of life were all unfolding round him, and though he seemed to feel the pressure of weightier cares and obligations, he had no burden to bear which could hurt his sensitive and delicate nature. But out of this clear sky the bolt of death was soon to fall. It seemed fit to the Divine Wisdom that this faithful spirit should live in men's hearts as a memory and an inspiration, and not abide on earth as a visible example and guide. Towards the end of the same year, at whose opening he had led his bride from the altar, he became dangerously ill, and struggled wearily for some weeks between life and death. The painful suspense of his friends and indeed of the whole community during his illness will long be remembered in Milton. A load seemed lifted from the hearts of the people when now and then hopeful tidings came from his chamber in "Ware Cottage." And young and old were cast into a common sorrow, and many into an outburst of grief, when the dread certainty came. He died on December 29th, 1873, only a few days before the first anniversary of his marriage. It could have been no easy task for his venerable colleague Dr. Morrison to deliver the touching funeral address which is given in the memorial volume. "I dare not trust myself," said the old man, "to speak of what he has been to me, and of what I had hoped he might still be, till he should be called to do for me what I am now so poorly fitted to do for him. Of the loss in still nearer and closer relations I dare not even think, except with silent prayer to Him who alone can comfort and bless them."

Mr. Washburn's ministry had scarcely lasted three years, but the impression which he made was one of unusual depth and permanence. The Church in Milton was consecrated anew by the spirit of holiness. Its people had welcomed a stranger amongst them and found they had entertained an angel unawares. And to this day his name is rarely mentioned amongst them except in a tone of sacredness, or with warm expressions of retrospective love. It may seem a profitless task to tell anew the story of this quiet and contemplative life, or to fill up the lines which the brief and modest sketch in the memorial volume have left blank or vague. But is there no help to be gained from communion with so saintly a nature at such a time as this, when the "beauty of holiness" suggests to many but an image painted on the clouds, and when religion is apt to be rudely pushed aside like a dreamer in a bustling crowd? From the last sermon preached by this true messenger of peace let him enforce the great lesson of his life: "Meekness, humility, patience, simple truthfulness, and modesty,—to these virtues it sometimes seems to me as if our times were specially blind. But doubtless there is something in the nature of these rare and fragrant virtues which hide them from the public gaze. They are rather private, personal, intimate, known only of those who feel the blessing. But virtue is indeed its own reward. There is in every worthy trait of character a native beauty. To live worthily is life in the true sense. Here upon earth the good and faithful souls build up the unseen kingdom, not for themselves alone, but for all who, led by right desire, seek to join them in their faithful life. To the virtue and the grace which we behold in them there is something answering in us, which unites us with them in sympathy and hope, and turns our souls with theirs to God. And so by uplifting our hearts with the highest faith and the best hopes we may grow into that spirit which begins with common tasks, but which rises gradually into a high exalted grace, upholding the heart, healing evil, perfecting our life and work."

ANDREW CHALMERS.

RESIGNATION OF THE REV. W. M. LEWIS BAPTIST MINISTER.

On Sunday evening last the Rev. W. M. Lewis, who during the last twelve months has filled the office of pastor to the English Baptist Church, Lammas-street, Carmarthen, preached his farewell sermon to the congregation.

After the sermon Mr. Lewis said, with deep feeling, he had now finished his work as pastor of the church. During his ministry in that place he had tried to do his duty. He had read and thought for himself, and always dared to express his honest convictions. The burden of his ministry had been the universal fatherhood of God, the universal brotherhood of man, Christianity not a creed but a life, not baptism nor the Lord's supper, but a holy life, and Jesus a tender loving Saviour and example for us all. He had always tried to teach them that salvation was a something very much deeper than mere deliverance from everlasting burning. The man who thinks of it as simply a deliverance from such, is very much like a coward and a slave, and a stranger to the instincts of a son. Salvation is a deliverance from sin. He had no doubt his catholicity had given offence to a certain class of minds—that he could not help. Mr. Lewis also said that from that hour it was his intention to secede from the Baptist denomination, of which he had been a member since his seventeenth year and a minister since 1870. His views on the subject of baptism having undergone a radical change, he could no longer honestly occupy a Baptist pulpit.

BURY DISTRICT SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION.—The first meeting for the year was held at Bury on Sunday last, and was well attended. Mr. Thomas Holt presided, and a paper was read by the Secretary, Mr. J. Nuttall, on "Our Union meetings; are they appreciated?" An earnest, well-sustained discussion followed, in which the following and others took part:—Messrs. Stephenson, Cranshaw, and Roberts, Bury; Schofield, Haywood; Holt, Allen, Schofield, and Squier, Stand. After a hymn had been sung, the Rev. W. C. Squier concluded the meeting with prayer.

ALONE.

[TRANSLATED FROM THE GERMAN.]

ONE year ago across our way
The Spring sun shone;
To-day it smiles through April clouds
On me alone.

Sweet blossoms that she loved awake
From their long rest,
While she, unconscious, slumbers on
In Nature's breast.

Carols the lark on joyous wing,
Piercing the sky;
My weary heart would follow him;
Yearning I'd fly.

But, chained by pain and doubt to earth,
I cannot rise;
Heaven seems so far away, and tears
Have dimmed my eyes.

My soul grows dark, my faith is weak,
Her grave beside,
'Tis hard to feel that "God is love"
Since Thecla died!

Oh, Faith! sweet messenger of Peace,
With glory crowned,
Illumine with thy golden rays
This sacred mound.

Enter my heart; its doubt dispel
By thy sweet grace;
Roll back these clouds, that I may see
The Father's face.

—Christum Register.

The Unitarian Herald.

FRIDAY, APRIL 19, 1878.

VIRCHOW ON SCIENTIFIC DOGMATISM.

In November last, the Society of German Savants, which corresponds to our British Association, celebrated its fiftieth anniversary at Munich. It was an occasion naturally seized by the most distinguished physicists and naturalists for airing their own theories. Amongst the rest, Professor Haeckel, the most advanced Darwinian on the Continent, who has attempted to delineate in detail the genealogical tree of creation, put forth a claim on behalf of the opinions which he advocates, not only that they should be received as a settled part of the nation's knowledge, but that they should even be taught in all the public schools. This bold and startling claim provoked from Professor Virchow an elaborate reply, which created a great sensation in Germany, and which became known to English readers who are interested in this subject by an account of it which was published in the Times. The full reply has now been reproduced in an English translation, which has been revised by Professor Virchow himself and introduced by a preface from his own pen, under the title of The Freedom of Science in the Modern State. Its object is "not to depreciate the great services rendered by Mr. Darwin to the advancement of biological science," but to draw a sharp line between fact and theory, between what is known and what is only conjectured, or, in Professor Virchow's own words, "to enter an energetic protest against the attempts that are made to proclaim the problems of research as actual facts, the opinions of scientists as established science." This protest is not the less important in that it is not made in the name of religion, but of science itself, which the Professor fears will suffer in the eyes of the public if it has to recede from positions which have been too hastily taken up. Most of his address is occupied in enforcing this general principle. But one of the illustrations he offers deserves to be quoted. Speaking of the possible descent of man from the brutes, he says: "I am quite prepared for such a result, and I should neither be surprised nor astonished if the proof were produced that man had ancestors among other vertebrate animals." But, he goes on to say, "no such proof has yet been produced; while, in fact, every fresh discovery seems to remove it further off, by showing that 'quaternary man' at least was as much a distinct species as he is now." The proof may come nevertheless—

Only (he adds), as a matter of fact, we must recognise that there still exists as yet a sharp line of demarcation between man and the ape. We cannot teach, we cannot pronounce it to be a conquest of science, that man descends from the ape or any other animal. We can only indicate it as a hypothesis, however probable it may seem, and however obvious a solution it may appear.

HERESY MADE EASY.

Dr. Story, of Roseneath, has tried his hand at providing an easy and comfortable way of escape for the heretics of the Scottish Kirk without subjecting them to the loss of the ecclesiastical status. At a recent meeting of the Dumbarton Established Presbytery he moved and carried the transmission of an overture to the General Assembly touching the subscription of elders to formula. Dr. Story proposes to relieve the burdened consciences of elders by putting upon them, in place of the old burden, this easy yoke:—

"I, A. B., do solemnly acknowledge the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments to be the Word of God, and the rule of faith and manners. I further profess my approbation of the Confession ratified by law in the year 1870, as the 'public and avowed doctrines of this Church,' and 'containing the sum and substance of the doctrine of the Reformed Churches, to which I adhere.'"

The important point in this overture, it will be observed, is that the elders of the Church are no longer by it required to subscribe personally to the dogmas of the Confession of Faith, but only to give these their approbation as "the public and avowed doctrines" of the Reformed Church. They may believe what doctrines they choose; though what they speak in the ear in closets they must not think of pressing upon the Church to proclaim upon the housetops. Theologians may appreciate this casuistical distinction; but men with a healthy and robust sense of straightforwardness, happily free from the niceties of Dr. Tulloch's "trained theologian," will naturally conclude that, while it is meant as a loop-hole for heretics, it is, at the same time, an encouragement to half-honesty, which is sometimes more dangerous than manifest dishonesty.

THE MARRIAGE AT CUCH BEHAR.

The marriage of the Maharajah of Cuch Behar to the eldest daughter of Babu Keshub Chunder Sen is an event of no ordinary significance. Her Majesty, through her Private Secretary, sent her congratulations to Babu Sen on the occasion, which is manifestly regarded in Government circles as an auspicious one. The marriage, indeed, was arranged under the direct sanction of the Imperial authorities in India, who are the legal guardians of the young Prince. It is not so clear that the Maharajah's own family are equally satisfied, and a bitter agitation on the subject ever since it was mooted has threatened to rend asunder the Brahmo party throughout India. The dissentients, some of them men of high character and influence, objected that the parties were both too young for marriage under the Brahmo Law, which fixes the minimum age for the man at eighteen and the woman at fourteen. The Maharajah is but in his sixteenth year, and his bride at her last birthday was thirteen. Keshub Babu was implored to respect the law in the making of which he had himself taken part, and his refusal to listen to these protests was regarded as a lapse from high principle, altogether injurious to the character of a religious reformer. The Indian Mirror, the organ of Keshub Chunder Sen, has treated these remonstrances with much indifference, hinting only that the circumstances, when they came to be fully known, would be found quite satisfactory. Probably the meaning of this is that the young people are not to see much of each other until they will be old enough for the requirements of the Brahmo or any other law of marriage. The arrangement appears very curious to the Western mind, which connects the idea of a wedding with the bride and bridegroom going off together. Certainly the last thing we should think of would be that the bride should go back home with her father, as the Maharani has done, and that the bridegroom should set out for a somewhat prolonged visit to the other side of the globe, as the Maharajah is going to do. Still, these are only the old ways in India, where children, we know, may be married at six and three, not to say sixteen and thirteen. The Brahmos seek to introduce new and better notions, but to the feeling of their countrymen it is they who are going too far. We could have wished that a marriage which in so many respects is one for sincere congratulation had been free from this objection.

The wedding ceremony came off on Wednesday the 6th March. The account of it which appears in the Mirror, just to hand, shows that it was not without considerable difficulty that matters were finally arranged to meet the ideas of the Brahmos on the one hand and the Ranees on the other. The Maharajah and his family are not Brahmos, though he has himself declared his adherence to the theistic faith. Certain objects of the idolatrous religion were present at the place, but were not worshipped. The Mirror informs us that "the muntras and ritual had been expurgated of all idolatry. Though the Rajah's Purohits, who are orthodox Brahmins, were allowed to officiate at the ceremony, the hom was not performed during the marriage: but after the bride and her party left the place the Brahmins did perform it, and the bridegroom was present during its performance. Babu Krishna Behari Sen had to give away the bride, because a very senseless objection had been taken to Babu Keshub Chunder Sen's going through that form. The Divine Service held on the occasion was interrupted by great uproar from all sides. The marriage vows were gone through in the Andar, or inner apartments of the Bajbari, by the bridegroom and the bride, after the public ceremony. Here only three or four Brahmos were admitted. The principles of Brahmo marriage were barely preserved, but for all practical purposes the majority of our co-religionists present on the occasion were deeply dissatisfied. On the other hand the Ranees, and the representatives of the Hindu element in the Cuch Behar Raj, were equally dissatisfied. They felt that the essential requirements of a Hindu marriage had been set aside, and they were consequently distressed and angry. We felt that our principles did not receive as much prominence as they should have obtained, and we were distressed accordingly. But we have this consolation. The essential principles of Brahmo marriage have been maintained intact."

The Rev. Frederick Ashton, M.A.

It was with a great shock that we received on Monday last the intelligence of the death, after a sudden and brief illness, of our dear friend the Rev. Frederick Ashton. The esteem in which he was held by all classes and denominations was manifested in the profound sensation with which the sad news was received throughout Glossop and the neighbourhood, as well as by Unitarian circles in Manchester. His work in Glossop had been so successful, he had gathered around him and inspired with his own spirit such a band of teachers and fellow-workers in all departments, that we had come to look upon him and to point to him as the model minister of a young congregation. More recently he had extended his usefulness beyond the congregation, and was engaged in undertakings connected with the Manchester District Sunday School Association, where his loss will be felt, as indeed it will be generally, as that of one whose place will not soon be filled.

Frederick Ashton was a native of Manchester. He was the second son of Mr. Councillor Ashton, and was born in the year 1848. Descended from Quaker ancestors, his mind and disposition seemed moulded on the gentle and pious type characteristic of the Society of Friends. From childhood he was remarkable for his modest and amiable demeanour. By those who had any share, however casual, in his early instruction, the remembrance of his conscientiousness and docility will ever be a valued possession. It was as natural for him to be reverent and kind and thoughtful, as for flowers to blow or birds to sing. On the completion of his school training, he went to business in a Manchester warehouse, where all his duties were discharged with unfailing assiduity. But the invincible tendency of his mind was towards the ministerial life, as most congenial to his tastes, and offering the most favourable opportunities for benevolent aims and religious usefulness. After much deliberation he went to Oxford in October, 1869, entering himself at St. Edmund's Hall. At the end of his three years' course, he obtained his degree of Bachelor of Arts, which subsequently was replaced by that of Master of Arts.

After leaving the University he undertook missionary work in connection with the chapel at Gee Cross, while he read theology with the Rev. H. Enfield Dowson. This proved a most fitting preparation for his ministerial career. At this time he obtained much distinction in the study of Hebrew at Owens College. His intense interest in the Sunday-school and in its classes and other allied institutions, rendered his connection with them of exceeding value; and the esteem and affection which he had conciliated were marked in an emphatic manner by the handsome presentations made to him on his resignation. Bonds of mutual interest and respect were there formed, the rupture of which by his unexpected death will cause unfeigned grief in many hearts. The single-minded and amiable character of his assistant ministry at Gee Cross was equally conspicuous at Glossop, where, in 1875, he became the minister of the young congregation founded by the fostering care of the East Cheshire Union. No appointment could well have been more happily made. His prudence tempered his zeal; his plans, carefully thought out, were developed with the system and order of his business pursuits; he had a winning knack of securing sympathy and aid from his professional and lay friends alike; and, with equal skill and success, had obtained influence and regard in many circles in which his religious views were unacceptable.

On the Rev. John Page Hopps leaving the Glasgow pulpit for Leicester, Mr. Ashton received a unanimous invitation to become minister of the former; but although this presented an advancement in professional position and salary of no ordinary kind, he was so devoted to the work he had taken in hand that he decided to remain with his friends at Glossop.

Mr. Ashton had musical tastes and acquirements which proved a valuable auxiliary to his labours. Before going to the University he was a member of the choir of Strangeways Free Church, where, under Dr. Beard and the Rev. Brooke Herford, he received many of his early religious impressions, and in connection with its agencies cultivated his practical talent for educational and moral usefulness. His musical enthusiasm well fitted him for the conduct of singing classes, in the salutary influences of which he had almost unbounded faith. In Glossop, his talent and zeal as an organiser and conductor of concerts and similar entertainments was widely appreciated, and he was secretary to the Choral Union, which included members of nearly all the choirs in the town, and his amiable disposition, not less than his technical knowledge, secured general confidence.—In September last Mr. Ashton married Mary, the daughter of Mr. Samuel Denby, of Dukinfield. In celebration of this event the congregation presented to him a handsome timepiece. To this affectionate congregation, to the teachers and scholars, and, above all, to his young widow and his parents, his death from an attack of English cholera has come with appalling suddenness. Together with very many friends, we would offer them our deepest sympathy.

The funeral takes place this day (Thursday), at Brooklands Cemetery, Sale, at one o'clock.

Anthony Martin, Esq., of Evesham.

ONLY recently our friends at Evesham sustained a great loss in the death of the Rev. John Colston, and now another heavy loss has fallen upon them in the death of Mr. Anthony Martin, which event occurred early on the morning of the 10th inst. The Inquirer says of him that he was born on the 3rd of August, 1813, at Tansor, near Oundle, in the county of Northampton. His father was a man of strong intellect, and not less remarkable for his fidelity to the religious convictions in favour of Unitarianism which he adopted early in life. It was his custom to assemble his servants and labourers for worship in his house, as there was no Unitarian chapel in the neighbourhood, and Mr. Martin took frequent pleasure in relating how he must have imbibed the principles which distinguished not only his father but himself. He was educated for the medical profession in Birmingham and Dublin, and in January, 1840, went to reside in Evesham as a general practitioner, and was not long in establishing a practice, which was due not less to his skill than to his fine personal qualities. Under a somewhat brusque manner he possessed a firm and ready judgment and a deep natural tenderness, and he became the personal friend as well as the "good physician," in the homes of his numerous patients, amongst whom he numbered some of every condition in life and of every variety of opinion. His outspokenness on religious and political topics was so obviously the product of a noble and truth-loving nature that it could not alienate the respect and regard of those who differed from him, and the result was that he at once achieved success in his profession and took a leading place amongst his fellow-townsmen in all religious, political, and social affairs. He was constant in his attendance on public worship, and while his health permitted, a punctual teacher in the Sunday school. In politics he soon became, and he always continued to be, a leader in the Liberal party, and when the period of his long illness set in he was regarded as the wisest counsellor to whom his fellow-townsmen could on all occasions resort. Soon after his settling at Evesham he set on foot a Medical Provident Society, which has been in active and useful operation up to the present time. He was for many years a member of the Town Council, and twice filled the office of mayor. Some years ago he was appointed a borough magistrate, and in this, as in every other opportunity of usefulness, he discharged his duties with honour and ability. In 1870 an accidental fall from his horse was the cause of a spinal affection, which, at the end of the year deprived him of the use of his lower limbs. For seven years he was confined to his couch, and he suffered almost constant pain of a very acute kind. This terrible trial for a strong and active man served but to bring out the depth of his religious nature, the fullness of his affections, and the power of his mind. These gave him an elevation of character which won the reverence of his family and friends. No murmur at his lot ever escaped him. No duty which a man so afflicted could possibly fulfil did he ever neglect. He has long been regarded with an esteem which it is rarely the lot of man to acquire under any circumstances. His presence was a power of good. Even the memory of such a man remains as a valuable possession.

THE COMMUNION SERVICE.

REV. E. C. TOWNE, B.A.

IV.

THE EXAMPLE OF CHRIST.

In regard to the form under which sacrament is generally known, that of the symbolical bread and wine, the significant facts are as follows. The gospel of 'John' makes no mention of this. It is entirely silent in regard to any special breaking of bread and giving of wine. The two gospels of 'Matthew' and 'Mark' relate how Jesus broke bread and gave one cup of wine, but neither of them intimate that Christ expected his act to be imitated. They do not tell us that he said, "This do in remembrance of me." The only gospel which has these words is that of 'Luke,' and 'Luke' has them only in reference to the breaking of bread. There are two cups of wine in 'Luke,' one before the bread and one after it. No account has been taken of the first one, and as far as anything in the Gospels goes, no account need have been taken of the other. The breaking of bread would have fully met all that the Gospels tell us Christ said. It would also have made a sufficient symbol, better for its simplicity, and very much better for the absence of the wine cup.

Paul does, indeed, say [in 1 Cor. xi. 23] that he had "received of the Lord," that the "This do in remembrance of me" was said both after the wine and after the bread. But it is perfectly clear that Paul was mistaken (just as, during Christ's life, John was wrong in wanting to call down fire from heaven, and Peter was wrong when he rebuked Christ for expecting death). Paul, who had never seen Christ, says that he "received from the Lord," a fact which none of the Gospels record. Paul meant that he had received it in a dream or vision. But we know to-day, what Paul did not know, that to dream that a thing took place may or may not be correct. And as all the real evidence is decidedly against Paul's dream, we cannot accept it.

In the supper which Christ ate with his disciples Jewish custom and law rigorously demanded four full cups of wine to each person,—one when the blessing was asked, one after the breaking of bread, one after the roast lamb, and one to conclude the feast. These the company must unite in, and they might put in others as much as they chose. Each person was to have four cups of wine. Dr. Edersheim cites the Talmud on the subject in the following passage of his volume on "The Temple" (p. 202).

"According to the Jerusalem Talmud, it was intended to express Israel's joy on the Paschal night, and even the poorest must have 'at least four cups, though he were to receive the money for it from the poor's box.' If he cannot otherwise obtain it, the Talmud adds, 'he must sell or pawn his coat, or hire himself out for these four cups of wine.'"

And yet it was a matter of tradition only, like that of not eating with unwashed hands. Dr. Edersheim says: "The use of wine, in the Paschal Supper, though not mentioned in the Law, was strictly enjoined by tradition." A traditional matter of this sort is not likely to have been taken up and specially consecrated by Christ. Four cups of wine to every one! It is not very likely that Christ would have asked them to make all this drinking of wine a memorial of him. Paul has it, from his dream, that Christ said: "This do, as oft as ye drink, in remembrance of me." It would have been very often, and would have been a very unsuitable symbol. Paul complains in fact that some of his communicants at Corinth became drunk.

The custom then was to meet every day, as a social circle or family. There was no other church than this social one. And having all things in common they took the chief meal of the day together, according to a not unfrequent ancient custom. This meal Paul calls the Kyriac supper. The word Kyriac is an adjective from the Greek word for "lord" or "master." It means "relating to the master"—to Christ as the Teacher, or master of disciples. The word became kirk in Scotch and church in English. A very exact rendering, therefore, both of the word and the meaning, is to say, "church supper," only remembering that it was not "church" in our sense, but in their sense of a disciple's social circle. That is, it was a social church supper, made to imitate more or less the Jewish festival supper. A wrong idea is given by our version where it says "the Lord's supper," as if Christ were a being of divinity, and as if he commanded this supper and dictated its features. Christ was simply "the teacher," and this supper was simply a social supper of the Christian disciples, entirely designed and arranged by them, to imitate Christ's last passover supper with His disciples and to express their brotherly union. There was no thought of any such solemn sacrament as the communion afterwards became. To eat together as Christ and His disciples had done was the main idea, and so little was the occasion like our communion, that Paul says that by their excess in eating and drinking some of the members were sick, some were become invalids, and some had even died. The breaking of bread was incidental to this social supper, and the symbolic drinking together was connected with drinking themselves drunk.

It is a conclusion equally hasty and erroneous of some persons that we could have a communion service by having a church supper. That would be following the example of erring disciples. And since we find that this was the idea of the disciples at so early a period, what reason have we to believe that Christ set sacredly apart the breaking of bread even? If his disciples had understood him to do this they surely would have set it sacredly apart themselves. Instead of having it every day, as a part of the daily meal, they would have had it by itself, and would have made it less common. They did not do this because they did not have any special idea of its sacredness. Evidently, as far as they knew, Christ had not set it apart as a sacrament.

In the gospel of "John," as I have said already, no allusion even is made to a symbolic use of bread and wine. Instead of this, a symbolic washing of feet is related. Christ took the basin and towel, as was sometimes done by a host to show extreme respect and friendship to his guests, and did the ordinary servants' work of washing the feet of the disciples, as they reclined at table. His design was to teach in the strongest possible manner perfect humility and helpfulness, readiness to do anything at the dictate of brotherly love. But we do not take the washing of feet as an institution, not even when Christ says, "Ye also ought to wash one another's feet. I have given you an example, that ye also should do as I have done to you." It was a lesson simply, not the institution of an ordinance, and was to be obeyed in the spirit rather than in the letter. Just so the use of the symbolic bread and wine was a lesson, not an institution, and we are to imitate it literally only so far as will help us to carry out its spirit. We need not use the cup of wine, nor the bowl and towel, because we cannot, in our circumstances, make a good symbol out of wine-drinking, or out of feet-washing. The breaking of bread even was not made an ordinance by Christ. Paul began to have the idea of making it a special ordinance, but that was not Christ's idea when he broke the bread. Jesus was not a legalist, to make rites and ordinances, but a prophet and exemplar. He did not deal so much in injunctions as he did in examples and promises. He set forth principles and comprehensive truths, and left measures and definitions to the judgment of reason and conscience. He did not ordain our Sunday, for example; our sole authority in him for it is the general principle of doing whatever will best carry out his spirit and truth. So it need not disturb us to find that he gave no law for sacrament, and does not bind us, even to the literal following of his example. To carry out the spirit of his example is the one essential thing. To do that we must take away additions which originated with Paul, which turned simple breaking of bread into the 'body and blood' ordinance, involving a use of the wine cup neither true to the spirit of Christ nor faithful to his example. This we will examine in our next.

(To be continued.)

BOLTON: COMMISSION-STREET.—At the close of the bazaar on Saturday last it was found that the amount realised, with donations, was £695.

MONEYREA.—The Rev. T. Leyland has accepted the invitation extended to him from Burnley, and will enter upon his duties at Midsummer.

NORTH MIDLAND SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION.

THE annual meeting of this Association is to be held on Monday next. As in the Manchester district the annual report has been printed in advance for circulation, and we give the following abstracts:—

Your committee regrets that they are obliged to record a considerable decrease both in the number of scholars on the books and in the average attendance. Nearly half this decrease is however accounted for by the closing of the Domestic Mission School, Leicester. The number of teachers is slightly greater than last year, thus causing relatively a marked increase in the teaching power, which may possibly account for the improvement in the general tone and efficiency of the schools referred to in the careful and suggestive report of the visitor (Mr. Gill). It is worthy of note that the impression conveyed to the visitor by his annual visit to the several schools in the district does not correspond with the actual decrease in the number of scholars.

In accordance with the resolution passed at the last annual meeting your committee have taken 300 copies of "Teachers' Notes," a satisfactory proportion of which has been purchased for use in the various schools. The thanks of the Association are due to the Rev. F. H. Jones, B.A., for his services on the Board of Editors.

The various Sunday School Associations having been invited to send representatives to our annual meeting, we hope to welcome amongst us representatives of the London, the Manchester, and the West Riding Associations.

THE VISITOR'S REPORT.

In passing through our schools this year it has seemed to me that "more in earnest" was written upon most of them; and even in those where what is seen during the hour set apart for teaching is not so encouraging, the healthy condition of the sick and saving funds give proof of good work being done. Improved attendance, discipline good, singing good, scholars attentive, questions put to them readily answered, and an improved tone all round was the prevailing feature.

A speciality I noticed in two of our schools was a large mixed class of young men and women, presenting an appearance more like a family gathering than of school. In one case there were upwards of thirty scholars present, and in both cases the utmost order prevailed.

At Upper Chapel School, the formation of singing classes, conducted by a competent teacher, has been found very helpful. I would earnestly call the attention of the managers of our schools to this matter. The improvement in the singing at the above school is very marked, and is a new source of pleasure to both teachers and scholars.

The prepared lessons recently issued are in very general use in our schools, and although the competitive examination scheme does not seem to grow in favour, the lessons prepared in connection with that scheme cannot but be very helpful.

It would perhaps be wrong on my part not to say a word on one of the weak points still existing in our schools. I refer to classes under the care of persons who make no pretence of having much capacity for teaching. They are pressed into the work because there is no one else to do it. Now it seems to me that this is a weakness which ought not much longer to exist. It would be better to have only one school session a day, if it was all that the teaching power at our disposal would enable us to do well, rather than have two sessions, and part of our work be so imperfectly done. When a class of this kind is asked what they have been doing, the answer is "nothing in particular;" and when the scholars are asked if they can remember anything they have read, no answer is given. In making the above statement, I hope I shall not be misunderstood; my object is simply to find a remedy for what we all admit to be a defect, and I think the means to this end are two-fold. First: the formation of teachers' classes, where persons willing to help us might have a little preparatory training, and where a standard of competent teaching might be obtained. Second: the substitution of a children's service of worship instead of school in the morning. This would enable us to economise our teaching power, and would, if properly conducted, produce many other desirable results. Three of our schools have now adopted this plan, and in each case the teachers speak favourably of the change. At Northampton the attendance has been improved since this change was introduced, and in no case has there been a falling off in consequence of giving up school. I am pleased to have such testimony in favour of this plan, because I have long held the opinion that we keep the school idea too prominent in our arrangements. Our legitimate work now is the religious training of the young, and a well-conducted service seems to me one of the most helpful means to accomplish this purpose. Simultaneous occupation, a common basis of sympathy, pleasant associations with the exercise of worship, a means of bringing the children of the rich and poor together, are all possibilities which may be fairly hoped for from such an arrangement, and I cannot but think that it is in this direction we must look for the solution of some of our difficulties.

The visitor next gives a number of notes respecting the schools visited.

Stannington.—School small; meets in morning from 10 to 12 o'clock. Writing lesson a prominent feature. Morning school attended chiefly by girls. Boys come in afternoon to pay their money into sick and saving funds, and to attend chapel service. Teachers, 32; scholars, 63.

Mansfield.—School larger. Children's service in morning. Afternoon—Minister at work in school. Discipline good; singing good; questions answered well. Teachers, 21; scholars, 109.

Chesterfield.—Children's service in morning instead of School. Responses repeated with heartiness, and in good order. Service very enjoyable. Singing good. Afternoon—Scholars attentive. Questions answered well. Senior class for boys under the care of the minister. Teachers, 21; scholars, 157.

Leicester Great Meeting.—Opening of school in morning a pleasant sight. Large staff of earnest teachers. Good attendance of scholars. Beautiful service. Voluntary, hymn, prayer, chant. All heartily engage in it. Scholars attentive during teaching. Questions answered well. Discipline in girls' department remarkably good. Aspect of young men's class more like home than school. Minister at work in school. Teachers, 47; scholars, 324.

Free Christian Church.—A teacher for every class. Scholars very attentive. Questions answered well. A mixed class of young men and women under the care of a devoted teacher. Aspect more like a family gathering than school. Teachers, 14; scholars, 76.

Loughborough.—School small; discipline good. During the first half-hour minister gave a lesson to a mixed class of boys and girls; all very attentive and gave proof that the lesson was appreciated. Teachers, 9; scholars, 35.

Sheffield Upper Chapel.—School opened in morning by minister; all engage heartily in the service. Scholars attentive in the class. Questions answered well. Formation of singing class composed of elder girls, who attend the chapel service and assist the choir; also of a class of boys and girls, who conduct the singing at children's service. Singing much improved. A very large mixed class of young men and women meets both morning and afternoon. Order and attention very good. Teachers, 32; scholars, 196.

Great Hucklow.—School small, but well managed under the superintendence of the minister. Questions answered well. Teachers, 5; scholars, 26.

Nottingham Christ Church.—Discipline improved. Questions answered well. Minister present at school, and conducts the closing service. Teachers, 28; scholars, 149.

Northampton.—Children's service in morning instead of school; all heartily engage in it. Attendance improved since the adoption of this change; afternoon attendance very good; minister at work in the school; discipline good; singing good; scholars attentive; questions answered well. Teachers, 14; scholars, 155.

In 1877 the number of teachers was 321, average attendance 150½; in 1878 the number is 320, average attendance 140½. The number of scholars in 1877 was 2,272, average attendance 737½; in 1878 the number is 1,960, and average attendance 643½. Five years ago the number of teachers was 275, with an average attendance of 64½.

The income for the last year, including a balance in hand of £1. 0s. 7d., has been £25. 3s. 4d., and the expenditure just equals £25. 3s. 4d.

BELFAST UNITARIAN SOCIETY.

ON Sunday last the annual sermons in aid of the Unitarian Society were preached by the Rev. H. E. Dowson, B.A., of Gee Cross, in the morning in the Church of the Second Congregation, Rosemary-street, and in the evening at Mountpottinger. Collections above the average were made on each occasion. The discourses, which treated of the present position of the Unitarian cause in contrast with the Trinitarian doctrinal beliefs, were delivered in a most eloquent and attractive manner, and were listened to with rapt attention.

The annual meeting was held on Monday evening, at half-past seven o'clock, in the Lecture Hall of the Second Congregation, Rosemary-street. The president (the Rev. J. C. Nelson, M.A.), occupied the chair. Amongst those present were:—The Revs. J. C. Street, T. Leyland, H. McGowan, R. C. Smith, O. Thompson, H. E. Dowson, B.A., A. Gordon, M.A., James Pollard, Messrs. R. McAlmont, Thomas Major, J. Smith, A. Forrest, David Young, James McWilliams, A. Greenfield, David McMaster, T. McClelland, Wm. McAlmont, Wm. Dobbin, John McDowell, James Lamont, K. Stewart, D. W. Moore, Wm. Ritchie, Wm. Rankin, L. Dobbin, John Kennedy, H. Darbyshire, H. Hyndman, A. L. Knox, J. Ritchie, George Fisher, J. M. Darbishire, James Kinnear, — Davids, John McAlmont, G. M. Stewart, T. Osborne, Wm. Greenfield, Wm. Spackman, E. Gardner, J. Lees, J. McNeill, J. L. Polley, Wm. Stitt, Arthur Stitt, John McGriffin, D. Lowry, &c.

The CHAIRMAN, in the course of a lengthened introductory address, said the gentlemen whom they had selected as members of their committee were animated with so much zeal, earnestness, discretion, and ability that they could confidently count on the work committed to their care being studiously discharged, and he was pretty sure that when they had heard the report read the expectations they had formed regarding that committee would have been much more than fully realised—that, in fact, they had discharged their duties in such a manner that the society was in a more thriving and prosperous condition than it had been at any former period. He also observed that in these days of political excitement in almost every land, and of murderous wars, scarcely ended, and of more horrid wars to come, they had, thank God, some honest, upright, and truly patriotic statesmen who were striving, and he trusted successfully, though amidst much obloquy, to save the country and Europe from being further deluged with human blood. (Applause.) In the course of his further remarks the Chairman condemned in strong terms the action taken by the Rev. Mr. Napier at the recent meeting of the Ulster Association in his attempt to throw discredit upon the management of this society, and subsequently by correspondence in the public papers, with the aid of the Rev. Mr. Kennedy, endeavouring to show that this society was disseminating literature of a demoralising nature. This statement had been refuted in the most decided manner, and he was only deeply grieved that neither of his brother ministers referred to had had the grace to withdraw the imputation which was proved to be so unfounded.

The annual report, from which we take the following extracts, was then read by the SECRETARY:—

"At the respective annual meetings of the Unitarian Society for the Promotion of Christian Knowledge and the Northern Sunday School Association, held in May, 1877, a resolution having been passed amalgamating these two societies into one, under the title of the Unitarian Society, in which are incorporated the Unitarian Society for the Diffusion of Christian Knowledge and the Northern Sunday School Association; and at the same meetings a code of rules for the Amalgamated Society having been adopted, and an executive committee appointed for the ensuing year, your executive committee, so appointed, met on 11th May, 1877, and entered upon their duties. By this code of rules it is arranged that the year of the society terminates with the 31st of December. The report of your committee, therefore, only covers a period of eight months, since the last annual meetings. Your Executive Committee have held 12 ordinary monthly meetings, one adjourned meeting, and five special meetings. At their first meeting they unanimously elected Mr. James M. Darbishire as their chairman, and at the same meeting appointed various sub-committees to carry on the society's work. It was resolved that the first meeting of general committee should be held, in accordance with rule 10, on the 18th May, 1877, and accordingly your General Committee met on that date, and in pursuance of the above rule appointed the Rev. S. C. Nelson as the president of the society. Your General Committee have held four meetings during the year, at which the proceedings of the Executive Committee previous to each meeting were reviewed, and reports read from the sub-committees.

"Sunday School Work.—Your committee have been aided largely in the Sunday school department of their work by the sub-committee, which includes most of the members of the old committee of the Northern Sunday School Association. Their work has been satisfactorily performed.

"Subscribers.—Your committee gladly report that the number of subscribers to the society during the past year was about 330. They are of opinion that by a little extra effort this number might be considerably increased.

"Distribution of Tracts.—Jointly with the Missionary Association, your committee had the services of a colporteur during the year. Through this agency a house-to-house visitation was carried on, the reports of which show that 6,278 visits had been made, and 7,541 tracts distributed. Upwards of 1,000 tracts have also been given away at the Depository during the year. Your committee believe that in this way they have done a considerable amount of good work.

"Finances.—The treasurer's statement shows in detail the receipt and expenditure during the year. But your committee call attention to the fact that a good deal of money has been expended upon the Depository, to make it in every way suitable for business, and as a place of call for our friends from all parts of the country. The committee beg to report that stock was taken on the 31st December, and it was found that the estimated value was about £300.

"Sub-Committees.—The plan of appointing sub-committees to carry on the different departments of the work under the direction of the general and executive committees has answered well. By this arrangement the work in all its detail has been carefully done, and the efficiency of the society greatly promoted. In conclusion, your committee rejoice to know that the society is in a prosperous condition, doing with efficiency the work which it was established to perform."

Mr. HUGH HYNDMAN read the financial statement. The list of subscribers in the town districts had been largely augmented, and although from various causes the country subscribers showed a slight decrease, still, on the whole the list of subscriptions was very satisfactory, and the total number of subscribers was continually increasing.

The business done during the time of the existence of the amalgamated society was greater than at any previous period, showing the wisdom of the step taken at the last annual meeting. The sales for the eight months ending December 31, 1877, reached the sum of £182. 17s. 5d., a steady increase of business, when compared with the corresponding eight months of 1876, which realised £115. 18s. 3d. The sales for the twelve months ending December 31, 1876, were £193. 2s. 3d., while those for the year ending 31st December, 1877, reached the sum of £268. 18s. 4d.

Rev. J. C. STREET, in moving the adoption of the report, said they were aware that at their last meeting, which was held in that room, a resolution was carried by which the Unitarian Society for the Diffusion of Christian Knowledge and the Northern Sunday School Association were amalgamated. He thought that the report which their secretary had read to them would convince them that no part of the work of the former societies had been overlooked and that the entire work had been carried on with greater efficiency. (Applause.) Mr. Street further said their work had not been without its difficulties. He did not mean that there had not been harmony within their borders, but what he referred to was from outside. He had not intended to say a single word about that unpleasant correspondence which the chairman had taken up in such an able, reasonable, and decided manner. In the report no allusion had been made to it. This was simply because they felt perfectly safe in the hands of the public; and they were proud to say that they, as a society, had never given the initiative for calumnious proceedings, and just as had been their course hitherto, so now they passed the intended injury by, confident that the verdict of the discriminating public would be in their favour.

Mr. McCALMONT seconded the resolution. The Rev. R. C. SMITH, in supporting the resolution, said, as a retiring member of the committee, and one whose name was not eligible for re-election owing to his early departure from Belfast, perhaps he might with more propriety than other speakers refer to the activity and earnestness which had been displayed by the executive and sub-committee during the period of their office. Societies such as this always needed careful attention to ensure success, but especially was such attention necessary when from the very nature of the amalgamation a certain amount of reorganisation had to take place. This work, which was of no light character, had been carried out in the most complete manner, and the report presented to-night was most successful in every particular, and spoke well for the future career of the society.

Mr. JAMES M. DARBISHIRE moved—"That this meeting records its high satisfaction of the successful working of the society during the past year, and congratulates the members upon the efficiency of its work since the amalgamation of the Unitarian Society and the Northern Sunday School Association." In the course of a few appropriate observations, he said they stood in a far higher position as an amalgamated society than they did when they were divided into two separate societies.

Mr. GARDNER, solicitor, in seconding the resolution, said it was probably appropriate that his name should be connected with the support of that resolution, as he was the person principally responsible for the scheme of amalgamation, under which the two societies had been working during the past year as one organisation. It was his privilege at their last annual meeting to submit that scheme for their acceptance. He then held out hopes that a larger and more effective work would be done by their society, and he thought he might ask them, in view of what had been stated that evening, to say that those hopes had already been largely realised. In a word, the working of the new system had been in other hands, and their management had merited their heartiest recognition. The amalgamation seemed to have been most fitting in the nature of things. (Applause.)

Mr. T. McCLELLAND supported the resolution, which was passed.

Mr. G. FISHER moved a vote of thanks to the Rev. H. E. Dowson, B.A., for his kindness in preaching the annual sermons on behalf of the society, and assured him of the society's appreciation of the valuable services he had thereby rendered to the cause of liberal Christianity in the North of Ireland.

The Rev. D. THOMPSON seconded the resolution.

The Rev. T. LEYLAND, in supporting the vote of thanks, said, if it was a good custom for the society to supply any books or papers subscribers desired irrespective of being Unitarian in their sentiments, it was certainly an excellent custom for the society to invite each year some eminent and scholarly minister to preach their annual sermons. And although, like Mr. Smith, he meditated crossing the Channel again, yet, as he had stood upon the society's platform before he became a minister in Ireland, he trusted he should do so again in the future, although settled in England. In whatever sphere of labour his lot might be cast he would carry with him a vivid impression of the earnestness and activity displayed in denominational work by the laymen of Belfast. He had great pleasure in supporting the resolution, for he knew that the preacher was (as indeed the English and Scotch ministers generally were) in complete accord with the liberal policy of the Association.

The resolution was passed with acclamation. The Rev. J. C. STREET stated that Mr. Dowson had been suddenly called away from the meeting, and was then on his way to England.

The secretaries were instructed to convey to Mr. Dowson a copy of the foregoing resolution, together with the expression of regret at the cause of his premature departure.

On the motion of H. HYNDMAN, Esq., LL.B., seconded by Mr. J. R. NEILL, a cordial welcome was accorded to the representatives of the British and Foreign and Scottish Associations, and tendering to those associations the warmest sympathies and good wishes.

A. L. KNOX, Esq., of Glasgow, responded in an able and interesting address, dealing with the present condition and prospects of Unitarianism in Scotland, and expressing the pleasure it gave him to reciprocate, on behalf of the Association he had the honour to represent, the earnest good wishes which the resolution had conveyed.

The election of the Committee was then proceeded with.

A vote of thanks was passed to the venerable President for his valuable services, and the meeting was brought to a close by the pronouncement of the benediction by the Rev. J. C. Street.

NEWS OF OUR CHURCHES.

NOTICE.—Our friends would oblige it they would kindly send their news paragraphs so as to arrive never later than Wednesday morning, otherwise we are compelled to cut them down.

ERRATA.—We are requested to state that the arrangements for Dr. Sexton's lectures at Reading were made some weeks before it was known that Mr. Voysey was to preach at the Unitarian Church there. In noticing Mr. Harrison's "Continental Holiday" last week the word "letters" should be read for "lectures."

MINISTERIAL APPOINTMENTS.—The Rev. Edward Allen, of Lydgate, has been appointed minister of Walmsley Chapel, and will enter on his duties in the first week in June next.

ACCRINGTON DISTRICT SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION.—The third conference in connection with the above Union took place at Burnley on Saturday last, the 13th inst., when over forty persons were present from Colne, Burnley, Newchurch, Padiham, and Accrington. After tea, the President of the Union, Mr. Peter Bibby, was called to the chair, and opened the proceedings with a few introductory remarks, after which the Rev. Joseph Freeston read a paper on "Religion and Natural Law," which he spoke of under the following heads:—1. Physical Laws; 2. The Organic Laws; 3. Moral Law; 4. The Spiritual Laws. Mr. Freeston gave several anecdotes from everyday life with good effect. After the paper the following persons took part in the discussion:—Rev. H. S. Solly, M.A., Rev. W. Matthews, Messrs. Anderton and Waddington. After a reply from Mr. Freeston, the conference was brought to a close by a vote of thanks to Mr. Freeston for his excellent paper, and the benediction closed the proceedings.

ASHFORD, KENT.—The second anniversary services in connection with the chapel in this town were held on Sunday last, when the Rev. E. R. Grant, of Maidstone, preached two able and appropriate sermons. On the following day there was a congregational tea meeting in the schoolroom, after which addresses were delivered by the Minister, the Rev. J. Moden, the Rev. E. R. Grant, and other gentlemen. Mr. Moden referred to the difficulties the friends of the movement had had to contend with, in spite of which they were able to record steady and increasing prosperity. The different congregational agencies set on foot had been successful. The Sunday School had, he said, more than doubled itself during the last few months, and the Mutual Improvement Society, held in the schoolroom, had just completed the work of its second session, and at the last meeting the members had presented him with a handsome gold pencil case as a mark of their esteem for what he had done among them in the capacity of President. Mr. Grant spoke of the need of hopefulness and earnestness on the part of the congregation as the means to greater success; while Mr. J. E. Mace, in replying to a vote of thanks to the Kent and Sussex Association, urged the people to try and do some little for the British and Foreign Association, from whom the greater part of the money was obtained for carrying on the Liberal movement in the town.

BELFAST.—A concert in aid of the funds of the Hopeton-street Schools was held in the church on the 11th inst. The programme, which was varied, was gone through with great spirit. The Rev. J. C. Street was in the chair. We are glad to learn that, as on a similar occasion a few months ago, the concert was well patronised. The proceedings were interspersed by readings from Dickens, Wilkie Collins, &c. A hearty vote of thanks was carried by acclamation to Mr. Street, and to the ladies and gentlemen who had so generously given their services, on the motion of Mr. James Kinnear, secretary, seconded by Geo. Fisher, Esq.

BIRMINGHAM: OLD MEETING.—NINETY-FIRST ANNIVERSARY.—On Sunday the 14th the anniversary sermons were preached by the Rev. R. A. Armstrong, B.A., of Nottingham. In the morning, Mr. Armstrong dwelt upon the sense of duty which seems inherent in all men, except idiots and those whose nature has been perverted by a long career of crime or vicious self-indulgence. The moral commands of the great religious teachers, simply put forward with a "Thou shalt," or "Thou shalt not," were obeyed without any reason why being asked or given, ages before the utilitarian philosophy was conceived; and the consciences of men are still stirred by appeals to the same sense, which are more potent than the strictest logical reasoning. In the evening, Mr. Armstrong preached from Is. xlii. 6, and also alluded to Paul's words, "Bear ye one another's burthen," and also, "Every man must bear his own burthen," showing that there was no contradiction between the two sayings. All great reformers have had to bear in loneliness for a time the burthen of the message which they felt called to deliver, and to seek far and wide for sympathetic helpers. No man can do the work of another; but, while we cannot depute another to do our proper work, cannot transfer any part of our duties, we may follow the example of Christ, who, burdened as he was, and lonely in his greatness, yet was always ready to alleviate the sufferings and lighten the burthens of others. Large congregations assembled, many friends from our other chapels being present at these most important discourses.

BIRMINGHAM: LAWRENCE-STREET DOMESTIC MISSION.—The congregational annual meeting was held at the close of the evening service last Sunday week. The Rev. J. Wilson presided. The annual report was read by the secretary. It congratulates the members upon the success that has attended the mission during the year. The services have been well attended, and the committee point out the great increase in the number of persons meeting for worship. Collections have been made monthly, and liberally responded to, the average amount being larger than any preceding year. At the committee meeting in April last the committee had under their notice the advisability of electing "chapel wardens," whose duties should be to look after the comfort, welfare, &c., of the congregation. After some little discussion, it was decided to try the plan for a month. At the close of this time it had worked so well that the committee elected two members to hold office until the end of the congregational year. It was resolved by the committee to hold a special service on the first Sunday in July last, and contributions of plants and flowers were invited, and upwards of 60 friends contributed. The services were a great success. The harvest thanksgiving services were also held; plants, flowers, vegetables, bread, &c., were liberally given. The Rev. J. Wilson conducted the morning service, the Rev. J. Gordon the evening; collections were made at the close of the sermons. In December the annual tea meeting was held, at which about 200 of our friends were present. After tea Dr. Russell presided. The committee trust that the year now entered upon will be as happy and prosperous as the past. The treasurer's report showed a balance in hand. A resolution adopting the reports was carried. A committee of fifteen was elected for the current year. Mr. A. Ashford was re-elected treasurer, W. H. Lamb secretary. Messrs. Wolley and Lamb were elected to hold office as wardens for the ensuing year. A vote of thanks to the retiring officers brought the meeting to a close.—On Tuesday last a dramatic entertainment was given by the members of the Teachers' Association. Upwards of 400 persons were present.

BRIGHTON.—The annual soiree in connection with the Young Men's Mutual Improvement Society of the Free Christian Church took place on Wednesday evening, in the Masonic Rooms, Royal Pavilion. After a social meal the chair was taken by the President (the Rev. T. R. Dobson), who was supported by the Vice-Presidents (Mr. W. S. Blackstone and Mr. R. Burgess), the Secretaries (Messrs. J. Gordon and W. Francis). There were 120 present, including several of the congregation. Mr. Gordon read the third annual report, which stated that several members had been added to their number, and their meetings had been well attended throughout the two sessions; 22 ordinary meetings had been held, the average attendance being 13. The report expressed their great obligations to the President, he having been present at no less than 21 out of 22 meetings of the society. From the Treasurer's account it appeared that a balance of £1. 4s. 5d. had been brought forward from the last year, and it was expected that the accounts for the two past sessions would be equally satisfactory. The report concluded by expressing obligations of the society to the Church Committee for their liberality in granting the use of the vestry for their meetings.—On the motion of Mr. Lloyd, the report was adopted.—The Chairman congratulated them upon the satisfactory nature of the report. He, of course, being the first president of the society, felt an unusual amount of interest in it, and was thoroughly proud of it. This feeling, he was assured, was shared by every member. He should like to have been addressing the young women as well as the young men. But he was not in a position to do so, because, for want of a proper place in which they could meet, they had not a Ladies' Society. He hoped when they had a proper room he should have the pleasure of meeting the members of this Society, and at the next year's meeting to address ladies as well as gentlemen. Mr. Francis proposed, Mr. Slater seconded, a vote of thanks to the President and Vice-Presidents, the Secretaries, and the ladies who had superintended the catering arrangements. The performance of an excellent and well-arranged programme occupied the remainder of the evening, Messrs. W. Francis, W. Stevens, J. Gordon, A. Wilson, F. Thomas, R. Stevens, E. Warren, G. Vaughan, E. Branch, Misses Lacey, Attwood, Stevens, Vaughan, Nash, Slater, and Mrs. F. Hilton, and Mrs. Slater taking part.

GLASGOW: SOUTH SAINT MUNGO-STREET CHURCH. On Sunday, April 14, this church held its annual meeting, when the sixth annual report was submitted to the members, subscribers, and friends of the church. The report states that though several accessions have been made to the church-roll, numerous losses have also been sustained by members removing to a distance, emigration, and death. Amongst the latter it numbers Mr. Alex. Vallance, one of the founders of the church. The Rev. William Mitchell, minister of the church, has delivered lectures on instructive subjects during the winter evenings. The annual sermons on behalf of the congregation were preached in November last by the Rev. J. C. Street, of Belfast. At the two congregational social meetings held during the year Rev. F. W. Walters has spoken. The children's church and Sunday-school still continues to be a source of good, although the teachers regret to state the attendance of the previous year has not been maintained. There is still a debt of £200 on the church, which the committee is doing its best to liquidate. The report is prefaced by the annual sermon by the Rev. William Mitchell, on "The Ideal of a Christian Church."

KENDAL.—On Thursday a bazaar was held in the Mechanics' Institute in aid of the fund being raised for the erection of schools in connection with the Kendal Unitarian Chapel. The room was tastefully ornamented, and the stalls, six in number, contained a display of handsome and valuable articles. The ladies who presided over the stalls were Miss Greenhow, Miss Mawson, Miss Rudd, Miss Kate Rudd, Miss L. Rudd, Miss M. Rudd, Mrs. Macdonald, Mrs. Heywood. Shortly before noon the business of the day was opened by the Rev. J. Macdonald, the newly-appointed minister, who said he was glad to have the privilege of speaking a few words on the opening of the bazaar, which he hoped would turn out prosperous in its results, and everything that was anticipated by those who had spent so much time in connection with it. The building at present occupied was inconvenient, and in various ways adverse to the proper training of the young, for it was a great disadvantage that the scholars had to be trained in the same building as that in which the people worshipped. He thought that Miss Greenhow, the Misses Rudd, and the other ladies who had spent so much time and displayed so much patience and perseverance in the work, had done well in doing all they could for the erection of a building apart from the present chapel, in which the training of the young might be carried on. He would state with respect to the work that had hitherto been done (previous to the work immediately connected with this bazaar), that a sum of about £284 in round numbers had been obtained. He understood that the land for the purpose of the erection of these schools had been purchased and paid for, and some cash still remained in hand. The sum of £53 had already been received in this connection, before the commencement of the sales at the bazaar. He had no doubt that he would be expressing the sincere thanks of the promoters when he said they were exceedingly obliged to those parties who had taken an interest in getting together the fine collection of various articles they saw on the stalls of that room. He understood the money already obtained amounted to about £337; and he hoped therefore the sales would in every sense be satisfactory to those who had taken so great an interest in the matter. Mr. Macdonald then formally declared the bazaar open. The ladies were soon busy selling their wares to the best advantage, and business throughout the day continued fairly brisk. The receipts during the day amounted to about £43. 10s.

LIVERPOOL.—Mr. W. Rathbone, M.P., having had his attention directed to the number of clergy and ministers who have become incapacitated through study and overwork, has initiated a movement which is likely to spread. He has generously built and furnished two houses at West Kirby, and placed them at the service of the Liverpool ministers of all denominations, free of charge. The minister and his family are met at Birkenhead and taken to the house; tea is provided, and they are then left the sole occupants for the three weeks allotted to them. A proposal is now being made to do something of the same kind in connection with Wesleyan Methodism.

LEICESTER: FREE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.—Last Sunday night the Rev. J. J. Wright, delivered a special address on "The War-passage and the Peace-spirit," after which a Parliamentary petition was signed by the members of the congregation, expressing, to the House of Commons, the conviction that a resort to war would promote neither the freedom of Europe nor the security of this country. On Monday evening a grand concert of vocal and instrumental music was given. Upwards of 40 performers took part. The concert was in every sense a success.

LIVERPOOL: HAMILTON ROAD.—On Monday evening a Service of Song entitled "Eva," compiled from the popular story, Uncle Tom's Cabin, was given in this Church in aid of the Sunday school. A good number of friends assembled to hear the service, which, with a few verbal alterations, is adapted for use in a Unitarian congregation. The hymns were sung by the choir, assisted by children of the Sunday school; Mr. J. Harrison acting as conductor, and Master R. Jones accompanying on the harmonium; and the connective readings were given by the minister. The service appeared to be much enjoyed by those present, parts of it being very impressive.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.—We have received the twenty-fifth annual report of the committee of the Melbourne Unitarian Church. At the last annual meeting, held in February, 1877, Miss Turner was again unanimously elected as minister, and was presented, on behalf of the congregation, with an album containing the photographs of the church members and other friends; at the same meeting a presentation was made to Mr. and Mrs. H. G. Turner (previous to their departure to Europe on a visit), of an illuminated address expressive of the esteem and regard entertained towards them by the congregation. The committee regret being unable to report so encouragingly as last year regarding the position and prospects of the church; there has been a falling off in attendance, which has been especially apparent during the last few months. Taking this fact into consideration, it is somewhat gratifying to note that the income derived from seat rents is in excess of that of previous year. The diminished state of the attendance referred to may be attributed in a great measure to the very marked progression of other denominations towards the free and liberal doctrines which Unitarians have ever upheld. During the month of May last overtures were made to the Rev. Mr. Woods, of Adelaide, for a short exchange of pulpits with Miss Turner. The proposal being kindly acceded to, that gentleman came to Melbourne and conducted the services on four successive Sundays, from the 17th June to 8th July, his ministrations being much appreciated by the congregation. The minister has conducted three funerals during the year. Among the deaths is that of an old and esteemed member of the Church, Mr. G. P. Desailly, who for a period of ten years was a trustee, and previously a member of committee. In August last the Sunday School was reopened. A managing committee, consisting of a secretary, committee, and superintendent was formed, and their labours have been attended by a most gratifying result, the present average attendance of children being about thirty-five. Since the establishment of the Sunday-school the juvenile library has been greatly used, and is unequal to the requirements of the children. Donations of books from members of the congregation have been received, the most notable being that of fifteen volumes from H. G. Turner—publications of the American Unitarian Sunday-school society. The amount derived from seat rents during the year was £69 9s., as against £55 received from same source last year; however the receipts, chiefly from Sunday collections, compare unfavourably, being only £124 8s. 1d., against £146 18s. 4d. for previous year. The collections on Hospital Sunday realised £21 4s. 10d. The balance-sheet shows a debt of £7 8s. 5d., but this amount is considerably more than covered by seat rents overdue. The present liability is £50 salary due to Miss Turner to 31st January, 1878. The committee call attention to the external state of the church, which requires extensive repairs.

MANCHESTER.—On the 5th inst. the Choral Society in connection with Cross-street Chapel held its first social meeting at the Memorial Hall. The society is the outcome of the voluntary choir established some time ago, and since its formation a year ago now numbers about forty-five members. The room was beautifully decorated with water-colour and crayon drawings, photos, and pictures, kindly lent by Mr. C. Rowley, jun. and Miss Holding, and the tables were well supplied with choice books, microscopes, and stereoscopic views, lent by numerous friends. There were about 140 persons present. The members of our chapels and schools are eligible for election to membership.

OLDEAM.—On Monday evening last a miscellaneous entertainment, in aid of the School Fund, was given in the Lord-street Sunday School, by the members of the Mutual Improvement and Singing Classes combined, the programme being a selection of readings from Hood and Dickens; also one from an unknown author was read by one who copied it in his boyhood some thirty or forty years ago. The musical part consisted of songs, solos, and duets, both vocal and instrumental, the latter duet, "Hallelujah Chorus," deserving especial praise. Mr. J. T. Taylor presided. It is hoped that the efforts of the young people will meet with appreciation.

ROCHDALE.—The Blackwater-street congregation held their annual social meeting on Wednesday evening, April 10th, the arrangements for which were made by a committee of ladies, and, of course, were very complete. After tea, Mr. Alderman Heape, the chapel warden, presided, when a very varied programme was gone through, consisting of addresses, &c., by Mr. Alderman Shawcross, and the Revs. R. T. Elliott, Clover-street, W. Carey Walters, Whitechurch, and T. Carter, Blackwater-street; with recitations, and vocal and instrumental music, very efficiently rendered by members of the congregation, kindly assisted by Mr. T. Rawson, of Manchester. After the customary votes of thanks had been given and responded to, a most successful and enjoyable evening was prolonged by the younger members of the congregation in amusements.

TODMORDEN.—On Saturday week the remains of John Law, aged thirty years, were interred at Cross Stone. The deceased was assistant superintendent in the Unitarian Sunday School, and a useful and much-respected member. To show respect to him the teachers, elder scholars, and others assembled in the schoolroom and thence went in procession to his late residence, and joined in the funeral cortege. On Sunday the bells of the church were muffled, and in the morning the Rev. L. Taplin, M.A., preached a funeral sermon to a large congregation, in which he made touching reference to the deceased.

CORRESPONDENCE.

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

A STUDENT.—We wrote to the address given some time ago.

RECEIVED.—W. W., R. D. C. (see our standing rule as to names); also A. L.

CONGREGATIONAL SINGING.

To the Editors.—I have had some years' experience now as volunteer choir leader and harmoniumist at one of our London chapels, and I think I have worked my way into knowing one of the reasons why our congregations are so frequently hindered (I use that word) from joining in what should be congregational singing. Choirs, in most places, are far away back, and high, in a gallery; a gallery, after all, is but a big shelf, out of the reach of the mass of the people on the floor; and up and away there, all to themselves, the choirs sing, rendering it impossible for persons not over-confident of their musical powers, to make themselves conspicuous by trying to take a part. Let our music and musicians be on a level with the rest of their fellow-worshippers, having no division, indeed, to separate them, not even as much as a curtain; and very soon the singing will be found to spread and spread till it reaches to the front benches (even to the minister, it shall be said, aside), with the result that there shall be a pleasant warmth all round, and every satisfaction and enjoyment. This, however, is but an architectural matter; there remains the difficulty of tunes, and it is great, undoubtedly. It is so great, in fact, that I will not enter upon it; for I like the syllabic tunes recommended by Mr. Norton, I like the tied tunes recommended by Mr. Howard. It is impossible to please every member of a choir or congregation at the same time (though they are all to be pleased in good turn); and a sympathetic organist, when amidst the congregation he sings with, not to, will soon find which are the "examples" that are sung with the most heartiness and pleasure. In the end, I believe, no rule can be laid down that will suit everybody, no measurement can be taken that will fit all. Besides, it does not seem to be settled yet, absolutely (let me say, dogmatically), whether tunes are to be chosen that the congregations can sing, being of all grades and of all education-standards and ages; or whether tunes are to be chosen that the congregations ought to sing, when they shall have all been raised to one high standpoint.

On the subject of giving out "104th Hymn to Tune 52," I will say that at our chapel it is not necessary. I always write up the names of the tunes to be sung at every service at the church doors, on a neatly printed form; and by this means every fellow-worshipper can see for himself, on entering, for what to be prepared.—I am, sir, yours very faithfully,

JENNETT HUMPHREYS.

28, Westbourne Park Road, London W.

COMING WEEK.

BURY: BANK-STREET.—On Sunday, annual sermons, morning and evening, by the Rev. John Wright, B.A.

LONDON: STAMFORD-STREET.—On Sunday, special services on re-opening.

MANCHESTER DISTRICT SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION.

Meetings on Good Friday. (See Advt.)

MANCHESTER: UPPER BROOK-STREET.—On Sunday, vesper services, and address by Rev. Silas Farrington, on "The Man of Sorrow's Triumph over the World."

MANCHESTER: CROSS-STREET CHAPEL.—On Sunday morning the Rev. S. A. Steinthal will preach on "Co-operation."

MANCHESTER: MILES PLATING.—On Thursday, Friday, and Saturday, bazaar in the schoolrooms, Varley-street.

NORTH MIDLAND SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION.—On Monday, annual meeting at the High Pavement, Nottingham.

Preacher, the Rev. D. Walmsley, B.A.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE.—On Sunday morning and evening the Rev. J. C. Street will preach. On Monday, annual meeting.

SWANSEA.—On Wednesday and Thursday, quarterly meeting of South Wales Unitarian ministers. Preacher, Rev. Richard Pilcher, B.A.

WESTERN UNITARIAN AND FREE CHRISTIAN UNION.—Sermons and collections on Sunday in aid of the funds at Cheltenham, Cirencester, Clifton, Collymore, Colyton, Crediton, Crewkerne, Devonport, Exeter, Gloucester, Kingswood, near Bristol, Moretonhamstead, Shepton Mallet, Sidmouth, Stroud, Taunton, Tavistock, Trowbridge, and Yeovil.

BIRTH.

JOBSON.—On the 3rd April, at Dundee, Mrs. David Jobson of a son.

DEATHS.

ASHTON.—On the 15th inst., at Glossop, Rev. Fred. Ashton, M.A., aged 30, will be interred at Brooklands Cemetery, on Thursday (April 18), at 1 o'clock. Friends will please accept this intimation.

BURSLAM.—On Tuesday the 16th inst., at River-street, Congleton, Robert Burslam, Stonemason, aged 50, for many years an active and valued member of the Unitarian Church, Congleton, and highly respected and deeply lamented by all who knew him.

BREWIN.—On the 10th inst., at 13 Seymour-street, Leicester, Mary Brewin, aged 85.

MILLER.—On the 10th inst., at his residence, Werndee Hall, South Norwood, London, John Francis Miller.

THE TRUE RELIGION: A Discourse by Rev. ALFRED PAYNE. Price 1d., post free 1½d., from the Author; Messrs. M. and M. W. Lambert, and J. H. Barlow, Newcastle-on-Tyne; and Messrs. Johnson and Rawson, Manchester.

Now Ready, 8vo., gilt edges, price 2s., post free, 2s. 2d.

A YEAR AT DRAYTON: A Story for Children.

By Mrs. PAUL E. FISHER.

Charing Cross Publishing Company, Limited, 5, Friar-street, Broadway, London, E.C.

Now Ready, (No. 3) for April,

TEACHERS' NOTES, for Moral and Religious Lessons, containing papers by Rev. F. H. JONES, B.A., and Rev. C. D. Badland, M.A.

Published by the Sunday School Association, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, London, W.C.

Just Published, 2nd Edition, sewed, 6d

THE PASSOVER MOON. By HENRY HAWKES, B.A., F.L.S. 2nd Edition, sewed, price 6d. post free.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE, 14, Henrietta-street, Covent Garden, London, and 20, South Frederick-street, Edinburgh.

LONDON: SHIRLEY'S TEMPERANCE HOTEL, 37, Queen's Square, Bloomsbury. Beds from 1s. 6d. Plain Breakfast or Tea, 1s. 3d.

E. IRELAND begs to call attention to all lovers of Old Dob Lane Chapel to his PHOTOGRAPHIC VIEWS of the old spot. Large size, 9in. by 7in. (mounted), 3s. 6d.; carte size, 6d. each.—E. IRELAND, 105, Market-street.

Printed for the Proprietors by WILLIAM EVANS, of Apsley Villa 377, Waterloo Road, Chesham Hill, at his Printing Offices, No. 3, Cross-street, Parish of Manchester; and Published by JOHN PHILLIPS, at New Cannon Chambers, 55, Market-street, in aid of Parish of Manchester.—London Agents: Messrs. Smart and Allen, 2, London-house Yard, Paternoster Row.—Friday, April 19, 1878.

The Unitarian Herald.

EDITED BY

REV. JAMES BLACK, M.A., & REV. S. FLETCHER WILLIAMS.

VOL. XVIII.—887.

FRIDAY, APRIL 26, 1878.

PRICE 1d.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE.
Scottish Notes	138
Books and Authors	138
Belfast Sunday School Society	138
North Midland Sunday School Association	138
Southampton: Annual Meeting	139
To-Day	140
John Bright among Sunday School Teachers	140
Dr. Arnold on Eternal Punishment	140
The Hibbert Lectureship	140
The Late Rev. F. Ashton, M.A.	141
Women as Students	142
Manchester District Sunday School Association	143
News of our Churches	145

STRANGEWAYS UNITARIAN FREE CHURCH.

On Sunday, the Rev. J. T. MARRIOTT will preach. Morning, "Transient and Enduring Life: Frederick Ashton, M.A."

BLACKPOOL UNITARIAN FREE CHURCH.

On Sunday next, April 28th, Mr. WILLIAM HOUGH, of Manchester, will conduct the services. Morning discourse, "Loving Kindness and Goodness of God." Evening discourse, "True Happiness."

BEARD MEMORIAL UNION.

On Monday evening, the 29th inst., the Rev. WILLIAM HENRY CHANNING will read a paper on "Some of the Religious Problems of our Age," to be followed by discussion. A cordial invitation is given to all friends (ladies included) of the Union to be present. Tea will be provided from 6 to 7 p.m., at sixpence each, for those desiring it. The Rev. WILLIAM GASKELL, M.A., will take the chair at seven o'clock.

W. C. BOWIE, Hon. Sec.

Memorial Hall, Manchester.

LONDON: STAMFORD-STREET UNITARIAN CHAPEL, BLACKFRIARS ROAD.

On Sunday next, 28th inst., SPECIAL SERVICES will be held and collections taken to assist in meeting the cost of repairs and improvements. The Rev. J. COLLINS ODGERS, B.A. will preach, morning and evening. Subjects, "And after the Fire, a Still Small Voice," and "Tolling in Rowing." Services commence at 11 a.m. and 6.30 p.m.

STAMFORD-STREET CHAPEL SUNDAY SCHOOL, LONDON.

Old Scholars are invited not to forget to attend their usual ANNUAL SOCIAL MEETING, Wednesday, May 1st. Tea at 6.30.

ARDWICK.—Rev. WM. BINNS will preach the ANNIVERSARY SERMONS in the Mechanics' Institute, Longstich, on Sunday, May 5, afternoon at 3; evening at 6.30. Collections in aid of the Church Funds.

MILES PLATTING UNITARIAN FREE CHURCH, VARLEY-STREET, OLDHAM ROAD, MANCHESTER.

ANNUAL SERMONS, 5th May. Preachers: Afternoon, at 3, Rev. WM. GASKELL, M.A.; evening, at 6.30, Rev. G. H. WELLS, M.A.

ANNUAL CONGREGATIONAL PARTY, Monday, 5th May. The Revs. J. T. Marriott, C. T. Poynting, B.A., E. C. Towne, W. G. Cadman; Messrs. W. C. Bowie, Luke Pollitt, and other gentlemen are expected to be present. Tea at 6.30 p.m.; tickets, 9d. each.

MONTON CHURCH.

On Sunday, May 5th, TWO SERMONS will be preached by the Rev. D. WALMSLEY, B.A., of Bury, and collections made in aid of the Sunday School. Morning service, 10.45; evening, 6.30.

LONDON DISTRICT UNITARIAN SOCIETY.

The TWENTY-EIGHT ANNUAL MEETING will be held in the Stamford-street Chapel, Blackfriars, on Wednesday evening, May 8th, 1878; Sir J. C. LAWRENCE, Bart., M.P. (President of the Society), in the chair. Tea at half-past six o'clock. Chair to be taken at half-past seven o'clock precisely. Tickets for the tea, price 6d. each, may be obtained of any member of the committee: at the British and Foreign Unitarian Association's Rooms, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand; and at the Stamford-street Chapel. Admission to the business meeting free.

RAWTENSTALL.—ANNUAL Sunday School SERMONS, May 12th. Preacher, Rev. W. M. AINSWORTH, of Lancaster.

ROTHERHAM NEW CHURCH.

On Wednesday, May 1st, 1878, the ceremony of Laying the FOUNDATION STONE of the New Church for the Rotherham Unitarian Congregation, will take place at twelve o'clock at noon.

The Stone will be Laid by JOHN HOBSON, Esq., of Tapton Elms, Sheffield.

On the same day, at one o'clock,

A BAZAAR

At the Mechanics' Hall, Rotherham, for the Sale of

USEFUL AND ORNAMENTAL ARTICLES,

will be OPENED by

JOSEPH LUPTON, Esq., J.P., of Chapel Allerton, Leeds.

Admission on Wednesday, One Shilling each; after six o'clock p.m., Sixpence each.

The Bazaar will remain open on the Thursday and Friday following. Admission Free.

The Stalls will be presided over by Ladies of the Congregation. Goods Marked at Lowest Figures. Proceeds to be devoted to the Building Fund.

After the Opening of the Bazaar on Wednesday, at half-past one o'clock, a LUNCHEON will be provided in the Hall. See bills of fare.

N.B. A Refreshment Stall. All articles at moderate charges. Goods for the Bazaar will be thankfully received by the Rev. W. Blazey, 41, Hollowgate, Rotherham; Mr. Wm. Leggoe, Treasurer, Moorgate, Rotherham; Mr. John Hill, Secretary, 1, Westfield Terrace, Rotherham.

MANCHESTER DISTRICT SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION.

ANNUAL MEETING AT MANCHESTER

HELD ON

GOOD FRIDAY, April 19th, 1878.

At the Business Meeting held in the Memorial Hall, EDWIN WINNER, Esq., President, in the chair, the following resolutions were passed:—

1st Resolution.—Moved by Mr. JOHN REYNOLDS, seconded by Rev. P. M. HIGGINSON, M.A.:

That this Association feels that in the death of the Rev. F. Ashton, M.A., it has lost one who ever had its interests at heart, and grudged neither time nor labour in its behalf: and a friend who by his amiable and gentle character had so endeared himself to his fellow workers that they knew not where to find such another; and that this meeting respectfully tenders to his sorrowing widow and family its heartfelt sympathy in their sudden bereavement.

2nd Resolution.—Moved by the PRESIDENT, seconded by Mr. JESSE PILCHER:

That the reports having been printed and distributed be now taken as read, and that the same be now adopted.

3rd Resolution.—Moved by the PRESIDENT, seconded by Mr. ISAAC BARROW (Bolton):

That the best thanks of this meeting be and are hereby given to the retiring officers of the Association for their services during the past year, and that the following ladies and gentlemen be appointed to serve for the coming year:—

PRESIDENT—Mr. Jesse Pilcher.

VICE-PRESIDENTS:

Mr. John Dendy, B.A.

Mr. George Smith

Rev. John Wright, B.A.

Rev. Joseph Freeston.

Mr. Harry Rawson.

Rev. C. T. Poynting, B.A.

Dr. H. J. Marcus.

Mr. Edwin Winsor.

TREASURER TO THE GENERAL FUND:

Mr. George Leigh.

TREASURER TO THE PUBLISHING FUND:

Mr. Jesse Pilcher.

SECRETARIES:

Mr. John Reynolds, Flowery Field School, Hyde

Rev. P. M. Higginson, M.A., Styl.

COMMITTEE:

Mrs. Rawson.

Mr. Jas. Kerfoot.

Mrs. Harland.

Mr. John Kerfoot.

Miss Shawcross.

Mr. W. C. Milnes.

Miss Salomonson.

Rev. J. T. Marriott.

Mr. S. Broadrick.

Mr. Thomas Parry.

Mr. J. Cartwright.

Mr. J. Hy. Reynolds, jun.

Rev. C. C. Coe.

Rev. W. C. Squier.

Rev. W. G. Cadman.

Rev. J. K. Smith.

Mr. John Dendy, jun.

Rev. H. S. Solly, M.A.

Rev. George Fox.

Rev. Halliwell Thomas.

Rev. John Fox.

Rev. E. Turland.

Mr. John Heys.

Rev. D. Warmesley, B.A.

Rev. William Harrison.

Mr. Wigley.

Rev. T. Lloyd Jones.

Also the delegates appointed by the various schools and local unions.

4th Resolution.—Moved by the PRESIDENT; seconded by Dr. MARCUS:

That the warmest thanks of this meeting be and are hereby given to the Rev. S. A. Steinthal for his services this morning.

5th Resolution.—Moved by the PRESIDENT; seconded by the Rev. JOSEPH FREESTON:

That this meeting hereby offers a most cordial welcome to the representatives present from kindred associations, and assures them of its warmest sympathy in their work, viz.: J. M. Wade, Esq., from the London Sunday School Association; Rev. F. H. Jones, Loughborough, from the North Midland Sunday School Association; J. C. Street, Belfast, from the Northern Sunday School Association; Mr. Joseph Wadsworth, Halifax, from the West Riding Sunday School Association.

6th Resolution.—Moved by the CHAIRMAN, seconded by Rev. C. POYNTING:

That the warmest thanks of this meeting be given to the friends at Lower Mosley-street for their hospitable reception of to-day.

At the evening meeting, also held in the Memorial Hall, the Rev. S. A. STEINTHAL in the chair, it was resolved, on the motion of Mr. WM. LORD, seconded by Mr. J. H. REYNOLDS, sen:

That this Conference is of opinion that the question of providing suitable amusements for our Sunday scholars during their leisure moments is of such importance as to justify the Committee of the Association in considering the best means of arousing the different schools to take some action in the matter, and further, that it be a recommendation to the Committee to consider this question.

It was also moved by Rev. JOSEPH FREESTON, seconded by the Rev. W. HARRISON:

That this meeting receives with very deep regret the resignation of Mr. Jesse Pilcher as Secretary, and desires to express and record its high appreciation of, and sincere gratitude for, his long-continued and valuable services to the Association.

(Signed)

JOHN REYNOLDS,

P. M. HIGGINSON, M.A., } Hon. Secs.

PROVINCIAL ASSEMBLY.—Any NOTICE OF MOTION must be sent to me before May 20th.

H. E. DOWSON.

BRITISH AND FOREIGN UNITARIAN ASSOCIATION.

LOCAL COMMITTEE FOR MANCHESTER AND THE DISTRICT:

W. GASKELL, M.A., Chairman.

C. T. POYNTING, B.A., Hon. Sec.

HARRY RAWSON, Local Treasurer.

NEW SUBSCRIPTION.

An Ex-Mayor of Lancashire..... £20 0 0

HENRY IERSON, Secretary, per Local Treasurer.

April 25th, 1878.

MANCHESTER NEW COLLEGE (in connection with the University of London, and University College, London.)

UNIVERSITY HALL, GORDON SQUARE.

SESSION, 1878-9.

Candidates for Admission into the College at the commencement of the ensuing session are requested to forward their applications and testimonials, without delay, to either of the secretaries, from whom all needful information may be obtained.

R. D. DARBISHIRE, Esq., B.A., 26, George-street, Manchester.

Rev. CHARLES BEARD, B.A., 13, South Hill

Road, Liverpool.

JONES'S FUND.

The Board of Managers meet every year in University Hall, Gordon Square, London, in the last complete week in June, for the purpose of Granting Exhibitions, and at no other time. Applications must be made in a specified form, to be obtained from the undersigned, and must be returned on or before the second week in June.

EDWIN W. MARSHALL, Secretary.

38, Barton Arcade, Manchester.

DOB LANEN NEW CHAPEL, FAILSWORTH.

The FOUNDATION STONE will be laid on Saturday, May 4th, at four o'clock, by HARRY RAWSON, Esq., one of the Senior Trustees. The Procession will start from the gates at three o'clock, and will proceed through Newton Heath and Failsworth, headed by the Sunday School Brass Band.

A SOIREE will be held at half-past five o'clock, in the Failsworth Co-operative Hall; JOHN THOMAS, Esq., in the chair.

The following ministers and other gentlemen will be present, and several of them will take part in the proceedings:—

Rev. W. Gaskell, M.A.

Rev. S. A. Steinthal.

Rev. J. T. Marriott.

Rev. Jas. Black, M.A.

Rev. Silas Farrington.

Rev. E. C. Towne.

Rev. G. H. Wells, M.A.

Rev. Joseph Freeston.

Rev. W. G. Cadman.

Rev. W. Harrison.

Rev. J. M'Dowell.

Rev. C. T. Poynting, B.A.

Rev. Halliwell Thomas (pastor to the congregation).

The Mayor of Manchester (Mr. Alderman Grundy).

H. J. Leppoc, Esq., J.P.

Councillor Brierley.

Councillor Bowes (Salford).

W. G. H. Ord, Esq.

Tickets for the Soiree (One Shilling) may be had from any Member of the Committee; or from the Secretary,

J. F. ALLEN.

35, Hulme Hall Lane, Miles Platting.

NEW SUBSCRIPTIONS.

Mr. George Wadsworth, Manchester..... 2 2 0

Mr. Joseph Hulme, Manchester..... 1 1 0

Mr. J. Robinson, Manchester..... 2 2 0

Mr. A. Brothers, Manchester..... 2 0 0

Mr. H. J. Morton, Scarborough..... 2 2 0

Mr. P. Schofield, Pendleton..... 2 0 0

NEW SUNDAY SCHOOLS

FOR

KING'S LYNN FREE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The Committee of above Church make this appeal to the Unitarian public from sheer necessity, having been bitterly persecuted, and refused the key of a hired school, by those opposed to Free Christianity, without even a week's notice. £500 will build Sunday-school, class-rooms, and pay off a small balance from Church building fund—having land enough behind the Church for the new schools. For three months the children met in the garden of the superintendent of the school, and are now crammed in a room, not half large enough. The Committee most gratefully acknowledge past support, and are hopeful that this appeal will meet with a similar response.

Subscriptions may be sent to

The Rev. BARNARD GISBY, Pastor.

Mr. E. GRUNDY, Treasurer, } to the Church.

Mr. J. FOX, Secretary,

Mr. E. GREEN, Treasurer, } to the Building Committee

Mr. A. P. ALLEN, Secretary, and Supt. of Sunday-school

Amount already subscribed, £167.

SUBSCRIBERS' NAMES.

Sir J. C. Lawrence..... £ 5 0 0

Lady Bowring..... 1 0 0

T. Ainsworth, Esq., Carnforth..... 50 0 0

Rev. J. T. Marriott..... 1 0 0

Mr. H. T. Smith..... 0 5 0

Mr. Wm. Shelford..... 0 10 0

Mr. R. C. Wright..... 1 1 0

The Misses Atkinsons..... 2 0 0

GOVERNESS (experienced): RE-ENGAGEMENT desired: qualifications, English, French, and German, acquired abroad: Music and Singing.—Address, stating particulars, "Tate," 34, Preston Road, Brighton, Sussex.

WANTED, a SERVANT, in a family of two:

a good washer.—E. T. L., 148, St. George's Road, Bolton.

WANTED, by a Lady of experience, a Situation as RESIDENT GOVERNESS: English, French, Music, and Calisthenics: excellent references.—Address M. A., Herald office, 55, Market-street, Manchester.

WANTED, Two experienced SERVANTS: one to cook and do part of the housework, the other to do the rest of the housework and help in taking charge of children: wages, £18 and all found.—Address Mrs. Ely, 10, Eldon Road, Hampstead, London, N.W.

WANTED, immediately, a CERTIFICATED ASSISTANT MISTRESS, to take charge of Infants and Standard I. in a Girls' School: must be a good disciplinarian and needlewoman.—Address, stating salary required, with copies of testimonials, &c., to Mr. JACKSON, Hob Hill School, Stalybridge.

THE ONLY PERFECT MARKING INK.

NO HEATING; no mixing or trouble. Does not injure the most delicate fabric. Absolutely indelible.

Fletcher's Jet Marker, is, from drapers, or post free from

THOMAS FLETCHER, Museum-street, Warrington.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

PROFESSOR SMITH.

So far as the Free Presbytery of Aberdeen is concerned, the proceedings in Professor Smith's case were brought to a close on Tuesday, when the third alternative charge in the libel was by a majority of 27 votes to 9 declared irrelevant. Amidst some laughter, Professor Smith remarked that as all the charges had now been found irrelevant, he supposed he was no longer at the bar of the Court. The assent of the Presbytery was indicated by applause.

THE REV. FERGUS FERGUSON.

The case of the Rev. Fergus Ferguson again came up at a special meeting of the U.P. Presbytery of Glasgow. Mr. Ferguson set forth his objections to the relevancy of the libel served on him. He strenuously contended that the whole prosecution was one huge irregularity. His whole action had been an effort to call the Church back to a more rigorous regard to her standards, especially her pre-eminent standard, the Bible. The system of doctrine of the Bible was, he held, irreconcilable with that of the Confession of Faith, which was "a little dark and morbid arrangement, narrow and exclusive, out of harmony with the general scheme of the universe, unworthy of God, unsuited to man, and for all practical purposes a dead letter in the living world, save as it is used as a fetter to thought and an engine of spiritual oppression in the way of crushing out the best life of the Church." The Presbytery, after this strong dose, adjourned to consider Mr. Ferguson's objections.

DR. DODS.

In the Glasgow Free Synod Dr. Dodds' soundness was brought under review by an appeal against the Presbytery's finding that though there were objectionable passages in his sermon on "Revelation and Inspiration," there was no warrant for taking further steps against him. The result of a discussion, continued till after midnight, was that the Synod by a majority adopted a motion by which the dissent was sustained, in so far as the Presbytery did not condemn Dr. Dodds with sufficient severity, and the infallibility of the Divine authority of the Scriptures was affirmed. At the same time it was resolved, as the sermon had been withdrawn, that the case should not go further. An appeal to the Assembly was made on behalf of the Presbytery and others.

BOOKS AND AUTHORS.

The Theological Review. April, 1878. London: Williams and Norgate. Manchester: Johnson and Rawson.

THE pièce de résistance is the Rev. R. B. Drummond's account of the Westminster Confession of Faith, which, though it is the subject of keen criticism and eager controversy in Scotland, is almost as unknown in the land of its adoption, except by name, as in England. Mr. Drummond gives a sketch of its origin and history, and then examines particularly those parts of the Confession itself which relate to "the creation of the world in six days, the non-salvability of the heathen, and the damnation of non-elect infants." The article is written with great point, vigour, and incisiveness. From its conclusion we must express our emphatic dissent. Mr. Drummond argues that the Confession will not readily lend itself to revision, and therefore holds that the easier course will be to relax the formula of subscription. This, no doubt, would be the most expedient course; but the most righteous procedure—and in religion let us have righteousness above all things, and at any cost—would be to put by on the historical shelf a document which has, by general acknowledgment, lost its hold on the minds of the people. Cast out, as it is, from the intellect and the affections of the great bulk of its professed adherents, why retain it at all except as a compromise with hypocrisy? Professor Drummond's Jewish Messiah is reviewed by the Rev. T. K. Cheyne. A brilliant contribution follows from the pen of the Editor, who, with Bishop Thirlwall's Remains as a text, discusses the relation of the three parties within the Establishment to that which has always been insisted upon as a necessity for its continuance—the maintenance of the internal equilibrium of the Church. In the course of the article Mr. Beard says that "to be judicious has, consciously or unconsciously, been the highest praise at which Anglicanism has aimed," since the Reformation. But judiciousness, he adds, implies, among other things, "something like timidity towards whatever is new and strange." The praise of judiciousness, in this sense, may be given to Mr. Beard himself, for while he admits that the life and thought of the English Church cannot be controlled by the compromise of the 16th century, he shrinks with considerable trepidation from what is certain to replace that arrangement; and the only thing on which he shows anything but timidity is "the Dissenting clamour for Disestablishment," at which he administers a characteristic slap. Mr. Courtney Kenny gives a very valuable report of Cudworth's MSS. on Eternal Punishment, which, as he sums up, may be "regarded as an acute and logical refutation" of the traditional dogma. "Whether its attempts to establish the opposite dogma of Universal Restitution deserve equal praise may be doubted." Michael Servetus is the subject of an article by the Rev. Alexander Gordon. At the close of the paper Mr. Gordon presents a remarkably striking estimate of Calvin. Among the writers of Notices of Books are the Rev. J. F. Smith, who comments on Schweizer's Christliche Glaubenslehre, and the first instalment of what promises to be an exhaustive life of Herder by Herr Haym; and the Rev. A. Chalmers, who calls attention to some Swiss theological works.

THE BELFAST UNITARIAN SOCIETY.

SUNDAY SCHOOL CONFERENCE.

A Sunday school conference in connection with the Unitarian Society was held on Tuesday evening, April 17th, in Mountpottinger Church. There was a good attendance, the audience including a large number of ladies. Among those present were the Revs. C. S. Nelson, James Orr, D. Thompson, J. C. Street, Professor Orr, Henry McGowan, J. Pollard, R. C. Smith, J. Leyland; Messrs. J. M. Darbishire, A. Knox, E. Gardiner, R. M'Calmont, Hugh Hyndman, James Davidson, J. R. Neill, James Frazer, John Greenfield, John Ritchie, Thomas Ritchie, Thomas McClelland, J. F. Mulligan, Hugh Orr, William Spackman, D. Lowry, J. McGiffin, D. Young, Henry Montgomery, Alexander Johnston, William Rankin, James Adrian, Alex. Forrest, Wm. Dobbin, John Lees, George Fisher, James P. Orr, James Ward, G. Dobbin, D. W. Orr, J. L. Polly, Wm. Taylor, G. Crooks, Thomas Osborne, John Scott, and James McQuade.

After tea, the Rev. C. S. NELSON, president, was called upon to preside, and in the course of his remarks alluded to those who were instrumental in originating the erection of the church in which they were assembled that evening; and, with regard to the Sunday-school work connected with that church, he said he had had an opportunity of seeing how it was conducted. It was carried on in a most admirable manner. (Hear.) As to the minister presiding over it, he need not say a single word; his discourses were instructive, broad; evangelical, and telling. (Hear.) He (the chairman) did not think that that gentleman was surpassed by a single minister of the Unitarian Church in Ireland. It was scarcely necessary to dwell on the importance and usefulness of the institution of a Sunday school, although he was one of the oldest Sunday-school teachers in the North of Ireland.

Dr. HENRY BURDEN next read a paper on SUNDAY SCHOOL TEACHING: IN WHAT SHOULD IT CONSIST?

He assumed, in the first place, that Sunday-school teaching of some kind was desirable. In order that they might acquire an intelligent comprehension of the meaning which ought to be attached to religious institutions and brotherhoods, the pupils in a Sunday school needed every aid that could be afforded them. The question arose, How might this aid be most effectually given? Should they plunge them without previous preparation into a sea of Scriptural texts, theological discussion, doctrine, dogma, and Confessions of Faith; or should they not rather, by a carefully-selected series of lessons in such matters as natural sciences, logic, nature and history of faiths, and the origin and foundation of Christianity, endeavour to secure for them the materials, ought of which they might construct upon a secure basis a religion worthy of the name? In his opinion the teaching of doctrine to the pupils who attended a Sunday school would create and foster bigotry, intolerance, narrow-mindedness, and conceit. He intended to use the term "doctrine" as denoting "those beliefs which constitute the distinctive character of any creed, Church or State." Belief in Christianity itself should be the offspring of a conviction that it alone of all religions was sanctified by reason and judgment, consequently the growth of reason and judgment ought logically to precede Christianity. The exercise of reason and judgment became possible only when those avenues to the mind and senses had supplied it with a store of material for its nourishment. These considerations suggested an order of precedence in which subjects should be taken up in the Sunday school—namely, first, subjects which are fitted to cultivate the use of the senses; second, studies which involve an accurate application of the reasoning powers; third, the nature and history of the leading religions of the world, past and present; fourth, the foundations of Christianity. It was not absolutely necessary that these subjects in schools should follow one another in strict succession. There was no good reason why they should not be taught simultaneously. We were bound at the very outset of the pupils' studies to teach them the proper use of their senses. He would include natural science in the school programme, and especially the practical departments of this branch of education. No doubt much useful information on scientific subjects might be gained by the reading of books; but for the object he had in view, it was a sine qua non that the knowledge to be imparted should reach the mind through the medium of objective realities. He would take his pupils into the fields on Sunday when the weather permitted, and encourage them to gather flowers, insects, fruits, &c., to collect minerals, rocks, fossils, to examine these objects minutely, and to take notes of what they observed. He would show them, and cause them to perform with their own hands, chemical and physical experiments. Botanical excursions, he had been informed, were a recognised institution on the continent on Sundays, and though no doubt such an innovation would be regarded by many in this country as an act of impiety, he did not see why they should allow such narrow-minded prejudices to stand in the way of their teaching the works of God to those who would otherwise learn them only imperfectly. The pupil might then be instructed in the orderly and methodical arrangement of his thoughts, and that might be accomplished by lessons in logic, inductive and deductive. The pupil would then be prepared to enter with profit upon the study of the various forms of religion that had in times past been adopted, and also that existed in the present epoch. When their pupil had arrived at this stage of his education he would be in a position to appreciate the teachings of Christ. He should without further aid be allowed to elaborate for himself the doctrine which he could understand and defend, should circumstances require him to give reasons for the faith that is in him—a doctrine which would be founded upon reason as opposed to dogma, and which he could apply practically in the daily occurrences of ordinary life.

A long discussion followed the reading of the paper. The Rev. Mr. Orr, J. C. Street, R. C. Smith, Thomas Leyland; and Messrs. Hugh Hyndman, E. Gardiner, J. R. Neill, Wm. Spackman, and others took part in the debate.

On the motion of Professor ORR, seconded by the Rev. J. POLLARD, a vote of thanks was passed to Dr. Burden for his very able paper; and a vote of thanks to the Chairman terminated the proceedings.

NORTH MIDLAND SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION.

THE thirty-first annual meeting in connection with the above association was held on Easter Monday, in the High Pavement Girls' Schoolroom, Nottingham. At half-past eleven o'clock a service was held in the Unitarian Church, when the annual sermon was preached by Rev. D. Walsley, B.A., of Bury, the service being conducted by Rev. C. D. Badland, M.A., of Derby. After service the business meeting was held in the girls' schoolroom under the presidency of Mr. Ald. KEMPSON, of Leicester, president of the association. Visitors were present from Leicester, Loughborough, Northampton, Derby, Chesterfield, Sheffield, Ilkeston, Mansfield, and Great Hucklow.

THE PRESIDENT, in opening the proceedings, said he wished to express his appreciation of the value of the association and of the services rendered by it; at the same time he appealed to their kind consideration, feeling conscious that he was unable to perform the duties of president with the same efficiency as those who have preceded him. Many years have passed since he was engaged in Sunday School teaching, and so altered was the state of society, that he feared that any remarks of his might prove of small value. He presumed that one of the matters of special interest with them to-day would be the report on the schools of the district by the visitor. The report opened with a reference to a diminution in the number of pupils. This was chiefly accounted for by the closing of the Leicester mission school. In other respects they might regard the report as satisfactory; and when they took into account that they were indebted for that report to Mr. Gill, a member of a congregation standing so high for Sunday School work, and one of the oldest and most valued teachers in the district, they might congratulate themselves on the past and take courage for the future. (Hear, hear.) Some thirty years ago, when he was a teacher, instruction in reading and writing was a necessity. This work was now done in board schools, and it was with pleasure he learnt that the teaching now given in Sunday Schools was chiefly of a moral and religious character. Efficiency of teaching in board schools depends much on the attention paid by masters and mistresses to the manner in which their assistant teachers give lessons to the different classes, and where they observe a defect, taking the class and showing how the lesson should be given. With paid teachers this can be done; with voluntary ones there would be more difficulty. Still, they who so kindly give their time should strive to benefit by the experience of others, and become efficient. Simple lessons on cleanliness, neatness, play, work, duty, conscience, kindness to each other, to animals and insects, with tales to illustrate what is taught, tend to the culture and improvement of the young. Whatever a teacher's ability may be, kindness is essential. (Hear, hear.) A good teacher possessed kindness, knowledge, and firmness. He trusted Sunday School teaching, and the action of our present educational machinery, will in a few years render it impossible for any warlike Prime Minister or diplomatist to carry this country into war. (Applause.)—A vote of thanks having been passed to the representatives of the London, Lancashire, and West-Riding Associations (Messrs. Freeston, C. J. Perry, and Barrett), the minutes of the last annual meeting of the association at Sheffield, were read and passed.—The annual report was then introduced, nearly the whole of which we gave last week.

On the motion of the CHAIRMAN, duly seconded, the report was adopted.

Rev. F. H. JONES, of Loughborough, introduced the examiner's report, which stated that 221 scholars were examined from 34 classes, as against 210 scholars from 34 classes last year. Of these 61 passed first class, and 75 second, 85 rejected; as against 97 first class, 82 second, and 31 rejected last year. The committee attributed this somewhat unsatisfactory condition of things to the increased strictness of the examination, and partly to the difficulty of the written examination in that most important subject—lessons in religion.

The CHAIRMAN moved the election of officers for the ensuing year as follows:—President, Mr. Alderman Manfield, Northampton; treasurer, Mr. H. E. Perry, Nottingham; auditor, Mr. F. Dale, Sheffield; secretary, Mr. A. H. Burgess, Nottingham. Committee: Chesterfield, Mr. F. Piper; Derby, Messrs. C. Wibberley, and Jno. Cox; Leicester, Messrs. Jno. Cooper, H. G. Marriott, and Miss E. Gittins; Loughborough, Mr. Jno. Stubbs; Mansfield, Mr. Jno. Harrop White; Northampton, Mr. A. Knight; Nottingham, Messrs. R. Enfield, W. Gill, Jno. C. Warren, and P. J. Lynn; Sheffield, Messrs. J. B. Gardner, and Jno. Baker. Local treasurers: Chesterfield, Mr. F. Piper; Derby, Mr. Wibberley; Leicester, Mr. H. G. Marriott; Loughborough, Mr. J. Stubbs; Mansfield, Mr. J. H. White; Nottingham, Mr. C. J. Lewis; Sheffield, Mr. E. M. Gibbs; Northampton, Mr. A. Knight.

The Rev. J. WILLIAMS seconded, and the motion was carried.

The following resolution was then submitted to the meeting, "That the examinations be continued during the year, and that the Examination Committee be requested to arrange for examinations to cover the whole year," and passed. The examination sub-committee was appointed as follows:—Messrs. Armstrong, Badland, Worthington, Williams, Dale, Gibbs, and Burgess.

Mr. Badland was appointed to the Board of Editors for "Teachers' Notes" in the place of Mr. Jones, who is leaving the district.

The meeting then adjourned for luncheon. On re-assembling the CHAIRMAN moved—"That this meeting tenders its warmest thanks to Rev. F. H. Jones for his kindly services to the association, and wishes him increasing usefulness and happiness in the new sphere to which he is about to move."—Rev. A. W. WORTHINGTON seconded the motion in a few words of warm eulogy.—Mr. JONES, who is about to occupy the pulpit at Oldham, having replied, votes of thanks were accorded to those friends who had helped in the examinations, and to Revs. C. D. Badland and D. Walsley for their services at the morning service. Leicester was fixed as the place for the next annual meeting, the chairman promising friends from a distance a cordial welcome. This concluded the business of the meeting, and a hearty vote of thanks to Alderman Kempson brought the meeting to a close.

The afternoon meeting was then commenced, the Rev. R. A. Armstrong, B.A., taking the chair. The Rev. ROWLAND HILL, of Bedford, read a paper on CONFIDENT TEACHING.

The speaker dwelt upon the importance of appropriate manner, and drew an amusing picture of a stumbling and hesitating teacher before his restless class. A teacher must be confident in manner if he meant to attain success. As to matter, just as the teacher showed hesitancy in his teaching his pupils would not care to listen to him, so if a man was not sure of his message his hearers would not regard him. He pointed out that confident teaching meant the exact reverse of dogmatic teaching. The dogmatic teacher said "this is truth," and told them to accept it; the confident teacher with no authority outside him went to his little flock or great congregation and said, "that is truth to me; is it so to you? if it is, accept it." In other words the dogmatic teacher taught the faith of others, whilst the confident teacher taught his own faith, which might also be shared in by others. It seemed to him that what was wanted was that teachers should have a shining faith of their own, and that they should do their best to make it stronger and to keep it clearer.

The CHAIRMAN said the question between religious and secular teaching was pressing upon us with more and more significance, and the teacher should endeavour to impart to the scholars with whom he had to come into contact, a sense of the largeness and the significance of the subject with which he had to deal, and of the intense importance of a deep and true faith, and trust in religious truth of some kind or other.—The discussion was continued by Mr. Gill, Mr. Wright (Leicester), Mr. Gardner (Sheffield), Alderman Kempson, and others.

MINISTERIAL APPOINTMENT.—The Rev. Richard Pilcher, B.A., of Stroud, has received and accepted a cordial invitation from the Cairo-street Congregation, Warrington, to become its minister, and will shortly enter upon his new duties.

CIRENCESTER.—On Good Friday the usual social meeting was held in the chapel, when between sixty and seventy took tea together. The ancient building was tastefully decorated with a variety of devices formed by early spring flowers. After tea, the evening was made pleasant and instructive with addresses, readings, and a selection of hymns and anthems.

MONTHLY MEETING OF PROTESTANT DISSENTING MINISTERS.—At the monthly meeting of the Protestant dissenting ministers of Warwickshire and the neighbouring counties, held at Cradley on Tuesday last, the Rev. W. Cochrane in the chair, it was moved by the Rev. John Gordon of Kenilworth, and seconded by the Rev. M. Gibson of Dudley, "That this meeting of ministers expresses its strong disapproval of any attempts to plunge the country into war at this present crisis, believing that the preservation of peace is as consistent with the promotion of our national welfare as it is necessary to the general interests of civilisation." Carried unanimously.

SOUTHAMPTON: CHURCH OF THE SAVIOUR.

THERE was, as usual, a special service at this place of worship on Good Friday morning. The devotional portion was conducted by the Rev. J. T. Marriott, of Manchester. The sermon was preached by the Rev. H. IERSON, M.A., of London, who selected as his text the words "The Church of the living God." The ideal of the Christian Church was, he remarked, one of the grandest conceivable, because it rose above all local, all temporary distinctions, and aimed to unite men in the common bond of that equal relationship they all sustained to the one God and Father of all. If the Church of Christ in our nation fulfilled its high functions, and gave to the people only a sound and truly religious instruction, how different at this moment would have been the condition of men? He did not refer to the Establishment only, for there was no denomination which did not help to form the character of the national religion. He would not ask them to consider entangled disputes of doctrine as to what constituted a church, but would take them to the New Testament, where it was described as an association of Christians for united worship and help; he desired that this conception should be thoroughly carried out. For, if this was the case, then churches could do much more than they had ever attempted for religion and the public welfare, for mutual help, and for purposes of testimony for good and of protest against vice and wrong. Therefore, he asked, whether there was not more in this scriptural idea than any denominations of Christians had yet fully carried out? Were this idea fully developed the church would not be a mere Sunday institution, but would permeate the whole life, bringing men into closer union with each other. Indeed, he could imagine no larger benefit for humanity than that their churches should awaken to a development of that high mutual helpfulness which was the outcome of true Christian unity. He did not quarrel with an outward separation of churches, so long as there were real differences in existence to divide them, and it must be remembered that there might be a thousand different churches which themselves possessed more of true unity than a single varied aggregate of the whole Christian world. However, if they would fulfil this condition, let them discard the unchristian dogma of salvation to those only of certain creeds, and adopt the saying of Paul—"Grace be with all those who love our Lord in sincerity." Divided churches ceased to be Christian in proportion as they became sectarian. Could not, he asked, Unitarian churches show to the world in this respect a better way—that union and all its advantages might be consistently held with all that freedom of opinion and independence of character upon which they so prided themselves? Liberal Christians were naturally jealous of their independence, and freedom of conscience and action; but was not the love of their fellow-men, and the wish to do good more effectively, equally desirable? and if there was in Christian union greater strength, was it not worth while trying to avail themselves of it, and this without submitting themselves to the domination of a priesthood or the arbitrary views of a congregation as to the admission or non-admission to church membership? But many excellent and pious persons shrink from church organisations from, he believed, mistaken motives, believing that they might become thereby sectarian; but this would not follow if they retained that charity which the Apostle Paul commended. Thousands of Englishmen avoided Dissenting places of worship in order to escape the peculiar profession which was supposed to attend the act; whilst on the other hand the national Church was essentially a sectarian church, not only in its articles but throughout its services. But attendance at either of these organisations did not involve sectarianism on the part of anyone. The really good and true in all churches were one. Lastly, he said, this union should be above all small and trifling possibilities of difference. It should be a union of heart, of mutual care for each other, of mutual association to help each other in spiritual life, and the formation of higher Christian character, and, indeed, a union which would exemplify the grand and glorious ideal of the kingdom of God on earth in the form of the church.

After the service luncheon was provided in the Kell Memorial Schools.

WELCOME TO THE REV. D. AMOS.

In the evening there was a welcome tea meeting to the Rev. D. Amos, late Congregational minister, of King's Lynn, Norfolk, who has undertaken the pastorate of the church, and after this there was a public meeting in the Kell Memorial Schools, for the purpose of advocating the "Great religious and philanthropic interests of the day."

The chair was taken at seven o'clock by Mr. B. K. SPENCER, the hon. secretary and treasurer of the congregation, who was supported on the platform by the Revs. H. Ierson, M.A., J. T. Marriott, B. L. Green, W. Agar, and D. Amos. Among the visitors were Mr. Blesley, of Portsmouth; Mr. Carter, of Poole; Mr. Guy, and a large party from Ringwood. The CHAIRMAN said that the task undertaken by the Rev. D. Amos was comparatively easy, as he followed the efforts of the lay preachers who had kept the church open for the past sixteen months. He urged upon the members to unite in strengthening and supporting their new minister in his work. He then offered the right hand of fellowship to him in the name of the congregation, amid applause.

R. PINNOCK, Esq., ex-mayor of Newport, said that he well remembered the room of the Philosophic Society, in St. Michael's Square, where they used to meet, afterwards the chapel in the Ditches, and finally the beautiful edifice they now worshipped in, which was due entirely to the efforts of Mr. Kell and a few friends. He hoped they would all agree as one in supporting their minister.

Mr. G. S. COXWELL, in a feeling speech, impressed upon all the necessity of setting aside petty differences, and working together for the building up and establishing the good work now before them.

The Rev. H. IERSON gave a hearty welcome to the Rev. D. Amos into the Unitarian body, and congratulated him on his coming forth from the old line to the new. He offered him the right hand of fellowship, wishing him every success in this his first entry into the Unitarian body.

The Rev. J. T. MARRIOTT followed with an interesting account of his early connection with Mr. Amos, and the providential manner in which they had come together in the college at Regent's Park. He had not come to Southampton to give the formal "right hand of fellowship," but simply to help in the welcome as a friend. After some observations on the attitude we ought to adopt toward those who are continually coming over to us from the orthodox churches, the speaker urged the importance of maintaining the enthusiasm which he trusted Mr. Amos would bring with him. There was no decay in nature so sad as that of a spirit which had gradually lost its first earnestness through want of sympathy and encouragement; and he hoped that the friends there would co-operate warmly and actively with their new minister for the upbuilding of their own lives in Christian strength and grace, and for showing others the better way.

Rev. B. L. GREEN, of Newport, I.W., as one of the ministers of the district, gave Mr. Amos a cordial and hearty welcome. He hoped that his path would be a pleasant one, and that he would meet with all the success and encouragement he could desire. He then offered his hand in the name of the ministers of the district.

Rev. W. AGAR said he hoped they would not expect too much from their minister, who was only a man like themselves. If they looked up to him as though he was a giant far above themselves they would see him come gradually down, and lose much of the respect which was really due to him.

The Rev. D. AMOS replied to the three welcomes. He said that if only the tenth part of the promises made to him that day were fulfilled he should have nothing further to desire. He thanked them all for their kind words of sympathy, and said that he would do all in his power to merit them. When at the College at Regent's Park he had read the works of John Stuart Mill, Herbert Spencer, and others of this school, and thus insensibly had obtained a broad and liberal mode of thought which could not be found in the writings of the strictly orthodox. The result of this was shown in the first sermon he preached on his appointment to King's Lynn; for the elders confronted him in the vestry and stated their doubts as to his soundness. This caused him much agony of mind; for he himself had never doubted his own soundness, and long he struggled with these feelings. At length he found it necessary to leave the Congregational body and seek for some other more genial home.

Mr. THOMAS SMITH proposed a vote of thanks to Rev. H. Ierson for his able and eloquent sermon, seconded by Mr. DUNCAN, to which Mr. IERSON replied.

A duet, "Ruth and Naomi," was sung by Mrs. Shepard and Miss Wadham, and the proceedings were afterwards brought to a close.

GLASGOW: ST. VINCENT-STREET UNITARIAN CHURCH.—On Friday evening, the 12th instant, in the church schoolroom, the members of "The Literary and Debating Association" in connection with this church held their annual social gathering to celebrate the close of the session. After an excellent tea, provided by the lady members of the association, the Rev. F. W. Walters delivered an address, in the course of which he reviewed the work of the session, and congratulated the members upon the result. He intimated that next session he will deliver monthly lectures on the Plays of Shakespeare. The secretary stated that during last session Carlyle's "Heroes and Hero-worship" had been studied with much profit, and that the following papers had been read:—"The Life and Writings of Theodore Parker," by the Rev. F. W. Walters; "The Ethics of Evolution" and "The Aims of Education," by Mr. William Cassels; "The Subjection of Women," by Mr. Robert Stewart; "Oliver Goldsmith" and "Sir William Ferguson," by Mr. Harry Wright; "Dr. Livingstone," by Mr. W. S. Wright; "Futurity," by Mr. D. L. White; "Russia and the Russians," by Mr. James Campbell; "Some of the Causes that have modified the Earth's Surface," by Mr. John Tuckwell, C.E.; two papers by Dr. Barlow, illustrated by experiments and diagrams—one on "The Cut Finger," the other on "The Nervous System;" and two papers on "The Drama and its Influence on Morality and Religion," by Mr. E. Ceredig Jones. A very interesting programme of songs, readings and piano-forte recitals was gone through, and dancing was vigorously engaged in at intervals. A most enjoyable evening was brought to a close by the singing of "Auld Lang Syne." During the last six months, Mr. Ceredig Jones has conducted a Greek Testament class, in connection with the church, with very satisfactory results. Last Sunday, Mr. Dunbar, on behalf of the members of the class, presented Mr. Jones with a handsome gold pencil-case, as a token of their appreciation of his services.

TO-DAY.

CREED: live and die, faith follows faith;
Deeds prove but mockeries of the will;
And dreams that were to-morrow's are
To-morrow's still.

Subtly, in all our good, the thread
Of ill is wrought: our fairest fair
Is dragged to earth in being ours,
And traileth there!

Light follows light, and each grows dim!
The present will be as the past;
Wave breaks on wave, and each is strong
As each is last!

Life leans on Faith, and presseth hard!
Faith cries to God, and only stands
When, bearing Life upon her breast,
She clasps God's hands.

The distant hills are darkness; but
The morrow brings the morrow's light;
This much is ours—to day to do
The present right.

This much is ours, and things beyond
In Love's own wisdom hidden lie!
But this lies close at hand—to do
His will—and die.

The Unitarian Herald.

FRIDAY, APRIL 26, 1878.

MR. BRIGHT AMONG THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL TEACHERS.

On Good Friday last, whilst the annual meeting of the Manchester District Sunday School Association was being held in Manchester, Mr. John Bright was presiding at Rochdale over the Union of Sunday School Teachers of Lancashire, Cheshire, and Derbyshire. Reading the account of the proceedings at Rochdale, we could not help asking ourselves, "And why were not the teachers of our schools represented at the Rochdale meeting? Why should there be a Manchester District and a Lancashire Sunday School Association?" The reason is, as is well known, that the schools of the Unitarian and Free churches are not received into the fellowship of the so-called "orthodox" Lancashire, Cheshire, and Derbyshire Sunday Schools' Union. In Lancashire, as elsewhere, agreement in certain doctrinal statements is made the test of fellowship, and Sunday schools are excluded from union unless they can unite in something more than common work. It is pleasant to be able to note that in Mr. Bright's address on Good Friday there was not a word which gave encouragement to the exclusiveness of which we complain. He spoke to Sunday-school teachers of Sunday-school work. His description of the work represented what the teachers of the excluded schools do,—that teaching of "many things which, in many of their homes and amongst many of their ordinary associations, the children could hardly learn, teaching of kindness and temperance and the cultivation of a peaceful spirit." Nor was there one of his statements of the purpose of the Sunday-school teacher's work which would not apply just as fully to our teachers and our schools as to the teachers and schools of the Unions from which we are shut out. The catholicity of Mr. Bright's address, his perfect unconsciousness of any need to allude to the doctrines which are made the test by which thousands of teachers are excluded from the various Unions, prove better than anything else how needless the tests are, and how unreal is the distinction which our friends of the other—we won't say "orthodox"—churches have set up. It is interesting to note that Mr. Bright, called on to address some thousands of Sunday-school teachers, spoke to them, not about dogmas, but about moral training, and that sketching in outline the process by which the future church, the social and public life of the next quarter of a century, is already being formed, he described the very methods which are in use in our schools. We have Mr. Bright's approval, though our teachers were not allowed to join the number of those who heard his words, and in this we can quietly rejoice, looking forward to the coming of the good day when the Unions may share the spirit of their distinguished president.

Why have not we "a distinguished president" for our annual gatherings? That was the second thought which the proceedings at Rochdale suggested to us. Not that we would for a moment question the appropriateness of the selection of the chairman who presided over our Good Friday meeting. It is on other than personal grounds that the choice of a chairman who might stand in much the same relation to our teachers as that in which Mr. Bright stood to the teachers of the Lancashire Union Schools seems to us to be desirable. The word of a great public man goes far and receives close attention. The other day it happened to the present writer to hear a friend who is a member of an orthodox church express the opinion that most of the points on which religious men base their sectarian distinctions are of comparatively little importance, and have very little relation to the Scriptures in which they profess to find their belief. "I learned this first," said he, "from a speech of Mr. John Bright's." And who can doubt that this last speech of Mr. Bright's will give a practical turn to the thought on Sunday-school matters of hundreds of thousands of readers? It is worth considering if it would not be well, when another year's meeting comes round, to put in the president's chair some one whose voice will in this way be heard beyond the limits of our little gathering.

There is a second, and perhaps what may be considered a worthier, reason for the adoption of this suggestion. The annual meetings of Sunday-school teachers have a two-fold object—to render an account of a year's work, and to quicken the spirit of the teachers for the year on which they are entering; and for this latter and more important purpose there is a real value in the suggestions of a mind which is not too much familiarised with the details of our work. It is, too, often the case that the proceedings of our annual meetings are critical and almost controversial in tone. Those who take part in them, from president down to the humblest speaker, are practically engaged in Sunday-school teaching. Each detail is a subject of personal interest for them, and the want of large and disinterested (we use the word in its wide sense) views is apparent. A speaker like Mr. Bright is ignorant of the controverted points and the little experiments. He can therefore take large and general views of Sunday-school policy, and state the principles on which it should be based in a fresh and interesting way. So he creates a certain spirit of enthusiasm, and at the same time, by reason of his very ignorance of the beaten paths, he has the greater chance of leading those who accompany him in his survey to the higher grounds, where the wider prospect is. How much more valuable than any discussion of plans and methods was Mr. Bright's simple description of the Sunday-school teacher's work! How unlike the usual tone of our presidential addresses, and yet how appropriate and suggestive was his plea for the use of Sunday-school power in the interests of peace! But it is difficult to make comparisons without suggesting, however undesignedly, blame of that to which we are accustomed. That, certainly, it is not our wish to do. We would, however, for the reasons at which we have glanced, throw out the suggestion that at the next annual meetings of our associations there should be an attempt made to put in the chair some one whose words will get more than a merely denominational attention.

But where can that some one be found? it may be asked. To which we would say in reply: The Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone owes our churches some little reparation of an injury which he unintentionally inflicted on them, and we owe him a lesson as to the condition of our churches, which could nowhere be better taught than at one of our Sunday-school gatherings, where "the rich and well-to-do" of his imaginative sketch of Unitarians are certainly not in the majority. If Mr. Gladstone cannot be brought to the useful test of a near acquaintanceship, there is another right hon. gentleman, Mr. James Stansfeld, whose words command attention, and who would, in our opinion, bring to the proceedings of our annual gatherings wisdom and moral influence second only to Mr. Bright's, whilst his practical sympathy with the work of the Sunday-school teacher has been long and consistently shown.

DR. ARNOLD ON ETERNAL PUNISHMENT.

In a review of Dr. Arnold's Sermons, the Non-conformist says that had Dr. Arnold lived longer, he would have made some obvious advances in theology. It seems strange to read warnings addressed to boys of a time to come when God might cease to love them, and appear only as a stern, unloving inflictor of everlasting vengeance; and it is equally strange to find that he could express the same pitiless doctrine in these terms:—

As reason tells us that none but true Christians can hope to live for ever, so we have cause to believe, from God's Word, that all but true Christians will be miserable for ever. But I do not think that our natural reason would have ever enabled us to discover what Christ has revealed—that good left undone will be positively punished for all eternity, as well as evil done. The careless, and what we call harmless, livers, cut off by reason from the hope of eternal happiness, are condemned by revelation to an eternity of positive misery.—Vol. iii., p. 112.

The fact, adds our contemporary, that Dr. Arnold could write thus concerning the doom that awaits merely negative characters, shows how completely the landmarks of theology have been shifted since his time. For it is absolutely certain that any clergyman of to-day, corresponding to his type, and possessed of similar learning and culture, would find such notions as these not only morally intolerable, but both philosophically and exegetically untenable; and it is interesting to compare the mode in which Stanley, Farrar, Maurice, Kingsley, and Robertson express themselves on these subjects with the very different teaching of Dr. Arnold.

THE HIBBERT LECTURESHIP.

THE London correspondent of the Manchester Guardian writes:—The series of seven weekly lectures about to be given under the Hibbert Trust by Professor Max Muller, in the Chapter House of Westminster on "The origin and growth of religion," have an interest apart from their antecedent popularity. This last, indeed, is only partially measured by the circumstance that the lectures are to be delivered to two audiences, the first assembling in the morning and the second in the afternoon. The afternoon delivery was the original arrangement, and the duplication was rendered necessary or advisable in the interests of over twelve hundred candidates who had applied for admission to an apartment which could accommodate only half that number. But another suggestive circumstance, and one which is causing agitation amongst persons who share the late Mr. Hibbert's theological sentiments, is that his endowment is being wrested from its original intention, which was, according to his biographer, Mr. Jerome March, "to elevate the position and public influence of the Unitarian ministry." Although this original intention was to some extent departed from on the ground that it would be more satisfactory to secure the high culture aimed at before the ministerial office was reached, it still remained the primary idea of the lectures that they should be delivered against the doctrine of the Trinity. There was, however, a proviso in the trust deed by which the funds could be otherwise applied than in battling against the current trinitarianism of the age whenever it should be proved or provable that the doctrine of the Trinity was an effete and exploded doctrine. Impatient of the tardy arrival of this result, the Trustees seem to have consented to a modification which is in effect a compromise, and the trust is now described as one for the "promotion of comprehensive learning and thorough research in relation to religion as it appears to the eye of the scholar and philosopher, and wholly apart from the interest of any particular Church or system." The Trustees have taken the step involved in the coming lectures "in such manner as they in their uncontrolled discretion shall from time to time deem most conducive to the spread of Christianity in its most simple and intelligible form."

The Late Rev. Frederick Ashton, M.A.

Last week we gave a brief obituary notice of the death of this young minister, and we this week copy a more extended account which we find in the Hyde and Denton Chronicle, making here and there a few slight corrections of fact.

A painful sensation was created in Hyde on Monday by the announcement of the death of the Rev. Frederick Ashton, M.A., formerly assistant to the Rev. H. E. Dowson, M.A., of Hyde Chapel, Gee Cross. As we announced last week, Mr. Dowson had on Sunday to go to Belfast, and engaged Mr. Ashton to take his place, and preach a funeral sermon on Mr. William Leigh. On Sunday morning, however, a messenger informed the Rev. J. K. Smith that Mr. Ashton was taken suddenly ill, and requested him to take the service. This Mr. Smith did. Up to that morning Mr. Ashton had been in his usual health. On Saturday he finished the discourse he intended to preach at Gee Cross, and transacted some business in connection with the school. At night he partook of a light supper, and retired to rest; but at half-past four o'clock next morning was attacked by English cholera. Mr. W. W. Howard was called in, and during the forenoon he found the patient sinking more rapidly than he had ever seen before. At his request Dr. Cogan, of Manchester, the medical attendant upon Mr. Ashton's family, was summoned, and remained with him till the evening. At first very much prostrated, in the afternoon Mr. Ashton seemed to rally, and expressed a hope that he would be able to conduct the evening service. Naturally bilious, and with a constitutional tendency to heart disease, he had not the physical stamina to contend with it. In the evening he gradually got weaker, although perfectly conscious; but neither he nor any of those around the bedside thought the end was so near. At half-past two, only twenty-two hours after the first attack, he said his hands were cold; he did not even then recognise his visitor, for Death came in the likeness of its half-sister Sleep. He closed his eyes as placidly as a child sleeps, and without a word of farewell to his young wife, or to his mother, he passed away.

The Rev. F. Ashton was born in 1847, and was consequently thirty years of age. His father, Mr. John Ashton, was a partner in the firm of John Curtis and Co., now John Ashton and Son. Mr. Ashton is now, and for many years has been, a member of the Manchester City Council. Mr. F. Ashton, as a boy, sat under Dr. Beard in Strangeways Chapel, and his successor, Mr. Brooke Herford; and he seems to have caught the intense earnestness and devotional spirit of the latter eloquent preacher. This determined him to study for the ministry, and accordingly he was entered, as a scholar in St. Edmund's Hall, Oxford, after receiving a preparatory training from the Rev. R. H. Gibson, private tutor. In 1872 he graduated, taking the B.A. degree. He continued his studies in connection with Owens College, whilst settled at Hyde and Glossop, and in the autumn or winter of 1876 obtained his M.A. degree. Immediately after leaving college in 1872 he entered upon the work of the ministry as assistant to the Rev. H. E. Dowson, at Hyde Chapel; and in the short space of between two and three years, he won the affection of everyone connected with the church and school. His popularity with and influence over the young were especially great. Entering into all their enjoyments, as well as helping them to climb the mount of knowledge, gentle and kindly in his actions, he quickly became their leader and guide, their friend and counsellor. Of cultivated and æsthetic tastes, he composed music for the hymns they sung on festive occasions; and in wayside rambles, or in the Sunday school, talked to them in his own winning way of the beautiful in nature and art. His aim was not simply to impart knowledge, but to cultivate a longing for it: not simply to eschew wrong, but to love and do the right. Under his care the singing class was established, which still flourishes, and when he left to take charge of the mission in Glossop the members presented him with a metronome. Nor was it likely that his labour of love—for of salary at Gee Cross he had none, and never asked for any—would be allowed to pass without recognition by those to whose service he had been devoted. Mr. H. Barlow, as the representative of the teachers and scholars of the Sunday school, presented him on the same occasion with a first-class microscope and box of instruments, a suitable inscription being placed upon the box; Thomas Thornley, Esq., the representative of the congregation, presented him with a purse of a hundred guineas; and the Rev. Mr. Dowson gave him a copy of Chambers' Encyclopedia. Fitzalan-street Chapel was opened on the 12th of June, 1875, by the Rev. Charles Beard, B.A. Previous to that, service had been conducted in a room in Norfolk Square: Mr. Dowson and other ministers, with true missionary spirit, coming over to preach to the few people assembled. It was by no means a hopeful beginning, but still the nucleus of a congregation was gathered together, and some of them men who could at a pinch preach or lecture themselves. Progress, however, in that upper room was impossible, and Mr. Edmund Potter, feeling this, secured a site and built the chapel. Mr. Ashton was chosen for minister, and a wiser choice could not have been made. His musical taste found scope for exercise, both within and without his own chapel and school. He brought into being the Philharmonic Society, at first acting as secretary and then as a vice-president; and the catholic character of the society may be inferred from the fact that both the vicar of Glossop and the vicar of Whitfield were active members, that Canon Tasker (a Roman Catholic) was one of the patrons, and that all the dissenting bodies were represented in it. By this life of active usefulness, the prejudices which met Mr. Ashton at first on every hand were gradually dissipated. The congregation at the chapel gradually increased, the Sunday schools were well attended, and the day-school accommodation was found insufficient for the number of applicants. He had gathered around him a band of workers of which any church might be proud, yet while making friends every day in Glossop, his old friends at Gee Cross never forgot him. It was a usual thing for parties of three or four to walk over on a summer evening and attend the chapel; and this display of affectionate interest did much to encourage him in his work. He could always depend upon help from Gee Cross choir on the occasion of special sermons; and no party at Gee Cross was complete without his presence. With an almost feminine gentleness of disposition, modest and unassuming, and yet possessing faith in the triumph of truth and goodness sufficient to make him an enthusiast in everything to which he put his hands, he won in a few months a warmth of affection which others could not gain in as many years. Hesitating in nothing, sparing himself never, his very example brought others to his aid, and the loving esteem which nearer intercourse called forth kept them ever willing fellow-labourers with him.

MR. ASHTON'S LAST SERMON.

In the absence of the Rev. H. E. Dowson in Ireland, it had been arranged that Mr. Ashton should preach the funeral sermon of Mr. William Leigh, a gentleman of some note in Hyde, who had died the previous week. Mr. Ashton had finished his discourse on the Saturday, but on Sunday morning he was too ill to leave home, and the MS. was sent to the Rev. J. K. Smith, with a request that he would undertake the duty. At the close of the discourse, Mr. Smith read the following from Mr. Ashton's MS. Possessing now a doubly-melancholy interest as the words of the dying preacher on the dead, we give them in full:—"I must not by any means omit the example which will appeal most forcibly to the hearts of those who are assembled here to-day. What manner of man was he whose name is at this moment upon all our lips, uttered, indeed, in hushed and solemn tones, for that he is no longer with us, but spoken also in accents of reverent affection as the name of one whose memory will long be an inspiration to nobility and faithfulness? What manner of man was he whose departure from the world has brought together this sympathetic crowd? Was he some great king ruling over a loyal people? Was he some brave general crowned with laurels? Was he an able statesman wielding the destinies of his country? You know he was not. A man of the people, brought up in the mill, possessed of no hereditary power or influence, he won the homage of his fellow men in the circle in which he lived, because, like his great Master before him, he was content to serve. It would be presumptuous for me, a comparative stranger to his merits, to dwell at length upon the events of his life, which are doubtless, in the main, well known to all of you, and which, during the past week, have formed the theme of general conversation. No life is absolutely perfect, and it must perhaps be admitted that the one which has so recently been brought to an end has not been without its failures and mistakes. Engaged in a constant struggle to promote the welfare and independence of the class to which he belonged, it would have been strange indeed if he had not sometimes gained the ill-will of classes to whose interests he appeared to be opposed; but even if he now and then allowed his zeal to get the better of his discretion, all that will be forgotten now, and his fellow-workmen will delight only to preserve the memory of his sterling worth. The character of the company which assembled on Wednesday last to pay their last tribute of respect to the dead is sufficient testimony to the fact that few men who have done so much for the working classes have been so fortunate as he in preserving the full confidence of the employers. His years were far from having reached what is generally considered the allotted span of human life, and he died, as it were, in harness. A shade of sorrow inevitably steals over us as we see a life of quiet usefulness thus cut off in its midst. And yet I know not why we should any of us desire a better fate. There seems to me something inexpressibly more sorrowful about the thought of outliving one's usefulness and becoming a burden on the world. Our departed brother has at least escaped that sad experience, and our sorrow for his loss may well be modified by our steadfast faith that he has ere now realised the truth of God's promise, "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life."

THE FUNERAL

took place on Thursday week. The members of the Glossop Philharmonic Society accompanied the corpse to Woolley Bridge, and some of them went on to Brooklands Cemetery, where, in the grave lying next to that of Dr. Beard, the mortal remains of Mr. F. Ashton were laid. Nearly all the ministers of the Manchester district were present, and the Rev. H. E. Dowson, B.A., conducted the service. The mortuary chapel was completely filled. Before the body was removed to the grave, Mr. Dowson said:—"My Christian friends, we are gathered together to-day to perform an office inexpressibly sad. We bear to its last resting-place the body of one who has been taken in the bright opening of a life of surpassing promise. It is always a bitter sorrow when dear friends are lost; but there is cause also to rejoice when, in a good old age, a servant of God is taken from a finished work. Some of us remember following to his honoured grave in this very place such a veteran in the army of the Lord. He had fought out his good fight; he had finished his course; and, mingled with our grief that we should see his face no more, was a solemn and thankful joy that he had been permitted by his heavenly Father to live his good life so completely out. Some of us, too, remember more recently conveying to the tomb all that was mortal of one who was yet in the midst of a life of noble activity [the Rev. T. E. Poynting], but who had lived long enough to leave behind him much completed work. Here also we could not but rejoice, in the midst of our tears, at the thought of so full a life. But to-day our brother is cut off on the very threshold of his high career. He has been with us just long enough to teach us his exceeding worth, and to lay the grand lines on which we all hoped to see an ever fairer structure rising as the years sped on. The work was there laid out and waiting to be done, the workman, with a rare energy, with boundless self-devotion, and with talents worthy of his lofty aims, had set himself to do it. Suddenly, the work is left without the master hand to carry it through; and the glorious promise must be for ever unfulfilled on earth. Such a death is the very saddest that the world can know. It is one of those awful mysteries of divine providence that we cannot even try to fathom. We can only fall back on the infinite trust without which life is impossible, the trust that we and all God's children are safe in His Almighty arms in life, in death, and in eternity, and that by ways we know not and cannot understand He is working out the eternal welfare of His human family. But even in the midst of our deepest sorrow, we cannot but rejoice in the memory of our dear young friend. Short as his work of life was, it has left its mark, its story is written in bright and clear characters; those who knew him best, loved him most; and his monument will stand in each human heart that knew and loved him, in an affection and esteem that they will never lose to their dying day. As a minister of Christ he nobly fulfilled his part. He came to me to learn his duties; I even felt that I learned of him, rather than he of me. I learned of him the truest lesson of Christian enthusiasm and of utter devotion to Christian work that I ever learned of any one. . . . The value of life is a thing of quality rather than quantity; and as the Master of him we mourn put a world-wide and a world-long influence into an even shorter period of work, so our dear young friend has made for himself a name that will not be forgotten, and has lived a life which will be an inspiration and an example to all who came within its reach.

REV. H. E. DOWSON'S SERMON.

On Sunday last the Rev. H. Enfield Dowson, B.A., preached in the morning at Gee Cross, and in the afternoon and evening in Fitzalan-street Chapel, Glossop, giving on each occasion the following discourse. He took for his text Matthew xxv. 21: "Well done, thou good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of the Lord." Mr. Dowson spoke of the circumstances of the death which they now mourned as belonging to that mysterious Providence which is God's and not our own; before which we can but bow our heads, resting in the trust that His children here and hereafter are safe in His Almighty arms; and that one day we shall see the bow of mercy that shone on every cloud.

But it is not all sorrow we feel when dwelling in thought upon such a life as that which has just closed. Our sorrow must have mingled with it much thankfulness and joy. If to have beheld fair scenes of nature's beauty is to have reason to give thanks, much more reason is there for gratitude to God when we have enjoyed the privilege of knowing and loving that which is the noblest work of God—a good man. Indeed that a life has been lived on this earth, and has gone away without its purity of heart suffering defilement, with its integrity unspotted, having with single purpose done the utmost possible good, this is a cause for inextinguishable joy. Such a life, however short, is for ever a beautiful thing to look at, and to treasure up in the storehouse of our memories. The real bitterness of grief is not felt for such a one; it is the utter waste and perversion of a life that is the miserable thing to think of. For parents especially there is no comparison between the pain of parting with a child, however much endeared by goodness and fidelity, and the misery of seeing one born of themselves sinking into degradation and vice. When the poor wastrel dies there is no solace to the grief; when the pure and high soul is borne away, there is inexpressible joy in the thought of a life fair in the sight of God and man.

And I believe few lives have been fairer in the sight of God and man than his whose memory is now so dear to our hearts. Frederick Ashton, the young missionary minister, so well known and so deeply beloved and so active amongst us but a week ago, was to most of us quite unknown some five and a half years back. How well I remember his stopping me one wet day, in Market-street, in Manchester, and telling me that he wanted to be my curate, that he might gain experience in the work of the ministry under my guidance, before he undertook its sacred responsibilities in a field of his own. I know that I told him that I had little to teach him; and I know that I shrank from the task of showing him the way to fulfil so high a calling. But he would take no refusal, and he came to work with us at Gee Cross.

And I have often since thanked God from the bottom of my heart that he was not sent elsewhere by my reluctance. The loss to ourselves would have been immeasurable; looking back upon a ministry at Gee Cross of just eleven years to-day, I say that the best of its events was the coming to us of that dear friend whom to-day we mourn. Yet I soon felt how very true had been my words, that I had little to teach him. He brought so much more to me than I could give to him. He brought not only help always ready in my own work, but he brought a spirit and a power with him which made me learner instead of teacher, and which gave me a new inspiration. He showed us all at Gee Cross, in a way we had never seen it before, how an earnest Christian spirit may make itself felt, and what an intense personal influence it may exert. He set himself to work from the first day he was with us to become, not the minister only, but the personal friend of the young men and women who were growing up in the Sunday school. The classes in which he met them, and gathered them around him by the strong attraction which he ever exerted, were his delight and theirs. With him every labour for them was a labour of love, and he threw into it all his heart and soul. No one better than the members of the singing class which he founded, and which was so dear to him and them, can tell what endless pains he was ready to take, and what drudgery he joyfully underwent in working for our young people; and now the many tunes they possess in his hand-writing are to them sacred relics of his self-forgetful labours on their behalf. The young men's adult class was his creation too; and nothing better did he do whilst he was with us than that which he did in laying hold of these youths and keeping them together, and exerting on them the influence of his own high example. But perhaps that which was dearest to his heart, and dearest too to those whom he collected about him, was his Sunday evening Bible class. There he exerted a wonderful power; he spoke out of the depths of his own experience, and opened his heart in all its earnestness and with all its aspirations to the young people who to their dying day will thank God for the high privilege which they there enjoyed. Nor did he confine himself to his work in the classes: he was in private the friend of his scholars; he planned many a pleasure for them; he loved beautiful scenery, and took them with him to enjoy it; he was their hospitable entertainer during many a pleasant evening spent by them with him. I never knew, and never expect to know again, such a minister for winning the hearts and lifting up and beautifying the lives of young men and women; and I devoutly thank God that, although by no merit of my own, I was permitted to be the means of bringing the unspeakable blessing of his influence within reach of our Sunday School at Gee Cross. It is an influence, I know, that will never die; and in all on whom it has been exerted will an inextinguishable love for the memory of this dear friend of theirs survive to their last day on earth; and not few will be those who will say that for the good that is in them they are largely indebted to his words and example. The time came when, after two years and three-quarters of his happy ministry amongst us, he had to bid Gee Cross goodbye. The ties formed had been so close that the parting was a sad one: little did any think how soon a much sadder parting must be made. Farewell was taken of class after class; and one Sunday evening saw the Bible class paying to him in tears the tribute of the deep affection of their hearts; and I know that by those who were there that farewell meeting will never be forgotten; and our dear friend himself spoke of it as well nigh the richest experience of his life when he bid us goodbye at the Hyde Mechanics' Institution. He had met with the blessing which was always his; he had won the love of those for whom he laboured, and it was a joy to him to know it.

He removed to his charge at Glossop amid universal good wishes and confident hopes for his success. How those hopes have been fulfilled we all know. He has built up in the two years and three quarters, which also was the period of his ministry in his own chapel, a congregation and a school such as no other minister amongst us has ever reared in the time. He chose Glossop because it was a virgin soil for him to till in his own way; because he had an ideal Church in his own mind, and he wished to see it growing up under his own hand; because he longed to be a missionary working among the people and gathering their young about him. He had an education and he had talents that might at any moment have gained him a far more conspicuous position. But he cared neither for worldly honour nor for worldly wealth. He cared only for the sacred work to which he dedicated his life, and the place for him was the place where he could do it best. He set about it at Glossop in a way that astonished even those who knew him. Without noise or public display, by his persevering industry, by his great gift of organisation, by his exerting on the new field all those powers which on the old one had achieved such great results, he raised out of next to nothing the large congregation and schools which at his death are found gathered in the Fitzalan-street Chapel. Every week-day and almost every week-night work has been going on, all receiving its impulse from him. Nothing that he took up knew how to fail. He would not let it fail. He was not one of those who drew up beautiful schemes and then expected them to work themselves. He set them going, and he kept them going; and he worked so hard himself that by the irresistible attraction of his example he made everyone about him work too, and delight in work done in his inspiring companionship. Thus his courses of lectures for the people, his Sunday school, his day school, his night school, his singing class, all these have prospered by the help of many hands under the guidance of the master-hand; and his young church has won its way to a foremost influence in the town of Glossop, whilst it has achieved a position amongst Unitarians unique for the rapidity and completeness of its success. He has kept up his old connection with Gee Cross, where his reputation as a preacher has grown every time he has opened his lips to preach. For his ever-ready kindness to me in taking my place I owe him a debt which I can now never repay to him; and no one but our Sunday scholars and teachers know how we shall miss him from those gatherings which would never be complete without his presence. But he was becoming known far beyond Glossop and Gee Cross. Of the Manchester District Sunday School Association he was one of the most active and useful members; he was the inspirer and guiding spirit of its efforts to introduce better singing into the Sunday schools of the district; and so highly were his services valued that, had he been alive, he would now have been the Association's secretary, with the implicit confidence of all its members. It was a wonder that such a man could be retained in so humble a sphere as that of missionary to so young a congregation. But the wonder was only in his own self-devotion to his chosen work. The Glasgow Church made him an offer that would have tempted almost any other man from his post; he was asked to leave one of the humblest for one of the most distinguished churches in the kingdom. He remained with the humble church, which he loved as being his own spiritual child, because he thought he could there serve God and his fellow-men better than in the higher sphere which sought him. And it was in the midst of this willing and joyful service that he, recently crowned by the blessing of a dear home of his own, with every happiness that the world can give, beloved and honoured and admired by all who knew him, and scattering blessings around him on his path, was stricken down in one short day. And as the news spread with startling rapidity, when the first feeling of incredulity was passed, there arose such a cry of universal lamentation through our northern churches—most of all in those which knew him best, at Glossop and Gee Cross—as none of us remember. In all our Gee Cross circle I am sure there is not one who does not grieve deeply, and many feel that they have lost well-nigh the best friend and the best man they ever knew. I have rarely loved any one so much; I could not be prouder of him and of his work if he had been a brother or a son. In Glossop, I know, a feeling as universal and as deep prevails; and to his own dear people the loss is by far the most grievous. The Church is orphaned. Its maker and inspirer is taken from its head. Oh! but surely it will not die! The spirit of him who made it, if it hovers anywhere on earth, will hover within its walls. His own Church must keep his memory green by living on. May it be his enduring monument; and may his influence breathe within it for many a long year, so that being dead he may yet speak in spirit to his beloved congregation, and they may be drawn after him to the realm of infinite purity and peace.

It is beyond my power to speak of the sorrow that has fallen on those who were nearest and dearest to our departed friend. God help the widow so soon bereft. God help the parents and the brother to bear the blow which has fallen on their hearts. They can have one comfort, that their beloved one has died amid universal affection and esteem; that he has not lived his short life in vain, but he has left ennobling influence that will not die, on countless human lives; and that his pure and gentle and self-sacrificing heart and earnest and active spirit of beneficence have fitted him, as few beside have been fit, to enter into heavenly communion with the Master, who, from a still shorter ministry on earth, ascended, as we call to mind the Easter Day, to the right hand of God.

VOTES OF CONDOLENCE.

At the meeting of the Manchester District Sunday School Association held in Manchester on Good Friday,

Mr. JOHN REYNOLDS moved—"That this Association feels that in the death of the Rev. F. Ashton, M.A., it has lost one who ever had its interests at heart, and grudged neither time nor labour in its behalf; and a friend who, by his amiable and gentle character, had so endeared himself to his fellow-workers that they know not where to find such another. And that this meeting respectfully tenders to his sorrowing widow and family its heartfelt sympathy in their sudden bereavement." He said: As one who knew him well for some five or more years, the melancholy duty—which but in justice to him and to you I should have preferred to have done without the addition of a word of my own—the sad task has fallen to me to move the resolution I have just read, and with a heavy heart to pen the very feeble and unworthy tribute to his memory which I now offer to you. We can hardly yet realise that he is not amongst us; and we who have spent many a happy evening with him, who have walked with him many a mile over the pleasant Derbyshire hills, which took new grace from his genial disposition, feel that, search as we will, we shall not easily find such another. He came among us to Hyde a stranger; but not long to remain such. His simplicity, his high-mindedness, his unselfishness, his utter guilelessness, the living interest he took in his work, his sympathy with the inmost wants and feelings of those whose good he sought, soon made him no stranger among us. Let the longing for better things which he fostered in them, and the affection he inspired in the hearts of the young men and women of the Gee Cross Sunday-school, and let their grief at his removal, speak for him. When he left us he chose what seemed to us (more worldly than himself) a day of small things, as when what equally seemed to us the day of greater things opened for his acceptance, and was worthy of him. But he sought no mere self-glory, and at Glossop again unceasingly he laboured, not for personal ambition, but for the nobler ambition that his work might be complete. And let his faithfulness there, let the completeness of his work there, Sunday, week day, and every day alike, let his people's sense of utter loss which refuses to believe another can take his place, let these speak for him. And we of this Association, to which he ungrudgingly gave hours of leisure which no one would have denied him for personal recreation, for needful rest, or for the music he so much loved, we, too, feel what we have lost by the death of him who added to its operations new usefulness and fresh zeal. We had looked to him to succeed one who had earned retirement by long and faithful service. He had indeed been found the one best fitted by a rare combination of business tact and enthusiastic earnestness, to carry on and inspire with renewed vigour its operations. We had looked forward with anticipations of hope—nay, of certainty—to its increased prosperity in his hands. But to this we can look forward no longer. His work among us is ended, and though his spirit and his memory still remain with us, our loss and our grief are more than we can say.

The Rev. P. M. HIGGINSON seconded the motion, remarking that nothing he could say would be so touching a tribute to Mr. Ashton's memory as that uttered by Mr. Reynolds. The motion was carried unanimously.

The Committee of the Manchester Unitarian Sunday School Union have forwarded a resolution of condolence to the widow of the late Rev. F. Ashton, M.A., and to Mr. Councillor Ashton, his father, on their great and sudden loss.

WOMEN AS STUDENTS.

Archbishop Trench informs us that the substance of his recently-published work, Mediæval Church History, was given some years ago in a course of lectures on Church History to a class of girls at Queen's College, London. Happy girls! Happy, especially, in having been addressed, years since, as the intellectual equals of the other sex. On this point the Archbishop says:

Bishop Blomfield, indeed, is reported to have excused a popular preacher, when some strong-thoughted lawyers complained that there was not sufficient body and resistance in his sermons; urging that he had preached so long to bonnets as to have forgotten there were brains. I cannot think the antithesis of bonnets and brains to be a just one. How far the wearers of bonnets would bear the strain of competition with those assumed to be in exclusive possession of brains, supposing the matter in hand to be one which demanded originitive power, on this I give no opinion; but having regard to receptive capacity, to the power of taking in, assimilating, and intelligently reproducing, what is set before them, my conviction after some experience in lecturing to the young of both sexes is, that there is no need to break the bread of knowledge smaller for young women than young men; and, save, as already indicated, I did not in the original preparation of these Lectures, nor yet have I in the later revision of them, because my class was, or was assumed to be, a female one, kept anything back that I should have thought desirable to set before young men of the same age and condition of life.

BIRMINGHAM: GOOD FRIDAY AT THE CHURCH OF THE MESSIAH.—An experiment has been tried during the last few years at the Church of the Messiah, Birmingham (Rev. H. W. Crosskey's), which has proved very successful. The service has been made an evening instead of a morning one, and begins at seven o'clock, so as to allow time for the return home from the excursions which are now the order of the day; while a connected and well-ordered selection of music appropriate to the occasion has been given by the choir in addition to the hymns in which the whole congregation join. On previous occasions the selection has been from "The Messiah;" on this last Good Friday it was taken from Haydn's "Passion" or "The seven last words of our Saviour on the Cross." A very large congregation assembled, and the order of service was as follows:—Voluntary hymn, Scripture lesson, selections from Haydn's "Passion," Scripture lesson, followed by another selection from the "Passion," hymn, sermon, then another selection from the "Passion," collect, hymn, and the benediction. So far from the fine rendering of the noble Passion music given by the choir having the effect of interfering with the congregational singing, it had a directly opposite result. It awakened a devotional spirit which caused the hymns to be sung with very great heartiness of feeling by the whole congregation. The discourse by Mr. Crosskey analysed the various passions which caused the demand for the crucifixion of Christ.

MANCHESTER DISTRICT SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION.

THE thirty-third annual meeting of this association, in consequence of the recent death of the Rev. T. E. Poynting, could not be held at Monton as previously arranged, and instead was held at Manchester. The weather in the early part of the day was not favourable, and the attendance at the service in Cross-street Chapel, though very considerable, was not so large as we have seen it when the gathering has been in Manchester before. It was, however, very encouraging, and we noticed present Mr. Edwin Winsor (retiring president), Messrs. Jesse Pilcher and John Reynolds (secretaries), and deputations from the following, viz.:—London Sunday School Association, Mr. I. M. Wade; West Riding, Mr. Joseph Wadsworth; North Midland Association, Rev. F. H. Jones, B.A.; Northern Sunday School Association (Belfast), Revs. J. C. Street and Thos. Leyland; also Revs. James Black, M.A., George Fox, E. W. Hopkinson, G. Hamilton Vance, B.D., J. B. Lloyd, H. S. Solly, M.A., Joseph Freeston, E. Turland, Chas. T. Poynting, B.A., N. Green, Silas Farrington, W. Harrison, T. Lloyd Jones, W. Rodger Smyth, Geo. Ride, R. Pilcher, B.A., John Russell, Thos. Jones, S. A. Steinthal, P. M. Higginson, M.A.; Messrs. Alderman Richard Harwood, S. B. Worthington, E. C. Harding, W. H. Herford, B.A., Jas. Harwood, G. W. Rayner Wood, C. C. Grundy, J. H. Reynolds, sen., Isaac Barrow, Carter Hollins, John Barrow, C. J. Herford, John Phillips, John Jackson, W. M. Rodger, John Chadwick, J. Kenyon, R. Stuart, D. Thompson, John Moore, E. Steinthal, E. B. Broadrick, Anthony Stafford, John A. Kelly, William Mason, Samuel Thompson, J. Redfern, J. N. Lawton, E. Lawton, J. Mellor, Luke Pollitt, N. Calvert, John Heys, — Williamson, Thomas Elgood, R. Wade, Henry Pearson, Councillor Bradshaw, J. Jones, Samuel Lawton, T. Crook, G. Cunliffe, T. Parry, T. Cook, J. Dornan, W. Milnes, W. Lord, and Dr. Marcus.

The Rev. Wm. Gaskell, M.A., had been announced to preach the sermon, but the Rev. S. A. STEINTHAL took his place, and stated that owing to Mr. Gaskell's indisposition it had been thought wise to ask him not to incur the risk of increasing his indisposition by coming out. Mr. Steinthal took for his text John xix., 16, 17, 18, "And they took Jesus and led him away. And he bearing his cross went forth into the place called the place of a skull, which is called in the Hebrew Golgotha, where they crucified him and two with him, on either side one and Jesus in the midst." While, he said, Unitarians could not regard Christ as God, they could recognise with all Christians the sacrifice he made in dying upon the cross to save men from their sins. They could also hold in high esteem such men as Howard and Captain Brown, the first because he laboured to raise the poor and forlorn, and to remove plague and pestilence from among men; and the second, because he offered himself a holocaust to set free the slave. It was a fitting thing for Sunday-school teachers to meet together on Good Friday, and to ask from God grace to be worthy disciples of Jesus Christ; for the true Sunday-school teacher had before him the object of raising in children a longing for a holy life, and of pointing the way to the kingdom of God. If the work of a Sunday school is to be done there must be something of a Christ-like spirit in the mind of the teachers or the work could not be done. He urged upon all, especially those who had the richest blessings of life, to take up the work—and to have the courage of true discipleship—and to give their little sacrifice for the children, and not to allow themselves to be discouraged by any seeming failure. Let them remember that Christ's greatest triumph was when his life seemed to be a failure. He urged, therefore, all to take to heart the lesson of the day, and give themselves a sacrifice for the good of others. It would comfort and strengthen them to meet the trials that might come to them.

At the close of the service an offertory was taken in aid of the publishing fund, when £17.8s. 6d. was realised. This, we understand, reduces the debt to about £14.

Dinner was provided in the Lower Mosley-street schools, and about 360 persons sat down to it.

THE BUSINESS MEETING

was held at two o'clock in the Memorial Hall, when Mr. EDWIN WINSOR, the retiring president, occupied the chair. A hymn having been sung,

THE CHAIRMAN, in his opening address, made reference to the loss sustained by the Association in the death of the Rev. T. E. Poynting, and also to the sudden death of the Rev. F. Ashton, who, though so young, had, he said, in countless ways shown his sympathy with everything connected with Sunday schools and Sunday-school work. He then asked, Are our Sunday schools to be continued? To some of us, he said, who have been brought up to Sunday-school work from our youth, this may be a startling question, and an impulsive reply will at once rise to our lips—Why! who ever dreamed of doing away with our Sunday schools? Twelve months ago Mr. J. T. Hibbert, member for Oldham, said:—"As they all knew, Sunday schools were not established at first for the same purpose as they existed now. They were established in part for the purpose of giving religious instruction, but their main purpose was to teach the children to read and write. Those times had fortunately passed away. The law now declared that no child should remain uneducated in this country. That being the case, the children who came to the Sunday schools were better prepared; they would not have to teach them to read, but they would come ready to benefit at once by the instruction that was given to them. But, still the responsibility with those who carried on the work would be greater than ever—(hear)—for as the children would come into their hands better prepared, so the teachers would have to be better prepared to instruct them. His experience was that if a thing was worth doing at all it was worth doing well, and he was sure that all the teachers present would agree with him in saying that unless they tried to carry out their work of teaching well they would not succeed in their work." He considered that our Sunday schools were worth continuing, and I think most of us will agree with him, for as Liberal Christians we rejoice that catechisms are not introduced into our Board schools, and that the schoolmaster is not called upon to be the teacher of theology whether of conformity or non-conformity, and we shall no doubt be agreed in opinion that there is consequently greater need than ever for our Sunday schools; but we must not shut our eyes to the fact that the Sunday-school teaching of the present and the future must be essentially religious—(hear, hear)—and what I mean by religious I shall explain presently. It is also necessary that the teacher be better equipped than in the past, and that is one reason why we must face this question of the continuance of our Sunday schools. If they are to be continued, who are to be the teachers? The soil on which teachers have to work is now quickened and prepared, we have intelligence and knowledge, and for a teacher to be of real value to the scholar, the idea of teacher and scholar, I venture to think, must be done away with, and not only the name, but the feeling of friends, must be substituted. The Sunday school should be essentially the place in which the great principles of religion should be, I will not say taught, but imparted to the scholars. We have to do, not the work of the day school teacher, but to supplement that work, and to supplement it in such a manner that all the teaching given in our schools on a Sunday shall tend to one end, and this is what I mean by religious teaching, viz., the endeavour to raise the aspirations and lives of the scholars towards God, and to fill their hearts with something of His spirit. We have no theological formula, no catechism which embodies our faith, but I take it we have all faith in God, goodness, and self-denial, and therefore we have something to teach if we are inclined to be teachers; but notwithstanding all this, we are compelled to inquire if we have the material for the altered condition of our Sunday-school work. This is a question which cannot be answered off-hand. We have a large amount of energy and good intention among our teachers at the present time, and I never attend these meetings without being impressed by the enthusiasm and untiring perseverance displayed by those who year after year come up to these annual gatherings to find refreshment and vigour from the sympathy of cheerful faces, and to gather encouragement from the words of wisdom often spoken by those who have had great experience in life. But the difficulty that lies before us is given expression to by those who say: "We do not feel ourselves qualified to carry on the work of the Sunday school under its altered conditions." Some say they have not time to acquire the increased knowledge necessary for the work; others feel that their scholars know more on many subjects than they themselves do, and are therefore disheartened; while others are frightened at the idea of teaching anything religious; and I fear those teachers who have these feelings and give expression to them will be a considerable number, while there are doubtless many who have the same feelings, but who do not give expression to them, and that brings us face to face again with the question. If we are losing some, and are likely to lose more of our teachers, from what section of our congregations are we to recruit our numbers? The most ready workers are not always those who have the qualifications for teaching; many have not been blessed with culture, leisure, comfortable competency, and the power of imparting to others the knowledge they possess. We might in this case say, Oh, there is no difficulty, those who have education, leisure, and who have had more experience in life, must come and help us, and take part in the school work. But we cannot compel them to come, and if we could we would not. We can only make known our necessities, and trust there will be a willingness on the part of those to whom we appeal to come out and help us; we will gladly welcome all the sympathy we can get, and all the help, more particularly if that help is efficient, for, as our report shows us, we have at the present time, and with our staff of teachers not at all reduced [by the feeling of incompetency, 137 classes each Sunday morning and 78 classes each Sunday afternoon without any teachers at all. We must therefore take our choice either to leave our work inefficiently done, or in some cases not done at all; or to obtain an increased number of teachers, or reduce our number of scholars. Individually I have an impression that Sunday teaching will be reduced to once a day, and that once a day well done will be better than twice inefficiently done; and I am still more convinced that this must be so if we are to adopt the standard of teaching foreshadowed by Mr. Dowson in his noble paper published in last week's Herald. If we can find a sufficient number of such teachers as Mr. Dowson desires, the question will no longer have to be asked, shall our Sunday schools be continued? It rests however with the living men and women of the present to prove whether they themselves are equal to the occasion. If they are, happy will it be for our schools and humanity. All we can say is "The harvest truly is plenteous but the labourers are few." (Applause.)

THE CHAIRMAN then moved the adoption of the reports.

Mr. JESSE PILCHER seconded the motion, and briefly alluded to the examination that had just taken place. He stated that 480 pupils from 15 schools in the Association entered for the first examination of Sunday schools at the beginning of the present month. Three hundred and forty of the pupils who entered sent in papers. Many of these latter were still in the hands of the examiners, who had not completed their reports; but so far as it had been possible to go into the papers, it had been found that they were extremely satisfactory. Many of the answers showed great excellence, and testified to the thorough way in which the pupils had been taught.—(Applause.)

The reports were adopted.

A vote of thanks was passed to the Rev. S. A. Steinthal for his sermon preached in Cross-street Chapel in the morning.—In reply, Mr. STEINTHAL mentioned that this summer the Rev. W. Gaskell would see the fiftieth anniversary of his work in this district.

On the motion of the CHAIRMAN, seconded by Mr. ISAAC BARROW, a vote of thanks was passed to the retiring officers; and,

On the motion of the CHAIRMAN also, seconded by the Rev. J. FREESTON, the meeting offered a cordial welcome to the representatives present from kindred associations. Mr. Freeston bore his testimony to services which the London Association had rendered to their schools by the good books recently issued.

Mr. WADE, in reply, said the death of Mr. Poynting, and, just now, that of Mr. Ashton, seemed to put them under a pall. He thought they must do as did an army. When they lost their comrades they closed up their ranks and went on again. Mr. Wade then recommended the teachers each to possess themselves of a copy of Mr. Brooke Herford's book, "The Story of Religion in England," and of Mr. Clodd's "Childhood of Religion," and then he drew a statistical contrast. Twenty years ago the Association had about 20 less teachers, but an average attendance of 84 more than now, though they had seven more schools. Twenty years ago they had 1,000 less scholars, but an average attendance of 103 more. He wished to know if they were satisfied with such a result. He certainly was not. He was rejoiced to see them taking the lead in the examination scheme. He held that it was impossible to have such examinations without all being benefited by them. They were a splendid advance, and ensured thorough-going teaching, which was much better than the plan, now mostly followed, of reading stories for a class. He closed by saying that he very much liked Mr. Hoppood's "Belief" for children, and meant to teach it, though he should risk objections from Mr. Street.

The Rev. F. H. Jones followed, and after stating that he was on his way to Oldham as his new place of settlement, said that as representing the North Midland he would urge that the way and the spirit in which their work was done was the true measure of it, and in that sense they had not failed in the North Midland schools.

The Rev. J. C. STREET drew attention to the marked distinction between Sunday Schools in Ireland and England. In Ireland they were simply Congregational. As to Mr. Wade's intention to teach a creed—well, so be it. Meanwhile, he should hope they would respect the nature which God had given to little children, and refused to bind them down to any creed. (Hear, hear.)

Mr. JOSEPH WADSWORTH said he was glad to be present, and suggested the possibility of getting a number of people together who would guarantee to fill up the places of absent teachers. (Hear, hear.)

A vote of thanks to the Lower Mosley-street friends for their hospitality, to which the Rev. S. A. STEINTHAL responded, brought the business to an end. After tea was held in the Memorial Hall, the Rev. S. A. Steinthal in the chair. The hall was well filled.

THE EVENING MEETING

THE CHAIRMAN opened the meeting by giving a hearty and cordial greeting to all friends present, and said what a privilege he felt it to be, to be able to look round and see so many persons whom he was conscious were engaged in self-denying labours in the Sunday school for the good of others. Remarkable on the question raised by Mr. Winsor in the afternoon, "Are our Sunday schools to be continued?" he said those who had the work in hand seemed never to doubt as to their usefulness. (Hear, hear.) It was true that the intellectual work of olden times will in the future not be necessary; but while it might happen now and then that teachers might have to draw in their horns because the scholars were in advance of them, it should be remembered that the chief work of Sunday schools is moral and spiritual. He hoped that it might be found possible to combine systematic instruction with the development of moral and spiritual life in the Sunday school. (Hear, hear.)

Mr. GEORGE CUNLIFFE, of Bolton, then read the following paper on

OUR ELDER CLASSES AND THEIR TEACHERS.

He said: When secular instruction was difficult of attainment by large numbers of our population, our Sunday schools did a work which might be said to be complete in teaching scholars of any age, and in imparting such elementary knowledge as might assist them in the labours of their after life.

Now, however, that secular instruction has become universal throughout the length and breadth of the land, our schools have necessarily and very properly changed their character, and I think all present will agree with me in saying that if the scholars leave our schools just about the time when they are arriving at maturity and are becoming capable of doing useful service, and instead of joining the ranks of our churches, and taking their place in the army of men and women who have a definite and clearly understood religious work to do in the world, are found to drift away from us into all sorts of devious paths not leading distinctly anywhere,—then, I say, under such circumstances, we shall all agree that our work is very incompletely performed; the true purpose of our Sunday schools is not fulfilled, and our labours, if not altogether in vain, fail, at any rate, in realising their proper result.

The question of the conduct of our elder or adult classes is, then, one of vital importance. Do not let me be misunderstood. I do not wish to indicate that, in my opinion, it is more important than other sections of our Sunday school work, but the changes which have taken place of late years have brought this section into greater prominence, and shown us the necessity of more adequately providing for it than I think was the case formerly. The majority of the members of these classes are at a most critical period of life. Perhaps without having entirely thrown aside all parental control, they have yet begun to assume the right of individual choice and responsibility as regards the future; and it depends very much upon the influences by which they are at this period surrounded whether the future be productive of good or evil.

As my experience for a considerable number of years past has been entirely in this department, I trust I need make no apology for introducing it for consideration to-day.

In our schools at Bank-street, Bolton, we have 308 scholars on the books, and of these 130, or 42 per cent, are above 16 years of age. Here, then, we have the raw material, and splendid material it is, I can assure you—diamonds in the rough, without a doubt, in many cases, but precious for all that, and showing underneath the surface such innate worth and glorious possibilities of lustre and refinement, enough to make one pray most fervently for some portion of our great Master's power, some spark of His divine genius to light up their hidden fires, and cause them to shine out with all the brightness of which God has made them capable.

We have no doubt of the value of the material upon which we are called to work. The notions which possess some minds about the utter worthlessness of unregenerate human nature are foreign to us. The only uncertainty we feel is as to the adequacy of the means we employ to secure the end we have in view.

This end and aim we can also without much difficulty make clear to our own minds. We do not enter upon our work tied down ourselves to the letter of a creed, or hampered by the articles of a doctrinal theology; nor do we seek to bind any such fetters upon those under our influence. Our desire is to win them over, so that they may willingly enrol themselves subjects in that realm where alone true freedom is to be found, that they may in time enjoy that glorious liberty which can be obtained by none but the true sons of God. We wish to train up minds capable of independent thought, loving truth for truth's sake, and resolutely determined to think out the problems of life for themselves as far as time and opportunity will allow, at the same time holding in due respect the opinions of others; but above all we want to establish the characters of our scholars on a firm basis of self-respect, of reverence for the laws of God, and of full and ever-abiding consciousness of the tremendous obligations resting upon us as beings responsible for the right use of the talents entrusted to us.

"Character," it has been well said, "is the substance and end of personal salvation." "Intellectual atheism or unbelief are evils of magnitude, but they sink into trifles when compared with doubts of the obligations of personal duty and honour, indifference to, or the denial of, the binding nature of moral law."

Now, in order to accomplish this, the teacher must try to understand the peculiar wants, weaknesses, and difficulties of his scholars. He must not come before them as a lecturer standing on a higher platform, breathing a purer atmosphere, and only condescending to come down a little nearer to their level once a week for their special edification. I feel convinced that the more he can identify himself with the scholars, having similar interests, working with them, learning with them, and standing shoulder to shoulder with them in one common desire for, and effort to attain to, a higher and nobler life, the more effectual and permanent will be his influence for good. If any special branch of science engage his leisure hours, let it also be considered in his class; if the political world be agitated by any particular subject let it be discussed, bring it to the notice of the scholars, and make them acquainted with the passing events in the life of our own church both at home and abroad. Let the books used in the teacher's private reading, either for study or pleasure, be laid under contribution for the benefit of his scholars; in fact, let it be borne in mind throughout the week that on the Sunday he has to meet his "Friends in Council" (to use a phrase most appropriately employed by Mr. Grundy a couple of years ago), and he will never fail through want of a subject or through lack of interest in his scholars. I have often heard the question of class books discussed, but, to my thinking, no association can do more than assist in this matter. It is absolutely necessary that the teacher should feel a deep interest in the subject taught, and this should be his guide. Those who teach the elder classes have a very wide field open to them. The difficulty is not in finding materials, but in making a wise choice. Nothing but good can come from the study of the works of Longfellow and Tennyson, of Thackeray and Dickens, and from readings such novels as "John Halifax" and "Middlemarch"; history and biography are inexhaustible fields. Some of Charles Kingsley's papers, treating of science in a most familiar and easy style, have been very useful to me. Tyndall on "The Forms of Water," is an excellent book, and reminds me of one good result which will follow the mode of action which I suggest. Books are introduced to the notice of the scholars which they would otherwise probably never see, and their interest is so far awakened that a many of them buy the books for themselves, and so they get into the family circle. I have noticed this most particularly during the last winter. We have been studying in a continuous series of lessons Mrs. Buckton's "Health in the House." Some of the scholars have recently attended an examination on the subject, and though I don't anticipate great things from the examination, I am satisfied with the result of the introduction of this subject. From 20 to 30 copies of the book have been bought. These I know have been carefully read at home in many cases, and some good must of necessity ensue. Political Economy was also found an attractive subject during the last winter. And now, I would ask, to whom can the Bible be more useful than to teachers in a Unitarian Sunday School? And here I am reminded of, and may be permitted to express my own deep sense of, the loss which we have all sustained in the death of Mr. Elford Poynting. He has laid me under lasting obligations to him. Guided by his inspiration and trained under the leadership of such as he, we are sure to find the Bible of inestimable value. The "Teachers' Manual" contained a good many things, but if it had published nothing more than Mr. Wicksteed's "History of Israel" and Mr. Poynting's "Life of Christ" it would have been worth far more than all its cost. In the "History of Israel" we trace the emancipation of a community of slaves and their development by slow and painful steps into an influential, if not a great nation. Perhaps the most important, most potent element in this process was their religion. Prompted by it they were led to pursue a policy of isolation; and this very isolation, this complete separation of themselves from all the surrounding nations, this dedication of themselves to one particular purpose, lent fire and energy to the acts and sayings of their public men, gave vitality and power to their national life, and makes the study of their history specially interesting to us. They felt themselves to be custodians, in the midst of a world of idolaters, of the faith in the one Jehovah. This was their special work, and with it we, who stand to-day as the upholders of the faith in the unity of God, can most thoroughly sympathise.

This work and worship was carried forward by patriots and prophets through many difficulties and national shortcomings, and with varying degrees of religious earnestness and purity of motive, until the time of Christ, who took it out of the hands of priests and lawyers by whom it had come to be much too exclusively appropriated, and tried to make it a matter of personal concern to every individual.

He was no advocate of a state-paid clergy and a formal ritual, by means of which a nation's religious duty was to be performed for it, as it were, vicariously. His great work was to fulfil for himself and to teach and persuade others to fulfil for themselves, all the duties and obligations resting upon them as members of the great human family and children of the one God. This animating purpose, this vivifying spirit, is what we should seek to obtain for ourselves and impart to others. It is in this sense only that we can truly learn Christ. What was the root principle of His life, and was it a good and noble one? Did He consistently adhere to it, and by so doing make his life good and noble too? Upon the answers we can give to these questions it depends whether or not we can find the Life of Christ valuable to us. It is only when we are thoroughly convinced that the answers are satisfactory that we can, in this age, ask men to become Christians. People are continually calling themselves by that name because they profess a belief in Christ, but the truth is, they have no real claim to it until they have learned and fully accepted as the guide of their lives the faith of Christ.

In teaching this life it is very desirable that we should not assume more than the historical narratives and our own reasoning will warrant. We are apt to trade a little too much upon our inherited ideas. For instance, one often hears the phrase "the sinless Jesus." I confess I do not like it. I know it is written that he was tempted, like ourselves, and yet without sin; but the passage is often read or spoken of in such a manner as to convey an unnecessary assumption and to lead to the inference that he made no mistakes intellectually or morally. There is no reason why such an inference should be conveyed. My own opinion is, that it was with him as it ought to be with us, his ideas advanced with his age, he profited by experience, and recognising this he declined to allow the fermentary wine of his new thought to be shut up in the dry, unelastic leathern bottles which had served the purpose of a past age. The reformation which overturned the doctrine of an infallible Church will not be complete until it has done away with the idea not only of an infallible book, but of an infallible Jesus. Not until then will the full strength of his character be known, and the full benefit of his example be realised. Eighteen centuries have passed away, and the world has only learnt the alphabet of his gospel. Let us try to get a little further, endeavour to understand the principles he taught, and by which he lived, and to make them really operative in the society around us to-day. By so doing, we shall do more honour to his name than by any amount of lip-service, and at the same time be helping on the best interests of humanity.

Jesus! there is no fairer name than thine

Which time has blazoned on his mighty scroll;
No wreaths or garlands ever did entwine

So fair a temple of so vast a soul.

Once on the earth wert thou, before men's eyes,

Who did not half thy beauteous brightness see;

E'en as the emmet does not read the skies,

Nor our weak orbs look thro' immensity.

Once on the earth wert thou, a living shrine,
Wherein conjoining dwelt the good, the lovely, the divine.

If the purpose we have in view in getting together a number of young men and women to meet us Sunday by Sunday has been correctly stated, the teacher ought in preparing himself for his work to keep this purpose clearly and constantly before him. He is not to be expected to teach history, for instance, so that his scholars shall be able to answer questions on the subject in the manner that may reasonably be expected to result from continuous day-school or college training, but so that lessons may be learned from the facts and experiences of past times which shall help them in their conduct as citizens to-day—lessons to show that God's government of the world may be seen through the mists and obscurity in which men often seek to hide the motives of their actions, and that He is able to make seeming evil result in permanent good, and to bring his own wise purposes to pass

"That more and more a Providence

Of Love is understood;

Making the springs of time and sense

Sweet with eternal good."

So with astronomy, geography, geology, or any branch of science. By all means let him teach it as thoroughly as possible, but always so as to awaken the soul of the scholar, and to deepen his consciousness of the Almighty Power and Infinite Wisdom and Love of God.

The passion so prevalent just now of testing the result of everything by competitive examinations is not an unmixed good. Some people are already beginning to doubt their value, even when applied to day school work, and I fear, if pressed too eagerly in connection with our Sunday schools, that harm will result.

How many of our teachers can afford the time for such a preparation of lessons as is necessary to secure a satisfactory result at our examination? I fear, very few. Unfortunately, many, if not most, of our teachers in the Sunday school are not blessed with much leisure on the week-days, and if the preparatory work be made too heavy the number of our staff will inevitably be reduced. Besides, preparation of facts, the knowledge of which can be tested, is not of itself sufficient to secure the desired result. I do not know how my experience agrees with others, but one thing I can testify—that, though I have always felt the absolute necessity of being properly prepared with a lesson before meeting my class, I have often been induced by some unexpected circumstance to take up a totally different subject, and have almost invariably found the change to result in what approved itself to my mind as more genuine Sunday school work than I could have expected to have realised from the thoroughly prepared lesson. Then again, consideration for our scholars should make us cautious how we press this matter. Our elder classes are not formed by a selection of those who can pass a certain standard. No one would venture, I think, to make it necessary that a competitive examination should be passed before admission to them is secured. It is a fact of much value, in a religious point of view, that in them, one finds great differences of mental qualifications, intellectual attainments, and even of social position. Now, these differences are, I know, often most considerably and tenderly suppressed, and are the very means of bringing out much kindly sympathy and mutual helpfulness; but the tendency of examinations would not be in this direction. If made an important feature of Sunday-school work I fear the result would be detrimental to the constitution of our elder classes, whatever might be its effect upon the juniors. I have known many scholars whose attendance and co-operation I have valued highly, but who, I feel sure, would never have remained in the class if attendance at examinations had been considered of much consequence.

I do not wish to undervalue examinations. They form the remedy, naturally suggesting itself to the minds of the more energetic and systematising spirits among our leaders, for the slipshod, desultory teaching so prevalent in our schools, but we must be careful not to pursue the remedy so far as to make it as bad as the disease.

Let the quality of our teaching be improved by all means; let us strive after accuracy of knowledge as much as possible, but let us not forget that it is our duty, prudently, to be all things to all men, so that our schools may be wide open to receive members, either as teachers or scholars, from all ranks and conditions, that the great work done therein be to make strong men and women well furnished with resources within themselves to enable them to resist temptation to evil surrounding them in such vast abundance, conscious of the greatness of their own nature and power, cognisant of their relationship to God as his children, and recognising in Jesus Christ a hopeful leader and guide.

NEWS OF OUR CHURCHES.

Only by so doing can we hope to succeed in making our Sunday schools the nursery of our Church—of a Church worthy to exist because of its usefulness to society, and because of the good work it is continually doing to aid the advancement of God's kingdom upon earth.

We must ever remember, as Dr. Martineau has told us, "that religion is, after all, beyond the range of mere tuition. It is not a mere didactic thing, that words can give and silence can withhold. It is a spirit—a life; an aspiration; a contagious glory from soul to soul; a spontaneous union with God. Our inward unfaithfulness is sure to extinguish it; our outward policy cannot produce it. To live and so do the holy will is the ultimate way not only to know the truth, but to lead others to know it too."

Mr. I. M. WADE thanked Mr. Cunliffe for his appropriate and outspoken paper, and while he did not doubt that every one who had spoken that night would draw a religious lesson from any subject, yet he doubted the general run of teachers doing so from Dickens or Thackeray.

The Rev. J. FREESTON said it very much depended on the way things were done in the Sunday school as to what the result would be. The idea to be drawn out in the mind of scholars when science was taught was that the various manifestations of natural law were but the expressions of the will of God.

Dr. MARCUS gave a narrative of the difficulties he had experienced with his class in Lower Mosley-street Schools. He did not suppose he had one in it that was not of age, and the material he had to deal with was of the very best kind. It had happened that one who had an aptitude for scientific study would ask questions of a technical nature which even he could not answer. But in such cases he never concealed his ignorance; often he would refer to such a one for information, and the esprit de corps was thus kept good. The great secret of successful Sunday school teaching was that the teacher should make his pupils feel that he was one with them; that he had their interest earnestly at heart; that he felt for their doubts and difficulties, and was anxious to help them in every possible way.

The Rev. N. GREEN said a few words, and then Mr. CUNLIFFE briefly replied, urging that while he had incidentally mentioned the works of Dickens and Thackeray, he had specially named the Bible as the best book for religious purposes.

Mr. JOHN REYNOLDS next read a paper on

WEEK EVENING AMUSEMENTS FOR SUNDAY SCHOLARS.

Having pointed out the want of means of innocent amusement in rural districts and small towns, and the inducements of music halls and so forth in the larger towns, Mr. Reynolds asked whether it was any wonder that in face of this the work of the teacher on Sunday was so often counteracted and undone during the week. He urged that rooms should be thrown open in connection with schools for the use of scholars, that newspapers, magazines, illustrated papers, and so forth, should be supplied; that the walls of these rooms should be adorned with pictures; that such games as were not thought improper in their own homes should be allowed; and that draughts, chess, cards, and, if possible, a bagatelle board or miniature billiard table, should be provided. Such a scheme was already in actual work. For summer recreation, let them encourage outdoor games. The females might be induced to join singing-classes, and there might also be occasional rambles in the country, social gatherings (at which he would like to see dancing take the place of certain rough games which were now indulged in), and a reading and dramatic class. Without good management the whole thing might do more harm than good, and in any such undertaking prudence, patience, and energy would be required.

In the discussion which followed Messrs. W. Lord, Cuthbert C. Grundy, and Rev. F. H. Jones took part, and

Mr. W. LORD moved, and Mr. J. H. REYNOLDS, sen., seconded, a motion to the effect that the Conference was of opinion that the question of providing suitable amusements for scholars was of such importance as to justify the committee of the association in considering the best means of rousing the different schools to take some action in the matter, and that it should be a recommendation to the committee to consider the subject.

The resolution was adopted.

It was then moved by Rev. JOSEPH FREESTON, and seconded by Rev. WM. HARRISON: "That this meeting receives with very deep regret the resignation of Mr. Jesse Pilcher as secretary; and desires to express and record its high appreciation of and sincere gratitude for his long-continued and valuable services to the Association."—To this resolution Mr. PILCHER, in words expressive of considerable depth of feeling, replied; and also thanked the meeting for the honour they had done him in appointing him president of the Association for the next year.

The meeting concluded with a vote of thanks to the Chairman.

NOTICE.—Our friends would oblige if they would kindly send their news paragraphs so as to arrive never later than Wednesday morning, otherwise we are compelled to cut them down.

BRADFORD: CHAPEL LANE CHAPEL.—On Monday evening last the members of the Sewing Society invited Mr. and Mrs. Knapton to tea in the schoolroom, and after tea, Mrs. Thomas, the president, in presenting a very elegant silver épergne accompanied by an illuminated card beautifully executed by Mr. J. H. Pickles, said:—"It is with sincere pleasure and good wishes that we, the ladies of the Sewing Society, present this token of our good will towards you on the occasion of your marriage; hoping you will live long and happily to enjoy it." Mr. Knapton acknowledged the receipt of the present in a few appropriate words, briefly referred to the great interest that is pretty generally being taken in religious questions at the present time, and incidentally mentioned that his own views had undergone considerable modification within the last year or two. He had not "progressed" or "advanced," whatever those words might mean, but had become, in a sense more conservative, being more and more deeply impressed by the unique beauty and spiritual power of the religion of Jesus Christ; and at the same time there had been growing up in his mind, as the result of patient investigation and some little thought, a new sense of the authority of Scripture. In alluding to the Leicester conference, Mr. Knapton said that a church built upon sentiment cannot live; that a belief that cannot be put in a creed is not clearly understood, or that which people shrink from formulating is not by them tenaciously held, i.e., has not won the consent of all their faculties; and that latitudinarianism legitimately leads to agnosticism, and that agnosticism is but atheism spelt in another way.

BIRMINGHAM: HURST-STREET DOMESTIC MISSION. The following is a brief report of meetings held during the present month:—On April 1st the annual business meeting of the congregation was held in the evening, when a coffee supper was provided, and the usual business of reading the financial report, electing the committee, secretary, treasurer, &c., for the ensuing year, was transacted. The Rev. B. Wright presided, and there was a good attendance of the members. The treasurer's report stated that the receipts from the quarterly subscriptions, and the weekly offering, were slightly less than the previous year, owing to the badness of trade, but the committee had been able to vote the sum of £37 10s. to the mission fund, being equal to the largest ever given, after paying the expenses of the choir, which amounted to £10 12s. 6d., and the usual incidentals. After the business was over, the chairman presented to the congregation, on behalf of Mr. Earl, the respected secretary of the mission, a full size photographic portrait of himself as a memento of his thirty-nine years' connection with, and labours for the mission. A hearty vote of thanks to the minister and Mrs. Wright brought the meeting to a close. On the 8th inst., the annual meeting of the Band of Hope was held, when an excellent entertainment was given on behalf of the Sunday School prize fund. The Rev. B. Wright presided, and there were nearly 300 people present. On the 15th inst., a very successful concert took place in connection with the Hurst-street Cricket Club, at which Mr. Councillor R. F. Martineau presided. There were present about 350 people. On Easter Sunday afternoon the annual prize distribution took place in connection with the Sunday Schools, when every part of the chapel was filled with the scholars, their parents and friends. The number of prizes given was 115, at an average cost of about sixteen pence. Sixteen special prizes were awarded to eight boys and eight girls, who had not been absent or late once during the year. Seventeen others had made the full number of attendances, and had been late only once each. Forty-eight certificates of merit were given with first class prizes to as many scholars who had made 100 early marks. No prize was awarded for less than 85 early marks. Six young men and five young women, who had ceased to be scholars and had become teachers during the year, received each a prize of honour. All these young people were connected with the congregation, and some of them members of the choir. The prizes were awarded by the Rev. B. Wright, assisted by Mr. Councillor R. D. Kneebone.

DERBY: FRIARGATE CHAPEL.—During the months of March and April a course of five theological lectures has been delivered in the Friargate Chapel; four by the resident minister, Rev. C. D. Badland, M.A., and one, on the subject "Is Jesus Christ God?" by Rev. Dendy Agate, B.A. The subjects of the other lectures were—"What is Unitarianism?" "Hell: Is it Eternal?" "What is the Bible?" and "Orthodoxy, Secularism, and Unitarianism." There was a good attendance of strangers at all the lectures; and in particular the lecture on Eternal Punishment attracted a larger congregation than has been assembled in the chapel for some years.

LIVERPOOL: HAMILTON ROAD CHURCH.—On Wednesday evening, the members of the Social Union in connection with this church held a soiree to close the season. There was a large attendance. After tea, the chair was taken by the Rev. S. Fletcher Williams, and there followed a literary entertainment to which Messrs. J. D. Sutcliffe, J. A. Green, P. J. Chatham, H. J. Charlton, J. Wilde, J. Chesworth, and Ernest Jones contributed, musical selections on the pianoforte being given at intervals. During the evening the Chairman gave a sketch of "Hugh Miller: the Student of Nature and the Man." The evening was pleasantly spent. In the session just closed, papers have been read on a variety of subjects by Messrs. J. Birkett, G. Menzies, H. J. Charlton, A. Kennedy, J. Wilde, J. Chesworth, W. Yates, T. Milner, H. J. Tait, E. Jones, J. Smith, A. J. Green, J. Sutcliffe, T. Stevens, and Mr. Williams. The meetings have afforded an excellent opportunity for members of the church to meet each other for intellectual and social intercourse.

LIVERPOOL: REQUESTS TO THE MISSION SOCIETIES.—Under the will of the late Mrs. Margaret Harvey, of Holmfield, Aigburth, widow of the late Mr. Robert Ellison Harvey, of Walton Priory, the Liverpool Domestic Mission, Beaufort-street (Rev. J. Shannon), and the North-end Mission Society, Bond-street (Rev. H. W. Hawkes), received a bequest of £500 each.

LONDON: FREE CHRISTIAN CHURCH, KENTISH TOWN.—On Sunday, April 14, the quarterly children's service was held in the church, the communion table of which had been prettily decked out with spring flowers by the scholars and teachers, above them being placed a text suitable to the occasion. After the evening service the flowers were taken to two of the local hospitals. The service was conducted by Mr. I. M. Wade, and his address to the young folks was one to be remembered, as it was given in plain, easy language, so as to be understood by all. The chief topics touched upon were the many lessons to be learned from the flowers, illustrated with several touching and beautiful anecdotes of the uses to which flowers can be put, and the temptations that all boys and girls have to fight against in their daily lives, setting forth the example of Jesus Christ as the one to be followed through life. The service was most hearty in all respects, the various hymns being given with force and vigour by the large congregation of children, parents, and friends (including some eighty or ninety scholars and teachers from the Hampstead and Hackney schools, to whom a cordial welcome was given) that nearly filled the church. In conclusion, the hymns, "O, Christian, awake," and "I love to tell the story," were sung with much heartiness, thus bringing this pleasant gathering to a close.

LANCASTER.—On Good Friday, the St. Nicholas-street congregation had the pleasure of meeting some of their friends belonging to the Preston congregation, about forty of whom visited Lancaster. Morning service was conducted in the chapel by the Rev. D. Davis, B.A. The afternoon was passed in visiting places of interest in the town and neighbourhood, and then about eighty members of the two congregations took tea together in the schoolroom. After tea a meeting was held, when various speeches were made, expressive of the good feeling existing between the two congregations, and of hopes that this might continue and increase. Some amusing readings were also given, and glees and anthems sung. The day was fortunately fine, and seemed to be enjoyed by all present, the hope being frequently expressed that many such opportunities of social intercourse between the two congregations might occur.

MOSSLEY.—The annual sermons in connection with the Sunday school of the Free Christian Church were preached on Sunday last, April 21; in the morning by the Rev. W. G. Cadman of Miles Platting, and in the afternoon and evening by the Rev. S. A. Steinhil of Cross-street Chapel, Manchester. The collections amounted to £58. 12s.

MIDDLETON.—We have been somewhat busy in our congregation of late. On April 10th we had a sale of work in the Commissioners' Rooms, under the management of a committee of ladies. The attendance was good, and the sales, with the addition of a few donations, realised about £50. On April 13th we had our annual congregational tea meeting, at which about eighty members and friends were present. There was not much speech making, indeed, we did not come together for that purpose, but we spent none the less an exceedingly pleasant evening. On Sunday afternoon last we had a teachers' tea meeting and conference, at which good work was done for the management of the school, and also in deepening the interest of the teachers in their work.

PROPAGANDIST LECTURING.—The Rev. John Fraser, of Doncaster, has, under the auspices of the West Riding Unitarian Mission, just concluded a course of doctrinal lectures. On Tuesday evening, the 2nd inst., he lectured at Pepper Hill; subject, "How I became and why I remain a Unitarian." The audience was very good, and a most favourable impression was made. Mr. Reuben Wood presided. At Keighley, on the following evening, the 3rd inst., Mr. Fraser delivered the same lecture. About sixty people were present, and the frequent and hearty applause with which several points of the lecture were received was very encouraging. At the close a vote of thanks was moved by Dr. Simpson, who, though not a Unitarian, expressed the great pleasure he had received in being present. At Hunslet, Leeds, on Monday evening, the 8th inst., Mr. Fraser lectured on "The Deity of Christ." Darnton Lupton, Esq., presided. Though the lecture was somewhat long, the most intense attention was paid by the audience throughout. At the close a number of questions were put, which were answered—as one of the questioners remarked—"very satisfactorily." A vote of thanks to the lecturer and the chairman brought the proceedings to a close. At Pepper Hill, on the following evening, the same lecture was delivered. There was a larger attendance than on the 2nd inst. Mr. E. Lee presided, and again the lecture was well received. On the 10th inst. Mr. Fraser lectured on the same subject at Keighley; Dr. Spencer in the chair. At the close a number of questions were put; and nearly every answer was received with applause, and votes of thanks were cordially passed. On Monday, the 15th instant, Mr. Fraser again lectured at Hunslet, Leeds. George Buckton, Esq., presided. The audience was a good deal larger than on the former occasion. After the lecture, some discussion took place, and then from the chair Mr. Buckton expressed his gratitude to Mr. Fraser for his very able lecture. On the 16th the same lecture was delivered at Keighley to a good and attentive audience. At the close a somewhat desultory discussion took place. Before the lecturer left, a number of those who had attended expressed their gratitude for the three lectures they had heard, and trusted that Mr. Fraser would have something to say to them again at no distant date. This short course of lectures has been distasteful, with not only the hope, but the belief on the part of many, that much good has been wrought thereby.

SAFFRON WALDEN.—On Good Friday our annual meeting was held. It is upwards of forty years ago since this gathering was inaugurated by the Rev. John Marten. About 100 persons sat down to tea at five o'clock. The public meeting commenced at seven p.m., when the chapel committee's report was read. It embraced all the events of the past year, called attention to the work which had been done, repairs effected in the building, gave an account of all the moneys gathered and disbursed, social gatherings held, special sermons delivered; it reviewed the past and the present, and excited hopes for the future with steady, earnest, devoted work. This report was spoken to by the deacon and acting trustee, and the pastor. Addresses were delivered by the Revs. John Marten, of London, J. A. Brinkworth, Messrs. Hales, Great Chesterford, Hockley, of Walden, Congregationalist. Two recitations were given. E. Brinkworth sang as a solo Tennyson's words "Break! break! break!" The choir sang a selection of pieces specially obtained by our Minister from America. The meeting, which was characterised by earnestness, life, harmony, and great enjoyment, closed at ten o'clock. Decided progress has been made during the past year, and we enter with zest upon that now commenced. We are indebted to two gentlemen of the town for a choice selection of green-house plants and flowers. The walls were ornamented with some exquisite mottoes, which Mr. Brinkworth has just obtained from America. On Sunday, 21st, the Rev. John Marten preached an able sermon from John, xv. 13. Sickness prevented some old friends being present, but a large congregation gathered to hear their now aged and much-loved minister of former years once more. This annual gathering has been a success in every respect.

SWINTON.—The Pendlebury and Swinton Journal contains a correspondence having reference to a Permissive Bill meeting, held in the Unitarian school-room, Swinton, which it was at first intended to hold in the Wesleyan school. On April 8th, the Rev. William Harrison wrote to the Rev. R. Bentley, Wesleyan minister, stating that "A few weeks since a deputation from the Good Templars waited upon you with a request that you would take the chair at a Permissive Bill meeting they intended to hold in your schoolroom, the use of which had been granted for the purpose." This you consented to do; but on hearing that I was to be invited, along with other ministers of Swinton, to take part in the meeting, you withdrew your consent on the ground that you could not sit on the platform with a Unitarian minister. It was pointed out to you that the meeting was entirely unsectarian, and that the United Kingdom Alliance ignores creeds and parties; but you replied that you could not meet me; that if I was right you were wrong; and, to show the strength of your aversion, you said you would rather meet the Roman Catholic priest. . . . I am a Unitarian, as I am a teetotaler, because my conscience compels me to be one. I give you credit for being a Wesleyan for the same reason. Is it wrong in me to obey my conscience and right in you to obey yours? I think you will hardly say so. Then I ask, in the name of Christian charity, why you would rather allow a good cause to suffer, and intemperance to go on, than join with me in a meeting where our religious differences need not come to the surface?" After a second letter from Mr. Harrison, the following answer tardily came:—"Dear Sir,—I have been from home since Tuesday last. I received your letter on the previous Monday, but was too busy to give it a careful reading, and unfortunately left it behind me. Towards you as a man and a fellow-citizen I entertain a cordial good will; but to Unitarianism, of which you are a votary and a victim, I am irreconcilably hostile. The attitude I took in regard to the chairmanship of the Alliance meeting was needful and wise. I suggested neutral ground. If I had your letter I might deal with each point seriatim. In haste.—Yours truly, R. BENTLEY." Mr. Harrison fairly adds the comment:—"This is an unsatisfactory letter. Towards me as a man and a fellow citizen he entertains a cordial good-will. Why, it was as a man and a fellow-citizen he was asked to meet me on the Alliance platform. He was not asked to meet me as a Unitarian, no more than I was asked to meet him as a Wesleyan. Mr. Bentley now adds insult to injury by speaking of me as 'a victim' of that religion which I regard as the very truth of God. But as Mr. Bentley thinks my religion, it will not allow me to speak so disrespectfully of anyone's deliberately-formed opinions. I am not now arguing whether Unitarianism is right or wrong, I am prepared to do that at the proper time and place; but whether it is charitable to refuse to join with one in a good, a necessary, and unsectarian work, because he happens not to see eye to eye with you on other matters. Mr. Bentley, like the Pope of Rome, evidently regards it as a crime to differ from him in theology.

TODMORDEN.—The annual church meeting was held on Saturday last in the schoolroom, Hanging Ditch, the occasion being the ninth anniversary of the dedication of the church. About 50 persons partook of tea, and the evening business was presided over by Mr. John Lord, in the absence of the minister, Rev. L. Taplin, M.A., who was prevented attending by illness. The church committee and warden for the ensuing year were appointed; a report was read by the secretary, Mr. E. Stephenson, and many subjects were discussed in a conversational way. The meeting lasted till after nine o'clock. Mr. Taplin, if he had been able to attend, had promised to give "a brief account of a visit which he made last summer to Holland, and to show how, with immense labour and skill, the Dutch have pumped the sea out of a great sandbank, and made that sandbank the home of 'civil and religious liberty.'" OAKAMOR, STAFFORDSHIRE: FREE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.—This church, which was opened for public worship on Easter Sunday, has been erected by Messrs. Thomas Bolton and Sons, the proprietors of the Oakamoor Works, for the use of such of their workpeople and neighbours as may sympathise with a free worship irrespective of creed or denominational position—being, in fact, simply an extension of a work which, under the direction of the resident proprietor, has been in operation for some ten years past in the village of Oakamoor. The first chapel, the Rev. John Mills, now of Hanley, commenced in 1868 the conduct of services on the principle stated above in a commodious room in the village set aside for the purpose. These services met with a degree of appreciation and success which has led to the erection of the new and exceedingly beautiful structure in which, under the direction of the present chaplain, the Rev. Charles Denman, the already existing congregation will assemble, united upon a foundation of Christian life and love as distinct from theological dogma. The opening services were a complete success, the ministerial part being very ably taken by the Rev. W. Carey Walters, of Whitchurch; and the rich and sweet tones of the beautiful organ being fully brought out under the hand of Mr. Edward F. Clarke, of London, who very kindly presided over the music of the day. The choir, who have patiently worked for years in the simpler place of meeting, acquitted themselves most creditably in the hymns and anthems appointed. The church stands on a wooded slope adjoining the village, is surrounded by a large piece of land, part of which is devoted to ornamental shrubs and trees, and the remainder it is intended to use as a burial ground. Adjoining it is the residence of the minister. It is built in the style known as the early decorated or geometrical, and consists of a nave with a small transept or side chapel for the organ, and a raised chancel. At the west end are a porch and vestry in a lean-to roof, and the west gable is crowned by a handsomely carved bell turret. The nave and chancel are covered with a continuous "barrel" roof match boarded and panelled. A small aisle for the school children, on a lower level than the nave, adjoins the organ chamber. The east window is of three lights surmounted by tracery and filled with stained glass by Mr. Evans, of West Smethwick, the gift of Mr. Francis S. Bolton, of Birmingham: the centre subject is a crowned figure representing "Immortality," while "Life and Hope" also symbolised in figures occupy the side lights. This window is soft and refined in tone and greatly enhances the effect of the chancel, which is about to be still further enriched by the erection of another three-light stained window the gift of Mr. Thomas Colfox, of Bridport, and designed by Mrs. Colfox. This and another about to be erected in the nave, presented by Mr. William Colfox, also of Bridport, are in the hands of Messrs. Heaton, Butler, and Bayne, of London. We have been admitted to a sight of the cartoons, and are able to describe the designs as follows:—The first-mentioned contains a centre figure of Christ, while the side lights represent groups illustrative of the verses "Seek ye first the kingdom of God," and "Take up your cross daily." The second is a memorial window, and represents the death of a little child and its being borne away from earth by an angel, the latter figure being one of Ary Scheffer's. The furniture throughout is of good design, the pulpit being especially effective, consisting of richly-carved and traceried stonework. The building generally is of local white stone faced and banded within and without with red sandstone, all the tracery being of the latter material. The organ, which we have already mentioned so favourably, is a two manual one by Messrs. Halmshaw, of Birmingham. In passing to the chapel, we could not but notice the elegant and commodious school building recently erected in the village for the Messrs. Bolton by the same architect and builder. The sermons were suitable to the occasion, and were listened to with very great attention. The morning subject was "Christ the Revealer of the Father," and the evening sermon from the text "He taught them as one having authority, and not as the scribes." Many visitors from a distance were present.

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Letters, articles of intelligence, &c., should be addressed to the Unitarian Herald Office, New Cannon Chambers, 55, Market-street, and not to the private addresses of the Editors. No anonymous letters inserted; the writer of every letter must append his name for publication. No letter should be more than half a column.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE.—Too late, must stand over till next week, and several other communications.

COMING WEEK.

BLACKPOOL.—On Sunday, Mr. W. Hough will preach, morning and evening.
LONDON: STAMFORD-STREET.—On Sunday, morning and evening, special Services. Preacher: Rev. J. C. Odgers, B.A.
MANCHESTER: MILES PLATTING.—This day (Friday), and to-morrow, Bazaar in the Schools, Varley-street, Oldham Road.
MANCHESTER: STRANGEWAYS.—On Sunday morning, the Rev. J. T. MARRIOTT will preach on "Transient and Enduring Life: Frederick Ashton, M.A."
MANCHESTER: MEMORIAL HALL.—On Monday, meeting of the Bead Memorial Union, when Rev. W. H. Channing will read a paper on "Some of the Religious Problems of our Age."
ROTHERHAM.—On Wednesday, foundation-stone laying of new chapel at noon, at 11.30 bazaar.
WESTERN UNITARIAN AND FREECHRISTIAN UNION.—Sermons and collections on Sunday in aid of the funds at Bridgewater, Clifton, Crediton, and Exeter.

BIRTH.

FURBER.—On the 24th inst., at Queen's Circus, Cheltenham, the wife of Thomas Furber, of a daughter.
LITTLE.—On Easter Sunday, at 63, Percival-street, Chorlton-on-Medlock, Manchester, the wife of George Morris Little of a daughter.

MARRIAGES.

LAW-GLOSSOP.—On the 17th inst., at Monton Church, by the Rev. C. C. Coe, of Bolton, John, only surviving son of the late John Laws, of London, to Hannah Wilkinson (Annie), second daughter of James Glossop, Esq., The Poplars, Winton, near Manchester.

DEATHS.

BADCOCK.—On the 10th inst., at Tavistock, Albert Shelford, aged 1 year and 6 months, youngest son of the Rev. Lindsey T. Badcock.
ROWE.—On Monday, the 15th inst., at 112, Stafford-street, Longton, Mr. Charles Rowe, for many years a member of our church at Congleton, and during the last three years connected with our Longton Church, in which he held office as a member of the Finance Committee.
SHORLAND.—On the 20th inst., at Upper Norwood, Ellen, widow of Thomas Shorland, surgeon, Island of Alderney.
TALBOT.—On the 25th inst., at the residence of her son, W. H. Talbot, Esq., Cheetham Hill, Manchester, Ann Elizabeth Talbot, widow of John Talbot, of Leeds, in her 85th year. Friends will please accept this intimation.
VALLANCE.—On the 17th inst., at 24, Stevenson-street, Calton, Glasgow, Alexander W. Vallance, aged 26 years, last surviving son of the late Alexander Vallance, Beamer, Calton. Friends will please accept this, the only intimation.
WILSON.—On the 18th inst., Mr. Andrew Brown Wilson, aged 32 years.

NO. 1, ENVILLE VILLAS, STOURBRIDGE.

Miss MORGAN will RE-OPEN SCHOOL on Wednesday, the 7th of May.

SEASIDE EDUCATION FOR GIRLS.

DYSART HOUSE, CLEVEDON, SOMERSET.

Miss E. MARTIN'S PUPILS will RE-ASSEMBLE on Monday, May 6th.

SOUTHPORT.—Miss LAWFOOD'S SCHOOL for BOYS will be RE-OPENED on Wednesday, May 8th. Binglefield, Albert Road.

HEATH BROW SCHOOL, HAMPSTEAD, LONDON, N.W.—The NEXT TERM will begin on Thursday, May 9th. Boys from the country are expected the evening before.—Prospectus on application to Mrs. CASE.

BROOK HOUSE, KNUTSFORD, CHESHIRE.—BOARDING SCHOOL for GIRLS, conducted by Mrs. FRANK SHAWCROSS, assisted by Resident English and Foreign Governesses. Teachers of eminence attend for instruction in Music, Singing, Harmony, Drawing, Dancing, &c. Prospectus and references forwarded on application. The NEXT TERM begins May 2nd.

MOUNT VERNON HIGH SCHOOL, NOTTINGHAM.—Established 1864. Mr. EDWIN SMITH, M.A., with competent assistance, thoroughly prepares Boys for College, the University Local Examinations, or for Business. For prospectus address Sandy Knoll, Forest Road, Nottingham.

YORK: 26, HIGH PETER GATE.—Miss AMY HERRING begs to announce that she has OPENED, at the above address, a SCHOOL for the instruction of Young Ladies in all branches, comprising a first-class education with liberal views. References kindly permitted by the following:—Dr. G. Vance Smith, The Parade, Carmarthen; the Rev. C. Welbeloved, 38, Monkgate, York; Miss Swaine, 1, The Crescent, York.—Terms on application.

Pupils are prepared for the University Examinations, several having passed most successfully. The NEXT TERM commences, May 13th.

LONDON: SHIRLEY'S TEMPERANCE HOTEL, 37, Queen's Square, Bloomsbury. Beds from 1s. 6d. Plain Breakfast or Tea, 1s. 3d.

THE TRUE RELIGION: A Discourse by Rev. ALFRED PAYNE. Price 1d., post free 1d., from the Author; Messrs. M. and M. W. Lambert, and J. H. Barlow, Newcastle-on-Tyne; and Messrs. Johnson and Rawson, Manchester.

Now Ready, 8vo., gilt edges, price 2s., post free, 2s. 2d.
A YEAR AT DRAYTON: A Story for Children By Mrs. PAUL E. FISHER. Charing Cross Publishing Company, Limited, 5, Friar-street, Broadway, London, E.C.

Now Ready, Numerous Illustrated, Price One Penny.
No. 30, for May,
YOUNG DAYS
Contents: Old Noddy—The Brook—Ida Mayhew—A May Greeting—The Discontented Boy—What is Religion?—Advice to Our Boys—Russian Proverbs—A Peep in an Aquarium—The Octopus Family at Home—Puzzle Bag. Published by the Sunday School Association, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand.

MIDLAND RAILWAY. TOURIST ARRANGEMENTS, 1878. FIRST and THIRD CLASS TOURIST TICKETS, AVAILABLE for TWO MONTHS, will be issued from May 1st to the 31st October, 1878. For particulars see time tables and programmes, issued by the Company. JAMES ALLPORT, General Manager.

Derby, April, 1878.

Printed for the Proprietors by WILLIAM EVANS, of Apsley Villa 377, Waterloo Road, Cheltenham Hill, at his Printing Offices, No. 3, Cross-street, Parish of Manchester, and Published by JOHN PHILLIPS, at New Cannon Chambers, 55, Market-street, in said Parish of Manchester. London Agents: Messrs. Smart and Allen, 2, London-house Yard, Paternoster Row.—Friday, April 26, 1878.

The Unitarian Herald.

EDITED BY

REV. JAMES BLACK, M.A., & REV. S. FLETCHER WILLIAMS.

VOL. XVIII.—889

FRIDAY, MAY 10, 1878.

PRICE 1D.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE.
Doings and Sayings	156
Scottish Notes	156
Beard Memorial Union	156
Books and Authors	157
Life-Laden Spring	158
A Scottish Minister on Hell	158
The Late Rev. William McCullough	159
The Hibbert Lecture	159
The London District Unitarian Society	159
British and Foreign Unitarian Association	160
Dob Lane, Failsforth	160
Belfast Free Congregational Union	161
News of our Churches	161

LIVERPOOL DOMESTIC MISSION, NORTH AND SOUTH.

COLLECTIONS on behalf of the above Missions will be made as follows:—

Place.	Preacher.	Date.
Renshaw-street	Rev. Chas. Beard, B.A.	May 12th.
Hope-street	Rev. J. Fred. Smith.	May 12th.
Ancient Chapel, Toxteth Park	Rev. Jas. Harwood, B.A.	May 12th.
Hamilton Road	Rev. S. F. Williams	May 19th.
	Morning, 11; evening, 6.30.

BOLTON: FREE CHRISTIAN CHURCH, TEMPERANCE HALL.

The ANNUAL CHURCH SERMONS will be preached on Sunday, May 12, 1878, by the Rev. WM. BINNS, of Birkenhead; morning, 10.30; evening, 6.30. Collections in aid of the funds.

BLACKLEY.—The ANNUAL SERMONS will be preached on Sunday, 12th inst. In the morning by the Rev. J. T. MARRIOTT, at 11; afternoon, by the Rev. A. RUSHTON, at 3; evening, by the Rev. JAS. MCCONNOCHIE, at 6.30. Tea (6d. each) will be provided in the schoolroom for those friends from a distance who, attending the afternoon, may wish to stay the evening service also.

HULME: DOMESTIC MISSION, EMBDEN-STREET.—SERMONS, May 12, morning 10.45, evening 6.30, by Rev. S. FLETCHER WILLIAMS, of Liverpool. Collections on behalf of Schools. Friends earnestly invited to these services.

RAWENSTALL.—ANNUAL Sunday School SERMONS, May 12th. Preacher, Rev. W. M. AINSWORTH, of Lancaster.

MOTTRAM SUNDAY SCHOOL SERMONS. May 12th. Preacher: The Rev. T. R. ELLIOTT. Services: Afternoon, 2.30; evening at 6. Collections on behalf of the schools. Tea provided for friends from a distance; charge, sixpence each person.

LEICESTER DOMESTIC MISSION. GREAT MEETING.—A Gentleman is required to Conduct the Work of the Mission. The work consists chiefly of home visitation and teaching.—For particulars apply to Mr. E. B. GITTINS, Fairfield, Leicester.

NEWHURCH.—Rev. A. LAZENBY will preach the ANNUAL SCHOOL SERMONS on Sunday, May 19th; afternoon service at 2.30, evening at 6 o'clock.

HALIFAX: NORTHGATE END CHAPEL. The SUNDAY SCHOOL ANNIVERSARY SERVICES on Sunday, May 12th. Preacher, the Rev. JAMES BLACK, M.A., of Stockport; morning 10.45, evening 6.30. In the afternoon, at three o'clock, Rev. JAMES BLACK will address Parents, Teachers, and Scholars. Collections for the School Fund.

DEAN ROW.—ANNUAL SERMONS on May 19th. Preacher: Rev. D. WALMSLEY, B.A., of Bury. Services to begin—Morning, 10.30; afternoon, 3 o'clock. Collections for the Sunday School.

PROVINCIAL ASSEMBLY.—Any NOTICE OF MOTION must be sent to me before May 20th. H. E. DOWSON.

MANCHESTER UNITARIAN SUNDAY SCHOOL UNION.

WHIT-SUNDAY SCHOLARS' FESTIVAL, Free Trade Hall. Revs. H. ENFIELD DOWSON, B.A., and JOSEPH FREESTON will conduct the service, commencing at three o'clock. THOMAS RAWSON, Esq., Organist and Musical Director. Hymns will be sung by the scholars. The aggregate choir will give a selection of choruses, anthems, &c. Those Schools (not in union) and musical friends desirous of assisting can be supplied with music on application to DAVID THOMPSON, Hon. Sec. 5, Clarence-street, Miles Platting.

BRITISH AND FOREIGN UNITARIAN ASSOCIATION.

The following Clauses of Rules 10 and 19 are ordered to be advertised in the Unitarian Journals, one month prior to the Annual Meeting:—

From Rule 10.—At the Annual General Meeting Vice-Presidents shall be chosen not to exceed one hundred in number. There shall also be appointed Correspondents both in the Home and Foreign Departments, the total number not to exceed one hundred.

Any member of the Association shall be entitled to nominate one or more members as vice-presidents, or home correspondents, by nomination in writing, to be sent to the Secretary at least ten days before the Annual Meeting.

From Rule 19.—The Executive Committee shall consist of the President, the Treasurer, and Twenty Members of the Association.

Any member of the Association shall be entitled to nominate one or more members as members of the Committee, by nomination in writing, to be sent to the Secretary at least ten days before the Annual Meeting.

HENRY IERSON, Secretary. 37, Norfolk-street, London, W.C., May 10th, 1878.

ASTLEY UNITARIAN CHAPEL.

On Sunday, May 19th, Two Sermons will be preached by the Rev. J. M'DOWELL, of Pendleton, and Collections made on behalf of the Sunday School. Afternoon service, three; evening, 6.30.

JONES'S FUND.—The Board of Managers meet every year in University Hall, Gordon Square, London, in the last complete week in June, for the purpose of Granting Exhibitions, and at no other time. Applications must be made in a specified form, to be obtained from the undersigned, and must be returned on or before the second week in June. EDWIN W. MARSHALL, Secretary. 38, Barton Arcade, Manchester.

MANCHESTER NEW COLLEGE (in connection with the University of London, and University College, London.)

UNIVERSITY HALL, GORDON SQUARE. SESSION, 1878-9. Candidates for Admission into the College at the commencement of the ensuing session are requested to forward their applications and testimonials, without delay, to either of the secretaries, from whom all needful information may be obtained. R. D. DARBISHIRE, Esq., B.A., 26, George-street, Manchester. Rev. CHARLES BEARD, B.A., 13, South Hill Road, Liverpool.

AN APPEAL.—ENGLISH UNITARIAN CONGREGATION, ABERDARE.

In making this appeal attention is respectfully asked to the following:—A few years since the congregation cleared a heavy debt off the chapel. Within the last three years they have built a minister's house—subscribing £600 themselves before beginning it—also a schoolroom and necessary offices, besides rebuilding the wall fences. The total expenditure amounts to about £1,060. A debt remains of nearly £460, which, owing to the depression of trade in the district, the congregation, being small, are unable to pay. Subscriptions will be thankfully received by

Rev. J. JOSEPH GEORGE, Unity House, Aberdare. Mr. JOHN RHYS, Rock House, Aberdare. Mr. THOMAS PHILLIPS, Byrn Darren Villa, Aberdare. TESTIMONIAL.—The Aberdare congregation have done generously by their cause, and we unitedly recommend them as deserving public sympathy and help. EDWARD HIGGINSON, Swansea, late Minister. CHARLES H. JAMES, Solicitor, Merthyr Tydfil. N. R. WILLIAMS, Unitarian Minister, Tydfil.

SUBSCRIPTION RECEIVED. Miss Tingcombe, Bath—per Rev. W. J. Odgers. £5 0 0

DOB LANE CHAPEL, FAIRFORTH.

The Committee desire, on behalf of this Congregation, to express their grateful acknowledgments to the numerous friends who attended the ceremonial on Saturday last, when the foundation stone of the new chapel was laid, and for the kindness manifested in new subscriptions and in other ways. They respectfully intimate that to cover all their expenses, they will still require about £400. They are very anxious not to have a debt when they open their new place of worship, and therefore make this appeal for the further help they require.

SUBSCRIPTIONS JUST RECEIVED.
Mr. Ald. Grundy, Mayor of Manchester (2nd sub.) ..	5	0 0
Mr. W. G. H. Ord, Manchester	5	0 0
Mr. Harry Rawson, Manchester (2nd subscription) ..	5	0 0
Mr. Jesse Pilcher, Manchester	1	1 0
Mr. Wm. Etchells, Failsforth	5	0 0
Mr. and Mrs. David Adams, Harpurhey	10	0 0
Messrs. S. and J. Howarth, Manchester	0	10 0
Mr. Aldred, Manchester	0	5 0
Mr. George Wadsworth, Manchester	2	2 0
Mr. Joseph Hulme, Manchester	1	1 0
Mr. J. Robinson, Manchester	2	2 0
Mr. A. Brothers, Manchester	2	0 0
Mr. H. J. Morton, Scarborough	2	2 0
Mr. P. Schofield, Pendleton	2	0 0
Mr. A. P. Allen, King's Lynn	1	1 0
Mr. P. Gillibrand, Manchester	1	1 0

HALIWELL THOMAS, Minister, Newton Heath. LUKE POLLITT, Treasurer, Newton Heath. HARRY RAWSON, a Trustee, Market-street, Manchester.

NEW SUNDAY SCHOOLS FOR

KING'S LYNN FREE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The Committee of above Church make this appeal to the Unitarian public from sheer necessity, having been bitterly persecuted, and refused the key of a hired school, by those opposed to Free Christianity, without even a week's notice. £500 will build Sunday-school, class-rooms, and pay off a small balance from Church building fund—having land enough behind the Church for the new schools. For three months the children met in the garden of the superintendent of the school, and are now crammed in a room, not half large enough. The Committee most gratefully acknowledge past support, and are hopeful that this appeal will meet with a similar response.

Subscriptions may be sent to The Rev. BARNARD GIBBY, Pastor. Mr. E. GRUNDY, Treasurer, to the Church. Mr. J. FOX, Secretary. Mr. E. GREEN, Treasurer. Mr. A. P. ALLEN, Secretary to the Building Committee and Supt. of Sunday-school. Amount already subscribed, £156. 2s.

SUBSCRIBERS' NAMES.		£	s.	d.
Sir J. C. Lawrence, Bart.		5	0	0
Lady Bowring		1	0	0
R. C. Wright, Ledbury		1	1	0
W. Shelford, Chesterford		0	10	0
The Misses Atkinson, Hampstead		2	0	0
T. Ainsworth, Esq., Carnforth		50	0	0
Rev. J. T. Marriott		1	0	0
J. S. Clarke, Peterborough		1	0	0
H. J. Morton, Scarborough		1	0	0
H. W. Tyndall, Edgbaston		1	1	0
Rev. W. Farley, Brighton		0	5	0
J. Grundy, Esq., Summerseat		5	0	0
F. Nettleford, Esq.		5	0	0
J. Lupton, Esq., Leeds		5	0	0
H. Smith, Maidstone		0	5	0
Alderman C. S. Grundy (Mayor of Manchester)		5	0	0
Miss Tingcombe, Bath		5	0	0
Miss Henry, Oswestry		1	0	0
Mr. Eveleigh, Peterborough		0	5	0
J. Freeman, Norwich		1	1	0
E. F. Stevens, Norwich		0	10	0
Rev. H. W. Perris, Norwich		0	10	0
G. C. Sothern, Norwich		0	5	0
Freeman Bros., Norwich		1	1	0
H. Snowden, Norwich		0	10	6
J. Leach, Yarmouth		0	10	0

HAMPSTEAD.—TO BE LET, furnished, for two or three months, a HOUSE, containing two sitting, three bedrooms, and bathroom: two servants will be left: no children: terms, four guineas.—Address L.S., Miss WOOD, WARD, 14, Rosslyn-street, Hampstead, N.W.

WANTED, near Manchester, a TUTOR for a Boy of 10.—Address, with references, B. C. D., at the Unitarian Herald office.

WANTED, a lady-help, as NURSE to one child, aged seventeen months.—Address Mrs. F. H. JONES, Acrefield, Woolton, Liverpool.

WANTED, at Midsummer next, a CERTIFICATED TEACHER for a Girls' School.—Apply to F. EVERS, Esq., J.P., Whitehall, near Stourbridge.

WANTED, a Strong, Active Girl, as UNDER NURSE, not under 18 years of age: good character required.—Apply Mrs. F. NETTLEFOLD, 20, York Terrace, Regent's Park, London, N.W.

BOLTON: COMMISSION-STREET UNITARIAN SCHOOLS.—WANTED, after Midsummer, a CERTIFICATED MISTRESS for the Infant Department.—For terms, &c., apply to the Secretary.

SITUATION WANTED, as MATRON or SUPERINTENDENT of an institution: has had many years' experience in the management of children: is qualified to take charge of a large household: is an excellent needlewoman, thoroughly understands cutting-out and making clothing and dresses, and competent to instruct others: would not object to a situation in a private family as Housekeeper.—For testimonials and further information apply, personally or by letter, to Mrs. HALLAM, Graham-street School, Birmingham.

GRAHAM-STREET PROTESTANT DIS-SENTING CHARITY SCHOOL FOR PREPARING GIRLS FOR DOMESTIC SERVICE.—WANTED, a LADY SUPERINTENDENT for this Institution. She will be required to take the entire management of the house, to teach and superintend the cooking, household and laundry work, and the general training of the girls for domestic service. She will not be required to attend the schoolroom, as a qualified teacher is employed, but must be competent to cut out and direct the making of the girls' clothes. Salary £50 per annum, with board and lodging.—Applications to be made by letter on or before the 18th inst., stating age, experience, and references, with copies of testimonials, and photographs if convenient, to L. S., care of James Heaton, Hon. Secretary, 10, Crooked Lane, Birmingham.—May 6, 1878.

HEATH BROW SCHOOL, HAMPSTEAD, LONDON, N.W.—The NEXT TERM will begin on Thursday, May 9th. Boys from the country are expected the evening before.—Prospectus on application to Mrs. CASE.

BLACKPOOL.—CHANNING HOUSE, 39, QUEEN'S SQUARE.—Visitors will find here every home comfort. Tariff sent on application.—Mrs. JOHN MARSDEN, Proprietress.

BROOK HOUSE, KNUTSFORD, CHESHIRE. BOARDING SCHOOL FOR GIRLS, conducted by Mrs. FRANK SHAWCROSS, assisted by Resident English and Foreign Governesses. Teachers of eminence attend for instruction in Music, Singing, Harmony, Drawing, Dancing, &c. Prospectus and references forwarded on application.

MOUNT VERNON HIGH SCHOOL,

NOTTINGHAM.—Established 1864. Mr. EDWIN SMITH, M.A., with competent assistance, thoroughly prepares Boys for College, the University Local Examinations, or for Business. For prospectus address Sandy Knoll, Forest Road, Nottingham.

LINDOW GROVE SCHOOL, ALDERLEY EDGE.—The premises have been erected for a First-class BOARDING SCHOOL, with extensive grounds for recreation, in a delightful country district. Every effort is made to educate the character, to have work done thoroughly, and to adapt it to the pupil's capacity, physical and mental. References and prospectus on application. JAMES WOOD.

YORK: 26, HIGH PETER GATE.—Miss AMY HERRING begs to announce that she has OPENED, at the above address, a SCHOOL for the instruction of Young Ladies in all branches, comprising a first-class education with liberal views. References kindly permitted by the following:—Dr. G. Vance Smith, The Parade, Carmarthen; the Rev. C. Welbeloved, 38, Monkgate, York; Miss Swaine, 1, The Crescent, York.—Terms on application.

Pupils are prepared for the University Examinations, several having passed most successfully. The NEXT TERM commences, May 13th.

THE TRUE RELIGION: A Discourse by Rev. ALFRED PAYNE. Price 1d., post free 1½d., from the Author: Messrs. M. and M. W. Lambert, and J. H. Barlow, Newcastle-on-Tyne; and Messrs. Johnson and Rawson, Manchester.

Price 6d., post free from the writer.

A CONTINENTAL HOLIDAY. By W. HARRISON, Swinton, Manchester.—"How it can be done pleasantly and to good purpose, and yet at a surprisingly small cost, this little book will tell so agreeably and instructively that we recommend it as a ready-made plan for a summer trip."—Unitarian Herald.

"It is an enjoyable thing to follow him in his brisk and lively account of his wanderings. His description of churches, persons, and landscapes are uniformly well drawn."—Christian Life

MISS BROOKS, 6, Barton Arcade, and 59, Deansgate, Manchester, is now showing the choicest GOODS in Millinery, Straw Hats and Bonnets, Flowers, Feathers, Laces, Ribbons, Ties, Gloves, &c., and will have through the season all the most approved styles. An inspection is respectfully solicited.

DOINGS AND SAYINGS.

The Baptists, at the annual meeting of their Union, reported membership in England and Wales of 270,000, with 1,825 pastors, 3,881 evangelists, and 370,000 Sunday scholars.

Miss Jex-Blake writes to the Times, "that in all probability the oldest and most eminent university in the United States will open its doors to women almost at the same moment as the newest and most eminent university in Great Britain, though the agency by which the change has been inaugurated is not the same in the two countries."

Bishop Colenso has been favoured with an invitation to the Lambeth Synod. Not only so, but he means to come. It is rumoured that his acceptance will cause some embarrassment to the Archbishop. Then why was he invited? If he was worth asking, he is worth receiving and entertaining. Seventeen American bishops are booked for certain—possibly two-and-twenty.

Mr. R. W. Griffith writes to the Times, asking the promoters of the Selwyn Memorial to pause before inflicting upon the University of Cambridge the burden of a college limited to a particular branch of a profession. A missionary college would, he thinks, be a very inadequate tribute to a prelate with such Catholic instincts, and if successful there might be no end of the memorial colleges established to represent every branch of English thought, from the Agnostic on the one hand to the extreme Ritualist on the other, until, in the confusion, the vigorous corporate life of the University might be destroyed.

The Reformed Episcopal Church means to go ahead in England. Is it not American in its origin? and would it be worthy of its nationality? The very expression occurs in a letter from Bishop Sugden. "The Reformed Episcopal Church," he writes, "is not yet twelve months old in England, but it has made its mark, and will, I think, 'go ahead,' as our American friends say." It is four years old in America, and already begins to talk of its constitutions and canons, and its general councils. Not bad for a four-year-old Church. It has also two new-papers as organs on the other side of the Atlantic.

At the annual meeting in London of the Missions to Seamen Society, the Bishop of Gloucester said the country had greatly failed in its duty to the mercantile marine. There were only five spiritual agencies for seamen, three being in London. £14,000 a year was required in addition to the present income of the society if the spiritual field was to be efficiently explored. The Bishop mentioned that 4,000 seamen annually met with violent deaths from drowning and otherwise. The society had now working in 43 seaports at home and abroad—in the Royal and mercantile navies, and among fishermen and bargemen around our shores—64 chaplains, 55 mission clergy and Scripture readers, and six lay helpers of the boatman class. The total expenditure for the year had been £10,397.

The men who started the British and Foreign Bible Society, although their aims were high and noble, did not dream that £227,865. 18s. 1d. would be expended by the society in one year. That was the amount of last year's expenditure, and it is £10,000 above that of any previous year. The society has issued during the year 2,943,599 copies of Bibles, Testaments, and portions of the Scripture; and its total issues from the beginning now amount to 82,047,062 copies. It is a wonderful encouragement to human enterprise in the cause of religion, for there is to be considered not only the number of copies of the Scriptures distributed, the amount of money raised, but the moral, spiritual, and even political and social influence exerted by them during seventy-four years.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

PROFESSOR SMITH'S DEFENCE.

The statement prepared by Professor Robertson Smith, of Aberdeen, in answer to the second count of the libel against him—i.e., as to the dangerous and unsettling tendency of his writings—is about to be published.

MR. FERGUSON'S "ERRORS" INTOLERABLE.

The U.P. Presbytery of Glasgow have determined to continue Mr. Ferguson's suspension from the exercise of office, and declared that the errors found proven against him could not be tolerated in the U.P. Church. The issue of the case is delayed until the Synod has given judgment, which will be very shortly.

PRAYER IN A HIGHLAND PARISH KIRK.

The following prayer was recently heard in a Highland parish church:—"O Lord! bless us at this time; bless the old, bless the young, bless those who teach the young to be wise, social, kind, and have good feeling. We pray for them. There is a certain class that we pray against: that is those who do not teach the young as they should do. We pray against them. Bless the beasts; bless the wild beasts; give them their food in due season. O Lord! bless the great parliament of our Church which will soon meet in Edinburgh. Bless them, and bless commonsense in all their deliberations for the stability and good of our Church, that it may stand up against all enemies."

PUTTING AWAY ALL THE "COOT THINGS."

Apropos of the nest of heretics in the Scotch Churches, a Highland minister said the other day to an English friend—"Ah, they are putting away all the coot things now-a-days. There is one young man he is putting away the Bible, and there is another he is putting away the Catechism and the Covenant, and there is a third, he says there is no tefel. Ah, now-a-days they are putting away all the coot things whatever."

BEARD MEMORIAL UNION.

ON Monday week a meeting of the members and friends of this Union was held in the Memorial Hall. There were present the Revs. W. H. Channing, S. A. Steinthal, James Black, M.A., J. Harrop, John McDowell, Chas. T. Poynting, B.A., W. G. Cadman, E. C. Towne, Silas Farrington, Joseph Freeston, A. Lazenby, and Dr. Marcus; Messrs. Harry Rawson, John Thomas, John Phillips, J. H. Reynolds, sen., W. H. Herford, B.A., James Odgers, E. Sothorn, Jas. Bennett.

In the absence of the Rev. Wm. Gaskell, M.A., Mr. HARRY RAWSON presided, and in opening the meeting said—I regret, ladies and gentlemen, that you are deprived to-night of the genial presence of the President of this Union, our dear and valued friend Mr. Gaskell. And our disappointment finds no alleviation in the circumstance that his absence is owing to indisposition—indisposition of the body I need not say, for I doubt not that in spirit he is with us now. This is the fourth meeting of the Beard Memorial Union. On the first occasion, the learning, zeal, and devotion of the Rev. Dr. Beard, whose name it bears, were portrayed in the eloquent and racy style characteristic of the Essayist, the Rev. W. Binns. It was the generous and affectionate tribute of an able and successful student to the virtues and services of a revered tutor and an honoured friend. (Hear, hear.)—Then the Rev. J. H. Smith, of Dewsbury, presented an interesting paper, and he was followed by the Rev. E. Turland, of Ainsworth. On the last occasion we were instructed and gratified with a thoughtful, high-toned, and excellent paper by a young layman. The ample promise it contained of a future of active usefulness was most cheering to us all. His accession to ranks never too strong in numbers will be hailed with the pleasure attendant on the newly-acquired services of a recruit of exceptional ability. (Hear, hear.) To-night we are also highly favoured—alike in the importance of the subject and the high qualifications of its exponent. Ordinarily it is the duty of a chairman to introduce the lecturer to the audience. I feel that, on this occasion, such a task becomes one of the merest formality. The honoured name our essayist bears would secure attention, and conciliate sympathy and respect, in any fairly educated audience in any civilised country. The highest of satisfactions is to find a distinguished name and reputation worthily worn and maintained. In our lecturer to-night we rejoice to recognise at once a fitting representative of a great religious teacher, and one who possesses in no slight measure the spirituality of mind which has rendered the name of Channing "a household word," and a power that will largely affect for good untold generations. (Applause.)

The Rev. W. H. CHANNING opened his address by an allusion to the Peace Conference which was to be held on the following day, and in substance said that in view of the possibility of the awful war that seemed impending, the first problem that actually presented itself to us was: "Why is not so-called Christendom Christian, and when and how, can it become so?" But this question is so immense and complex, that attention must be confined, this evening, to a few only of the elements involved in it. He then entered upon the subject announced as "Some of the Religious Problems of the Age," and spoke as follows in outline:—

I. The most central religious problem of our age is—"Am I sure that I as a person am living in personal relations with the living God?" And passing in review the works of the so-called Materialistic Atheists and the Pantheists of the time, he affirmed that both of these classes of unwilling sceptics were really "feeling after, if they may find, the Unknown God." Both erred by not using the right organ wherewith to apprehend the Being of Beings. As only by the eye can we perceive colour, and only by the ear can we perceive harmony, so by the spirit alone can we recognise the infinite Spirit. The true position, then, whence to begin our search for the living God is from what is highest, profoundest, most central in our own conscious experience, and this is Personality. We become more and more aware, the more we enter into our own consciousness, that as Persons our own life is a mystery to us. The fountains of this life flow into us from some exhaustless source,—that is at once the Will of our will, the Genius of our genius, the Heart of our hearts, the Beauty, Joy, Blessedness, Holiness, of our own being. And that Life of our life it is, that makes us to be the Persons we become by continual growth. And the more we grow, the brighter unfolds before us the Ideal of what we ought to be. Now, then, we may be entirely sure that God cannot be less than this Ideal of our Perfected Personality. And if this is true of one human being, it is true of all. Especially is it most true of those in whom the latent powers of human nature are most largely, richly harmoniously developed—that is, in Great Men. Combine the grandest powers, virtues, excellences of all the greatest Persons who through all ages have appeared upon this planet, and the sun in heaven at noontide is not so clear to us as is the truth, that God cannot be less than all these greatest persons blended in perfect unity. No reality can be more sure to us than that the living God, the all-enlivening, all-embracing, all-pervading, all-perfecting God, is the Person of persons. And His sublime Sovereign Reality is revealed to us in the fulness of its glory, in the Christian doctrine of the Heavenly Father in communion personally with the Beloved Son, in communion personally with each and all of His vast Family of Children. Thus then is solved, affirmatively, the first problem of our age.

II. The second urgently pressing Problem of the Age is this:—"Am I sure that this Personal being, of which I am so intensely conscious in myself, will continue to exist in personal relations with the living God, after this physical organisation that connects me with the outward universe is dissolved?" Alluding to the remarkable earnestness with which this problem has been discussed in leading publications within a few years past, the lecturer proceeded to affirm that the latest and clearest doctrine of science is that there is no phenomenon throughout the range of known existence corresponding to the prevalent conception of Death as annihilation. Nowhere can we discover the slightest sign that the least molecule of so-called matter, that the finest perceptible force ever was or can be annihilated. The very thought of annihilation, indeed, is inconceivable, and contradicted by our whole experience. There is no Nothing. This Universe is not a void, but a fulness; not an Abyss, but a Pleroma; and the further the investigations of science are pushed, the clearer grows the conviction that what we call "Matter" is a combination of Centres of Force in intensest vortical movement. In the words of Herbert Spencer, what the profoundest thought of our age is tending to is not the materialism of Spirit, but the spiritualisation of Matter. Now, under this view, this Universe is not a dead mechanism, but a living organisation. The Universe is all alive, thrilling with life, vibrating, pulsating with life. The only phenomenon corresponding to the popular notion of death is change of form. If this is so,—if the Universe is laden with energies incessantly, everlastingly, and ever-newly quickening it by inflooding force; and if this force reveals itself more and more to science as Spiritual Energy, as Will and Wisdom in intensest combination and activity; if there is, so far as observation and experience attest, no annihilation anywhere, how can we for an instant doubt the continued existence of the Persons who we consciously are? If we are to be annihilated, as conscious Spirits, it will be an inconceivable reversal of the processes of the Universe, of the methods of action of the all-enlivening Being of beings. Indeed, the more we reflect upon the notion of the destruction of Spirits the more utterly absurd does it become. No! the only conceivable alternative is, either that each Spirit continues to exist as a Person after the physical organisation in which it has manifested its energies has changed its form and entered into new combinations—for let us distinctly remember, that not the minutest particle of that physical frame is annihilated by the dissolution of the body,—or that the Spirit is again re-absorbed by the Spirit of Spirits, whence it first sprang forth into consciousness. But this latter branch of the alternative is self-contradictory. For if I am to be absorbed into God, it must be as a Person—as a Person, with my memory, my associations of intellect, my unfolding reason, my character, matured and maturing, my hopes and aspirations, my growing Selfhood, aye, my unattained Ideal. Thus, such a conception contradicts itself. The other branch of the alternative then alone remains, that I must continue to exist as the conscious Person I know myself to be, as the Person whom the living God knows me to be. The lecturer then proceeded, at length, to argue that the burden of proof rests upon the Sceptic not upon the Believer. He illustrated this by a great variety of evidence. (1.) From conscious growth towards the realisation of our Ideal never here attained by the Greatest Persons. (2.) By the full intensity of life up to the last instant of conscious physical existence. (3.) By heroes in every form of self-sacrifice; by martyrs in their hymns and prayers, and triumphant joy amidst acutest bodily agony; by the appealing supplications, the upsoaring aspirations, the grateful confidence, the undying hopes of Saints, in whose last faint sighs commingle invocations to the living God and benedictions for surviving friends, whose fading visions of earth grow pale and dim in their glorious visions of heaven. Now, if in countless instances, throughout all lands and times, Spirits are and have been proving themselves to be most radiantly all aglow with Life—most perfectly Persons—in the midst of physical death, it is for the Sceptic to show that these Persons are annihilated by the change of form of their embodiment. The evidence of facts is conclusive. Never are these Persons so all alive as in the instant of their disappearance. Thus the second grand religious Problem of our age is solved affirmatively in the Christian doctrine that "mortality shall be swallowed up of life." And well may we be "always confident that when we shall be absent from the body, we shall be present with the Lord."

III. And this prepares the way for a solution of a third religious Problem, now widely discussed: "Are we sure not only that, as Persons, we shall continue to exist in personal communion with the Living God, but also in communion with the Persons whom in the bodily existence we have loved and known and co-worked with?" Under this division of his subject the lecturer affirmed, as the fact universally received by the scientific mind of our age, that we are, each and all, living from, by, with, in the Life of Humanity—the life of our race, our age, our nation, our community, our family. As Persons, we become our real selves—our best and highest selves—just according to the measure in which we lovingly receive and assimilate the lives of fellow beings, and lovingly diffuse and communicate our own life to them. Especially is this true of the greatest persons, as was illustrated from the biographies of patriots and poets, prophets and legislators, philanthropists and religious leaders. And their influence lives on and animates our race, undying, ever-growing through the ages. Now, if the marble forms, the pictured faces, the living thoughts, the moulding act, the quickening principles of these great persons still inspire us, if even now we hold living communion with them, centuries after their physical embodiments were dissolved in the natural universe, can we reasonably disbelieve that these spirits are now communing and commingling their energies in the Spiritual Universe, and that we shall meet Spirit to Spirit those Persons whom we so ardently love, admire, gratefully aspire towards, and long to recognise. The lecturer then proceeded to confirm this assurance out of the universal experience that no loving tie is ever broken in the most intimate relations of life by the fact of bodily dissolution. No true love was ever yet fully satisfied, ever exhausted between husbands and wives, parents and children, brethren and sisters, friend and friend. On the contrary, never is love so strong, full, aspiring, growing, as in the moment of seeming separation by what we call death. And this Immortality of love is the pledge of the Living God, that those whose life is thus entwined and indissolubly intermingled with the lives of the beloved, shall rise, transformed and glorified to be everlastingly reunited. Thus then the third religious Problem of our age is affirmatively solved in the sublime Christian doctrine of the great Family of the Children of God, one on earth and in heaven.

IV. And this assurance gives a clue to the solution of a fourth Religious Problem which the conscience of our age is seeking to answer: "Are we sure of the Law of Right Relations between this Family of God's children and the Father over all?" And the answer once again is affirmative, positive, unhesitating, uncompromising: "Yes! There is one absolute, universal, everlasting Law of Right, and this is the glorious liberty of Love,—for the very essential Life of the Living God Himself is Love. Surely as the Father liveth, all wrongs shall be righted, all sorrows comforted, all woes healed, by the love of Him who maketh all things new in Paradise Regained. Here, again, the solution of the problem of Eternal Rectitude, affirmed by science, is identical with the one declared by the Christian religion: "Beloved, let us love another, for God is love, and they who live in love live in God, and God in them."

V. The fifth problem of religion in our age, already solved by the foregoing affirmations, is: "Are we sure that the Christian Religion, the Christian Church, Christendom, aye the Life, the Influence, the Power of the risen and glorified Christ, are the Centre of Unity for our Race?" Although prepared to stop, on account of the lateness of the hour, in response to a request from the assembly the lecturer proceeded briefly to prove the truth of this historical fact, from the past growth of Christian Civilisation and the constantly accumulating experiences of the most earnest, thoughtful, deeply disciplined, widely cultured, and energetically humane Spirits of our age, throughout all nations. Manifestly, notwithstanding all disastrous disappointments, delays and hindrances, the Race of Man is become united around the globe, and the Centre of the growing Unity is the Reign of Love, and Truth and Peace, so gloriously foretold and made manifest in the Life, Character, and Influence of the Beloved Son and Elder Brother.

Mr. DANIEL REES, one of the students of the Home Missionary Board, expressed his thanks to Mr. Channing for his address, and he was sure the members of the Union would feel much indebted to him for it. (Hear, hear.)

The Rev. E. C. TOWNE said he should like to say a few words. For the first time the other day at Monton he heard the English lark, and saw it soar out of sight, and Mr. Channing had carried them so effectually heavenward that he felt silence would be the best offering they could make for his address. They could only thank God for the benefit they had got, and take fresh courage. He then told how one day at Reading he set out for a walk, and as he neared the Thames he met an old labouring man, whom they might imagine to be without faith, hope, or trust; perhaps a secularist. He was carrying upon his shoulder a little child feeble in health, wishing to give it the benefit of the light of day. Its arm clung round his head, and as he passed with his burden he (Mr. Towne) could not help saying to himself, "there goes the kingdom of God." It was a grand thing to have a sure faith. How many people there are whom each of them might help if only they would. He had found the service of helplessness to others who had no faith far greater than any other part of his ministry; and looking back upon his labours, he felt he could say that that is a true Church in which one hand takes that of another in a helpful spirit.

Mr. ODGERS suggested that it would have been well if Mr. Channing could have extended his remarks, so as to include the moral side of his subject. The Rev. J. BLACK said that the problems of the day were of two kinds, which should be kept distinct, those agitating and dividing the churches as churches, which were questions between man and man; and those that were the profound difficulties of all thought—questions between each man and God. It would be well, he thought, to apply here the advice of the Master, and try to settle matters between ourselves and our brethren, before we adventured upon any final settlement of questions pertaining to the nature of the Eternal.

Mr. JOHN H. REYNOLDS, Jun., said he had neither Mr. Channing's experience, knowledge, nor talent, but though all these combined had doubtless led Mr. Channing to the profound conviction he had expressed on the subjects under discussion, he did not feel that he had been much helped thereby. It seemed to him that he had spoken of those who could not accept the doctrine of Immortality with a sort of contempt. He could not accept the position Mr. Channing would put upon him as to proof. He was not called upon to prove a negative. The burden of proof rested with those who urged the affirmative. They had been told that every man born into the world is entitled to immortality; why, he asked, should they expect that? Was it not enough to be content with that life which had been given without will or power of ours? The hope of immortality ought not to be the motive of duty but the conviction that only by doing his duty can man realise the aim of life. Mr. Channing asked if they were to believe that the 300 men who went down in the Eurydice were gone for ever, but how was the distinction to be drawn between the destruction of their life and that of a tree or an animal. He affirmed that war was possible and probable because Christendom was not Christian. But who had brought about that state of things? Not Positivists or so-called atheists—they had done as much as Christians to prevent it and diminish its horrors. They had ever been on the side of humanity. Should not Christianity be judged as we judged Buddhism, or any other religion, by its fruits? Can Christianity, as such, show any better social results? Had there been a time during these thirty years when Europe was not at war or preparing for it? He really believed that the reforms which take place arise more from the love of man for man than because of the belief in the doctrines of a personal God or a personal immortality. Moreover, if they claimed immortality for Marcus Aurelius, why not for Nero? And if so, is the murderer to meet his victim? What sort of a future life would there be if that be so? They had been told that nothing ever dies. It is to scientific men that we owe our deep faith in this truth. Yet their investigations bear witness to the fact that whilst the form is in constant process of change, a change which destroys the individuality, the matter or force is alone permanent. If all men are to live eternally, then the good and bad alike must have immortality. In himself he could see no advantage if the evil and the good are equally to be perpetuated. With regard to such epithets as sceptic and atheist he had no fear of them. What he did think was, that it would be better for all to keep their attention fixed upon things lying at their own doors, whose claims upon their thought and effort were urgent, for they could do little to solve the questions touched upon by Mr. Channing. Whatever idea they might form of God, it would change from age to age, and he did feel, if men could be imbued with love for each other and faith in the future progress of the race, it would do far more to change discord into harmony and misery into happiness than would be done by endeavouring to solve these insoluble problems, and making a proper understanding of them the sole basis of right conduct. It was nothing to him to say that experience and knowledge had led a man to believe in the absolute truth of these doctrines. The same influences had produced precisely contrary results, and he did not see that in these matters we were any nearer a satisfactory solution than we were three thousand years ago. (Applause.)

Mr. I. ATKIN said as to the God-idea in history he agreed with Mr. Channing. He believed also that different great men were inspired but it did not follow that they were inspired from the same source. Socrates, for instance, supposed himself to be inspired by his demon. Mozart, too, might be inspired for music, just as any artist might be inspired in the way of his genius.

The Rev. J. FREESTON said they were constantly taking up the practical problems of the day as Mr. Reynolds desired. Practically they were also called upon to deal with the ever unsatisfied yearning of the soul after God and immortality, just as Dr. Channing, when the end was near, was profoundly impressed with a rush of thoughts and visions of immensity, so by nature and in nature amongst the flowers of the field, they were constantly struck with the idea that God and immortality are grand realities. Mr. Freeston then thanked Mr. Channing for his beautiful address.

Mr. JOHN THOMAS thought with Mr. Reynolds that the burden of proof rested on those who took up the affirmative position. Was it right to say you demanded immortality as needful to gain the fruits of a true life? It appeared to him that men had their true rewards for their deeds in this life. Nothing he had heard from Mr. Channing made the great problems he had discussed less difficult.

The Rev. S. A. STEINTHAL expressed his indebtedness to Mr. Channing for his lecture, for which he moved a vote of thanks to him, and expressed his conviction that the work done in this life would bear fruit in the next.

The Rev. J. B. LLOYD seconded the motion, and said he felt it would be a good thing for all of them if they could infuse some of Mr. Channing's intense enthusiasm into their work.

The motion was carried.

The Rev. W. H. CHANNING, in reply, assured Mr. Reynolds that he entertained far from a contemptuous feeling towards those who held negative views. In his own congregation in America he always had persons of that class, and once it happened in a severe storm that he went to preach and found only two Owenite Socialists present. One was an ordinary working man, but very intelligent, and they adjourned to his house and there talked it out. He only wished he could do the same with Mr. Reynolds and Mr. Thomas. He could assure them he was not an enthusiastic book-worm, but a man of experience in the actualities of life. He began first to labour among criminals, and then he turned his attention to penitentiary work and among the fallen, and then again to the emancipation of the slave. Mr. Towne's story gave a part of the truth; it reminded him of the grand old story of St. Christopher, who found the child he carried to be the Christ-child. What seemed to him to be true was this, that men carry their burdens with greater cheerfulness when they felt they had a Heavenly Father's love to fall back upon and the hope of an immortal life. Mr. Reynolds seemed to think that his (Mr. C.'s) views implied that the souls of the vicious were also immortal. Well so be it. He was willing, for instance to indulge the hope that the little child killed by Constance Kent might be the agent in God's Providence to lead her, purified and made blessed, to the throne of mercy. Mr. Channing closed an earnest reply by again expressing his strong assurance in the views he had set before them, and the meeting, one of the most interesting we have attended, was brought to a close, with thanks to the chair.

BOOKS AND AUTHORS.

The University Magazine for May... Hurst and Blackett.

WHILE catering for University men in lively correspondence from the several University seats, this new magazine keeps up its interest for the general public with the variety and excellence of its articles. Optimists will gather assurance from Mr. F. R. Conder's paper on the Later History of England. Those who have not reached the heights of Optimism will find grave matter in Mr. Alsager Hill's on Middle Class Destitution. Thoughtful people will turn to what Mrs. Boole has to tell of "Maurice and the National Church," and will come away with much food for reflection. Karl Blind concludes his account of the Ethic Ideas of the Edda; and the Notes and Reminiscences of the late W. H. Harrison, so delightfully introduced to us last month by Mr. Ruskin, commence with anecdotes of Coleridge, Etty, William Allen, Beckford, D. Croly, J. M. W. Turner, and others. Mathematicians and Spiritualists may shake hands here over the curious "Mystery of the Fourth Dimension of Space;" while out-and-out mystics have a peculiarly attractive subject in musings upon The Other Half. The contemporary portrait is that of the Right Hon. W. H. Smith, M.P., First Lord of the Admiralty. Mabel Collins continues her story "In this World;" and Mr. Tighe Hopkins presents a critical portrait of the reigning Louis the Eleventh, in which Mr. Irving, as Louis, receives high, but also keenly appreciative praise, which we think is altogether his due.

OLDHAM.—On Sunday last, the Rev. F. H. Jones, B.A., entered upon his duties as minister of Lord-street Chapel, and preached morning and evening to good congregations.

HUDDERSFIELD: CONCERTS IN THE CHURCH.—The seventh and last of the series of literary and musical evenings for the season 1877-8, the fifth season—took place on May 1st, in the schoolroom attached to the Fitzwilliam-street Church. This last evening was as happy and successful as the six preceding, all being crowded beyond possibility of seat-accommodation. The orchestra at these soirées numbers forty-two performers. It originated with the school-teachers, was fostered by the minister—the Rev. J. Thomas, B.A.—and as it grew in excellence was joined by outsiders, until now it is equal to the rendering of classical works, and furnishes instrumentalists to the local choral society, and for the other choral and philharmonic societies of the West Riding. Combined with the readers, vocalists, and pianists, ladies and gentlemen of the church and not of the church, who have assisted on each occasion, the orchestra has put competition beyond the power of neighbouring congregations. It is now proposed to attempt an occasional musical service in the church with the aid of the orchestra and a strengthened choir. As this may prove an interesting experiment for other free churches, due notice will be given in the Herald of the opening day, that individuals in those churches may have an opportunity of attending and judging for themselves.

LIFE-LADEN SPRING.

Green herald of Summer, fresh life-laden Spring,
With glad hearts and grateful thy welcome we sing,
Sweetest of seasons, bright, faith-giving Spring.

With your burden of bursting buds, life-laden Spring,
Such gleams of God's Love from earth's dark breast you bring,
And things divine round our pathways you fling.

Oh! speak to the sick at heart, hope-giving Spring:
Whisper—"Earth's cares depart and grief taketh wing";
Oh! soothe the sad troubled souls, balm-breathing Spring.

Unto Thee, the renewer of every fresh Spring,
From the myriads of flower-cups clear harmonies ring
With their gladness—thus blessing Thee, Father of Spring.

"Our Father, we entre thee, so freshen our life,
Send the light of Thy Love where doubt's dark clouds are rife;
Oh! send faith and strength for the heavenward strife.

ISA H. G.

The Unitarian Herald.

FRIDAY, MAY 10, 1878.

A SCOTTISH MINISTER ON HELL.

The discussion in the Glasgow Presbytery on the Fergus Ferguson case brought out several heretics of a mild kind, and so far has served, among other purposes, to show the modified tone of orthodoxy. The time when hell was a strangely attractive subject, and when it lighted up with an unearthly glare many a discourse which otherwise would have lacked in fire, has gone by. It has been a very useful auxiliary to the orthodox heaven; but now that it appears heaven can be peopled without it, the orthodox pulpit is dispensing with its questionable aid. Divines are no longer eager to profess familiarity with the features that it used to wear. They are even to dispossess it of its old repulsive and barbarous material associations, and to be fairly done with the extreme and revolting form in which the doctrine has been held. To cast off so much of it is a distinct advance, and may be accepted as the beginning of a complete renunciation. This is the kind of step that some Scottish theologians, fearful at present to think too well of God, appear to be taking. For instance, in the discussion referred to, the Rev. Mr. Rennie said "that those of them who felt it to be their duty to hold and to preach the doctrine of the everlasting perdition of the wicked at the same time had no sympathy with what had been called a 'fire and brimstone' style of preaching the Gospel, or with those who so taught this awful doctrine as to impress their hearers with the idea that they rather delighted in anticipating the dreadful doom that awaits the ungodly, and the heartlessness of whom, speaking generally, was only equalled by their ignorance and vulgarity. He should go a step further, and say for himself that he had difficulty in understanding the nature and operations of the Christian heart which had not at times, as the deep shadow of the dread thought of eternal woe enveloped it, wished that something else and something less agonisingly painful to contemplate were the truth. But what they had to do with was not how some men preached this doctrine, or what the heart of man might wish to be the truth, but simply what saith the Scripture. The future destiny, alike of the righteous and of the wicked, was a matter of pure revelation, and therefore their appeal must not be to human feeling or human philosophy, but to the Word of God." Mr. Rennie's appeal to the Bible is a rightful appeal; that is, it is orthodox. There is no basis for the doctrine in human feeling, human philosophy, or human common sense. It has no hold whatever, except in "sound believing." The Church cannot afford to give up hell, and still adhere to the dogmas of election, original sin, and all the rest of the dreary catalogue. Men would believe such awful teachings on no other ground than that "hangman's whip," the fear of hell. That is the key-stone of the whole arch. Withdraw it, and the entire system of orthodoxy falls into a hopeless and confused mass of ruins.

SIR CHARLES REED ON SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

At the annual meeting of the Sunday School Union in Exeter Hall, London, Sir CHARLES REED was in the chair. The report stated that there were 12 metropolitan associations, which had 814 schools, 19,681 teachers, 196 local unions, with 3,439 schools, 83,988 teachers, with a total of 951,063 scholars. Abroad the Union had agents in seven different countries. The Union had obtained an allotment of space at the Paris Exhibition for the publications of the society. As the year 1880 would usher in the centenary of Sunday schools, the committee had decided upon celebrating the event by an International Convention, and had appointed a large sub-committee to consider in what manner this could best be done; if possible, representatives would be secured from every land in which Sunday-schools existed.

The CHAIRMAN spoke of Sunday schools as one of the great forces at work in this country for good, which enabled the people to be their own police. How, he asked, could they better check the circulation of blasphemous and lascivious literature, and put a healthy literature in its place, than by such an agency as the library which was to be found in every well-conducted Sunday school? How should they better meet the curse of intemperance than by teaching children in the Sunday school bands of hope the folly and wickedness of drunkenness? Where had people been better instructed than in the Sunday school in reference to the blessings of peace and the horrors of war? He attributed in its fair measure to the influence of Sunday schools the fact that the main body, the backbone of the people, were opposed to war, and that if the country was ever allowed to go to war, it must be because the people understood the reason why. If our Protestantism were to be secured, his hopes rested in the Sunday schools. The chairman then bore testimony to the educational work which had been done by Sunday schools, and referred to recent evidences of the recognition of the importance of the Sunday-school movement, such as the acceptance of the office of President of the Union by one of Her Majesty's judges, Mr. Justice Lush, the speech of Mr. Bright at Rochdale, and the attendance of a Royal Princess at the Sunday-school Musical Festival. He concluded by pointing out the necessity of taking a higher tone, making the class more of a Bible class, and of having the schools in the districts in which the children dwell.

The Late Rev. William M'Cullough.

WE deeply regret to announce the death of this excellent young minister, which took place on the morning of Tuesday, 30th ult., at his residence, Clonlee, Larne, after an illness extending over three months. Mr. M'Cullough, who was only in his 28th year at the time of his decease, was born near Ballyclare, County Antrim, and received the rudiments of his education in one of the national schools of the district. From childhood he showed considerable aptitude for learning, and, as he grew up, he was enabled to take the post of assistant teacher. He was of a gentle and amiable disposition, and one who knew him from infancy says he early expressed a desire to become a minister, though he did not see how his desire was to be realised. From Ballyclare he removed to Cradley, Worcestershire, to assist in a school there connected with the Rev. W. Cochrane's congregation, and while engaged in the faithful discharge of his duties in this place he found that the Unitarian Home Missionary Board offered facilities for attaining his long and deeply cherished purpose. He was admitted as a student of the institution in 1869, and remained during the usual term of three years. The manner in which he fulfilled his various duties as a student won the approval of the tutors and the committee, and when he left the Board in 1873 bright hopes of his future career were entertained by many friends. Desiring a settlement in his native land, one offered shortly after he had completed his course of training, when the old congregation of Warrenpoint, County Down, gave him a cordial and unanimous call, which he accepted. In this charming spot, where a small but earnest and united band of worshippers has long held together, Mr. M'Cullough commenced his ministry, which, though lasting little more than two years, was highly valued, and showed signs of growing power. His services were sought after by larger and more prominent congregations, and in 1875, when the Rev. Classon Porter, of Larne, who has been minister of the Old Presbyterian congregation for upwards of forty years, requested his congregation to appoint an assistant, Mr. M'Cullough was unanimously chosen, and, after due consideration, he decided to accept the invitation.

The congregation of Larne is one of the largest in connection with the Nonsubscribing body, and the members are scattered over a wide area. In addition to conducting morning and evening services every Sunday, and teaching in the Sunday school, Mr. M'Cullough preached once a month in the Kilwroughton Orange Hall to large and appreciative congregations; and besides holding week-evening classes, he was unwearied in his attention to his people in their own homes. Few ministers in so short a career have ever gained a higher place in general estimation. He was devoted to the members of his flock, and spared no effort to serve them, and he was daily growing in their esteem and regard. He had a high sense of the duties and responsibilities of the minister's calling, and he was diligent and exemplary in his endeavours to be faithful to his ideal. Gentle, unassuming, kind and cheerful, desiring ever to be useful, showing in all things the working of the true religious spirit, he went on his way. But some months since, it was evident that his health was failing, and he had some thoughts of seeking relief in change of scene. On the last Sunday of January he fulfilled an engagement at Mountpottinger, and on the following Sunday he was unable to conduct the evening service in his own meeting-house, and for three months he was confined by the severe illness which at last brought his youthful career to a close. Mr. M'Cullough was married while he resided at Warrenpoint to a daughter of the late Rev. Joseph M'Fadden, of Ballyclare, and he leaves a widow, but no family. The funeral took place on Friday last, and was very largely attended, there being present the Revs. Classon Porter, C. J. M'Alister, R. J. Orr, J. C. Street, Alex. Gordon, D. Thompson, J. Jellie, Moore Getty, John Hall, Joseph Pollard, Jas. Kedwards, James Colwell; other ministers, S. Black (Epis.), F. McKenna (R.C.), J. B. Meek, J. M'Murray, and S. E. Stewart (Pres.), and the Methodist minister. In accordance with the wishes of the deceased, the Rev. Classon Porter, senior pastor, conducted the religious services. The coffin was borne on the shoulders of members of the congregation from Clonlee to the old meeting-house, through Mainstreet, Larne, and was followed by a large concourse, in which all the churches in the town and neighbourhood were represented. There were eighteen ministers present. The pulpit and choir of the church were draped with mourning, and on each side of the pulpit on the wall was a memorial wreath. Mr. Porter, after reading Job xiv. and I. Cor. xv., 1-58, delivered a brief but very impressive address, in which he spoke of the many good qualities of the departed young minister, and expressed his keen sense of the loss sustained by the congregation and himself. In all the relations of life, he said, Mr. M'Cullough was an estimable man. After a hymn had been sung and prayer offered, the interment took place in the meeting-house green. During Mr. M'Cullough's illness Mr. Porter has conducted the morning service, and Mr. Kedwards, of Raloo, has presided in the evening.

The Late Samuel Broderick, of Dukinfield.

Mr. Samuel Broderick, of Dukinfield, died there on Friday, April 26th, in the 72nd year of his age. His character and life demand a special notice in connection with the interests of Unitarian Christianity. His worldly position was that of a small grocer and bookseller; but his trade did not at all express the degree of his influence. All his business transactions were marked by the strictest honesty; and he was distinguished by an honourable fidelity to all the social relations he sustained: but, in addition to this, he was the servant of every good cause which it was possible for him to assist. He became, when a boy, a scholar in the Sunday school of the old chapel, Dukinfield, and afterwards for forty-two years he acted there as teacher, superintendent, and director successively. The great work of his life may be said to have lain in the duties imposed upon him by that institution. Towards all those institutions he had the strongest attachment. Whatever he did in their discharge was done from the fullness of his heart. No peer of the realm could be prouder of his order than he was of the influence which his Sunday school employments obtained for him. His exertions in this department of usefulness were eminently successful; and the papers he has left behind him, consisting mainly of addresses he delivered to scholars and teachers, attest the great importance he attributed to his work, and the diligence with which he set himself to fulfil it. Besides his attention to Sunday school affairs, he was always ready to forward, by personal exertion, any business in which he was interested. He withheld no practical help he could give. He was willing to make any self-sacrifice which his efforts required. The cause of education in all its forms; the cause of Liberal politics; and above all the cause of religion as expressed by the place of worship he attended, received his ardent and constant support. He was the right-hand man of the minister of the Dukinfield Old Chapel in everything he had time and opportunity to undertake, and whatever seemed to contribute to the success of the administration of that chapel, or increased the credit belonging to it, was cherished as among his greatest pleasures. He was a member of the select vestry, and afterwards an overseer of the township to the time of his death. He served several times upon the Board of Guardians, and acted at one period as a relieving officer. He was a trustee of the chapel, and a member of the Congregational committee. He was one of the founders of the Ashton Mechanics' Institute, and of the Dukinfield Village Library. During the cotton panic he was noted for his unwearied labours in distributing relief to the distressed; and no political contest occurred in his neighbourhood in which he was not one of the most prominent agents. A more familiar figure than his could not be seen in the public gatherings for ecclesiastical or civil or social purposes with which he sympathised within a wide circle around the locality where he lived. It might be thought that a man of such extensive activity was distinguished by popular talents; but that was not the case. He had but little facility of speech; and his native modesty restrained him from public display; so that the reputation he secured was solely attributable to the solid worth of his character. He was, according to his circumstances, a cultivated man. At the beginning of life he took resolutely to reading, and whatever he professed to know he knew accurately. His information mainly lay in the line of theological inquiries he had pursued, and there his competency was very clearly apparent. He was a most decided Unitarian, but his Unitarianism was distinctly and intensely Christian. Religion was the breath of his life. Matters of opinion were made by him subservient to the piety which constituted the elements of his spiritual being. With himself, in his family, in his shop, in the church, in the school, and in the world he acted under the faith and fear, the love and obedience of God. He was buried in the graveyard which surrounds the Old Chapel, Dukinfield, on Tuesday, April 30th, amid such testimonies of respect in the numbers and character of the persons attending his funeral as fall to the lot of few men among the rich and great. The service was performed by his friend, the Rev. John Gordon. A memorial sermon, on his account, will be preached in the Old Chapel next Sunday (May 12) by the Rev. G. Hamilton Vance, the minister of the place.

THE HIBBERT LECTURE.

II.—FETISHISM.

The second lecture of the course was delivered by Professor Max Müller in the Chapter House, Westminster Abbey, on Thursday week, morning and afternoon. After briefly recapitulating the former lecture, the Professor said the question now about to be treated, "Is Fetishism a Primitive Form of Religion?" led into a new path—that of historical research. It was to be shown how the consciousness of the Infinite, hidden in every fold of man's earliest impressions, was unfolded in a thousand different ways, shedding its coarser ingredients until it soared to the present heights of human thought. In turning to that history he found that books written during the last hundred years were all agreed that the earliest form of religion is Fetishism. Such striking agreement awakened his suspicions. He had traced the word "fetishism" to its source, and found that it was first used by Voltaire's friend, de Brosse, in a work known to have been his, but published anonymously in 1760, in which a parallel was drawn between the ancient religion of Egypt and the religion of the negroes. De Brosse held that all nations, save the Jews, began with fetish worship. He did not observe that the Teraphim, the Urim and Thummim, not to speak of golden calves and brazen serpents, were as ready to his hand as similar objects in the worship of Egypt or Greece. The theory of De Brosse had stood its ground to this day, and the lecturer owned that he had clung to it until startled by the fact that no clear traces of fetishism appear in the earliest documents; that they are far more abundant in modern Brahmanism than in the Vedas. It seemed that the Catholic navigators were led to call the objects worshipped by the negroes feiticos, or amulets, because they were familiar with amulets—crosses and beads—in their own worship. It would have been quite as natural for the negroes to have said that the Portuguese worshipped grugrus. The word fetish was the Latin factus, something "made by hand," then applied to what is artificial, enchanted, magical. The lecturer quoted the French writer's description of the national and private fetishes of the negroes, and then proceeded to remark, that while it was necessary to study savage life in order to understand civilised life, caution was also required, as it had been shown by Mr. Herbert Spencer that the races of mankind had passed through many ups and downs. Retrogression had been as frequent as progression. Abraham believed in one God, while Solomon built high places for Chemoth and Moloch. The Hindoos many thousand years ago reached the heights of philosophy; now they worship cows and monkeys. What he wished to put clearly before his audience was (1) that there is hardly any religion entirely free from the use of some fetish; (2) that no religion is confined merely to fetishism. Every emblem became a fetish when its original meaning was forgotten. We might see a survival of fetishism in the stone on which our Sovereigns are crowned. Such generalisations however, while of great value, must be followed by a specific inquiry how each fetish actually became such. Professor Max Müller proceeded, therefore, to take up what was known of the negro religions. No tribe, he said, had been found without reverence for something beyond its fetishes. That the real religion of the negro was distinct from the practice of fetishism was shown by reference to the writings of Waitz, Tylor, and Wilson. The Ashantees and others believed in a personal Creator, whom they named after the sky, under whom there were good and evil spirits; but only the latter required to be propitiated by sacrifice. A fetish priest, of the Gold Coast, speaking of Jongman, the sky, said, "Do we not see the corn and trees grow by the rain which He sends? How should He not be the Creator?" The lecturer described the worship of various African races, showing that their religion is many-sided. Fetishism abounds in it more than among other peoples, but in it there is also the worship of inferior spirits, as inhabiting old trees, &c., and a feeling after a Supreme Spirit who is revealed in the light of the sky. Both sun and moon are worshipped—the latter as the ruler of the months and the ordainer of human life. To explain the reasons for the worship of certain plants and animals was a very difficult problem. In conclusion, Professor Max Müller expressed his conviction that Fetishism is a corruption of a higher form of religion.

THE LONDON DISTRICT UNITARIAN SOCIETY.

ON Wednesday night the annual meeting of this society was held in the Stamford-street Chapel, Blackfriars, London; Sir James Clarke Lawrence, Bart., M.P., in the chair. The following is the substance of the report submitted to the meeting. We regret to say our report of the proceedings came to hand much too late for insertion this week.

THE SOCIETY'S WORK IN LONDON.

Your committee consider that they may fairly lay claim to having paid due regard to all matters that lie within the scope of their operations. Complaints have been made, on the one hand, that the committee expend far more than they are justified in doing on one particular object; while, on the other hand, fault is found that the society is not doing any useful work which can entitle it to the support for which the committee ask. Looking back to the past workings of the society, your committee are more than ever convinced that, wherever a really strong nucleus is found, there is the place to concentrate their efforts; and the point with much satisfaction to Stamford-street, Croydon, Notting Hill, South Camberwell, and Stepney, as proofs that such a policy is not a mistaken one. The most important work that has engaged their attention during the past twelve months has been the building up and sustaining of the congregation at College Chapel, Stepney Green, which, as will be seen from the interesting report of Mr. Spears, has fully justified the committee in the course that they have adopted in endeavouring to establish a Unitarian church in the East of London; and your committee confidently anticipate that in a few years it will become self-supporting. The whole sum required for the purchase of the chapel, and for building the schoolroom, amounting to £2,377. 18s. 6d., has been defrayed, with the exception of £162. 5s. 8d., for which your society has incurred the responsibility, thereby relieving the funds of a charge of £45 per annum hitherto paid for interest on the loan. In addition, your committee regard with much satisfaction the Sunday evening services which for the past autumn and winter have been carried on in the chapel at Stratford, kindly placed at their disposal by the Rev. T. Rix. There has been an average attendance of over fifty, and your committee, believing that a good congregation will eventually be formed here, have resolved to continue the effort for another six months. Your committee are glad to take this opportunity of offering their cordial acknowledgment of the work which is being done by the Rev. T. Crow and his friends at Rokeby House, Stratford, in endeavouring to put forth rational views of religion. The chapel in St. John's Square, Clerkenwell, was closed on 11th November, 1877, and is now pulled down for street improvements; but some members of the congregation, and the greater part of the Sunday scholars and teachers, have attached themselves to the Domestic Mission at George's Row, St. Luke's. The services at Bass's Rooms, Pimlico, have been conducted by Mr. J. Leach almost continuously during the past nine months, to the evident satisfaction of the few devoted friends who supported the cause there, but without materially increasing the congregation. Your committee, while thanking Mr. Leach for the energy and trouble which he has displayed, have reluctantly felt themselves bound to support the conclusion at which the congregation has arrived, that, owing to the unsuitableness of the room in which the services have been held, and to the impossibility of finding a better one, no permanent church can at present be established in this neighbourhood; and the effort has accordingly been discontinued. Open air services have been again conducted by some members of your committee and other friends in various districts of South London, which were well attended; and it is hoped that they have been productive of some good. The members of the Lay Preaching Fraternity have assisted in this movement, and have been helpful in supplying vacant pulpits during the past year; and your committee believe that this branch of their work will eventually be found to embrace a large sphere of usefulness. Two successful courses of four lectures each were given in March last, the one in Essex-street Chapel, Strand, and the other in the Town Hall, Hammersmith, by the Revs. C. Howe, J. T. Whitehead, R. Spears, and T. W. Freckleton. Both courses were attended by appreciative audiences, and at Hammersmith such a spirit of enquiry was shown, as to make your committee seriously consider the desirability of some further effort. They will be pleased at receiving any suggestions from friends in that neighbourhood who would be disposed to assist in such a movement. During the past season your committee, bearing in mind that one of the objects of the Society, as laid down in its Rules, is to promote a closer union amongst the members of the different Unitarian congregations in London, have re-instituted the Social Meetings which were successful in the earlier years of the society. Three such meetings have accordingly been held. The addresses were on each occasion followed by interesting discussions, and your committee regard the meetings as having been eminently satisfactory. Your committee have been for some time engaged in endeavouring to commence an effort to establish a Unitarian congregation at Edmonton or Tottenham, but difficulties in obtaining a place of meeting have arisen, by which the attempt has been for the present frustrated, although not abandoned. Several of the populous districts immediately surrounding the metropolis seem to present opportunities for the establishment of Unitarian Churches, but while your committee feel that it is not possible, with the limited means placed at their disposal, to undertake any extensive sphere of operations, they will be glad to make arrangements for the delivery of lectures in places which appear to offer a promising field for such a result. In conclusion, your committee cannot but express their belief that the action of the society is materially assisting the steady progress of those more rational and elevating views of theology which it is one of its principal objects to promote. They appeal, therefore, with great confidence to all those who are desirous of the spread of liberal Christianity to place at their disposal an increased income.

The total income of the society, including a balance from last year of £17. 14s. 2d., had been £516. 11s. 8d., and the expenditure £509. 8s. 2d., leaving in hand £7. 3s. 6d. Of this expenditure, £392. 7s. 8d. had been to Stepney, £205. 2s. to the minister and chapel, and £187. 5s. 8d. to the building fund.

STEPNEY: REPORT OF REV. R. SPEARS.

The first and chief difficulty which presented itself at Stepney was that of enrolling members under rules—with an agreement that a sum of money must be subscribed annually by each member to support the worship and to meet the expenses. This has been overcome, and the society is now fairly organised, with the conditions of membership and the right of taking part in the business meetings of the Church. The rules are simple, affirming that at least five shillings a year must be paid by persons of good character above eighteen years of age, and that before taking any part in the business arrangements of the church they shall be enrolled one year. In the matter of congregational finance, the offertory this year has yielded over £80; members' subscriptions, donations, &c., about £25; for Sunday school and other purposes connected with the building and church about £40 have been raised, making a sum total of over £140. It will still need an income of nearly double the present to make an absolutely independent church. The Stepney society will therefore be dependent for some time longer on the generous help of the London District Unitarian Society. The attendance on public worship in the mornings has scarcely exceeded this year the average of last year's attendance. The evening services have been attended remarkably well during the past three months; largely above the average of any previous period since Unitarian services were commenced in East London. We have not as yet a large number of enrolled members, but there are over 120 persons above sixteen years of age who attend on an average once on a Sunday; less than half of these in the morning; about three-fourths, as a rule, in the evening; and with strangers we have often of late had from 100 to 130, and sometimes more, in an evening. The Sunday school is very fairly prosperous, and I believe doing much good. An efficient band of from twelve to eighteen teachers attend regularly to about 140 children, the average at school being from 100 to 120. The new schoolroom has been made available for various social meetings, penny readings, concerts, and other useful gatherings. On the whole, though we have made little progress in respect to the enrolment of new members, we have all reason to believe that some progress is being made at Stepney to the establishment of an independent Unitarian Christian Church.

The report, on the motion of the Chairman, seconded by Mr. J. T. Preston, was adopted; and addresses were delivered by the Revs. T. Dunkerley, H. Ierson, M.A., J. Worthington, Mr. Jeffery, and Mr. Herbert New. A vote of thanks was then given to the Chairman.

BEWARE!—An impostor is going about victimising all whom he may in our body. He calls himself George Lloyd, a Unitarian, and says that he was a member of the Birkenhead congregation, and that his uncle is the Rev. W. Jones [should be Thomas], of Prescott. He has been pursuing his calling in and about Doncaster since Saturday.

BRITISH AND FOREIGN UNITARIAN ASSOCIATION.

THE following is the report of the Executive Committee presented at the meeting of the Council on Wednesday last, May 8th, 1878:—

In accordance with the instruction of the last meeting of the Council respecting the question of Dissenters' Burials in the parochial churchyards, the committee learning that Mr. Osborne Morgan intended to propose a motion upon the subject in the House of Commons on the 15th of February consulted with him as to the desirableness of petitioning in favour of his resolution, and a petition to this effect signed by the president on behalf of the Association was presented to the House on that occasion by Sir James Clarke Lawrence, Bart. The present year being the 50th anniversary of the Repeal of the Corporation and Test Acts, it is intended to present an address to Earl Russell who had the charge of the measure in the House of Commons. The bill became law on the 9th of May, 1828, the British and Foreign Unitarian Association cordially supporting the movement in its favour; and the Committee having been invited to join in the deputation for this purpose, have requested the President to represent the Association on that occasion.

According to the desire of the Council expressed at the last meeting, letters of condolence have been sent to the relatives of several late members of the Council, and also to Bishop Ferencz, in reply to his notification of the decease of one of the oldest and most respected members of the Unitarian community in Hungary.

Other valued members of the Council have since died, Mr. Edward Nettlefold, for some years a member of the Executive Committee, and recently treasurer of the Association; the Rev. Samuel Martin, and the Rev. J. Colston, both distinguished for many services rendered to the Association in past years. The Committee regret also the decease of the Rev. T. E. Poynting, the preacher at the annual meeting of two years ago. They could not but place on record in this report the expression of their sorrow at the loss of so many faithful and earnest friends of the Association.

The Committee have the pleasure to report that according to the request of the Council, the Rev. William Binns has consented to preach the sermon, and the Rev. Richard A. Armstrong to conduct the devotional service at the annual meeting.

The Conference papers will be read by Mr. Frank Taylor, of Bolton, and the Rev. A. W. Worthington, B.A., of Mansfield.

It is proposed that the service on the 12th June be held at the Essex-street Chapel, to commence at half-past eleven o'clock; the chair to be taken for the annual meeting at half-past one.

The Conference on June 13 to commence at eleven o'clock; and in the afternoon of the same day will be a collation at four, at the Alexandra Palace, Muswell Hill.

The following grants have been made for the present year:—Manchester Association, £50; Western Union, £50; Kent and Sussex Association, £118; Cambridge, £100; Guildford, £25; Bedford, £20; Midland Union, £20; ditto for Newark, —; Eastern Mission, £60; East Cheshire Union, £150; Scottish Association, £100; Dundee, £85; Perth, £100; West Riding, £60; London District Association, £50; Northumberland and Durham Association, £130; Midland Union, £110; Belfast Association, £90; ditto for Ballymena, £5; Mountpottinger, £20; Cwmawrdu, £5; East Lancashire, £60; Madras, £25; Reading, £22; Peele, £15; Onenawr, £5; Penrhwy, £5.

To the Rev. M. Jochumsson the balance of £25 has been paid, completing the sum which had been promised for his services at Keykjavik.

Grants have been made according to the original scheme of the Jubilee Fund for the support of the ministry at Scarborough and Reading to the amount of £300 to spread over four years, these being congregations to which building grants had been made from the funds.

A grant has been made in aid of the new church at Colne, Lancashire.

The following grants of tracts have been made:—To Smethwick, for lectures under the charge of Rev. J. Cuckson, 1,000; for distribution in South Wales, 400; to Lynn, 700; to the London Association, for lectures at Essex-street and Hammersmith, 1,200; to Cape Town, 200; to Reading, 6,800; to the book hawkers at Dunsbury, 300; to Chelmsford, 300.

Copies of Dr. Channing's, of Parker's, and other works have been sent to Bishop Auckland, South Wales, Paris, and to various ministers of different denominations, and grants of books have been presented to four ministers, as also to chapel bazaars at Middleton, and Commission-street Bolton, and to Whitechurch for the Sunday-school library.

Of several tracts published by the authors, a number of copies have been taken, viz., a "Life of Dr. Channing," by Miss Emily Sharpe; the first "Sermon" of his ministry at Cambridge, by the Rev. A. Chalmers; and a sermon by the Rev. A. Payne, on "True Religion."

An edition of 500 copies of "Christ Imitable" has been reprinted, the old stock being exhausted. It has been revised for this purpose by the author, the Rev. E. Higginson. Dr. G. Vance Smith is engaged by the desire of the committee, upon a tract on "The Prophets and their Interpreters." The committee have accepted with thanks the gift of five hundred copies of Mr. Hopgood's "Statement of Unitarian Christianity" for gratuitous distribution. They are pleased to state that the work by the late M. Coquerel on Conscience and Faith, which has been translated by the Rev. J. E. Odgers, M.A., is now on sale in the rooms.

Considering the strong interest now manifest in Scotland in questions of liberal theology, the committee have authorised an extensive advertisement of Unitarian works in certain Scottish journals of large circulation. They have also taken advantage of the desire that is very commonly felt to understand more clearly the facts of the important conflict of opinion of which in America Dr. Gannett and Theodore Parker were amongst the foremost representatives, to offer to ministers at reduced rates the Life of Parker, by J. Weiss, and the Life of Dr. Gannett, by his Son.

The Committee were represented at the annual meeting of the East Lancashire Unitarian Mission at Chorlton, also at the annual meeting of the East Cheshire Union at Glossop. A most encouraging report was given by the secretary to the Committee after his visit to Glossop of the admirable work that was being carried on there by the Rev. F. Ashton. They deplore, in sympathy with the Committee of the East Cheshire Union, the recent loss of a coadjutor so justly esteemed and so devoted to the cause of the mission.

At the recent meeting of the Unitarian Society at Belfast, the Rev. H. E. Dowson was requested to represent the Association.

The Committee are in correspondence with M. Carenon respecting a generous offer on the part of the Liberal French Protestants to place at their disposal the Salle St. André for English services during the "Exposition," and to receive such ministers as might be appointed to conduct them. Though it may be that English Unitarians visiting Paris are likely to feel the want of such services in their own language, the Committee would be glad to give a cordial response to the kind suggestion of our friends in Paris, and they have expressed their readiness to co-operate in carrying it out by communication with English ministers who may be shortly visiting the French capital.

DOB LANE, FAILSWORTH.

LAYING OF FOUNDATION STONE.

ON Saturday last the foundation stone of the new chapel to be erected at Dob Lane was laid in the presence of a large assembly. At four o'clock the members and friends of the congregation, preceded by their brass band, walked in procession through the main thoroughfare of the district, and with the scholars of the Sunday school made quite an imposing demonstration. We noticed present, Alderman Grundy (Mayor of Manchester), Revs. Halliwell Thomas (minister of the chapel), W. G. Cadman, S. A. Steintahl, Silas Farrington, Jas. Black, M.A., J. T. Marriott, John McDowell; Messrs. Harry Rawson, John Thomas, Councillor I. Bowes, John Phillips, Wm. Adams (architect), David Adams (builder), Luke Pollitt, Thomas Rawson, J. Partington, Jesse Pilcher, Saml. Lawton, and Councillor Ben. Brierley. Shortly after four o'clock, a hymn having been sung,

The Rev. HALLIWELL THOMAS said most of those present who were cognisant of their history and efforts would know how hard they had struggled to attain their present position. Notwithstanding the badness of trade they had overcome their reluctance to destroy the old chapel, which had stood for a period of 200 years; and had succeeded in obtaining sufficient money to warrant their moving on with the rest of the world, and of trying to erect a new and handsome building. Before them there was a great future, and much important work to be done in seeking to combine in their worship of Almighty God Freedom and Reverence.

Mr. J. F. ALLEN then read a list of the articles placed in the bottle to be deposited under the stone, which included a historical sketch of the chapel, a copy of The Inquirer, of the Unitarian Herald, and of the Manchester papers which contained Mr. Bright's great speech at the Free-trade Hall, and the address to Mr. Gladstone.

Mr. LUKE POLLITT then said: The duty assigned to me to-day is a very pleasing and gratifying one in two several aspects. In the first place, because to-day we see the beginning of a work which the Dob Lane congregation have incessantly aimed at during the past six years, and in the second place because they have selected a gentleman to lay the foundation stone who has worked with the congregation heart and soul to find the means to build the new chapel, and who for a period of now nearly thirty years has taken an active and never-ceasing interest in the welfare of the Dob Lane congregation. I am extremely proud that to-day we are enabled to begin the structure that will in future be the home of the congregation, and feel sure it will be a building that will be a credit to them; and I am sure every one will join with me in the wish, that it may be consecrated to God and humanity in future time as much as the venerable structure which has for nearly 200 years stood upon this spot was in the past. To the congregation the old building was hallowed to them in many ways. Here the bones of the forefathers of many of them lie; here the fathers and mothers, the sisters and brothers, the husbands and wives, and many of the loved off-spring of the congregation are buried, and to them the ground they tread is hallowed ground; here many of the congregation have been married, and here many others have found their first and dearest attachments; and here all have worshipped the Great Father for the whole course of their lives, so that this spot is to them a

God's acre in the fullest and highest sense. The men who built the old and venerable chapel which has just been taken down, handed down to their successors a great and holy work, and the history of Dob Lane congregation shows that they knew how to use the noble heritage placed in their hands. I hope we who represent these good and holy men of the past show that in the work we are assembled to do to-day we are not altogether unworthy to be the successors of such self-denying and conscientious men, for to be a member of the Dob Lane congregation in past days was a much more trying thing than it is to-day, and I hope we may have the courage of our forefathers and dedicate our new structure to the worship of God as conscientiously and as fearlessly as did our forefathers in the past. Turning to Mr. Rawson he said: You have been selected to lay the foundation stone of this our future house of prayer and worship, and I trust the home of Christian liberty in this district for time to come, because of your long and close connection with the congregation. (Hear, hear.) For more than a quarter of a century you have aided them by your presence and advice in all their deliberations, you have always shown a kind interest in their welfare in every possible way, you have been accessible to them at all times and seasons, and to you more than to any other single individual we owe the deepest gratitude, as the one who has done most towards raising the means to build our new chapel. It is therefore a fitting and a becoming thing that the congregation have selected you for the honour. I have exceedingly great pleasure in their name, coupled with their best wishes, in presenting to you this trowel to lay the foundation stone of their new house of Praise and Prayer. (Applause.) The inscription on the trowel was—"Presented to Harry Rawson, Esq., as a mark of their esteem by the congregation, on his laying the foundation stone of their new chapel, Failsworth, May 4, 1878." The stone having been duly laid.

Mr. RAWSON said: I thank you very cordially, Mr. Pollitt, for the kind words you have addressed to me. To receive these assurances of the goodwill of the Dob Lane congregation, is indeed highly gratifying, the more so as they are offered through you, who so worthily represent your fellow worshippers. I consider the duty assigned to me to be a distinguished honour. [The stone, which bore the following words, was then laid:—"This stone was laid by Harry Rawson, May 4th, 1878. Architects, Adams and Son, King's Lynn; Builder, David Adams, Manchester."]

Mr. RAWSON then mounted the stone and said: I declare this stone well and truly laid. (Cheers.) Upon it is to be built a new chapel for the congregation of Dob Lane, Failsworth. It will be in substitution of, and in succession to, the venerable place of worship, which for nearly two hundred years had occupied this site. It was a humble and unpretending edifice, owning no adornment but the mantle of ivy with which nature had supplied its lack of art. It had been the religious home of many generations. Founded on self-sacrifice, it was a witness to the conscientious fidelity to conviction of its first preacher. Its pulpit had been successively occupied by a line of able, often learned, always godly men, constituting the true and only "Apostolical Succession" worthy of the name. It pursued a quiet, unobtrusive path of religious and educational usefulness. It had been in this neighbourhood, a centre of intellectual light—a shrine of earnest piety—a modest but not ineffectual plea for progress—an advocate in season and out of season, of civil and religious liberty. (Cheers.) To-day we have begun the erection of a new chapel. It will be based, as I have said, on the old site. Not only so, its spiritual, not less than its material foundation will be the same. It will maintain inviolate its proud privilege of an open trust. It will continue to be dedicated simply to the worship of God. Not one of the thousand creeds which distract the churches will here be submitted for subscription. Its members will doubtless hold opinions more or less definite on various doctrinal points. They will not conceal—they will probably take every suitable opportunity to explain and recommend them. But they will impose no yoke on their successors. Possession of this property will never be conditioned by the acceptance of specific views. (Hear, hear.) They will leave to the action of unfettered thought, criticism and discussion, the opinions which this congregation may hereafter entertain. Its doors will be barred by no confession of faith, but freely open to all who feel prompted to its communion by religious sympathy. (Applause.) If I may address a word, in conclusion, to the neighbours and friends of the congregation, I would thank them for their presence here in such large numbers to-day. I believe they are brought hither by a kindly and generous sympathy in a sacred work. I doubt not that their good wishes will attend it. The new edifice will be an ornament to the district. Its lines will bear evidence of artistic taste and skill. Every task undertaken within it will bear good fruit for the welfare of the community around it. Its brass band will enliven your streets with its strains; its band of hope will seek to save your young people from the destructive evils of intemperance; its library will supply useful and wholesome books to your homes; its savings bank will foster habits of economy and thrift; its discussion society will promote the friendly comparison and courteous expression of opinion; its day and Sunday school will instruct your children, and train them in the ways of virtue and piety; its worship will cultivate reverence, humility, and trust as the divinest graces of character; and find a fitting home for the highest sanctities of religion. (Cheers.) Finally, I express a hope in which I doubt not you will all join, that the walls of this new church may be reared in safety and peace; that no accident or untoward event of any kind may befall those engaged in their erection. We will earnestly desire that this edifice may be to many hearts, for many years, a shrine of the holiest affections and sympathies; a veritable House of God and Gate of Heaven; a perennial spring of inspiration and hope; and a source of untold blessings to the community in which its ministrations will be carried on. (Applause.)

Alderman C. S. GRUNDY, Mayor of Manchester, stepped upon the foundation stone, and was received with considerable applause. He said: I feel it almost a duty and altogether a privilege to be here. There is a deeper significance in our proceedings than the mere replacing of old materials by new. The building of an edifice, however humble, for Unitarian worship, is, to my mind, a solemn and sacred act. It bears our testimony to the great principle with which nature and revelation are pregnant, the undivided sovereignty of God. If we open our Bible we find as its first commandment "Thou shalt have no other gods but me." The stone upon which I stand is our response to the ancient proclamation, "Hear O Israel, the Lord your God is one Lord." If we come to the time of Christ, we find Him praying to "His Father and our Father, His God and our God." All the great landmarks of religious history bring into prominence the Unity of the Deity. From the earliest records of time until now there has been, sometimes but dimly seen, a continuous light of testimony borne by men to this fundamental religious truth. As I came here to-day I passed by a Jewish congregation dispersing. It is, as you know, their Sabbath. What an example of devotedness they set to us. Scattered as they are through the nations, how they survive through every change! What is the deep and mysterious meaning which underlies the perpetuation of their race? May it not be—I presume not to say it is—but may it not be that, because of their faithfulness to the worship of Jehovah, that though they originally viewed him as the God of their tribe only, and their long intercourse with the Gentile world has expanded that view into a partial perception of the God of Humanity—they have always clung to the grand monotheistic conception of an undivided Deity, that the Almighty will not suffer their race to become extinct? Any way, there is an undying vitality in the belief, and, notwithstanding the attractions of orthodoxy, the patronage of governments and the power of priests, the instinct of the unity of God cannot be extinguished in the breast of man. The stone which we lay to-day is our link in that endless chain. Our numbers may be few, but our fidelity may be great. If we are true to our light in our day and generation we may safely leave results to a higher power. (Applause.)

At the close of the Mayor's address a hymn was sung, and prayer offered by the Rev. S. A. Steinthal.

The style of the new building will be of the Gothic or Geometric period of the 13th century. The principal front will be to the south, and there will be an ornamental porch. Red brick will be used, relieved with stone dressings. The internal dimensions will be 56ft. by 30ft., and there will be sitting room for 300 people. The roof will be ceiled to the collar, and by this means it is expected that no difficulty will arise as to heating. The west end elevation will be surmounted by a bell turret, under which there will be a traceried window. The vestry will be on the north side, and underneath it the heating apparatus. The east end will be lighted by two traceried windows, and between the windows the pulpit, surmounted by a canopy, will be placed. An organ chamber or recess will be provided. The seats will be open, and the wood work generally of pitch pine. The total cost is estimated to be upwards of £2,000.

In the evening, a tea meeting was held in the Co-operative Hall, four hundred persons being present, and Mr. John Thomas in the chair. Mr. Luke Pollitt stated that they had promised £1,750, but they wanted £400 more. The Rev. S. A. Steinthal, in the course of his remarks, referred to their having put a copy of Mr. Bright's speech under the stone, and asked those present to sign a petition against war between England and Russia as unjustifiable and criminal.

The CHAIRMAN, in the course of a brief address, said that they had that day seen the arrival of a time to which many of them had looked forward for many years, and they had seen it under the most happy circumstances. He then went on to say that he looked upon Failsworth as his Unitarian birthplace, and spoke at length of his connection with the denomination. In conclusion, he expressed a hope that the chapel they were about to raise would long continue as a successor to the old structure, which had stood on the site which it would occupy, and be worthy of the great Being who sent them into the world. (Applause.)

Subsequently addresses were delivered by Mr. Jesse Pilcher, Rev. James Black, Mr. Allen, and Mr. L. Pollitt, and Mr. Ben Brierley gave one of his inimitable readings "On Presenting a Pair of Clogs to the Prince of Wales."

TROWBRIDGE.—The Rev. James Brown, of Clayton, near Bradford, Yorkshire, preached two sermons on Sunday last to the congregation worshipping at the Unitarian Chapel.

HANLEY.—On Sunday afternoon, April 28, an excellent sermon was delivered at the Mechanics' Institution, by the Unitarian minister, the Rev. J. C. Williams. The sermon was listened to with rapt attention.

BELFAST FREE CONGREGATIONAL UNION.

THE annual meeting of the above Union was held in the Lecture Hall, Rosemary-street, Belfast, under the presidency of J. M. DARBISHIRE, Esq. There were also present the Revs. J. C. Street, T. Leyland, R. C. Smith; Messrs. George Fisher, T. McClelland, J. Logan (Carrickfergus), Lamont (Moneyrea), Ferguson, D. W. Moore, R. McCalmont, M'Master (Moneyrea), John Ritchie, J. R. Neill, J. F. Mulligan, W. A. Adamson (Carrickfergus), &c., with a large number of ladies.

The CHAIRMAN gave a resume of the work done by the Union during the past year, referring particularly to the cottage and open-air services, to the ample discharge of pulpit engagements, and also to the spirit of religious freedom which had animated the action of the Union throughout. He felt particular pleasure that during his year of office a special protest had been passed against an attempt on the part of Mr. J. Hopwood, to establish a creed in their church. In the course of further remarks, he said he felt that, in resigning the presidency for the year, he might look forward to greater success in the future than in the past. (Applause.)

The SECRETARY (Rev. T. Leyland) read the minutes of the late conference, which were passed and signed.

The Rev. T. LEYLAND then presented the annual report, from which it appeared that at the last summer meeting it was resolved to hold the summer conferences and meetings in the following order:—The summer meetings at Moneyrea, the autumn meetings at Carrickfergus, the winter meetings at Hopeton-street, Belfast, and the spring annual meetings at Rosemary-street, Belfast. Suggestions had been made to modify this plan, but after careful consideration at one of the conferences it was thought best not to depart from it at present. The report then gave details as to lectures delivered, Sunday-schools and cottage and open air services, and with reference to marriage celebrations, it stated that a desire having been felt by the ministers of the Union that greater facilities were needed on this matter, the president of the Union entered into correspondence with the Registrar-General, and upon the presentation of the correspondence before the Union at the Rosemary-street Conference in April, 1877, Mr. Thomas McClelland and Mr. Hugh Hyndman were appointed a sub-committee to take such steps during the ensuing year as may be necessary to procure the same rights for the celebration of marriages to the members of the Free Congregational Union as were possessed by other religious bodies.

Mr. McCALMONT presented the statement of accounts, from which it appeared that the income had been £23. 15s. 1d., the expenditure £11. 16s. 2d., and the balance in hand £11. 18s. 11d.

The Rev. J. C. STREET moved the adoption of the report and statement of accounts, and that they be printed and circulated among the congregation, and in the course of his remarks went through the various details of the report, referring particularly to the cottage services and open-air meetings. He also drew attention to the successful position of the treasurer's report.

Mr. McCLELLAND seconded the adoption of the report and statement of accounts, and the resolution was passed.

APPOINTMENT OF PRESIDENT AND SECRETARY FOR THE ENSUING YEAR.

The CHAIRMAN called attention to the fact that at the last meeting the Rev. T. Leyland was nominated as president, and the Rev. R. C. Smith as secretary. He regretted very much, and he was sure that regret was shared in by every member of the Union, that circumstances had arisen through which the Union was about to be deprived of the services of both these gentlemen by their early departure from Ireland. Under these circumstances, it became necessary to appoint substitutes at this their annual meeting.

Mr. McCLELLAND looked upon the departure of these gentlemen as inopportune, and said, as the chairman had properly remarked, it devolved upon them to appoint others to fill the positions thus rendered vacant; and he therefore had great pleasure in proposing Mr. George Fisher as their president for the ensuing year.—The motion, having been seconded, was passed by acclamation.

Mr. NEILL then proposed the Rev. J. C. Street as secretary, which was also seconded and carried.

PREACHERS' PLAN REPORT.

Mr. McCALMONT reported that during the past year the pulpits of the various congregations had been regularly and efficiently supplied.

The Rev. R. COWLEY SMITH presented the report of cottage services during the last three months. The total number attending these meetings had been 1,048 at 23 meetings, showing an average at each meeting of over 28. The largest number present at any one meeting was 37; the smallest, 9.

The Rev. J. C. Street, Mr. George Fisher, Mr. McClelland, the chairman, and other members spoke of these meetings in the highest terms.

PULPIT SUPPLIES.

Mr. M'MASTER, Moneyrea, inquired whether the Union would be in a position to assist them in Moneyrea in having supplies from the time the Rev. Mr. Leyland would leave them till the time when they could secure the services of a minister.

The Rev. J. C. STREET said, on behalf of the Union, that they would be glad to do anything they could to aid their friends in Moneyrea to secure a supply for their pulpit.

THE DEPARTURE OF THE REV. MR. LEYLAND AND THE REV. MR. SMITH.

Mr. FISHER moved a resolution expressing the deep regret of the Union at the loss it would sustain by the departure from Ireland of the Rev. Thomas Leyland and the Rev. R. C. Smith, and its earnest wishes for their success and prosperity in the new labours they had undertaken.

Mr. RITCHIE seconded the resolution.

The Rev. J. C. STREET supported the resolution, and in doing so, referred to the fact that he had been somewhat isolated among ministers since he came to Ireland. In England, while there, he had the pleasure of the largest possible communion with all ministers. There was nothing to preclude him from the most intimate association with those who were his seniors—those who were of his own rank, and those who were younger, but since he came to Ireland the two gentlemen who were now leaving were the only two that he had been able to have continuous communication with, and on their going away he must feel painfully his position of isolation.

The CHAIRMAN also bore testimony of appreciation to the services rendered to the Union by the two gentlemen who were now about to leave them.—The resolution was passed with applause.

The Rev. THOMAS LEYLAND and the Rev. R. C. SMITH having replied,

The business concluded at four o'clock. Those present then sat down to tea provided in the hall.

NEWS OF OUR CHURCHES.

LIVERPOOL SUNDAY-SCHOOL ASSOCIATION.—The report of the annual meeting is unavoidably held over until next week, along with letters and much other matter.

ABERDEEN.—On Sunday last a lecture on "Professor Smith and the Bible" was delivered in the George-street Unitarian Church, by Mr. George T. Walters. There was a large attendance, between two and three hundred being present. The Aberdeen Daily Free Press gives a very fair report. Mr. Walters referred to the accusations against Professor Smith, and the plan of his defence; examined what was the Professor's standpoint with regard to the Bible, and his critical treatment of the book; noticed next the manner in which Professor Smith reconciles himself to the doctrine of the infallible truth and divine authority of Scripture; and closed with a few remarks upon the Bible from a rationalistic point of view.

BOLTON: BANK-STREET.—On Sunday evening last the Rev. C. C. Coe, F.R.G.S., delivered a discourse on "True British Interests." He took for his text Isaiah xxxiii., 20: "Look upon Zion, the city of our solemnities, thine eyes shall see Jerusalem a quiet habitation, a tabernacle that shall not be taken down; not one of the stakes thereof shall ever be removed, neither shall any of the cords thereof be broken," "That public virtue which among the ancients was denominated patriotism is derived from a strong sense of our own interest in the preservation and prosperity of the free government of which we are members. So wrote the historian of the decline and fall of the Roman Empire. I confess that I feel this interest; I claim to be a patriot in that my earnest desire is that my country may maintain its position among the nations of the earth, and that it may know a long-continued, if not a never-failing prosperity." At the close of his discourse Mr. Coe said:—My views may be Utopian. I may be too sanguine in hoping for the time when manly virtue shall be the characteristic of the humblest Englishman; when honest integrity shall be the essential of our political life; when we shall be faithful in our relations with other nations, and, seeking only what is right, strive to be pre-eminent in the performance of a national duty. I may be too hasty in my fear of the effect of raising a great army and of adding a foreign contingent; but this I believe, that only on such a basis as I have indicated can permanent power and prosperity be established; only on that condition can England become a tent that shall not be broken down; so that not one of the stakes thereof shall ever be removed, neither shall any of the cords thereof be broken!

BELFAST: THE FIRST PRESBYTERIAN UNITARIAN CHURCH.—The annual meeting of the members was held on Monday evening in the Lombard Hall. There was a large attendance. The hall was beautifully decorated with flowers, evergreens, &c. After tea, the chair was taken by the senior pastor of the congregation, Rev. J. Scott Porter, who congratulated all present on the condition and prospects of the congregation. The usual business was then transacted. The report and statement of accounts were considered very satisfactory. Addresses were delivered by the Rev. Alex. Gordon, M.A.; Messrs. E. J. Harland, A.O.D. Taylor, &c.; and the proceedings were agreeably diversified by music.

CALCUTTA.—We are sorry to find from the Indian Mirror that the agitation among the Brahmos, caused by the Cuch-Behar marriage is kept up and even increases in violence. At a meeting of the congregation of the Mandir, held on the 21st March, the Minister Babu Keshub Chunder Sen, ex-officio took the chair, but the opening business was interrupted by one of the protesting party, who proposed that Babu Durga Mohun Dass be elected chairman. It was found that Babu Dass was not duly qualified, and the minister proceeded to place the following resolution in the hands of the meeting, and requested that some of those opposed to him should kindly move and second it. "We the undersigned members of the congregation of the Mandir are of opinion that the minister, Babu Keshub Chunder Sen, has been guilty of countenancing idolatry and early marriage in the recent marriage of his daughter. We therefore propose that he be asked to vacate the pulpit." None present being prepared to propose this resolution, the chairman himself slightly altered the wording and placed it before the meeting in his own name. Strong objection was taken to this course, because several present said that they had similar resolutions in their own hands differently worded. Babu Durga Mohun Dass and his friends suspected the chairman of foul play, charged him with deceiving the meeting, and called the whole thing "a farce." The objection, however, was overruled, and, in putting his own resolution before the meeting, the Chairman said that it had always been a sacred principle with him to occupy the pulpit only so long as he enjoyed the confidence and respect of the congregation. He begged the congregation, therefore, to dismiss him and appoint another in his place if they had no confidence in him. The same principles of religion which governed his conduct in the late marriage obliged him now to seek his own dismissal. At this stage of the proceedings another attempt was made to put Babu Dass in the chair. The meeting, which was unmannerly and uproarious from the beginning, was now involved in hopeless clamour and confusion, in the midst of which the minister, the secretary, and a great many of the elderly members of the congregation had to leave the hall, announcing that the meeting was at an end. The noise and confusion upon this increased tenfold. In the midst of this noise, it seemed, Babu Dass attempted to take the chair and get certain resolutions passed in the name of the whole congregation. But the loud protest and uproar which these proceedings called forth were simply indescribable. The clamour and disorder overwhelmed everything, people left in disgust, and in about half-an-hour the riotous assembly dispersed. We hope that our Brahma friends will not read such descriptions as we gave last week of the rows in Scottish Presbyteries; if they did, they might think their own proceedings Christian-like. The division in the Brahma party will be perpetuated by the issue of a new periodical.

DONCASTER: HALL GATE FREE CHURCH.—Since the commencement of the Rev. J. Fraser's ministry here, the attendances at the services have so steadily increased that the present building is now found to be a good deal too small. A movement is now on foot for the erection of a larger building, and there is every reason to believe that on or before the first Sunday in January, 1880, the members of the present congregation will move into their new spiritual home, as they are determined, free from all debt but that of gratitude to those who have helped them.

DUNDEE.—The annual spring service for the Sunday school was held on Sunday last. There was a good attendance of old and young, and the whole proceedings were of a very helpful and interesting character. At a meeting of the congregation a resolution was passed requesting the trustees to take such steps as they may find necessary to endeavour to raise £800 to purchase the freehold of the church site, the heavy burden of £35 per annum being a serious hindrance to the progress of the church towards independence. Considering the importance in the present crisis in Scottish theology of securing a representation of the Unitarian position, the scheme will command support.

LONDON: THE MALL, NOTTING HILL.—There was the usual annual service at this church on Sunday, in aid of the funds of the Sunday-school held therein. According to custom, the children, of whom there were between 60 and 70, each carried a little bouquet of flowers. The chancel of the church was appropriated to the little people; and as they sat there, in very fair order for so young a congregation, their appearance excited very much interest. The minister of the church, the Rev. C. Howe, gave a special children's sermon. The hymns for the occasion had been carefully selected, and had been sent on printed sheets in the previous week to every member of the church. The collections amounted to £18. 1s. 7d.

LONDON: KENTISH TOWN.—The past session of the Social Institute was brought to a close by a soirée and conversation on April the 18th, at the Camden Lecture Hall. There was a gratifying attendance of members and friends connected with the church, including the Rev. P. W. Clayden, the pastor, and Messrs. Cooper, Coleman, A. W. and N. Clayden, Hind Jolly, Ierson, Goodwin, Serrell, Midworth, Scrivener, Noel, W. J. Noel (hon. sec.), F. Allen, &c. Objects of interest were placed on the tables, including albums, engravings, models, pictures, rare books, jewellery, microscopes, and other articles, kindly lent by the Misses Gazley, Jewitt, Jourdan, Sharpe, and other members of the institute; the microscopes shown by Mr. Goodwin, and the jewellery by Mr. N. Clayden, consisting of the smallest watch in the world and a clockwork singing bird, forming features of especial interest. The proceedings were rendered more interesting by vocal and instrumental music and recitations given during the evening by Madame Suter, Miss Clayden, Mr. Ierson, Miss Alice Hind, Miss Suter, Mr. H. S. Loch, Miss Elkington, Mr. Tinckam, Mr. Serrell, and the choir, by whom the part-songs were admirably given. During the evening the Rev. P. W. Clayden addressed those present congratulating the members of the institute on the success which they had achieved, and expressing his hearty approval of what had been done during the session, and, with best wishes for their future success, concluded with some kindly words of advice as to the methods to be adopted by which they could become good public speakers, &c. Mr. F. Allen thanked their pastor for his advice, and gave some interesting particulars as to the number of members, &c.; also urging the importance of getting a schoolroom built, in which they could hold their meetings, and especially so, as their Sunday school was fast increasing; and announced that on June 1st a dramatic performance will be given at St. George's Hall, Langham Place, in aid of the Sunday school building fund, which he hoped would be largely patronised.

MANCHESTER: MILES PLATTING.—The annual sermons in aid of the Church Funds were preached on Sunday last, when the Rev. William Gaskell, M.A., conducted the service in the afternoon, and the Rev. G. H. Wells, M.A., in the evening. The collections reached £12. 2s., a sum rather below the average of the last few years, but the decrease is not surprising considering the strain which the bazaar, held eight days previously, put upon the members. The annual congregational party was held on Monday evening, Mr. Thomas Howard (the warden) presiding. After tea, to which about 80 members and friends sat down, the Secretary (Mr. Harold Berry), read his report for the past half year. The offertory had been £1. 6s. 4d. per Sunday, against £1. 4s. 9d. the previous year; and the number of members was 122 this year, against 115 last year. The grant from the Manchester District Unitarian Association had been reduced from £59 to £57. Out of the recent bazaar it was expected that there would be a surplus of £50 or £60, the gross receipts having been £221. 13s. 6d., due to the efforts of the lady members. It was suggested that this balance should form the nucleus for a new church. Impressive addresses were afterwards delivered by the Rev. C. T. Poynting, B.A. (secretary of the Manchester District Unitarian Association), Mr. Luke Pollitt, Mr. Wm. C. Bowie, and the Rev. W. G. Cadman (pastor of the church). A hearty vote of thanks was then passed to the Revs. Wm. Gaskell, M.A., and G. H. Wells, M.A., for their kindness in preaching the annual sermons on the previous day. The meeting terminated about 10 p.m.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE.—On May 1st, the winter session of the Improvement Society connected with the Church of the Divine Unity, was brought to a close by a social tea and concert in the Schoolrooms of the Church. The Rev. A. Payne presided, and said the society was established for the social and spiritual improvement of the members of the Church, and he believed it had been successful in its object. The subjects discussed covered several branches of thought, and among the papers read were: "Interesting facts in Natural History," "The duty of the Church and State in relation to the Temperance Question," "Moral Accountability," "The Age of Chivalry," "Socrates," "The connection between Instinct and Reason," "Sunday Schools in their relation to the Church," and each paper had been equal to the subject it brought before the society. The tea which was provided at each meeting of the society, had he believed greatly assisted in the success of the society, while the treasurer's balance put them in a position to help the other institutions of the church. They therefore not only benefited themselves socially and intellectually, but were able to benefit others. The treasurer's balance was then divided between the choir fund and the Sunday schools, besides a sum granted to the church and the chapel keeper. The musical programme was then gone through by Mr. Thompson's glee party—Miss Harrison, Miss Payne, Miss and Master Ellis, Messrs. B. Ellis, Auckland, Smith, and Dixon. Mr. R. Affleck presided at the piano. The musical ability of the choir and congregation has now attained a name in the town, and the care and fine taste displayed in the night's programme was worthy of the honourable position they have won. The National Anthem brought the large and successful meeting to a close.

PLYMOUTH.—The annual floral service for the children of the Sunday school in connection with the Unitarian Chapel, Treville-street, took place on Sunday evening. There was a very large congregation. The members of the chapel and their friends contributed a large quantity of beautiful flowers, which were neatly arranged along the communion table and two front windows. The Rev. William Sharman delivered an address upon St. John, 4th chapter, 38th verse: "Other men laboured, and ye are entered into their labours." A collection in aid of the funds of the Sunday school and library was made at the close of the service, and a substantial amount was contributed. All the children were presented with a "nosegay," but a far larger portion of the flowers will be sent to the South Devon and East Cornwall Hospital.

TAUNTON: PRESENTATION TO THE MINISTER.—On Friday a deputation waited upon the Rev. John Birks, at his residence, for the purpose of presenting him with a purse of money subscribed by the members and friends worshipping in Mary-street Chapel, "as an expression of their warm appreciation of his work as their minister and pastor, of his valuable services in connection with the schools and the several institutions of the chapel, and of the affectionate respect which they feel for him personally." On Sunday, being the anniversary of the commencement of Mr. Birks' ministry in Taunton, appropriate sermons were preached. At the close of the evening sermon Mr. Birks referred to the act of kindness on the part of his congregation, and said: "And now my next duty is difficult to perform, for I hardly know how to express in words sufficiently to satisfy my own feelings the gratitude of my heart for the very handsome present which I have received within the last few days as a token of your esteem and regard. Valuable as your generous gift is in itself, and representing as it does something quite as great, as noble, and as good as we can find in connection with larger congregations or more imposing assemblages, I value it still more because it represents—as I am earnestly assured it most strongly does—the very warm love and hearty good will of the congregation. Situated as we are in comparative isolation, with churches of our faith few and far between, we need the strength which mutual sympathy and kindness have power to give, that we may zealously proclaim Christian doctrine, earnestly manifest the Christian spirit, and faithfully live the Christian life. And I tender to you all, in this place so dear to many of us, made sacred by the memories of beloved friends, and consecrated by our highest thoughts and holiest aspirations in the worship of God, I tender to you all my most heartfelt thanks."

TAVISTOCK.—On Wednesday evening last, May 1st, the annual May sermon was preached in the Abbey Chapel, to a good congregation, by the Rev. Lindsey T. Badcock. Special hymns were nicely sung by the Sunday-school children. The chapel presented a very pretty appearance, being tastefully decorated with spring flowers. The panels of the pulpit were white, bordered with moss, ivy leaves, and primroses; and the whole reflected great credit on the willing lady workers who accomplished so much in the short time at their disposal. Liberal contributions of choice flowers were tastefully arranged on the communion table, and they were afterwards sent to the South Devon Hospital, at Plymouth.

ROTHERHAM NEW CHURCH.—The bazaar which was opened in the Mechanics' Hall, on Wednesday, May 1st, in aid of the funds of the Moorgate Unitarian New Church, closed on Friday evening, May 3rd, when the handsome sum of £400 was realised.

COMING WEEK.

BOLTON: TEMPERANCE HALL.—On Sunday, annual church sermons, morning and evening, by the Rev. William Binns.
BLACKLEY.—On Sunday, annual sermons. Preachers: Morning, Rev. J. T. Marriott; afternoon, Rev. A. Rushton; evening, Rev. James M'Connachie.
HALIFAX.—On Sunday, school sermons, morning and evening, by the Rev. James Black, M.A. Address to the scholars in the afternoon.
HULME: EMBDEN-STREET.—On Sunday, morning and evening, sermons by the Rev. S. Fletcher Williams.
LIVERPOOL DOMESTIC MISSION.—On Sunday, sermons in aid of the funds, at Renshaw-street, Hope-street, and Texteth Park Chapels.
MANCHESTER: LOWER MOSLEY-STREET SCHOOLS.—On Sunday, united teachers' meeting. Mr. D. Thompson will read a paper on "Relation of Band of Hope to Sunday School and Church."
MOTTRAM.—On Sunday, school sermons by the Rev. T. R. Elliott, afternoon and evening.
NEWCHURCH.—On Saturday, welcome meeting to the Rev. A. Lazenby.
RAWTESTALL.—On Sunday, annual Sunday School sermons, by the Rev. W. M. Ainsworth.

BIRTHS.

HOLT.—On the 4th inst., at Sefton Park, Liverpool, the wife of Robert Durning Holt, Esq., of a son.
MACKIE.—On the 27th ult., at 100, Trafalgar-street, Burnley, the wife of John Stevenson Mackie, of a daughter.

MARRIAGES.

ELLERBECK-SYER3.—On May 1st, at Neuchâtel, Switzerland, J. H. T. Ellerbeck, of Liverpool, to Alice Drinkwater, daughter of John Milne Syers, of Altrincham.
JEWITT-JACKSON.—On the 25th ult., at St. Paul's Church, Camden Square, Alfred Charles, second son of Henry Jewitt, of Leighton Road, London, to Marianne Wallis, second daughter of Walter Jackson, of Hampstead, London, N.W.

DEATH.

M'CULLOUGH.—On the 30th ult., at his residence, Clonlee, Larne, County Antrim, the Rev. William M'Cullough, assistant minister of the Old Presbyterian Congregation of Larne, aged 28 years.

VISITORS TO LONDON for May Meetings or otherwise, by writing at any time as under, can secure Select PRIVATE HOME, with a Unitarian, if he has vacancies then, and their references be satisfactory. Nice house: good position: library: piano: man servant: comfort.

BELLE VUE HOUSE,
ST. JAMES' TERRACE, HARROW ROAD, PADDINGTON.
Close to Railway. Buses, and Cabstand.

POLISHED GRANITE MONUMENTS,
tasteful designs, carefully executed in select material (Red or Grey): terms moderate.—Send for drawings and prices to J. TAYLOR, Monumental Yard, Leadsides, Aberdeen.

LONDON: SHIRLEY'S TEMPERANCE HOTEL, 37, Queen's Square, Bloomsbury. Beds from 1s. 6d. Plain Breakfast or Tea, 1s. 3d.

THE ONLY PERFECT MARKING INK.

NO HEATING: no mixing or trouble. Does not injure the most delicate fabric. Absolutely indelible. Fletcher's Jet Marker, 1s., from drapers, or post free from THOMAS FLETCHER, Museum-street, Warrington.

RUPTURES.—Exhibition Prize Medal, 1862, was awarded to R. WESTBURY, inventor and sole maker of the IMPERCEPTIBLE CURATIVE TRUSS. Deformity Instruments, Artificial Limbs, Clutches, Elastic Stockings, and Ladies' Supporting Belts, Chest Expansors for round shoulders, &c., 26, Old Millgate, Manchester.

ZUCCO.—We again beg to draw attention to this Wine, which we had the pleasure to bring before the notice of the public for the first time last year. It is a Pure, Natural, Light Wine of Madeira character, without any spirit added, the produce of the Sicilian estates of the Duc d'Anville. We have pleasure in being able to announce that we can now reduce the price to 24s. Per DOZEN.
JAMES SMITH & CO., Wine Merchants, 28, Market-street, Manchester.

Printed for the Proprietors by WILLIAM EVANS, of Apsley Villa, 377, Waterloo Road, Chesham Hill, at his Printing Offices, No. 7, Cross-street, Parish of Manchester; and Published by JOHN PHILLIPS, at New Cannon Chambers, 55, Market-street, in said Parish of Manchester.—London Agents: Messrs. Smart and Allen, 2, London-house Yard, Paternoster Row.—Friday, May 10, 1878.

The Unitarian Herald.

EDITED BY

REV. JAMES BLACK, M.A., & REV. S. FLETCHER WILLIAMS.

VOL. XVIII.—891.

FRIDAY, MAY 24, 1878.

PRICE 1D.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE.
Doings and Sayings	172
Books and Authors	172
The Hibbert Lecture	172
The Radical Prayer for Peace	174
The United Presbyterian Synod	174
The Duke of Westminster and Dissenters	175
Voltaire and Joan of Arc	175
Lord Rosebery and the Sunday Society	175
The Brahmo Somaj	175
Women and London University	175
The Communion	175
Scottish Notes	176
London District Unitarian Society	176
News of our Churches	177

Post-office orders to be made payable to Mr. JOHN PHILLIPS, 55, Market-street, Manchester, to whom all orders and business communications should be addressed.

PENDLETON UNITARIAN FREE CHURCH (corner of Cross Lane).—ANNUAL SERMONS will be preached on Sunday next, May 26th, by the Rev. WM. BINNS, Birkenhead. Service at 10.45 and 6.30. Offertory.

STRANGEWAYS UNITARIAN FREE CHURCH.

On Sunday next, the Rev. J. TOWLE MARRIOTT will preach morning and evening.

The School Festival SERMONS will be preached on the 23rd June, by the Rev. ALFRED PAYNE, of Newcastle. All seats free. Offertory.

BLACKPOOL UNITARIAN FREE CHURCH.—On Sunday next, May 26, the Rev. E. CREDIG JONES, of Glasgow, will conduct the services. Morning 10.45; evening, 6.30.

SWINTON.—ANNUAL SERMONS, May 26th, preacher, Rev. WM. GASKELL, M.A. Afternoon service, three o'clock; evening, half-past six. Tea provided for friends from a distance.

RIVINGTON.—The ANNUAL SERMON next Sunday. Preacher: Rev. JAMES HARWOOD, B.A. Service to begin at three. A bus will leave Holden's Yard, Bolton, for Rivington, at half-past one precisely.

LONDON DOMESTIC MISSION.

ANNUAL MEETING, 1878. The Rev. CHARLES HARGROVE, M.A., of Leeds, will preach the ANNUAL SERMON on behalf of this Society, on Sunday the 26th May, in the morning at the New Gravel Pits Chapel, Paradise Place, Hackney, service to begin at eleven; and in the evening at the New Station of the Mission, George's Row, Lever-street, St. Luke's, service to begin at seven. A collection will be made after each service.

The ANNUAL MEETING will be held at University Hall, Gordon Square, on the following evening (Monday) the 27th May, T. SMITH OSLER, Esq., in the chair. The chair to be taken at half-past seven.

HEYWOOD.—On Sunday, May 26th, TWO SERMONS will be preached on behalf of the Sunday-school, by the Rev. DOUGLAS WALMSLEY, B.A., of Bury. Services, afternoon and evening, at 3 o'clock and 6.30. Collections will be made on behalf of the funds.

BEARD MEMORIAL UNION.

On Monday evening, May 27th, 1878, Rev. C. C. COE, F.R.G.S., will deliver a Lecture in the Memorial Hall, Albert Square, on "Middlemarch." The Rev. WM. GASKELL, M.A. will take the chair at seven p.m.

Tea will be provided from six to seven p.m., at sixpence each, for those desiring it.

W. C. BOWIE, Hon. Sec.

MANCHESTER UNITARIAN SUNDAY SCHOOL UNION.

WHIT-SUNDAY SCHOLARS' FESTIVAL.—The SECOND REHEARSAL of Anthems, "Great is the Lord," "How Lovely are the Messengers," "Lord for Thy tender Mercies Sake," &c. will be held on Thursday, 30th inst., at 7.30 in the Memorial Hall. Musical friends are invited.—By order, THOMAS RAWSON, Musical Director and Organist.

York Place, Higher Broughton.

HACKNEY: NEW GRAVEL PIT CHAPEL, PARADISE PLACE.—The ANNUAL SERMONS on behalf of the Sunday and Day Schools will be preached on Sunday, June 2, in the morning by the Rev. CHARLES WICKSTEED, B.A.; in the evening by the Rev. C. J. PERRY, minister-elect of Hope-street Chapel, Liverpool. Morning service at eleven, evening at seven o'clock.

AINSWORTH.—On Sunday, June 2nd, TWO SERMONS will be preached by the Rev. J. T. WHITEHEAD, of Hackney. Services, afternoon and evening, at three o'clock and 6.30. Collections will be made on behalf of the funds of the Day and Sunday Schools.

JONES'S FUND.—The Board of Managers meet every year in University Hall, Gordon Square, London, in the last complete week in June, for the purpose of Granting Exhibitions, and at no other time. Applications must be made in a specified form, to be obtained from the undersigned, and must be returned on or before the second week in June.

EDWIN W. MARSHALL, Secretary.

38, Barton Arcade, Manchester.

UNIVERSITY OF LONDON.—Notice is hereby given that the NEXT HALF-YEARLY EXAMINATION for MATRICULATION in this University will commence on Monday the 24th of June, 1878. In addition to the Metropolitan Examination, Provincial Examinations will be held at Owens College, Manchester; Queen's College, Liverpool; Queen's College, Birmingham; St. Cuthbert's College, Ushaw; Stonyhurst College; St. Patrick's College, Carlisle; St. Stanislaus College, Tullamore; and University College, Bristol.

Every Candidate is required to transmit his Certificate of Age to the Registrar (University of London, Burlington Gardens, London, W.) at least Fourteen Days before the commencement of the Examination.

WILLIAM B. CARPENTER, M.D., Registrar.

May 21st, 1878.

BRITISH AND FOREIGN UNITARIAN ASSOCIATION.

THE ANNIVERSARY MEETINGS.

JUNE 12TH AND 13TH, 1878.

The FIFTY-THIRD ANNUAL MEETING of the Association will be held on Wednesday, June 12th, in Essex-street Chapel, Strand, London. The service to commence at half-past eleven o'clock, conducted by the Rev. R. A. ARMSTRONG, B.A., of Nottingham. The Sermon will be preached by the Rev. W. BINNS, of Birkenhead. The usual collection will be made at the close of the service.

The Meeting for the transaction of the business of the Association will then be held, the chair to be taken at half-past one.

The CONFERENCE will commence at eleven o'clock on Thursday morning, June 13th, in Essex-street Chapel. Papers will be read on the following subjects:—

1. Church Finance. By Mr. FRANK TAYLOR, of Bolton.

2. The Terms of Religious Communion. By the Rev. A.

W. WORTHINGTON, B.A., of Mansfield.

The COLLATION at four o'clock, at the Alexandra Palace, Muswell Hill. Tickets 5s. each, to be had at the office of the Association.

HENRY IERSON, Secretary.

37, Norfolk-street, Strand, London, W.C.

ABERDARE ENGLISH UNITARIAN APPEAL.

Mr. Charles Thompson, Cardiff £ s. d.
Church of the Messiah Fellowship Fund, Birmingham, per Mr. G. H. Kenrick 2 2 0
J. JOSEPH GEORGE. 5 0 0

KING'S LYNN FREE CHRISTIAN CHURCH AND SCHOOLS.

Amount already advertised 240. 17s.
Miss Tingcombe, Bath 5 0 0
The Mayor of Manchester 5 0 0
Miss Henry, Oswestry 1 0 0
Mr. Eveleigh, Peterborough 0 5 0
Mr. R. Spitzer, Islington 1 1 0
S. S. Taylor, Brixton 1 0 0
R. Pinnock, Esq., ex-mayor of Newport 1 0 0
Rev. R. Shaen, Royston 1 0 0
Herbert New, Esq., Evesham, president of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association 1 1 0
Rev. C. C. Coe, Bolton 3 3 0
Mr. Horatio Bolingbroke, Norwich 2 2 0
Birmingham Fellowship Fund 10 0 0

BLACKPOOL.—CHANNING HOUSE, 39, QUEEN'S SQUARE.—Visitors will find here every home comfort. Tariff sent on application.—Mrs. JOHN MARSDEN, Proprietress.

BROOK HOUSE, KNUTSFORD, CHESHIRE. BOARDING SCHOOL FOR GIRLS, conducted by Mrs. FRANK SHAWCROSS, assisted by Resident English and Foreign Governesses. Teachers of eminence attend for instruction in Music, Singing, Harmony, Drawing, Dancing, &c. Prospectus and references forwarded on application.

MOUNT VERNON HIGH SCHOOL, NOTTINGHAM.—Established 1864.

Mr. EDWIN SMITH, M.A., with competent assistance, thoroughly prepares Boys for College, the University Local Examinations, or for Business. For prospectus address Sandy Knoll, Forest Road, Nottingham.

YORK: 26, HIGH PETER GATE.—Miss AMY HERRING begs to announce that she has OPENED, at the above address, a SCHOOL for the Instruction of Young Ladies in all branches, comprising a first-class education with liberal views. References kindly permitted by the following:—Dr. G. Vance Smith, The Parade, Carmarthen; the Rev. C. Welbeloved, 38, Monkgate, York; Miss Swaine, 1, The Crescent, York.—Terms on application.

Pupils are prepared for the University Examinations, several having passed most successfully.

WANTED, near Manchester, a TUTOR for a Boy of 10.—Address, with references, B. C. D., at the Unitarian Herald office.

BOLTON: COMMISSION-STREET UNITARIAN SCHOOLS.—WANTED, after Midsummer, a CERTIFICATED MISTRESS for the Infant Department.—For terms, &c., apply to the Secretary.

THE Head Master of the Salt Schools, Shipley, Yorkshire (Mr. A. M. Worthington, M.A., Trin. Coll., Oxford, late assistant master at Clifton College), intends taking a small number of BOARDERS into his own house after Midsummer.—Saltire, Shipley.

WANTED, after Midsummer, a DAILY GOVERNNESS, to teach Young Children and take charge of them out of school hours: thorough English, French, and Music required.—Apply to Mrs. J. ARTHUR KENRICK, Fallowfield, Edgbaston.

WANTED, an Experienced HEAD NURSE, about 30, for a large family, able to bring up infant by hand: liberal wages given: long and good references indispensable.—Apply by letter, stating all particulars, to Mrs. E. BEHRENS, The Oaks, Fallowfield.

WARRINGTON.—On Monday, June 3rd, a WELCOME SOIREE will be held in the Calro-street School, on the occasion of the settlement of the Rev. RICHD. PILCHER, B.A. Most of the ministers of the district are expected to be present.

Pleasant desirable Apartments for a Gentleman. Address H. Cooper, Post Office, Plymouth Grove.

HAMPSTEAD.—TO BE LET, furnished, for two or three months, a HOUSE, containing two sitting, three bedrooms, and bathroom: two servants will be left: no children: terms, four guineas.—Address L.S., Miss WOODWARD, 14, Rosslyn-street, Hampstead, N.W.

THE TRUE RELIGION: A Discourse by Rev. ALFRED PAYNE. Price 1d., post free 1½d., from the Author; Messrs. M. and M. W. Lambert, and J. H. Barlow, Newcastle-on-Tyne; and Messrs. Johnson and Rawson, Manchester.

YOUNG DAYS (No. 30) for June, now Ready, Price One Penny. Numerously Illustrated. CONTENTS.—Willing Hands; or, Every Little Helps—Go Work in my Vineyard—Ida Mayhew—The Daffodil—Friendship among Animals—Covent Garden Market—Lost—Puzzle Bag—A Bunch of Spring Violets—From the Nile to the Thames; or, Our Last Famous Visitor. Published by the Sunday School Association, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand.

Now ready, cloth, 5s.,

THE STORY OF RELIGION IN ENGLAND: A BOOK FOR YOUNG FOLK. By BROOKE HERFORD.

"A thoroughly useful book for the young. . . . Fairly and impartially written."—John Bull.

"Full of graphic incident and picturesque detail, largely biographical, affording the noblest food for the cultivation of the imagination, and furnishing invaluable materials for the formation of religious opinions and the strengthening of religious principles."—Inquirer.

"We know of no book which is worthy to compete with it. . . . The tone and spirit of his treatment of the various periods which pass under review deserve high commendation. The book is worthy of a cordial welcome, even from those whose point of view is different from that of the writer in some respects, but who share his devotion to that which is great and noble in English Nonconformity."—Literary World.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand.

RECENT PUBLICATIONS OF THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION.

THE BIBLE FOR YOUNG PEOPLE.

Translated from the Dutch of Drs. OORT, HOOGHAAS, and KUENEN, by the Rev. P. H. WICKSTEED, M.A.

Vol. I., 4s.; Vol. II., 5s.; Vol. III., 6s.; Vol. IV., 4s.; Vol. V., 6s. Vol. VI. in preparation.

THE CHILDHOOD OF RELIGIONS:

Embracing a Simple Account of the Birth and Growth of Myths and Legends. By EDWARD CLODD, F.R.A.S. Special Edition for Schools, 1s. 6d.

THE RELIGION OF ISRAEL.

Translated from the Dutch of Dr. KNAPPERT, by R. A. ARMSTRONG, B.A. Cloth, 2s. 6d.

LESSONS IN RELIGION.

By Miss GILLIES. Second Edition. Cloth, 2s.

DWELLERS IN OUR GARDENS.

By SARA WOOD. Coloured Cloth, gilt lettered, and beautifully illustrated, 1s. 6d.

VOICES OF NATURE; OR, LESSONS FROM SCIENCE. Cloth, 1s.

YOUNG DAYS.

A Monthly Magazine for Children. Vol. I., 9d.; vol. II., 1s. 6d.

THE DAISY ROOT.

By Mrs. HERBERT MARTIN. Cloth, 1s. 6d. Fancy gilt, 2s., illustrated.

ROSY'S THREE HOMES.

By the same Author. Cloth, 1s. 6d. Fancy gilt, 2s., illustrated.

PHIL'S MISTAKE.

By Miss B. A. JOURDAN. Cloth, 1s. 6d. Fancy gilt, 2s., illustrated.

TEACHERS' NOTES.

Quarterly, 4d.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION, 37, NORFOLK-STREET, STRAND, W.C.

MISS BROOKS, 6, Barton Arcade, and 59, Deansgate, Manchester, is now Showing the Choicest GOODS in Millinery. Straw Hats and Bonnets, Flowers, Feathers, Laces, Ribbons, Ties, Gloves, &c., and will have through the season all the most approved styles. An inspection is respectfully solicited.

THE ONLY PERFECT MARKING INK.

NO HEATING; no mixing or trouble. Does not injure the most delicate fabric. Absolutely indelible. Fletcher's Jet Marker, 1s., from drapers, or post free from THOMAS FLETCHER, Museum-street, Warrington.

POLISHED GRANITE MONUMENTS, tasteful designs, carefully executed in select material (Red or Grey): terms moderate.—Send for drawings and prices to J. TAYLOR, Monumental Yard, Leadside, Aberdeen.

LONDON: SHIRLEY'S TEMPERANCE HOTEL, 37, Queen's Square, Bloomsbury. Beds from 1s. 6d. Plain Breakfast or Tea, 1s. 3d.

DOINGS AND SAYINGS.

John Bright once said that there was one thing almost as strong as truth itself, and that was persecuted error.

Mr. Spurgeon says a French dinner is very nice indeed, but some of us want a cut of roast beef. So it is with some preaching.

A French paper, which circulates largely in France, writes:—"The Protestant religion made England what she is, and France must follow."

Three-fourths of the £60,000 left by the late Mr. Mitchell to the City of London is to be devoted to the establishment of a large girls' school.

The Women's Memorial to the Queen in favour of a Congress and peace has been laid before Her Majesty. It contained 11,955 names, all collected in nine days.

A friend contributes this incisive saying: The ugliest thing the angels look down on is a frozen parson preaching frozen sermons to people who sing frozen hymns.

Some printer sets up this:—"X College has 'humoured' Rev. Y. Z. with the degree of D.D.; meaning honoured, of course. Perhaps it was not so bad a blunder, after all.

Royally brave was Robert Owen's answer when he was told that the world was not ready for theories so advanced as his own:—"Then I will go and prepare the world."

Mr. Spurgeon assures us that he always speaks tenderly of committees: he almost feels as if he could fall down and worship a committee! He believes that committees should consist of three, and—two of them should stop at home.

A Primitive Methodist minister dined with a squire. After dinner the squire asked him to return thanks. "Lord, we thank Thee that we do not have such a dinner as this every day in the week, or else we should be ill!" People want good, plain, substantial food, to be well fed. The way to make strong Christians is to feed them well; let them have good spiritual food, and then we shall rear good strong back-boned Christians. We have got enough jelly fish now.

Dr. Fisch, of Paris, is confident that the race of Socialists in France is becoming extinct. They went down in the fire of the Commune. The Government in France at the present time he describes as a Protestant Government, because there are virtually five Protestants in the Cabinet. There are three decided Protestants; the fourth is a Roman Catholic by birth, but Protestant at heart; the fifth has a Protestant wife! The Protestants never had such a state of things as they now enjoy.

An old Welsh minister told the other day that in the Vale of Clwyd he met a farmer who had hundreds of sheep in the vale, while others were grazing on the mountains. The minister asked the farmer, "What is the difference between the sheep down here in the vale and those on the mountains?" "Oh!" he answered, "the sheep that graze down in the vale are those that give you the best meat; but those that graze on the mountains always have the best horns." When men are too ready to use their horns we feel that they live on poor grass.

A poor man in South Africa once met Dr. Moffat with a pitiful face. "Doctor, my dog has swallowed three leaves of the New Testament." "Why should you cry over that?" asked Dr. Moffat. The man replied, "It will spoil the dog; he was a capital hunter, and it will make him tame now, the same as it makes all the people tame round here. It will spoil him as a hunter." There's some philosophy in that. The man had seen the effect of the Gospel around him—that it made the people quiet and friendly, and he was afraid it would have the same effect on the dog.

Germany and Switzerland contain a Roman Catholic population four times as great as the Romanistic population of Ireland, and nearly fifteen times as great as the Romanistic population of all England and Wales. Every third man you meet in Germany and Switzerland is a Romanist. We talk of France, Austria, Spain, and Italy as Roman Catholic countries, but Germany, which we think Protestant, has a population of sixteen millions of souls devoted to the Church of Rome. In Germany there are more than 20,000 priests; in Switzerland, with 150,000 Roman Catholics, there are 6,000 priests.

Of all the persecuting Acts of the Stuarts, said Mr. Goldwin Smith at the Liberation Society's annual meeting, the Act of Uniformity alone remains—it is the last leaf upon the Stuarts' upas tree, and it flutters already in the wind. The Act of Uniformity still lives, but it lives among the graves of its kin, and from all their tombs it hears the memento of mortality. On the tombs of the Tests and Corporation Acts, of the Five Miles Act, of the Conventicles Act, of the Occasional Conformity Act, the Act of Uniformity sees the monitory phrase—

As I now am thou shalt be,
Prepare thyself to follow me!

The Christian World thinks it does "no injustice or disparagement to the glorious light of Christianity by acknowledging with thankfulness whatever signs are to be found of devoutness of spirit and of simplicity and pureness of faith even in the midst of idolatry." A correspondent of our contemporary, a devoted and successful missionary in Madras, does not hesitate to say, "I think one of the greatest hindrances to the spread of the Gospel here is the failure of Christians to recognise these things in the present state of Indian thought and faith, and, indeed, to recognise what is good and true in old Hinduism itself."

Mr. Spurgeon tells a story which fits in with the views of Mr. Herbert New. A friend said to the Baptist preacher the other day: "I was a poor man once, and moved in quite another line of society. If half-a-dozen of us met together, say twenty years ago, we used to talk about the things of God; but now, when I get on a Turkey carpet in a very respectable house, it seems to be almost indecorous to talk about the things of God. Of course, we talk together of such and such a minister, and pick his character to pieces—that is very good and profitable—and set up one man against another; but as to getting into the deep things of God, or talking about vital experience, how little there is of it!" The wear and tear of life very often tend this way.

The Rector of Carfax, Oxford, in a recent sermon, reviewing the dogma of endless punishment, gave one more proof that there have been numbers in our Israel who have long refused to bow the knee to the God of Immutable Retribution. He said:—"It is now more than five years since I protested from this place against the dogma that every man's fate is irreversibly and for ever fixed at the moment of death, and that the fate of most men is one of endless torment—a dogma which, be it observed, implies the eternity of evil, and that the devil will, on the whole, triumph over Christ. The Church of Christ has never made this horrible opinion an article of her essential faith, but it is part of the popular creed of most Protestant Churches, in which it is professed and taught apart from the purgatorial doctrines, which, in the Greek and Roman Churches, so greatly mitigate its horror. My protest was put forth under the deep conviction—deeper now by this time—that such teaching is a contradiction of Christ's Gospel, and of God's voice in the soul; that it makes a number of men either infidels or indifferent to religion; and that it will prove a death poison in the constitution of any Church in which it shall continue to be believed and taught."

BOOKS AND AUTHORS.

The Expositor for May. London: Hodder and Stoughton.

Four of the five papers which make up this number are of the scholarly and suggestive character for which the Expositor is deservedly prized by Biblical students. The fifth is a rejoinder from Dr. W. Sanday to Dr. Roberts on the question, "Did Christ speak Greek?" The discussion has scarcely other than a technical interest, it has little bearing on any important theological issue, and if it were settled we do not see that any living controversy of moment would thereby have any light thrown on it. The editor's own contribution is a strikingly able exposition of The Inscription in chap. xix., 23-29, in the Book of Job. Canon Perowne's comments on The Invitation in Matthew xi., 28-30, are full of spiritual grace and tender feeling. The Dean of Canterbury's second paper on the Prophet Jeremiah is a consideration of the historical significance of the visions of the rod and the seething cauldron. Professor Fairbairn, in his Studies on the Life of Christ, writes of the Personality of Jesus. The influences that formed that Personality were the home, the school, the synagogue, the study of the Hebrew Scriptures, nature, and society. The most distinctive features of it were a consciousness full of God, a conception of man at once truthful and generous, a belief of the Divine possibility within the depraved reality, a goodness spontaneous, without effort, gentle to draw children, stern to rebuke hypocrisy, august to reduce Caesar's majesty to mere mock royalty. Professor Fairbairn's paper has our very warm admiration.

The New Quarterly Magazine, April, 1878. London: Chatto and Windus.

THE "platform" of the New Quarterly is enlarging. Hitherto it has eschewed politics, and confined itself to pure literature, art, and social questions. It now extends its area, and takes in the field of political topics. The change is a decided improvement in the variety it gives, and in the help we trust it may afford in the diffusion of information on affairs of state. To the present number Mr. Sutherland Edwards contributes a valuable historical article on Panslavonianism in Bohemia, Poland, and Russia. "What can we do for Greece?" is a timely argument in favour of a policy on the line on which, as it has always seemed to us, England ought to steadily work in the Eastern Question. The writer holds that the time is not yet ripe to seat Greece in Constantinople, but maintains that it is no longer England's interest that Turkey should remain the owner of that city and the nominal guardian of the Straits. He therefore urges that our policy ought to start from the principle that the Greek people are the fittest occupants of Constantinople. English diplomacy as it enters the European Council Chamber ought to take on its lips the words "What can we do for Greece?" Of the other articles, "Alfred De Musset," by Theodore Watts, and "The Apollo Belvedere," by Professor Colvin, are very readable. We welcome every scrap of information about Edgar Poe, but the "Unknown Correspondence" of that wayward child of genius here sent forth to the public for the first time by Mr. John H. Ingram adds but little to our knowledge of the man. A distinctive feature of the New Quarterly is the summary of current literature and current criticism. It is done with great care and with conspicuous fair-mindedness, besides being a guide to the leading books in the various departments of literature. The magazine is a wonderfully cheap production, and we wish for it a long life.

Free Religion: Two Discourses and Meditations, delivered at the Unitarian Chapel, Preston, 14th April, 1878. By Frank W. Walters, of Glasgow. Preston: The Guardian Office.

MR. WALTERS is an eloquent and outspoken preacher, whose voice is ever given for the cause of Liberty. In these discourses he shows, with much force of argument, that the history of religion is in reality "the history of the human soul in its effort after the perfect freedom of the life of God." The Religion of England is not to be found in the Prayer Book, but in the struggle against foreign and domestic tyranny, and the devotion to seek truth of all kinds, and to make it the inheritance of every child. The Bible is pre-eminently the book of Free Religion. On this subject we shall quote a few of the preacher's words, which will of themselves recommend these discourses to our readers:—

This ancient book lies on our desk still, and we intend it shall lie there; for it is impossible that any other book can ever occupy its unique position—can, in short, be a Bible to us in the same sense in which this volume is. We sometimes read lessons from other ancient scriptures, in order that we may be reminded that religion is a thing that belongs to humanity and not merely to Jews and Christians. But no other scriptures can ever hold the same place for us as those of our Bible, the record of our religious genesis. Your father and mother may have been much wiser than mine, but they can never have the same place in my affections as the parents who gave me birth. Other scriptures may be wise and wonderful; but the Bible is ours, the charter of our fathers' faith, the record of our spiritual genealogy. And the Bible has become to us more precious than ever since we have made the rich discovery that it is a book, not of formal theology, but of Free Religion. There are, indeed, parts of the Bible which deal with matters of theological doctrine and ecclesiastical ceremony; but we hand these over to the Dryasdusts to make what they can of them. But never do we tire of reading these living utterances of religious consciousness in the Book of Psalms, in the glowing prophecies of Hebrew seers, and in the clear, ringing affirmations of Jesus. These free, spontaneous outpourings of the human soul are what give the Bible its permanent power; it is a book of free religion, and must therefore always hold a vital relation to us who believe that freedom is the life of religion.

The Nonconformist, in a notice of Brooke Herford's Story of Religion in England, says:—"This is an admirable introduction to the Church history of this country. We know no better book to place in the hands of young people. The choice of subjects and the manner of treatment are alike interesting. We hope the volume will have a large circulation."

THE HIBBERT LECTURE.

III.—GROWTH OF RELIGION: VEDIC LITERATURE.

PROFESSOR MAX MÜLLER's third lecture on "The Origin and Growth of Religion as illustrated by the Religions of India," was delivered in the Westminster Chapter House on Thursday the 9th instant, to a large audience of ladies and gentlemen, including many leaders in the walks of Religion, Literature, and Science. The lecturer began by reminding his hearers that the discussion in the second lecture of the opinion that fetishism is the lowest form of religion, had led them to the two results—first, that there are few if any known cases of savage tribes who are fetish-worshippers only; secondly, that hardly any religion had kept itself quite free from the parasitical growth of fetish-worship. It had been pointed out to him, however, by some believers in a certain theory of fetishism, that all this would but affect the question of fact, and that there was a far more formidable theory behind to be encountered before it could be admitted that the first impulse to religion sprang from a feeling of the Infinite all around us, and not from any sentiments of surprise or fear called forth by shells, stones, or bones—i.e., by fetishes. We are told that whatever the facts may be, there must have been for a time, historic or pre-historic, whether during the formation of quaternary or tertiary strata of thought, when men worshipped nothing but stocks and stones. The lecturer owned the relative right of a priori reasoning in such cases, but he still thought he had done enough for his purpose by showing that the very tribes cited as living instances of fetish worship possessed simpler and sublimer religious ideas than Homer and Hesiod. But to leave no fortress in the rear he would, before speaking of the "ancient literature of India, so far as it supplies materials for the study of the origin of religion," reply briefly to this view of fetishism. Its adherents take fetish in the sense of casual objects, which, with or without reason, are raised to the rank of gods, and, thus understood, fetishism was said to be the first inevitable step in the development of religious ideas. Religion, we are told, begins with a contemplation of stones, shells, bones, and rises thence to the conception of spirits, gods, &c. But looking this theory in the face, we ask, Whence the predicate God? Here lies the whole problem. If a little child were to bring us his cat and call it a vertebrate animal, the first thing to strike us would be how the child got hold of the name vertebrate animal. So if the fetish worshipper tells us a stone is a god. What he means by a god is the great difficulty which the historians of religion have curiously enough forgotten. We are invited, e.g., to watch a very primitive form of religion among Fijians, who make the larger shooting stars gods, and the lesser departing souls. But here all depends clearly on the name and conception of God, which the Fijians have got abundant. When we are told the Vedic poets make the sun a god, and ask their name for god, we are told it is deva, bright. The biography of that single word would fill a volume, and without knowing that biography, the Vedic statement is unmeaning. So of the Fijians, and the shooting stars for gods or bright souls. So of the Benin negroes, who regard their shadows as their souls. We want to know in English, not in sesquipedalian words, such as anthropopathism and anthropomorphism, what is here meant by souls. Unless we are told whether the Benin negroes mean by soul anima the breath, or animus, the thinking principle, or the soul as the seat of passions and desires, whether they deem it material or immaterial, mortal or immortal, we are taught nothing by being told that they look upon the shadow, or a bird, or a shooting star as their soul. But it is quite another thing when ethnological psychology teaches us how—e.g., by watching the shadow stay with us by day and leave us at night, the idea of a second self arose; how the idea blending with another—namely, that of breath, lasting through life and quitting us at death—the conception of a living soul separate from the body was slowly elaborated. There we catch in the act a real transition from seen to unseen, from material to immaterial. But what people in that primitive stage thought was, not that their souls are shadows, but that after death their breath would dwell in something like the shadow that follows them during life.

Apply this to the common theory of fetishism, and the problem is this, can spirits or gods spring from stones or rubbish? We are told nothing is easier than this transition, if only we accept fetishism as the primordial form of faith. But how? Nothing more natural, we are told, nay, rational, even in its irrationality. The savage, with no ideas beyond those let in by his five senses, sees a glittering stone, a bright shell, on the morning of victory, and keeps it for luck. Nay, it proves lucky more than once. It cannot be a common stone or shell, it is a powerful spirit, a god. Now, the lecturer agreed with the believers in primordial fetishism, that if we are to explain religion as a universal property of mankind, we must explain it out of conditions universally present. He could not blame them for refusing to discuss the problem of the origin of religion with the sticklers for a primitive revelation, or for a religious faculty marking off man from other animals. We must start from common and safe ground, taking man with his five senses as he is, and as yet without any knowledge save what they furnish him with. Nothing easier than for such a man to pick up a stone, bone, or shell, but the question is whether he picks up at the same time the conceptions of a supernatural power, of spirit, of a god to be worshipped, and the famous four steps by which the savage is said to pass from the fetish, qua stone, &c., to the same fetish, qua god, &c., namely, surprise, anthropopathic conception of the idol, the assumption of a causal connection between its being there and the victory, &c., all culminating in worship, do not explain the difficulties, but hide them in a golden shower of words. It seemed to the lecturer that the believers in a primordial fetishism take for granted what remains to be proved—namely, that which forms the predicate of every fetish, call it power, spirit, or god. They have never proved, either as a fact or as a theory, that casual objects, such as stones, shells, the tail of a lion, a tangle of hair, or any such rubbish, can possess in themselves any such theogenic or god-producing character, and we have, therefore, a right to look elsewhere in order to discover what were the sensuous impressions that first filled the human mind with an inkling of the supersensuous, the infinite, the divine. It seemed wiser, instead of trying to study the origin of religion in the tertiary or quaternary strata of Africa, America, and Australia, to look to countries presenting not only the latest formation, the mere surface scour of the religious deposit, but where we can see and study some, at least, of the lower strata. This study is as difficult as that of the religion of savage races, but the deeper soil promised a richer harvest. Doubtless, the historical documents of a religion never carry us very far, inevitably failing us just where they would be most instructive—near the first springs of the old stream. But though we can nowhere watch the first vital movements of a nascent religion, we can, in some countries, observe the actual growth of religious ideas. Among the African, American, and Australian savages, it is hard enough to find out what it is now, while it is impossible to tell what it was 1,000 years ago. There was no country like India for a real study of genesis, and growth of religion, not for its history, because history, in our sense, is almost unknown in Indian literature. But better there than anywhere else could we watch the rise and progress of religious thoughts and language, just as Sanskrit, India's old language, was the best key to the study of the origin and growth of human speech. Hence, the Professor said, he had pitched upon the ancient religion of India, as furnishing the historical illustrations of his own theory of the origin and growth of religion—a theory suggested to him by a life-long study of its sacred books.

The discovery of the ancient literatures in which we can trace the germination and development of religious ideas among the early Aryan settlers of India must sound to most people like a fairy tale, nor could it be matter for surprise that there was long a certain incredulity about it. A myriad Sanskrit works are still extant. What would Plato and Aristotle have said had they heard of an ancient literature in India far richer than that of Greece? Yet at their epoch the drama of the really old Indian books had been acted. The primitive speech had changed, and the ancient faith been superseded by a new one. For, setting aside Brahmanic boasts, so much is certain that the Sandracottos, whom the Greek writers make the child-king of Palibothra when Alexander withdrew from India, is the Kandragupta of Indian literature, who reigned at Pataliputra, and the grandfather of Asoka, the Constantine of Buddhism, under whom the great Buddhist Council was held, B.C. 246. Of Asoka's time we have the earliest rock inscriptions in India. But they are written in a language related to Sanskrit as Italian is to Latin, so that Sanskrit was no longer the spoken language of the people of the third century B.C. In like manner Asoka's religion is related to the Vedic faith, as Protestantism to Romanism. Buddhism, in fact, is only intelligible as a development of, and a reaction against, Brahmanism, with which it was in conflict by its denial of the authority of the Veda. We may, therefore, advance another step, and claim Vedic literature a date older than Buddha, who flourished about B.C. 500. It is the Sanskrit literature before that epoch which is historically the really important literature of India. The Vedic books differ from the popular Sanskrit in various particulars, which Professor Max Müller specified. One was its retention of the accents, its accentuation being fundamentally the same as the Greek. On one favourite instance, the exact parallelism between the accentuation of the Greek Ζεύς and Ζεύς πατήρ (the Latin Jupiter), and that of the Vedic equivalents, the learned lecturer dwelt with eloquent enthusiasm. Before the Bhuddistic epoch three or four successive strata of Indian literature could be distinguished. Next before it, and even stretching into the first ages of the new faith, was the Sâtra period. The object of the Sâtras, pithy, dark compositions, was to gather up the knowledge then floating about in the Brahmanic settlements or Parishads. They contain the rules of sacrifices, treatises on phonetics, etymology, exegesis, grammar-metre, customs, laws, geometry, astronomy, philosophy. Numerous and interesting illustrations were given. This period presupposed that of the Brâmanas, prose works too, but in a totally different style, in a slightly diverse dialect, and with quite another purpose. Most of them are accentuated, while Sâtras are so no longer: they contain elaborate discussions on the sacrifices, as handed down in different families, and supported by authoritative names. If the Sâtra period began about B.C. 600, the Brâmana period would require, at least, 200 years to account for its origin and development, although the Professor said he cared little about these dates, save as pegs to the memory.

Still earlier was the Mantra period, to which he ascribed the collection and systematic arrangement of the Vedic hymn, and formulas, found in the four books or Samhitâs—namely, the Rig-Veda, the Yagur-Veda, the Sâma-Veda, and the Atharva-Veda. We moved already in the Mantras among priests by profession, and to each minister was assigned his exact place in the performance of each sacrifice, and his portion of the ancient sacred poetry to be recited, sung, or muttered. Fortunately for us, there was one class of priests who had to learn by heart the whole treasure of their sacred and national poetry, and thus had been handed down to us one great collection of ancient poetry—namely, that known as the Rig-Veda, and as the Veda of the Hymns. In truth, though there are other books called by the same name, this is the only real or historical Veda. It consists of ten books, each being an independent collection of hymns handed down as heirlooms in different families, and at last embodied into a whole. The Mantra period, during which the poems were thus collected and arranged as hymn books for the four classes of priests may have extended from about B.C. 1000 to B.C. 800. Thus it is before B.C. 1000 that the spontaneous growth of Vedic poetry must be placed, as well as the gradual development of the Vedic religion, and the slow organisation of the principal Vedic sacrifices. How far back that period, the so-called Kândas period, stretched, who can tell? Some scholars extended it to B.C. 2000 or even B.C. 3000; but this was guess work, and it was better to show the different layers of thought that preceded the Vedic religion, and thus to judge approximately of its long growth, than to try to measure it by years. One thing was certain. There was nothing more primitive, not to say in India, but in the whole Aryan world, than the hymns of the Rig-Veda. So far as we ourselves are Aryans in speech—i.e., in thought—so far the Rig-Veda is our own oldest book. It was a fact, though it sounded again like a fairy tale, that the Rig-Veda, which for more than 3,000 or 4,000 years had formed the foundation of the religious and moral life of untold millions of human beings, had never been published until it fell to his lot first to edit its sacred text, together with its most authoritative commentary. Though there were a few manuscripts extant, none of which, however, was older than A.D. 1000, it was not by them, but by dint of memory it had been entirely handed down, in the latest as in the earliest times. The Vedic religion was not, as had sometimes been asserted, extinct in India, a religion quite different from the popular Hindoo belief in Vishnu, Siva, and Brahma, and from the concomitant worship of the most hideous idols. But those Brahmins who uphold the sacred traditions of the past, and who starved during the famine rather than defile themselves, were not to be met with in the drawing-rooms of Calcutta. They live on alms in villages, either by themselves or in colleges. They speak and write Sanskrit, and Professor Max Müller said he constantly received letters from some of them couched in that most faultless language.

His fairy tale, the Professor added, was not over yet. These men—he knew it as a fact—had the whole Rig-Veda, computed to number 153,826 words, by heart, just as their ancestors had 3,000 or 4,000 years ago. The Professor quoted a letter to himself, dated the 2nd of March last year, from the native scholar, Shankar Pandurang, who was at the present moment collecting various readings for his edition of the Rig-Veda, not from manuscripts, but from the oral tradition of the Vaidic Srotriyas. The extract is as follows:—"I am collecting a few of our walking Rig-Veda manuscripts, taking your text as the basis. I find a good many differences, which I shall soon be able to examine more clearly, when I may be able to say whether they are various readings or not. I will, of course, communicate them all to you before making any use of them publicly, if ever I do this at all. As I write a Vaidik scholar is going over your Rig-Veda text. He has his own manuscript on one side, but does not open it except occasionally. He knows the whole Samhitâ and Pada text by heart. I wish I could send you his photograph, how he is squatting in my tent, with his upavita (the sacred cord) round his shoulders, and only a doti round his middle, not a bad specimen of an old Rishis (bard.)" "Think," said the Professor in concluding his lecture, "of that half-naked Hindoo repeating under an Indian sky the sacred hymns which have been handed down for 3,000 or 4,000 years by oral tradition. If printing or writing had never been invented, if India had never been occupied by the English, that young Brahmin, and hundreds and thousands of his countrymen, would probably have been engaged just the same in learning and saying by heart the simple prayer first uttered on the Sarasvati and the other rivers of the Punjab. And here we are, under the shadow of Westminster Abbey, in the very zenith of the intellectual life of Europe, nay, of the whole world, proposing to learn from the same sacred hymns some of the deepest secrets of the human heart, which is the same everywhere, however widely we ourselves may be separated from each other by space and time, by colour and creed."

POOLE.—On three successive Sunday evenings the Rev. W. Agar has lectured on the following subjects, viz.:—"Turkey, her Prophet and Faith;" "Russia, her History and Religion;" "England, her True Interests." The lectures, especially the first two, contained a valuable fund of information much needed at the present time, the last being mainly an eloquent and powerful appeal on behalf of a peaceful solution of existing difficulties. The lectures, which were publicly announced, drew fair congregations, a number of strangers being present upon each occasion.

THE RADICAL'S PRAYER FOR PEACE.

O Lord of Hosts, who hast the hearts
Of all men at Thy sure command.
O turn our thoughts away from wrath,
That peace may brighten o'er the land!

O fill our souls with Love Divine,
With faith in justice fill our mind;
And still, while helpful of the right,
Be all our hearts to peace inclined.

Against the strife of war we pray,
Against its foul and fearful wrong,
Against its wrathful passions fell,
Against the evils it makes strong;

Against mistaken men who scheme
To deluge earth's fair face with blood,
And make our island-home a land
Where right and freedom are eschewed.

Unto Thy England Thou art good,
For Thou hast made her great and free;
O may she in her strength be wise,
And neither vain nor cruel be!

Thy Englishmen have work to do—
Far higher work than to destroy—
To raise the low, instruct the poor,
And add to knowledge love and joy!

We pray for peace to our dear land,
That freedom may continue still,
That by our nation may be done
Thy will, yea, through the people's will.

That no blind zeal nor vain desire
May cause them in this shame to share;
O give us peace in this our time,
And answer, Lord, our spirit's prayer!

WILLIAM MITCHELL.

The Unitarian Herald.

FRIDAY, MAY 24, 1878.

THE UNITED PRESBYTERIAN SYNOD.

THE WESTMINSTER CONFESSION AND FERGUS
FERGUSON.

While the Congregational Union of England and Wales was seeking to relieve itself from the trouble of too great latitude of faith, the United Presbyterian Synod of Scotland was finding means of escape from the rigidity of Westminster orthodoxy. The Congregationalists think it dangerous to make "the bounds of freedom wider yet;" the United Presbyterians appear to think that it will tend to the security of their churches to relax a little the bonds of the Standards. Still, the direction amongst the latter takes by no means an alarming turn. It is intended simply to loosen fixities of faith on which not even Dr. Mellor and Mr. Dale could persuade the Congregational Union to insist as conditions of fellowship with their churches, but not to provide a refuge for wanderers of Mr. Fergus Ferguson's propensity to travel here, there, and anywhere out of the beaten track. Hence, while the Synod approves of putting into the old bottles a little new wine of a milder character than their old contents, it cannot be brought to relish the strong compound which Mr. Ferguson was pouring into them. A Declaratory Statement of a liberal kind on certain minor articles of the Standards is one thing, and is palatable; a new interpretation of major articles, which really is no more interpretation but the sweeping away of the Standards in toto, and the substitution of another theology, is an entirely different thing, and is very unsavoury indeed.

It was known some time ago that the Committee appointed by the Synod to revise the Westminster Confession of Faith had shrunk from the full responsibility of their important task. They decided not to touch the Confession, but to prepare a Declaratory Statement which should give explanations in regard to the existing Standards. This Declaratory Statement consists of seven articles, and each of them introduces a modicum of modern cordial into the ancient Calvinistic bitters. The first and second articles leave open the question at issue between Calvinism and Arminianism as to the extent of the atonement and the "grace of the Holy Spirit." In article three of the Declaration the dogma of "man's total depravity," involving his inability to will and do any spiritual good, is so considerably modified as to be something very different indeed from the "original sin" of the Westminster Divines. Article four distinctly knocks a big hole in the Confession, admitting infant salvation and the salvability of the heathen. By articles five and six the U. P. ideas as to the relationship of Church and State, and the maintenance of the "ordinances" of worship are set forth in so far as they differ from what the Standards "teach, or may be supposed to teach" on these points. And by article seven and last, the principle of a free interpretation of the Bible is conceded, for "in accordance with the practice hitherto observed in this Church, liberty of opinion is allowed on such points in the Standards not entering into the substance of the faith, as the interpretation of the 'six days' in the Mosaic account of the creation; the Church guarding against the abuse of this liberty to the injury of its unity and peace."

The Scottish mind, so enamoured with theological discussion, and so drawn just now from the opposite sides of love and hate towards whatever has in it the promise and potency of heresy, will doubtless revel in debating whether the latitudinarianism thus provided for is or is not a good policy. We don't care to repeat for the thousandth time our well-known opinions as to such a question. Of course we regard this Declaratory Statement as a clear advance. But the wind-up of it is a curious bit of inconsistency which, coming from Scottish theologians, is deliciously ridiculous. It recommends that the Westminster Confession of Faith and the Longer and Shorter Catechisms shall be acknowledged as an exhibition of the sense of Holy Scripture. We must say that to form the Articles we have alluded to, amending, altering, and in fact subverting, as they do, parts of the Confession and the Catechisms, and then to talk of the latter as being the Standards still to be adhered to as the Standards of the U. P. Church is, it seems to us, enough to confuse ordinary common-sense folks' ideas of intellectual consistency and moral honesty. It would surely, as the Dumbarton Herald remarks, have been far more honest to have said: These old documents, which have been the Standards of the United Presbyterian Church, no longer fairly represent its creed. They must be revised or superseded by something more in accordance with present beliefs and the spirit of the age. In place of that there is given this modifying Declaration, which may be interpreted pretty much at the option of those by whom it is made, and which virtually sets aside the Standards which it professes to maintain. As the result of a year's labour on the part of a committee of learned theologians and able ecclesiastics, this disingenuous mode of surmounting the difficulty of diversity of faiths in a church is not at all a creditable performance.

The Synod last week adopted the Declaratory Statement as far as, and including, article six; but the debate on article seven, which allows of liberty of opinion on such points in the Standards as the Mosaic account of the creation, was adjourned, and the result of its renewal we do not know at the time of writing. It stood over to take into consideration the Fergus Ferguson case. Mr. Ferguson's departures from the faith have gone a long way beyond the permissions of the Declaratory Statement, and landed him in fields far outside the limits of these about-to-be-authorised excursions. Mr. Ferguson has made very short work of the Westminster Trinity, of the forensic and substitu-tionary doctrine of the atonement, and of eternal punishment. The Declaration is, therefore, no freedom for his ideas, and no provision for his safety. The Synod which received it rejected them. By a majority of 208 the Synod sustained the decision of the Glasgow Presbytery on the first count of the libel against him, which had reference to his views of the atonement. It is notable that the older ministers voted in the majority to a man, while on the other hand, of the younger men ordained since 1870 forty-seven voted in the minority. The Nonconformist hints that "these remarkable facts are to be explained in this way, that the younger men know Mr. Ferguson personally, and love him. But if it is true, as it is scarcely possible to doubt, that he is on the Broad Church rails, the support which he is getting from the rising generation of ministers is somewhat ominous." Beaten, however, by this tremendous majority, Mr. Ferguson retired from the further progress of the case; the protestors against the judgment of the Presbytery threw up their appeals against the remaining counts; and the Synod resolved that the decision of the Presbytery on the whole case should stand. Mr. Ferguson then, at the eleventh hour, made declarations and explanations which, in our judgment, are fundamentally inconsistent with, and altogether nullify, his published teaching. A committee was appointed to consult with him in reference to his explanations, and the upshot of the interview is that Mr. Ferguson's concessions have induced the Synod by 140 to 90 votes, or a majority of 50, to reinstate him in his ministerial functions, from which he had been suspended. This is the absurd result of all the commotion of the last few months, and especially of Mr. Ferguson's expressed intention to leave the church rather than yield an inch. Mr. Ferguson has thrown away a grand opportunity to prove not only of what moral backbone he was himself made, but of what real independence of spirit, intellectual integrity, and high moral principle the left wing of the United Presbyterians of Glasgow were made. They have not been equal to it. They might have gone forth in the splendid faith of the Disruptionists, not knowing whither they went. But they and he have only swelled the saddening list of Liberal thinkers who have emasculated their influence and brought on Liberalism the slur of moral weakness by making compromises with creeds their hearts and intellects disown. We remember that in 1871 Mr. Ferguson was tried for the heresy of believing in the possibility of salvation hereafter, and that he then recanted. It seems that in the interval between 1871 and 1878 Mr. Ferguson has not repented him of that timorous surrender, that, pulled up again, he has repeated it, instead of coming out from a body that has so decisively condemned what in his published teaching he affirmed as solemn, eternal truths. Our hope for such a magnificent moral testimony was not at all strong; and we are not surprised to find that Mr. Ferguson has submitted again. He has no doubt been influenced by the fact that the Declaratory Statement allows him a measure of freedom; and, perhaps, it is in the hope of securing an extension of the freedom that he has made his peace with the United Presbyterians, and disposed them to receive him again into their bosom as a returning repentant Prodigal. But he will unquestionably be closely watched, and unless he walks more circumspectly than he has of late years, he will soon again depart from the course the Synod marks out for its ministers. Be his future what it may, it is not at all likely to be the future of a leader and commander of the people, but only of a subaltern, disposed to occasional freaks of insubordination, for which, just in the nick of time, he will cry "Peccavi!"

THE DUKE OF WESTMINSTER AND DISSENTERS.

The Duke of Westminster has given a noteworthy testimony to the change which has taken place during the last few years in the spirit in which Nonconformists are regarded. Speaking at the laying of the memorial-stone of a new school in connection with the Congregational Church at Mold, the Duke referred to the visit of the deputation to Earl Russell on the fiftieth anniversary of the repeal of the Corporation and Tests Acts, and said it seemed almost impossible in the present day that only fifty years ago such disabilities could have existed; but it was a matter of history that they did, and that it took forty years to get them removed. He could not remember them, but he could remember when as a Whig baby he was taught to look on a Dissenter as being much in the same category as a murderer, and on a Dissenting chapel as a den of iniquity, to be quickly passed by. The Whig babies of a later generation had not these feelings, but he would not answer for some of the Tory babies. Even now there were some disabilities under which Dissenters laboured, and which required to be removed, and Mr. Osborne Morgan, if he were present, would have had something to say to one of them. These remaining grievances must inevitably be removed, and that before very long.

VOLTAIRE AND JOAN OF ARC.

A NEW statue of Joan of Arc is to be raised at Orleans on the site of the monument destroyed during the Revolution. The Catholics of France intend the erection of Joan's monument to be a sort of counter-check to the centenary of Voltaire. The country is happy that possesses two such worthies, unhappy that makes their names the slogans of party war. Voltaire and Joan of Arc were both true lovers of France, of freedom, and of their fellowmen. With his usual historical blindness, the chief fault of his genius, Voltaire could see nothing in Joan of Arc but the ascetic and the visionary. On the other hand, Catholics can see nothing in Voltaire but an incarnation of evil. Monsigneur Dupanloup, in a pamphlet just issued, says Voltaire was the opposite of a Democrat, the toady of nobles, princes, kings, and kings' mistresses; and he denounces the centenary as an act of war and an insult to the religious faith of France, which Catholics are bound to resent. With other eyes than those of the eighteenth century, with other eyes than those of Bishop Dupanloup, we are, happily, able to recognise the unexampled beauty and pure perfection of the character of Joan, as well as the keen love of truth and liberty, the hatred of all oppression that, with all his faults, were incarnate in Voltaire. The fury of party seems still to blind Frenchmen, and one side or the other claims an exclusive interest in memories which belong to the nation.

LORD ROSEBERRY AND THE SUNDAY SOCIETY.

The Sunday Society, the object of which is the opening of museums and art galleries, steadily continues its work with heart and hope. At its annual meeting Lord Roseberry presided, and in a temperate but forcible address pointed out the great necessity which exists for the accomplishment of the intellectual and moral reform which the society advocates. He thought that if the Puritan plan, which makes the Sabbath a period of vacancy varied by drinking, were altered, it would be for the improvement of society. People could not be at church all day—we may add that even strict Puritans are coming to think that to be there once a day is to discharge the whole duty of worship—and what are they to do to fulfil the Sabbatarian idea of rest? The shutting of museums and art galleries is a grave waste of opportunity, and a grave national loss. It was agreed to request the Premier to receive a deputation from the society, and a resolution was passed praying the Royal Academicians to open their collection one or two Sunday afternoons this season.

THE BRAHMO MARRIAGE.

AN "Address to the Brahma Public of India" has been issued by Babus Protap Chunder Mozumdar and Gour Gobind Roy, explaining, on behalf of Babu Keshub Chunder Sen, the circumstances connected with his daughter's marriage to the Maharajah of Cuch Behar. The apology would have been more acceptable had it come sooner. It adds nothing material to what was already known, and leaves the case, as it evidently must remain, without satisfactory explanation. A paragraph in the Indian Mirror of April 14th asserts that the document is simply intended as "an official statement of facts for general information, and not as the minister's self-defence." It would be gratifying to the well-wishers of Babu Keshub and of Brahmoism if this might be taken to mean that he does not wish to be considered as defending his action in the matter all round. Those who generally speak for him in the Mirror have admitted in a leading article "that the marriage stands far, very far, from the ideal of Brahma marriages;" while at the same time they insist that, mixed marriage as it is, it promises to be productive of great benefit to the State. Earnest Brahmos may be excused for feeling that their leader has permitted himself to sacrifice Brahma principles to State considerations. The least he can do is to abstain from excusing himself; and we wish we could interpret the paragraph already referred to as a sign that he really means to do so. In that case, however, it would have been advisable to have omitted from the official statement such declarations as it contains about his having been guided in this matter by "the pure dictates of his conscience." There is a confusion here between conscience and judgment, which could only have arisen when the latter faculty was far from being at its best. Brahmoism has received a severe shock, and a division has been initiated which may remain after its cause is forgotten. By an influential section of the community Babu Keshub has been deposed from the ministry. He remains in possession of the Mandir, or meeting-place, but worship has been commenced by the dissenters from his congregation in a private house. Miss S. D. Collect, writing to the Inquirer, says that "the schism which has arisen out of this affair is a much more deeply-rooted matter than some have supposed." We are very sorry to hear it. It cannot be expected that parties so irritated should worship together. Better that they should not try it. But Paul and Barnabas can work separately without each starting a new sect; and we trust the Brahmos will be saved from that extremity.

WOMEN AND LONDON UNIVERSITY.

THOSE who are interested in the Higher Education of Women have achieved a most important and gratifying triumph. At the annual meeting of the Convocation of the University of London, last week, Dr. Carpenter, the registrar of the University, announced that the Crown had granted the petition of the University for the admission of women to all degrees. The new charter, which is dated the 4th instant, was adopted with acclamation. This is a step in advance, and the only wonder is that it should not long ago have been made. The granting of University distinctions to women cannot, it is clear, injure anyone so long as the standard of qualification remains unchanged, and against any change being made in their favour women themselves would make the strongest protests. The arguments of the opposition have really consisted in nothing more than allusions to our old rhetorical friend, "the thin edge of the wedge," for it has been felt that if a woman may write M.A. or LL.D. after her name there can no longer be any reason whatever for excluding her from the professions which have hitherto been monopolies of men.

BLACKLEY.—The annual services in connection with the school and chapel here were held on May 12. The chapel was profusely decorated with plants and flowers, the freewill offerings of members and friends. Excellent sermons were preached by the Revs. J. T. Marriott, A. Rushton, and J. McConnochie, the ministers for the day. The chapel was crowded at each service, numbers in the evening being compelled to remain outside in the chapel yard. The collections for the day amounted to £26. 16s. 4d.

THE COMMUNION SERVICE.

REV. E. C. TOWNE, B.A.

V. CONCLUSION.

SINCE my last article came out, I have seen for the first time the discussion on Communion which appeared some three and a half years ago in these columns. In connection with that discussion there appeared, what I did not hear of at the time, a statement made by the Rev. J. F. W. Ware, who is now in the pulpit of Dr. Channing at Boston, U.S. Mr. Ware took the ground which I take in regard to Paul's influence in establishing, after Christ, and upon his own idea, the Kyriac Supper. Mr. Ware said: "The accounts of the Lord's Supper are given in the Gospels and in the [first] letter to the Corinthians. In passing from one Gospel to another it gains something, till Paul rounds it off and puts it on the Church as a thing of perpetuity, with the damatory clauses which seem to have done something to maintain it. In the Gospels of Matthew, Mark, and John, it has nothing of an institution about it. Luke first suggests the idea of remembrance, but only as to the bread. Paul takes the further step of adding the idea to the cup. It seems, therefore, a Pauline institution, created by him as a memorial service to show his love for his master and to do him honour."

Mr. Ware's judgment about it was that—

"It should be left to every man to be used as one of many ways to fortify faith, establish character, and grow into a Christian life by remembering Christ;" and that "something less formal should be devised, the occasion should be less frequent, it should be dissociated from all other services, and its aim be purely commemorative."

In comparison with this view, which puts the matter to one side, and in fact preserves a mere commemoration out of deference to historical tradition, we propose to take away whatever Paul's ordinance included which failed to carry out the example and spirit of Christ, and to get a purely Christ-like communion, in which the breaking of bread shall be, as it was in the hands of Christ, a symbol of worship and self-consecration, the use of which, while always including remembrance of Christ, may yet be so varied and enriched as to come, at suitable times, into the front of our services, as a festival of the Christian life. To the question asked by Mr. Darbishire in the discussion mentioned above—"Can we not adopt a new custom which may be healthier for all of us?"—the answer which our view gives is, get rid of Paul's ordinance, and you will find in Christ's example a suggestion of just the custom needed, which we can take up by a simple reformation of what we now have, and a reformation which is a true restoration. Christ found the original simple idea of breaking of bread, which always had a true meaning of acknowledgment of God's bounty, covered up in the Passover (or later) form of the feast of unleavened bread by special Levitical ideas—the devised Passover ideas. And while Christ himself took the former, and made it serve remembrance of God and consecration to God's demand on us for brotherly love, Paul took the Passover ideas and made them serve his special purpose of an honour to Christ which Christ would not have accepted. Paul introduced the "body and blood of the Lord" ordinance, where Christ would have had, and had had, only simple breaking of bread as a symbol of our trust and love.

Christ had a constant habit of "breaking bread," by way of a symbolic religious act. A reflection of this appears in the attempt made in Luke (xxiv. 30) to show how a reappearance of Christ was known. It is said that "he became known to them in the breaking of the bread." "As he was at table with them, he took the bread, and blessed, and broke, and gave it to them. And their eyes were opened, and they knew him." This at least shows the writer's belief that by simple breaking of bread Christ could be known. And it should be remarked that the act was one of blessing God for the goodness shown in his bounties, and of consecration in return for these gifts. In no case, where the mention of blessing occurs, does the term used mean that it was, as our customary ritualism has it, the bread which Christ blessed. He blessed God for that of which the bread was the symbol. The same usage is more than once mentioned in the book of Acts. "They were attending upon the fellowship, the breaking of bread, and the prayers. And daily attending with one accord in the temple, and breaking bread in private, they partook of food with exultation and singleness of heart praising God." "On the first day of the week, when we had assembled to break bread." The exact method of it is reflected in the following:—"And having taken a loaf, he (Paul) gave thanks to God in presence of all, and having broken it began to eat." This, we hold, was a habit of Christ, apart from, as well as at, the Passover supper; and when he broke bread at the Passover supper, it was in the same sense as elsewhere, to acknowledge God. This habitual act of Christ we may follow in more ways than one. In the communion, we adapt it to the united use of a congregation, and we give it the widest and most varied meaning, because by consecration thus broadly conceived we best acknowledge God. Christ is amply remembered in it, but as a teacher and an example, not as the religious object had in view by the service. The giver of every good and perfect gift is the religious object towards whom we turn in communion, such as Christ taught and exemplified.

It was with the erring disciples that there grew up the habit of making Christ himself the one object of communion reverence, and it was especially with Paul that there came into use those ideas which have so largely covered up and destroyed the original and genuine Christ-like communion. It seems to have come about in the following way:—Paul's story of the matter, as his thoughts and his visions had made it up, was on record before the gospels were completed. His ideas crept into the gospels, especially Luke, and found a place in their account of what Christ was reported to have said. Thus is accounted for the strange fact that Luke only represents Christ as having said, "This do in remembrance of me." And the words about the body and the blood may well have come in the same way. Not only have they a meaning utterly foreign to the mind of Christ, but it can be shown whence they must have come, and that they do not and cannot represent the proper view of Christ's relation to the matter. Dr. Edersheim makes a statement which shows that Paul may have got from Rabbinical authority the notion and the expression as to the body of Christ. Dr. Edersheim says:—

"The words associated with those sacred memories come with a strange sound when we find in Rabbinical writings the 'Passover lamb' designated as 'his body,' or when our special attention is called to the cup known as 'the cup of blessing which we bless;' nay, when the very term for the Passover liturgy itself, the 'Haggadah,' which means 'showing forth,' is exactly the same as that used by St. Paul."

This being the case, we may well drop Paul's Rabbinical use of Passover ideas, and recover Christ's custom of making simple breaking of bread a symbol of our united dependence on God, and our communion together in this dependence as members one of another in human and Christian brotherhood. The united act has peculiar power; the simplicity of the symbol lends itself to great fulness and variety of meaning; and while we by it, chiefly and directly, signify acknowledgment of God and consecration to His service, we never fail to commemorate Christ, in reality, if not in name, and according to the method He would enjoin. The administration of the form should be the closing part of a full special service, coming after the sermon, and embracing a special address and prayer, the partaking of the broken bread, and a hymn. No strict form of words is appropriate, but something like—"We break this bread as a symbol of God's bounty; we partake of it in common trust and love and self-consecration, desiring that there may be in us the mind that was in Christ;" or, after special words of explanation, "Let us unite to take it in the spirit that was in Christ." Of course, it is entirely possible (as I have always done) to continue,—if desired,—the existing use of the cup, it is reduced to so little. But it is of the utmost importance to constantly make clear this rule, that any person is at perfect liberty to pass the bread instead of taking it, and still more the cup, if to any it appear more satisfactory to omit the material element. But with simple breaking of bread, probably few, if any, would continue to object to the outward form. And no pains should be spared to bring home to all the fact that the service, like taking a pledge, is not only for all, but is especially for those who by weakness or temptation most need to have help. At this service, of all that we have, should we most compel them that are without to come in. The communion days should be at once fellowship festivals and seasons of quickening and revival. To the young especially, and to the children, should the communion be made a festival of special religious impression. The simplicity, freedom, and significance of the service relieve it of all taint of ritualism, and put it in the power of the minister, with the aids at his command, to establish the days of communion (if not more than six in the year) as times of genuine refreshing above the common, when people and minister, young and old, the weak and the strong, unite in a sign of loyalty to the common Heavenly Father, the common human brotherhood, and the pure example and law of Christ. It would be especially appropriate if at general meetings from year to year the communion had a place, as after the sermon on Good Friday. Nothing could be more helpful than such joining in a simple act of allegiance.

NEWCHURCH.—The anniversary services in connection with the Sunday school were held on Sunday last, when the Rev. A. Lazenby, the newly-appointed minister, delivered two excellent discourses to large and appreciative congregations. Notwithstanding the almost continuous downpour of rain, which doubtless prevented many from attending who otherwise would have done, and the extreme dullness of trade, the collections, together with donations since received, amounted to the handsome sum of £41. 2s. 6d.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

MR. FERGUSON STILL AT HOME.

After a prolonged sitting the Synod of the United Presbyterian Church, sitting at Edinburgh, agreed on Wednesday night, by 140 to 90 votes, to accept the Rev. Mr. Fergusson's explanation of his views of the great fundamental article of the Christian faith and restore him to the exercise of his ministerial functions, from which he had lately been suspended.

HOW THE WORK PROCEEDS.

At a meeting of the John-street United Presbyterian Church session, held in Glasgow, attention was called by the clerk to the fact that their representative member had in Presbytery voted consistently in favour of the Rev. F. Ferguson. A discussion followed, the result of which was that several members who favour the views of Mr. Ferguson withdrew from the session. Step by step the work goes on. In time the whole lump of Scottish orthodoxy will be leavened by even a stronger leaven than the mild liberalism of Mr. Ferguson.

VANITY IN RELIGION: MORE "HERESY."

Preaching at Inch, from Ecclesiastes i. 2, the Rev. Dr. Service referred to vanity in religion, and remarked that "when they said that all was vanity except religion, they referred to an extremely limited experience; but when they said that all was vanity, especially religion, it was to be feared that religion had become to multitudes a part of the general vanity of their lives. Reading the discussions and debates on the alleged heresies of the time he said one was lost in the intricate metaphysical arguments, which were undistinguishable from utter darkness and had a suspicious resemblance to nonsense. He characterised the doctrines of election and reprobation as revolting to the conscience; of the utter inability of man to believe the Gospel, or to do or think anything but what was evil and only evil continuously, as contrary to experience; and the condemnation to eternal punishment of the greater part of the human race as a libel upon God. The Gospel, the glad tidings of God's charity and man's eternal blessedness, had become a vast maze of metaphysics. Is the covenant of grace, he asked, any better than the covenant of works? If they were correctly described by many who undertook to describe them, he for one would rather have lived under the one than under the other. There were representations of Christianity going which made it appear that we were unfortunate in that we were not born Jews under the covenant of works, or Pagans under no covenant at all. There were a great many who were sound in the faith as to being saved by belief in Christ. Were they models of Christian character? Not at all! Nobody pretended they were—they did not pretend it themselves. All their justification and all their sanctification had not made them good, true, noble, anything at all but very middling or very sorry specimens of mankind. If there was any word to apply to this kind of Christianity more proper than another, it was vanity, something which is really nothing. He that doeth righteousness is righteous; he that lives Christ's life, obeys Christ's words, accepts Christ's rule of love to God and man, is saved. This was the only orthodoxy that was good for anything." If all this be not "heresy" of a very pronounced type, we should find it hard to say what is. Poor Fergusson is a perfectly "sound" man by comparison with Dr. Service. Mr. F. should join the "Establishment."

LONDON DISTRICT UNITARIAN SOCIETY.

THE twenty-eighth annual meeting of the subscribers and friends of this society was held on the evening of Wednesday, the 8th inst., in the Stamford-street Chapel, Blackfriars. The chair was occupied by Sir J. CLARKE LAWRENCE, Bart., M.P., president of the society; and among those present were the Revs. Wysard, minister of the German Church, Denmark Hill; A. D. Schedema, minister of the Dutch Church, Austinfriars; R. Spears, T. Dunkerley, B.A., T. Rix, M. C. Gascoigne, E. M. Grant (Maidstone), J. Worthington, C. Howe, T. L. Marshall, H. Ierson, M.A.; and Messrs. H. New, president of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association; A. Preston, and A. Titford (secretaries), and D. Martineau (treasurer); J. T. Preston, H. Jeffrey, T. C. Clarke, R. Pinnock (Newport, Isle of Wight), B. Lewis, W. Plimpton, N. M. Tayler, J. T. Hart, &c.

The PRESIDENT, on rising to address the meeting, was greeted with cheers. He said: Ladies and gentlemen, a good many years have passed since the first meeting of the London District Unitarian Society was held. I find that I have before me the first annual report, the date of which is 1861, and the first question which naturally arises when that circumstance is called to our mind is, What position do Unitarians occupy now in regard to the public? Do the same reasons prevail now which prevailed then, and induced those who were attached to Unitarian Christian principles to exert themselves in some degree with the view of making known those principles to the people of London generally? I find one passage in the second report of the society which reads as follows: "The real nature of the opinions of Unitarian Christianity is very little understood by the public at large, and what little information they do possess is derived from their opponents, by whom the most serious misrepresentations of their doctrines are constantly made from the pulpit." Now I am not aware that there has been any great change as far as that is concerned in regard to a great many of the pulpits that exist at the present time in London and its vicinity, and my own impression is that the time has not gone by when all who hold and believe in the principles of Unitarian Christianity should cease to use their best endeavours for making those opinions known in order that those who are at present in ignorance of those things may know what they really are, and, once knowing them, I believe very many people will be prepared to receive them, and see in them principles of very great value. (Hear, hear.) I know it is sometimes said both by friends and opponents that the time of controversy is past, and that times have changed, and that we no longer need to go into the differences which prevail amongst professing bodies of Christians. But it has often occurred to me, as no doubt it has to many of you, that those who make use of such expressions have possibly for themselves passed through the period of controversy, if I may use the term, and they forget to bear in mind that there are multitudes around them who passed through the same stage and who know as little about Unitarian opinion as people entertained some 20, 50, or even 100 years ago. Now with the knowledge of these facts present to our minds, I think the time has not come when the exertions of such a society as this should become in any way less active or less forward. It must be within the experience of many present that in the course of their lives they have met with persons who entertain the most extraordinary notions with regard to Unitarians and the opinions they hold. Some who profess to undervalue what is termed the propagandist method seem to think that it is of very little consequence what opinions a man holds—conduct is all and all. But then the thought naturally occurs to us whether opinions do not exercise some influence upon conduct. (Hear, hear.) And here I will venture to read the following—because I sometimes think it is of value to record some of the old thoughts expressed by the men who took an active part in working the society a few years ago:—"Unitarians, regarding a belief of, or a mere assent to, the truth of propositions upon evidence as not a virtue, nor unbelief a vice, are nevertheless sensible of the infinite value of a right belief in guiding men's thoughts and actions, and trace many important evils to what they conceive to be errors of belief in their fellow-men." Now, I apprehend that nothing in the shape of uncharitableness could be charged against such an expression, and I do trust that whatever action may be taken by Unitarians they will ever bear in mind the great proposition I have just read, and that their eagerness to make known their own views and to make converts will never induce them to think or act uncharitably. (Hear, hear.) The spirit of charity will, I trust, ever be cherished amongst us, and the greater the manifestation of zeal and energy the greater will be the Christian charity accompanying them. Now, as I just remarked, there is to be found not only amongst ourselves but outside our own body an indifference as to anything like definite opinion. I venture to think that indifference upon any subject is at all events an evil; whatever is worth possessing or thinking about is worth telling other people about, and whether our beliefs exist in regard to science, philosophy, or theology, it is our duty to do something to induce those who are near and dear to us to share the opinions which we ourselves regard as of value. (Hear, hear.) In fact, it sometimes seems to me that this indifference to definite opinions is carried by some people to such an extreme degree that they hold and advocate a Christianity without any tint or shade—what is called colourless Christianity. We have seen in a good many cases the result of such teaching. It means that we leave to others to fill in the deeper shades. If our Christianity be of that colourless nature, depend upon it we shall find that there is some very active member of that Church which calls itself Catholic, adding thereto a good, deep, strong, red tint of colour. Or you run the risk of having your colourless Christianity disfigured by a still darker shade—a shade so dark that, whereas we might in the neutral tint of Anglicism find a few shades of liberal Christianity as well as a few shades of what I have just termed the deep red colour, when we get to what I should call the black mark of unbelief, we find that all our tints of Christianity disappear altogether. (Hear, hear.) These, ladies and gentlemen, are my own views, which I venture to think are not altogether formed upon theory, because I could present to you case after case which has come within my own experience of occurrences such as I have just sketched, which have happened to many families bearing well-known names amongst Unitarians themselves, and I can trace in almost every case the cause to the dislike of those who had the training of the young to impress any opinions whatever upon their minds, because as they did not do it themselves, other people of stronger and more determined minds did it for them in the direction I have indicated. (Hear, hear.) After a few further remarks, the President concluded by calling upon

Mr. TITFORD (secretary) to read the committee's report, which we have already given in the Herald of May 10th.

Mr. D. MARTINEAU (treasurer) congratulated the

NEWS OF OUR CHURCHES.

NOTICE.—Our friends would oblige if they would kindly send their news paragraphs so as to arrive never later than Wednesday morning, otherwise we are compelled to cut them down.

MINISTERIAL APPOINTMENT.—We learn that the Rev. J. H. Smith, of Dewsbury, has been appointed to the long vacant pulpit of Sydney, New South Wales. We offer our best wishes both to Mr. Smith and the congregation, which we shall look to see revived and strengthened under his ministry.

AINSWORTH.—On Sunday last the second meeting of the season of the Bury District Sunday School Union was held here, but owing to the unfavourable state of the weather prevailing at the time, there was not so good an attendance as on former occasions. The Rev. E. Turland presided. After the usual business had been transacted, Mr. Darbyshire, of Stand, read a paper on "The Duty of Sunday School Teachers in the Present European Crisis." He said he thought it was the duty of Sunday School teachers, and of every right-minded minister, to preach the doctrine of peace under the present circumstances. A discussion followed, in which took part—the Chairman, Mr. Dewhurst, Mr. Holt, and Mr. Allen. Mr. Darbyshire was then called upon to reply. Mr. Allen moved, and Mr. Darbyshire seconded, that the "Declaration against War" be signed by the chairman on behalf of the meeting, and forwarded to R. N. Philips, Esq., M.P., and Mr. Gladstone. A vote of thanks to the essayist and the chairman followed, and a hymn and prayer brought the proceedings to a close.

LEEDS: HUNSLLET.—The Rev. M. S. Dunbar, M.A., late of Horsham, who has been appointed to this pulpit, began his ministry on Sunday last, preaching in the morning on "Religion," and in the evening on "Liberty in Theology." He said he hoped to be able to teach religion according to the simplicity that is in Christ. Religion had not been made a mysterious thing by Christ, but was the spirit of love to God and man. It would fall to him occasionally to deal with speculation and doctrinal subjects, but this would only be in order to clear away what tended to obscure to some minds the simplicity of religion. He would try to have some true and earnest words to utter, and if his hearers came prepared to receive a blessing in some part of the service, he believed their meeting together would help the growth of the spirit of religion in their hearts, and of its fruits in their lives.

LIVERPOOL: BEAUFORT-STREET.—On Tuesday, May 21st, a tea party in connection with the committee of the Temperance Society and a few of their friends, to the number of about fifty, was held, after which the chair was taken by the Rev. F. Summers. The meeting was also addressed by Messrs. Winstanley, Edwards, McNaully, and Deyes; and songs were also given by several other friends. A very pleasant and enjoyable evening was brought to a close by social games in the schoolroom.

LONDON: THE REV. H. R. HAWES ON THE SABBATH.—On Sunday evening week the Rev. H. R. Hawes gave an able address in his own church, St. James's, Marylebone, on the subject of the observance of the Sabbath. He took as his text the account of the healing of the man with the withered hand, and referred to the passage preceding, relating to the disciples plucking ears of corn on the Sabbath. After describing at some length the strict observance which was enforced under the Mosaic law, he said that we in this age did not feel bound to adhere strictly to the letter, but to the spirit of the observance of the seventh day as a day of rest from work of every kind. What we felt it our duty to do was to get our minds and bodies into as sound and healthy a state as possible, and if this end could best be attained by walking five miles on Sunday, we should take that exercise by all means. If some people were improved by going to church in the morning and walking in the evening, or others by walking in the morning and going to church in the evening, let them follow what really edified them, always provided that they went to church in a proper spirit and worshipped in an earnest manner. A person who did not go to church twice on Sunday was not guilty of a sin, nor was a person who went three times necessarily very pious on that account. Mr. Hawes knew some excellent people in Scotland who were so strict about Sunday labour that they would not go for a walk on Sunday afternoon except to church, and who would be very much shocked at the production of a needle and thread even in case of need. He concluded by saying that Sunday was essentially a day of rest, but that it was not necessarily a day to be spent in church or in moping at home. An hour, or even only half an hour, at church would, if spent in earnest devotion, rouse a religious feeling in the mind, and the remainder of the day might be spent in healthful recreation without desecrating the Sabbath.

LONDON: THE MALL, NOTTING HILL.—The congregation held their annual meeting at this church on Wednesday evening, 15th inst. There was a large and influential attendance. Sir J. Clarke Lawrence, Bart. M.P., was in the chair, supported by Messrs. Hoar and Biss, the honorary treasurer and secretary. The report of the committee for the past year was read, and conveyed evidence of a well rooted vitality. The rebuilding of a permanent church is in contemplation. The Sunday school attached to this church is in an especially satisfactory condition. The teachers in it are real workers, which accounts for the very small percentage of absentees from the names enrolled on the books. A penny bank is also in operation, and the result of its working is a strong evidence of thrift existing among the poorer members of this society. There is also a society of the ladies of the congregation for the assistance of the poorer female members, providing necessaries for the mothers and also for the infants. The minister, the Rev. Charles Howe, is held in affectionate esteem by his congregation, and joins heartily with them in every good work. Sundry resolutions were proposed by the gentlemen present. The intervals were filled by performances of the well-trained choir. Some of the solos were very pleasing to those present, and reflected much credit upon the performers as well as upon those from whom they had received their instruction. The proceedings terminated about 10.30 p.m.

MANCHESTER: LOWER MOSLEY-STREET MUTUAL IMPROVEMENT SOCIETY.—The annual meeting of this society took place on Saturday evening, May 18. About 150 sat down to tea, and at seven o'clock the Rev. S. A. Steinthal took the chair. The Secretary, Mr. J. H. Reynolds, jun., read the report of the work of the past session, in which it was stated that there had been delivered before the society a series of 29 lectures, essays, and readings on a great variety of subjects of practical importance. The average attendance at lectures had been 105, at the ordinary meetings 51. As in the two previous years, classes for the study of special subjects had been established to the number this year of 23, embracing 11 subjects in science and art, as well as classes in French, English language, Latin, book-keeping, sewing and cutting out, &c. Four hundred and thirty persons of both sexes joined the society, and the total number on the class lists was 644, with an average attendance from October till May of 313. The report was accepted as on the whole very satisfactory. It was announced that the classes would be re-opened next session, and every effort made, by better organization, more complete apparatus, and the best available teachers, to render them worthy of the work they aim to do. The meeting was addressed by the chairman, Dr. Marcus, Mr. W. H. J. Traice, Mr. Wade, and Mr. C. B. West, and the proceedings were pleasantly diversified by the excellent singing of Mrs. Warren, Miss Smith, Miss Leyland, Mr. N. Dumville, and the pianoforte playing of Miss Salomonson.

MIDDLESBROUGH.—The Daily Exchange has the following:—The Rev. J. Page Hopps, of Leicester, who is well-known in name in connection with the advanced opinions of the Unitarian body, preached in Christ Church, Corporation Road, on Sunday last. When it was announced that that gentleman was about to pay a visit to Middlesbrough, it evoked considerable curiosity in other than Unitarian circles; we have therefore given a rather more lengthy account than is our usual custom, feeling sure that many of our readers who do not belong to that body will be interested in learning what are the views of the more advanced exponents of the Unitarian creed. We may state that the attendances were large, both at morning and evening services. The rev. gentleman's subject on Sunday night was "What think ye of Christ?" He commenced by saying that this was become a test question both inside and outside of the Church. According to the answer given so was man's destiny fixed, both present and future, by dogmatists. He spoke of the injustice and wrong that was done to large numbers of earnest, intelligent, and good men by subjecting them to persecution here, and dooming them to perdition hereafter, simply for what was considered speculative or theological error. A man's belief was generally determined by his training or associations, and to think that the great and good God, or the great and good Jesus, would subject men to punishment in the future because of mistakes they might make concerning his person, was derogatory to the character of God and of Christ. He would rather believe that God would pity his erring children, for falling into unavoidable errors concerning their views of his person, and help them out of their mistakes. This was what a good man would do, and God was better than the best of men. He would like to take the question out of the domain of theology, and look at it in a practical light. The great object to be gained was that our thoughts concerning Christ should have an influence for good in the moulding of our characters. For example, if a man believed in the Godhead of Christ, the great point was this, was he trying to embody in his own spirit, and life, and business, and conduct, the Godlike qualities which constitute the essence of perfection in the Godhead which he believed? If he was not, then his belief was of no value. On the other hand, if he believed in the simple humanity of Christ—believed that he was God's son and our brother, and possessed the perfection of human nature, the great point was, was he striving to come up to the stature of a man in Christ? If his belief in Christ and his thoughts of Christ did not contribute to this end, then his belief and professions concerning him were simply a bag of wind. Christ was the light of the world—the great guide of humanity, the way to God, to truth, virtue, to happiness, to heaven; and he agreed with Mr. Gladstone who said "that those who bear the best likeness to Christ were most truly and surely his." He would have these words written in letters of gold and placed over every church and chapel door in the land. They would surely help to banish the spirit of exclusiveness and bitterness and dogmatism, and infuse the spirit of Christian charity and love. If this sentiment be right, and we all feel it is, then men of every creed—Catholics, Protestants, Churchmen, Dissenters, Trinitarians, Unitarians, and no members upon the successful establishment, on a permanent basis, of a place of worship at Stepney Green. The chapel now stood in the hands of trustees entirely free of debt—a result due to the generous assistance of many kind friends. Mr. Martineau then read his report upon the finances of the society.

The President briefly moved the reception and adoption of the reports.

Mr. J. T. PRESTON, in seconding the resolution, concurred with the President in contending that, however great the need for such a society as this thirty years ago, at the time of its establishment, an equally urgent and pressing necessity existed in the present day. While admitting that the society had not succeeded as fully as might have been hoped and indeed expected (a result, by the way, common to human institutions), the speaker urged that the fact the society had called into existence some three or four sound and flourishing communities of Unitarian Christians afforded good ground for congratulation.

Then, while it might be said that the progress and growth of Unitarian principles was not so apparent as could be wished, it was not to be denied that Unitarian principles had very greatly leavened and permeated other denominations of Christians. (Applause.)

The Rev. T. L. MARSHALL had not any opposition to the policy pursued by the committee; on the contrary, he heartily approved the affording assistance to congregations such as Stepney Green; but he ventured to enter a plea for some help towards the gallant little congregation at South Camberwell, which was led by Mr. Carter, one of the best ministers of his kind in London. (Hear, hear.) On the other hand he regretted to see again in the accounts the item of £18. 12s. paid in support of Pimlico congregation, and urged the desirability of discontinuing what was obviously a forlorn hope. He desired to suggest the delivery under the direction and auspices of the society of series of lectures upon those scientific-theological and historical subjects which would excite interest among those whom they desired to win. (Hear, hear.)

Mr. HOARE (treasurer) desired, on behalf of the Notting Hill congregation, to thank the society for the valuable assistance it had rendered in the establishment of a chapel in that locality.

The resolution was then carried unanimously.

The Rev. T. DUNKERLEY (of Stamford-street Chapel) moved—"That, looking to the unsettled state of the religious world and the conflict that is going on between scepticism on the one hand and extreme sacerdotalism on the other, it is more than ever desirable that a liberal Christianity should be promulgated calculated to meet the wants of those who desire such a resting place, and this meeting would urge upon all friends the necessity of affording this society more ample means to enable it to enlarge its sphere of operations." In eloquent and forcible language the speaker dwelt upon the points raised by the resolution, and urged the necessity it set forth.

Mr. T. C. CLARKE seconded the resolution, and in the course of his remarks said Unitarians as liberal Christians ought to seize every opportunity of joining other bodies of liberal Christians with the view of strengthening them and themselves also. This desire for union, he further contended, should be based upon devotion and piety, and concord as to the best rules for the guidance of human conduct, rather than upon intellectual agreement as to abstract dogmas. (Hear, hear.)

Mr. BRANNON referred to the circumstances under which the Southampton congregation had been established and prospered as ground for encouragement in future efforts.

Mr. HERBERT NEW had much pleasure in moving the re-election of the president and vice-presidents of the society. The main object of this society had been the establishment of worshipping communities, and it could not be denied that their success in that respect had been fairly satisfactory. He referred to the meeting held the night before of the Congregational Union as the beginning, not the end, of a new era of things. The Unitarians, as a body, were far in advance of the Congregationalists. He looked to that society not only with the greatest interest, but with the greatest hope—(applause)—a sentiment which was echoed by subsequent speakers.

The Rev. J. WORTHINGTON seconded the resolution, which was then put and passed.

The Rev. H. IERSON moved the appointment of officers. This, on being seconded, was put and carried.

Mr. MARSHALL moved, Mr. PLIMPTON seconded, and it was resolved, that the retiring secretaries be re-elected.

Mr. JEFFERY moved, Mr. A. TITFORD seconded, and it was resolved that the thanks of the meeting be accorded to the minister and congregation of the Stamford-street Chapel for the use of the building.

On the motion of Mr. HART, a vote of thanks was passed to the president, and the proceedings closed.

LONDON: SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION.—We are informed that at the approaching annual meeting of this association in Whit-Week the Rev. S. A. Steinthal has consented to take the chair, and the Rev. John Page Hopps will read a paper on "Feed My Lambs."

OLDEHAM.—The anniversary services were held on Sunday. In the morning and evening the preacher was the Rev. William Binns, of Birkenhead. In the afternoon a children's service was held, when an address was delivered by the Rev. J. Freeston, of Blackley, to teachers, scholars, and parents. The collections amounted to about £28.

arians at all, were all Christ's, just in proportion as they bore his likeness and cherished his divine spirit of purity, love, forgiveness, devotion to God, to truth, to goodness and humanity. The question was not an arithmetical problem about three or one, but what think we of Christ as a teacher, as a moralist, above all as an exemplar? It was also a question of still greater importance what our great, living, loving Brother thinks of us. What were we doing by way of treading in his footsteps and striving to earn the title of disciples, by "bearing much fruit?"

NOTTINGHAM: HIGH PAVEMENT.—The annual meeting of the Provident Society was held in the girls' schoolroom on Monday evening, May 6th. Mr. C. Atkey, the president, occupied the chair, and a large number of members were present. The following officers were elected for the ensuing year:—President, Mr. T. Salisbury; vice-president, Mr. W. Norwebb; treasurer, Mr. J. Black; secretary, Mr. T. W. Lewis; auditors, Messrs. J. H. Richards and C. Potts; committee, Messrs. J. W. Clarke, W. Ellis, R. J. Simons, G. Richards, A. Colton, and A. Hussey. The newly-elected president then took the chair, after which the report and balance sheet were presented. After a long discussion the meeting was adjourned to Monday evening, June 3rd, at eight o'clock, to further consider the report, and especially the question of registration. The balance sheet shows a gain on the year of £56. 16s. 4d., being £20 less than last year's gain. The balance in possession of the society is £1,452. 6s. 3d.—A few ladies and gentlemen, members of the choir and congregation, have formed themselves into a society, to be called the "High Pavement Choral Society," Nottingham, with the two-fold object of improving their knowledge of vocal music, and of rendering musical assistance at meetings in connection with the congregation. Mr. William Wright, organist, has kindly consented to act as conductor. The society meet for practice every Thursday night, at 7 15. There are vacancies in the bass and tenor parts.

STAND. An important meeting of the seatholders was held on Sunday last, Mr. R. N. Philips, M.P., in the chair, at which it was resolved to form a register of persons qualified to vote at congregational meetings, and to have grave spaces assigned to them in the chapel yard. The neat and attractive appearance of the chapel surroundings is now much admired.

SWINTON AND KNUTSFORD.—The controversy goes on in the Swinton paper over the refusal of the Wesleyan minister to attend a temperance meeting at which the Unitarian minister was to be present. Mr. Harrison concludes a long letter with the following:—"About three weeks ago a Wesleyan Methodist died at Knutsford, and had to be buried in the beautiful little burial ground connected with the Unitarian chapel. It was natural the family would like their own minister to officiate, and my friend, the Rev. J. B. Lloyd, the Unitarian minister, gladly made way, and placed the chapel and everything belonging to it at the Wesleyan minister's disposal. 'Look on this picture, and on that.' Which do your readers think is most in accordance with the spirit of Christ?"

TAUNTON.—The anniversary of the Sunday school in connection with this place of worship was held on Sunday, when the Rev. John Birks, pastor, preached morning and evening to large congregations. The morning discourse was from Ezekiel, xviii. chapter, part of fourth verse; and in the evening from 1st John iii., part of 14th verse. The chapel was tastefully decorated, the pulpit, communion table, and all round the front of the galleries having received special care and attention, while baskets of choice flowers were suspended between the pillars. The musical part of the service, under the direction of Mr. Philpott, was admirably rendered, and contributed greatly to the pleasure and success of the day. Liberal collections were made for the schools.

YEovil.—On Sunday week, spring services were held in this chapel, which was decorated with every description of flowers which could be produced, cowslips being in the ascendant. Considerable taste was displayed in their arrangement. The preacher was Mr. H. E. Bunce, of Frome, whose subject in the morning was "The Providence of God," and in the evening "Christ an Admirer of Nature." Collections were made for the Western Christian Union. A social tea meeting was held on Monday evening, at which about 50 persons were present. The chair was taken by Mr. H. E. Bunce, and selections of music rendered by the chapel choir, under the direction of Mr. Hyde, one of the organists, who also presided at the piano. Votes of thanks were given with genial heartiness to the friends who had so tastefully decorated the chapel, to those who had provided the tea, and to the choir for the services they had rendered.

CORRESPONDENCE.

DEVONPORT SUNDAY SCHOOL.

To the Editors.—I find in the paper read by the Rev. J. Birks before the Western Unitarian and Free Christian Union, on "The best means at the disposal of the Union for aiding in the Sunday-school work of the district," Devonport is reported as being without a Sunday school. Will you allow me to correct this mistake, for we have a school numbering 50 scholars and six teachers? This being the result of less than two years' work, I think we, at Devonport, have no reason to despair.—Very truly yours, ALLINE E. HOOD.

10, St. Jean D'Acre Terrace, Stoke,
20th May, 1878.

[ADVT.]

KING'S LYNN CHURCH DEBT AND SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

To the Editors.—Kindly allow me to express, by means of your paper, the warmest thanks of my people and myself to those who have already so generously responded to our appeal on behalf of the above movement, and to urge this matter upon the sympathy of all who have the interests, endeavours, and prosperity of our Church near their heart. To many it may seem that, with so many educational organisations and influences at work in our day, there is much less need for the perpetuation of the institution known as the "Sunday School" than there once was; and that our Church, on which the calls for her permanent ministry to new congregations which are being established in many parts and for the circulation of her literature were never more urgent, nor the prospects of reward in these directions of service never more pleasing and sure, would do well to expend the resources at her command, and direct her energies to meeting these supposed more imperative claims. I grant the cases are very few, if any, where this institution is required for purposes of secular education; but was there ever more necessity for distinctly religious instruction of, and for our Church to imitate the Master in his attitude towards, children than now? Can she possibly meet the demands of the age upon her in any better and more successful way than by exhibiting a tender and loving interest in their spiritual culture and progress, and by seeking, wherever and whenever there is opportunity, to instil into their minds such views of God, of life's requirements and responsibilities, and of the possibilities and prospects of the human soul, as will be to them a perpetual joy, an inspiration to noble service in after years, and from which they will never have to turn, as some of us have had to do, from teachings which were forced upon us in the passivity of our childhood, with tears and an agony of soul, the bitterness of which no words can tell, and which have led others into open revolt against every phase of Christianity, and shadowed many lives with a sad and blighting scepticism.

BARNARD GISBY.

King's Lynn, May 15th.

MISSIONARY WORK WANTED IN HORNCastle.

To the Editors.—Some of your readers will doubtless remember that at the time of the jubilee lectures some very praiseworthy efforts were made by the Eastern Mission for the enlightenment of the little town of Horncastle, and for that purpose the Rev. A. Hood, then of Boston, now of Devonport, was deputed lecturer. His ministrations were highly appreciated by all his hearers; and, though the truths he advocated called forth occasional opposition, yet by the majority he was invariably applauded. He lectured here seven times to audiences varying from 50 to 200 and upwards; and when he left for Devonport great regret was expressed by his audience.

The interest shown in liberal Christianity was the same when in the following year the Rev. A. Gordon, then of Norwich, now of Belfast, also lectured here. His lectures, two in number, were also of great service. The Swedenborgians, who during the first lecture raised very strong objections, so thoroughly approved of his second as to beg him to print it, so fully did they endorse the truth of its subject matter.

I fear Mr. Gordon has never yet complied with this request, but I ardently wish he would. Ever since May, 1877, we have been without public ministrations here. The chief causes of this stoppage in the work have been two, i.e., the want of preachers or lecturers, and (by far the most formidable hindrance of all) the want of money. The only two rooms we could get for our meetings were hired at a very expensive rate, and the use of the British school, which we might have had much cheaper, was denied us, through a spirit existing in the British school committee similar to that which has recently been shown at King's Lynn. Still we think a cause might spring up in Horncastle, could any of our Unitarian Societies or benevolent individuals help us.

There are several Universalists here, and prejudice and staunchness in favour of "orthodoxy" seem in many minds gradually giving way. I have long thought that, instead of more lectures, occasional services in the week, when they did not interfere with the religious services of others, would be of far more permanent benefit.

A minister who resides at no great distance will be willing to preach and conduct a service for us, as soon as arrangements can be made; and another gentleman has promised to do what he can.

From the minister above named I received a letter a few days since, from which, with his permission, I make an extract.

"In reply to your letter, which contains so many interesting particulars about the Unitarian mission in your town, let me assure you that the reading of it has given me much delight, and that you have my warmest sympathy in your work, and may depend on any active co-operation of mine that circumstances may make desirable. Let me say to you, as I have already said to Mr. A., that a few days' notice will bring me very gladly into your midst. I wish there were no pecuniary difficulties in the way to prevent my coming now and again to conduct a purely religious service, for I do think this, after all, is the better way of work. By this method we are enabled to familiarize the popular mind with all the positive aspects of our beautiful and simple religion, as no merely controversial efforts once or twice a year can ever do. The pecuniary difficulty is in the way, however, of my helping you, and of others helping you, as I should like. Perhaps one of the worst 'devils' one has to contend with, after one has freed one's mind from 'orthodoxy' is an empty purse. This in many cases, I fear, damps enthusiasm, hinders personal usefulness, curtails what to many would be beneficent activities, and so too often hinders the spread of our faith.—Ever sincerely yours," &c.

The above letter has been a great encouragement to me, and has stirred me up to try to do a little more. Nothing but the above difficulty has stayed my hands hitherto, and had money when needed been more easily procurable, we should have had worship here before now. Our first hearers will consist principally of the poorer and middle class, and others of a slightly higher grade would perhaps follow in time, so that we might do without help from sympathisers. But we cannot do so at present. I wish the writer of the letter from which I made the extract had allowed me to put his name. My name is, I am sorry to say, indispensable, as, should any aid be offered it must come direct to me, as I am sole agent here now, and managed the business of the former lectures.—I am, sir, yours respectfully,

ELIZA HADDOCK.
Rose Cottage, Horncastle, May 13, 1878.

CREWKERNE SUNDAY-SCHOOL AND THE POPULATION OF THE DISTRICT.

To the Editors.—At the time when the Western Unitarian and Free Christian Union was holding its spring meeting at Trowbridge, an invalid friend was visiting me. This and other circumstances prevented me from being present at the meeting. I learn, however, from your report that the Rev. John Birks, of Taunton, read an interesting paper on Sunday Schools, in which he gives a tabulated statement of certain district populations, and the number of Unitarian Sunday schools contained in them. It seems to me that a tabular statement which represents aggregated large numbers of registration sub-districts, instead of the actual number of the population of such township or parish as contains a Unitarian church, is in danger of being misunderstood. Probably many readers of the Unitarian Herald, who see the table of populations given by Mr. Birks, will imagine, for instance, that Crewkerne contains a parish population of 8,243, whereas this is the population, not of the one parish of Crewkerne, but of eight parishes grouped together, seven of which are not in the least degree available for Unitarian interests and purposes. The actual population of Crewkerne is only 4,869. It is very much to be regretted that Mr. Birks has not given us the parish populations in every place in the Western Union where there is a Unitarian congregation. It is due to Crewkerne to say that we have not wholly given up Sunday-school work, for a class is held at the minister's house every Sunday afternoon.—I am, yours respectfully,

WILLIAM ROBINSON.

Crewkerne, May 21st, 1878.

COMING WEEK.

BLACKPOOL.—On Sunday, the Rev. E. Ceredig Jones will preach, morning and evening.
DEVONPORT: CHRIST CHURCH.—On Sunday, services by Rev. J. Longland, subjects, Morning, "Is the Love of God a Real Pleasure?" Evening, "Who and What are we?"
HEYWOOD.—On Sunday, school sermons by the Rev. D. Walmesley, B.A., afternoon and evening.
LONDON: DOMESTIC MISSION.—On Sunday, annual sermons at Hackney. Preacher: Rev. C. Hargrove, M.A. On Monday, annual meeting at University Hall.
MANCHESTER: STRANGWAYS.—On Sunday the Rev. J. T. Marriott will preach morning and evening.
MANCHESTER: MEMORIAL HALL.—On Monday, lecture by the Rev. C. C. Coe.
MANCHESTER: MEMORIAL HALL.—On Thursday, rehearsal for Whit-Sunday.
PENDLETON.—On Sunday, morning and evening, sermons by the Rev. Wm. Binns.
LIVINGTON.—On Sunday, annual sermon in the afternoon, by the Rev. Jas. Harwood, B.A.
SWINTON.—On Sunday, annual sermons, afternoon and evening, by the Rev. Wm. Gaskell, M.A.

BIRTH.

BRAMLEY.—On the 22nd inst., at Claremont Crescent, Sheffield, the wife of Herbert Bramley, of a son.

MARRIAGE.

OTLEY—WOOLLEN.—On the 22nd inst., at the Upper Chapel, Norfolk-street, Sheffield, by the Rev. Eli Fay, assisted by the Rev. George Knight, B.C. Otley, third son of Mr. Thomas Otley, of Meadow Works, to Alice Nicholson, youngest daughter of Mr. Charles Woollen, of 14, Haymarket. No cards.

DEATH.

CLEGG.—On the 15th inst., at Ivy Bank, Cheetham Hill, Manchester, Josiah, youngest son of the late Joseph Clegg, Daisy Mount, Newchurch.

RUPTURES.—Exhibition Prize Medal, 1862, was awarded to R. WESTBURY, inventor and sole maker of the IMPERCEPTIBLE CURATIVE TRUSS.

Deformity Instruments, Artificial Limbs, Crutches, Elastic Stockings, and Ladies' Supporting Belts, Chest Expansors for round shoulders, &c., 26, Old Millgate, Manchester.

ZUCCO.—We again beg to draw attention to this Wine, which we had the pleasure to bring before the notice of the public for the first time last year. It is a Pure, Natural, Light Wine of Madeira character, without any spirit added, the produce of the Sicilian estates of the Duc d'Anville. We have pleasure in being able to announce that we can now reduce the price to

24s. Per DOZEN.

JAMES SMITH & CO., Wine Merchants, 26, Market-street, Manchester.

Printed for the Proprietors by WILLIAM EVANS, of Apsley Villa 377, Waterloo Road, Cheetham Hill, at his Printing Offices, No. 2, Cross-street, Parish of Manchester; and Published by JOHN PHILLIPS, at New Cannon Chambers, 55, Market-street, in said Parish of Manchester.—London Agents: Messrs. Smart and Allen, 2, London-house Yard, Paternoster Row.—Friday, May 24, 1878.

The Unitarian Herald.

EDITED BY

REV. JAMES BLACK, M.A., & REV. S. FLETCHER WILLIAMS.

VOL. XVIII.—892.

FRIDAY, MAY 31, 1878.

PRICE 1d.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE.
Doings and Sayings	180
Scottish Notes.....	190
The Hibbert Lecture.....	180
The Congregational Union Debate	181
The Battlefield.....	182
Convocation in a Flutter	182
Books and Authors.....	183
London Domestic Mission	183
Croydon: Welcome to Rev. E. M. Geldart, M.A.....	185
News of our Churches	185

Post-office orders to be made payable to Mr. JOHN PHILLIPS, 55, Market-street, Manchester, to whom all orders and business communications should be addressed.

CROSS-STREET CHAPEL.—On Sunday evening next, a LECTURE by the Rev. W. GASKELL, on "The Christian Sunday not the Jewish Sabbath." All seats free. Offertory.

BLACKPOOL UNITARIAN FREE CHURCH.—On Sunday next, June 2nd, the Rev. A. RUSHTON will conduct the services. Morning 10.45; evening, 6.30. Collections.

UPPERTHORPE CHAPEL, SHEFFIELD.—SCHOOL SERMONS on Sunday, June 2nd. Preacher: The Rev. R. A. ARMSTRONG, B.A., of Nottingham. Services 10.45 and 6.30. Collections.

HIGHFIELD CHAPEL IDEL, NEAR LEEDS.—SUNDAY SCHOOL ANNIVERSARY SERVICES, next Sunday, June 2nd. Preacher: The Rev. J. FREESTON, of Blackley, Manchester. Services: Afternoon, 2.30; evening, 6.

HACKNEY: NEW GRAVEL PIT CHAPEL, PARADISE PLACE.—THE ANNUAL SERMONS on behalf of the Sunday and Day Schools will be preached on Sunday, June 2, in the morning by the Rev. CHARLES WICKSTED, B.A.; in the evening by the Rev. C. J. PERRY, minister-elect of Hope-street Chapel, Liverpool. Morning service at eleven, evening at seven o'clock.

AINSWORTH.—On Sunday, June 2nd, TWO SERMONS will be preached by the Rev. J. T. WHITEHEAD, of Hackney. Services: afternoon and evening, at three o'clock and 6.30. Collections will be made on behalf of the funds of the Day and Sunday Schools.

HINDLEY.—SCHOOL SERMONS on June 9th. Afternoon at 3 o'clock; evening at 6.30. Preacher: Rev. T. HOLLAND, B.A., of Southport.

HORSHAM FREE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.—The 105th WHIT-SUNDAY ANNIVERSARY will take place on June 9th. Morning service, eleven o'clock, followed by the Communion. Preacher: The Rev. C. WICKSTEED, B.A. Evening service, six o'clock. Preacher: The Rev. T. R. DOBSON, of Brighton. Collection for the Kent and Sussex Unitarian Association at the morning service.

SALE UNITARIAN CHAPEL.—The ANNUAL SUNDAY SCHOOL SERMONS will be preached on Sunday, June 23rd, 1878. Morning, at 10.45, by the Rev. CHARLES WICKSTEED, B.A., of London. Evening, at 6.30, by the Rev. T. LLOYD JONES, of Hale. Collections in aid of the School Funds.

MANCHESTER UNITARIAN SUNDAY SCHOOL UNION.—WHIT-SUNDAY SCHOLARS' FESTIVAL, FREE-TRADE HALL.

Rev. H. ENFIELD DOWSON, B.A., will conduct the Devotional Service, and Rev. JOSEPH FREESTON will deliver the ADDRESS (in two parts). THOMAS RAWSON, Esq., will preside at the organ, assisted by a Select Representative Choir of over 100 voices. Hymns will be sung by the scholars. Doors open at two; service at three o'clock. Collection to defray expenses.

TEA at 4.45, in Lower Mosley-street Schoolroom, for friends from the country, at a charge of 6d. each. The number from each district should be sent to the Hon. Secretary on or before Tuesday, 4th June, that tea may be guaranteed.

DAVID THOMPSON, Hon. Sec.
5, Clarence-street, Miles Platting.
Musical friends assisting in the Choir, teachers, scholars, and members of congregations are requested to attend the FINAL REHEARSAL of Anthems, Hymns, &c., in Cross-street Chapel, on Thursday, June 6th, at 7.30 p.m.—By order, THOMAS RAWSON, Musical Director and Organist.
York Place, Higher Broughton.

GENERAL BAPTIST ASSEMBLY.—225TH ANNIVERSARY.

The GENERAL ASSEMBLY of GENERAL BAPTIST CHURCHES will be held in Worship-street Chapel, near Finsbury Square, on Whit-Monday and Tuesday, June 10th and 11th, 1878.

MONDAY.—The business of the Assembly will commence three o'clock. At seven the MEETING of the JUVENILE FUND will be held. Tea will be provided at six o'clock; 6d. each.

TUESDAY.—Business will be resumed at ten o'clock. At eleven, Divine Service will be held. The Devotional Part will be conducted by the Rev. Dr. SADLER, of Hampstead; and the Sermon will be preached by Rev. JOHN CLIFFORD, M.A., LL.B., B.Sc., of Westbourne Park. Business will be resumed at half-past two o'clock.

The COMMUNION of the LORD'S SUPPER will be observed at half-past seven, at which the Rev. C. A. HODDINOTT, of Headcorn, will preside, and the Rev. ROBERT SPEARS, of Stepney, deliver an Address. N.B. This service is not denominational, but catholic, and ministers and friends of other denominations are earnestly invited to attend.

Refreshments will be provided in the chapel. Dinner after the service, 1s. 6d. each. Tea at six o'clock; 6d. each.

BRITISH AND FOREIGN UNITARIAN ASSOCIATION.

THE ANNIVERSARY MEETINGS,

JUNE 12TH AND 13TH, 1878.

The FIFTY-THIRD ANNUAL MEETING of the Association will be held on Wednesday, June 12th, in Essex-street Chapel, Strand, London. The service to commence at half-past eleven o'clock, conducted by the Rev. R. A. ARMSTRONG, B.A., of Nottingham.

The SERMON will be preached by the Rev. W. BINNS, of Birkenhead. The usual collection will be made at the close of the service.

The Meeting for the transaction of the business of the Association will then be held, the chair to be taken at half-past one, by the PRESIDENT (Herbert New, Esq.).

The CONFERENCE will commence at half-past ten o'clock on Thursday morning, June 13th, in Essex-street Chapel. Papers will be read on the following subjects:—

1. Church Finance. By FRANK TAYLOR, Esq., of Bolton.
2. The Terms of Religious Communion. By the Rev. A. W. WORTHINGTON, B.A., of Mansfield.

The COLLATION will be at four o'clock in the afternoon of the same day, June 13th, at the Alexandra Palace, Muswell Hill, in the Grand Saloon, opposite the Italian Garden. Tickets 5s., if taken before Monday, June 10th; on and after that day, 6s.; to be had of the Stewards, or at the office of the Association.

STEWARDS.

- | | |
|-------------------------|---------------------|
| Mr. H. S. Bicknell. | Mr. J. P. Ham, jun. |
| Mr. T. C. Clarke. | Mr. R. H. Hoar. |
| Mr. Ar. Clayden. | Mr. H. Jeffery. |
| Mr. F. Collier. | Mr. D. Martineau. |
| M. J. Darlison. | Mr. W. B. Scott. |
| Mr. A. J. C. Fabritius. | Mr. S. S. Tayler. |
| Mr. J. Fagg. | Mr. W. Young. |
| Mr. C. E. Green. | |

HENRY IERSON, Secretary.

37, Norfolk-street, Strand, London, W.C.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION.

The FORTY-FOURTH ANNUAL BREAKFAST, Business Meeting, and Conference of Teachers, will be held at the Freemasons' Tavern, Great Queen-street, Lincoln's Inn Fields, London, on Friday, 14th June next; the Rev. S. A. STEINTHAL, of Manchester, in the chair. The Rev. J. PAGE HOPPS will read a paper, the subject of which will be "Feed my Lambs." Breakfast, nine o'clock precisely. Tickets, 2s. 6d. each.

STEWARDS.

- | | |
|---------------------|-----------------|
| Fredk. Allen. | A. E. Griffin. |
| W. C. Biss. | C. F. Pearson. |
| George Gallow. | C. J. Perry. |
| Howard C. Clarke. | F. W. Stanley. |
| Chas. Cornish, jun. | N. M. Taylor. |
| T. N. Dyer. | John S. Toye. |
| Fredk. Garrett. | F. W. Turner. |
| T. H. Gordon. | Fredk. Withall. |

KING'S LYNN FREE CHRISTIAN CHURCH AND SCHOOLS.

Amount already advertised	240.	17s.
Miss Tingcombe, Bath	5	0	0
The Mayor of Manchester	5	0	0
Miss Henry, Oswestry	1	0	0
Mr. Eveleigh, Peterborough	0	5	0
Mr. R. Spitter, Islington	1	1	0
S. S. Tayler, Brixton	1	0	0
R. Pincock, Esq., ex-mayor of Newport	1	0	0
Rev. R. Shuen, Royston	1	0	0
Herbert New, Esq., Evesham, president of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association	1	1	0
Rev. C. C. Coe, Bolton	3	3	0
Mr. Horatio Bolingbroke, Norwich	2	2	0
Birmingham Fellowship Fund	10	0	0

FLOWERY FIELD CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

On and after June 2nd, the Sunday Evening Service will commence at six.

WANTED, a GENERAL SERVANT: one fond of children: must be able to wash.—Address E. D., Unitarian Herald Office, Manchester.

A Well-educated Young Lady (23) desires an Engagement as COMPANION or otherwise: would travel: od references.—Address C. H. E., 50, York-st., Northampton

THE Belfast Unitarian Missionary Association need the SERVICES of a MINISTER.—Applications to be made to Rev. J. C. Street, Rowellan House, Belfast.

SOUTH SHIELDS UNITY CHURCH.—PULPIT will be VACANT after the 9th of June.—Particulars given by T. Hornby, 10, King-street, South Shields.

POSITION OF TRUST WANTED by a gentleman, aged 30, who will shortly relinquish the management of a bi-weekly newspaper.—Address W. M., F.G.S., Herald Office, Grimsby.

THE Head Master of the Salt School, Shipley, Yorkshire (Mr. A. M. Worthington, M.A., Trin. Coll., Oxford, late assistant master at Clifton College), intends taking a small number of BOARDERS into his own house after Midsummer.—Saltire, Shipley.

WANTED, after Midsummer, a DAILY GOVERNNESS, to teach Young Children and take charge of them out of school hours: thorough English, French, and Music required.—Apply to Mrs. J. ARTHUR KENRICK, Fallowfield, Edgbaston.

BLACKPOOL.—CHANNING HOUSE, 39, QUEEN'S SQUARE.—Visitors will find here every home comfort. Tariff sent on application.—Mrs. JOHN MARSDEN, Proprietress.

THE GERMAN LANGUAGE.—A Lady who has passed the Cambridge Women's Examination in Honours is about to form an Elementary Correspondence class in German for those unable to obtain oral instruction: terms, 12s. per annum.—For prospectus apply to Miss Fernor, South Lodge, Bexhill, Hastings.

BROOK HOUSE, KNUITSFORD, CHESHIRE.—BOARDING SCHOOL for GIRLS, conducted by Mrs. FRANK SHAWCROSS, assisted by Resident English and Foreign Governesses. Teachers of eminence attend for instruction in Music, Singing, Harmony, Drawing, Dancing, &c. Prospectus and references forwarded on application.

MOUNT VERNON HIGH SCHOOL, NOTTINGHAM.—Established 1864.

Mr. EDWIN SMITH, M.A., with competent assistance, thoroughly prepares Boys for College, the University Local Examinations, or for Business. For prospectus address Sandy Knoll, Forest Road, Nottingham.

YORK: 26, HIGH PETER GATE.—Miss AMY HERRING begs to announce that she has OPENED, at the above address, a SCHOOL for the instruction of Young Ladies in all branches, comprising a first-class education with liberal views. References kindly permitted by the following:—Dr. G. Vance Smith, The Parade, Carmarthen; the Rev. C. Welbeloved, 38, Monkgate, York; Miss Swaine, 1, The Crescent, York.—Terms on application.

Pupils are prepared for the University Examinations, several having passed most successfully.

SOUTHPORT.—A comfortable Home in a private family offered to a Lady, or Two Children, desirous of change for the benefit of their health.—Address B.A., Post Office, Southport.

BOARD and RESIDENCE for those seeking a Delightful Country Health Resort may be had at Capel Lodge, near Folkstone: extensive grounds: house overlooks the channel, and is high above the sea.—For terms apply as above.

WHAT IS UNITARIANISM? A LECTURE by Rev. C. D. BADLAND, M.A. Price sixpence, post free. From the Writer, or R. Keene, All Saints, Derby.

UNITARIAN MAGAZINE, June, 20 pp. One Penny. Contents: Nature and Character of Jesus, by J. C. Street; The Rock of Ages; the Supernatural History of Angels. Orders to be sent to Mr. J. Paterson, 9, Pitt-street, Glasgow.

YOUNG DAYS (No. 30) for June, now Ready, Price One Penny. Numerous Illustrations.

CONTENTS.—Willing Hands; or, Every Little Helps—Go Work in my Vineyard—Ida Mayhew—The Daffodil—Friendship among Animals—Covent Garden Market—Lost—Puzzle Bag—A Bunch of Spring Violets—From the Nile to the Thames; or, Our Last Famous Visitor.

Published by the Sunday School Association, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand.

Now ready, cloth, 5s.,
THE STORY OF RELIGION IN ENGLAND:
A BOOK FOR YOUNG FOLK.
By BROOKE HERFORD.

"A thoroughly useful book for the young. . . . Fairly and impartially written."—John Bull.

"Full of graphic incident and picturesque detail, largely biographical, affording the noblest food for the cultivation of the imagination, and furnishing invaluable materials for the formation of religious opinions and the strengthening of religious principles."—Inquirer.

"We know of no book which is worthy to compete with it. . . . The tone and spirit of its treatment of the various periods which pass under review deserve high commendation.

The book is worthy of a cordial welcome, even from those whose point of view is different from that of the writer in some respects, but who share his devotion to that which is great and noble in English Nonconformity."—Literary World.

"An admirable introduction to the Church history of this country. We know no better book to place in the hands of young people. The choice of subjects and the manner of treatment are alike interesting."—Nonconformist.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION,
37, Norfolk-street, Strand.

MISS BROOKS, 6, Barton Arcade, and 59, Deansgate, Manchester; is now Showing the Choicest GOODS in Millinery, Straw Hats and Bonnets, Flowers, Feathers, Laces, Ribbons, Ties, Gloves, &c., and will have through the season all the most approved styles. An inspection is respectfully solicited.

LONDON: SHIRLEY'S TEMPERANCE HOTEL, 37, Queen's Square, Bloomsbury. Beds from 1s. 6d. Plain Breakfast or Tea, 1s. 3d.

MIDLAND RAILWAY.—TOURIST ARRANGEMENTS, 1878.

FIRST and THIRD CLASS TOURIST TICKETS, AVAILABLE for TWO MONTHS, will be issued from May 1st to the 31st October, 1878. For particulars see time tables and programmes, issued by the Company.

JAMES ALLPORT, General Manager.
Derby, April, 1878.

ZUCCO.—We again beg to draw attention to this Wine, which we had the pleasure to bring before the notice of the public for the first time last year. It is a Pure, Natural, Light Wine of Madeira character, without any spirit added, the produce of the Sicilian estates of the Duc d'Aumale. We have pleasure in being able to announce that we can now reduce the price to

24s. Per DOZEN.
JAMES SMITH & CO., Wine Merchants, 26, Market-street, Manchester.

DOINGS AND SAYINGS.

It is but fifty-two years since a victim to the Inquisition was publicly put to death in Spain for worshipping God according to his conscience.

Can it be true, as the Daily Telegraph said the other day, that woman had been a source of mischief in the world from pre-Adamite times? According to the Mosaic account of the creation, if our memory is not at fault, man was made first—then Eve.

The sight of the monument of David Hume on the Calton Hill, Edinburgh, filled George Combe with pain. "What a bitter mockery," he said to himself, "to raise a monument to a man whose soul is now expiating its terrors in hell." Explanation: Combe was then theologically one of the strictest of the strict.

Mr. Spurgeon compares a good preacher to a beef-steak, which is made good by much hammering, and becomes digestible by degrees. Young preachers, he adds, first learn the infallible truth that they are great fools; and next, that they are not the only ones. The first truth knocks them over while the second set them up.

The Countess Nostiz, so widely known by her travels, has taken up her abode in Tübingen. She declares that she is determined to compel the authorities of the Swabian University to open their lecture-rooms to women. Her campaigning may possibly be successful, considering what has already been done by way of preparation by Fischer and Laske.

The Bishop of Oxford has found that "through the whole of the eighteenth century two cases only of unsound doctrine charged against a clerk in holy orders appear in the records of the High Court of Delegates. Of trials for disobedience to the law in matters of ritual or ceremony, during that period, no trace, so far as he knows, is to be found. The records of Parliament during the same period are equally barren; no project of legislation on these matters seems to have been entertained." The reply to this is that the eighteenth century was in other things also a barren age, with little interest in religious questions, and few evidences of spiritual life.

In proportion to population, the Bible has been more extensively bought and spread in Spain than either in France or Italy during the last ten years. In Madrid there are now four or five settled Protestant congregations, with a considerable regular attendance; besides three or four schools well attended, and in capital order. In Seville there are two congregations and schools. In Barcelona, three congregations and large schools. In Cadiz, Cordova, Puerta, Santa Maria, the Rio Tinto mines, Huelva, Valladolid, Oviedo, Gijon, Corunna, Vigo, Igualeza, Mahon in Minorca, and numerous other places, there are Protestant congregations, larger or smaller.

The Times correspondent at Madras says that there have probably been lost by the Indian famine not less than three millions out of the twenty millions of population severely affected by the famine, and if we add the mortality in Mysore and Bombay, the total losses of the population in South India will not be far short of six millions. In Bombay the famine was suppressed by a stroke of the pen, and the results of the census taken there in January have also been suppressed thus far. But in Madras and Mysore it is acknowledged that the starvation and suffering still continue, and the end is not yet. And we boast that we are the keepers of our Indian brethren!

The laws relating to religion are exceedingly stringent in Norway, and the State clergy have not been backward in enforcing them against those who dare to think for themselves, and to withdraw from the State Church. But the true spirit of Protestantism, which is utterly opposed to such restrictions upon freedom of conscience, has at last found expression there. According to the Cologne Gazette, the Norwegian Storthing has passed a bill granting religious liberty to all but Government officials, ministers, and judges. This is a long step in advance, and perhaps, one of these days, even the unfortunate officials may be allowed to keep consciences of their own.

On that vexed question—burials in churchyards—the Bishop of Oxford has been giving some wise words of warning to the "no surrender" party, and counsels of timely concession. "The great majority of the laity," he says, "appear now to think that if it were made lawful for Nonconformists to celebrate the rites of burial in churchyards after their own fashion, no one would be greatly injured by the permission or by the use that would be made of it. I confess that I am of the same opinion; and I regret that so many Churchmen should feel it to be their duty to struggle to the last against a concession which, if principles of toleration and charity do not recommend it, an adverse necessity will assuredly extort."

A correspondent of the Pall Mall Gazette writes on the 20th instant:—The chaplain to the Imperial family, M. Baur, preached on Wednesday last a sermon in the Cathedral of Berlin, before the Emperor and the Imperial family, in which he spoke of the present state of morality, or rather immorality, in Prussia in very strong terms. "Affection, faith, and the Word of God are now unknown in this country," the chaplain said, "in this our great German Fatherland, which formerly justly was called the home of the faith. On the contrary, it really seems as if it were the Father of all Lies who now is worshipped in Prussia. What formerly was considered generous and noble is now looked upon with contempt, and theft and swindling are called by the euphonic word 'business'; leading merchants openly declaring that some transactions are bordering on felony. Marriages are concluded without the blessing of the Church—concluded 'on trial,' to be broken if not found to answer. We still have a Sunday, but it is only a Sunday in name, as the people work during the church hours and spend the afternoon and evening in rioting in the public-houses and music-halls; while the upper classes rush to the races, preferring to hear the panting of the tortured horses to hearing the word of God, which is ridiculed in the press and turned into blasphemy in the popular assemblies, while the servants of God are insulted daily." The German clerical newspapers, Protestant as well as Catholic, are writing in a like strain. The Ultramotane organ, the Bayerisches Vaterland, for instance, says in a leading article on the attempt to assassinate the Emperor William: "We Germans seem to have sunk down to be a nation of flunkeys and money-making sycophants, without an atom of honour or dignity."

SCOTTISH NOTES.

THE UNITED PRESBYTERIAN "DECLARATORY STATEMENT."

The Scotsman makes merry over the Declaratory Statement in the following fashion:—"As regards one of the more salient doctrines of Calvinism, a United Presbyterian is henceforth to be at liberty to hold that the Deity 'will have all men to be saved,' although at the same time, of course, it must be held according to the Standards that He 'will have only the elect to be saved.' How a United Presbyterian is to hold both of such seemingly contradictory opinions at the same time may not be clear to the intelligence of an average layman, but it may perhaps serve to teach him what he has missed in not having enjoyed a theological education. The future United Presbyterian must hold that 'man is totally depraved,' but still he can do things that are 'in a sense good,' only they must not be considered 'spiritually good.' He must hold that 'the heathen are perishing for lack of knowledge,' but he is at liberty to hold that perhaps they do not perish after all, if only he does not hold it so strongly as to hurt the Foreign Missions Scheme. He must hold that only 'elect' infants are 'saved,' but he is also at liberty to hold that perhaps no infants at all are lost. Then he has freedom in other directions. He must hold it as having been revealed that 'all compulsory principles in religion' are sinful, but, as already said, he is also at liberty to hold it as having been revealed that they are not sinful in the case of public schools under Lord Young's Act."

THE HIBBERT LECTURE.

IV.—THE VEDIC "DEVAS."

The fourth of Professor Max Müller's lectures was delivered in the Chapter House, Westminster, on Thursday, the 16th inst. The specific subject was "The Worship of Tangible, Semi-tangible, and Intangible Objects." The lecturer reminded his audience that the goal to be reached in the prosecution of this inquiry was the fountain-head of religious ideas, without the help of the beaten track of the fetish theory on the one hand, or of the hypothesis of a primordial revelation on the other. We were to find our way through the gateways of the five senses from the world around us into the world beyond. Passing by the metaphysical question of the reality of our sense-perceptions, we must, however, distinguish between the so-called palæolithic senses of touch, scent, and taste, and the neoteric senses of sight and hearing. Touch seemed to offer the most irrefragable proof of reality, as was illustrated by the original meaning of the word "manifest," that which is struck by the hand. Tried by this test, all the common objects of primitive men's sensuous knowledge—such as stones, bones, shells, trees, mountains, rivers, and animals—would to them be real. But even this common stock breaks up into such objects as could be touched all round and such as could not. Mountains, rivers, the earth, even a giant tree, much more a primordial forest, would belong to the latter class, consisting of what may be called semi-tangible, as distinct from wholly tangible objects. Taking the earth as an instance, the infinite expanse which lies beyond the beholder's horizon is seen by the mind's eye only. All these semi-tangible perceptions could still be verified, if need be, by some of our senses; some part of every one of them can be touched by our hands. But there was a third class of perceptions where this was impossible, where we saw or heard objects, but could not strike them with our hands. By these non-tangible things, seen but not touched, such as clouds, sky, stars, moon, sun, the primitive savage does not seem to have been much disturbed. When worshipped, the tangible objects, such as stones, shells, bones, and the like, were fetishes; the semi-tangible, such as trees, mountains, rivers, the sea and earth, became semi-deities; while the intangible, sky, stars, sun, dawn, moon, &c., were deities. Turning to the old hymns of the Veda, the lecturer pointed out that they were addressed, not to stocks or stones, but to rivers, to mountains, to clouds, to the earth, to the sky, to the dawn, to the sun—i.e., not to tangible objects, or fetishes, but to the very objects we had recognised as semi-tangible or intangible. What was the religious thought and feeling of the Aryan family before its dispersion was shown by the undivided testimony of the Aryan language. In the early stages, now under review, our Aryan ancestors, so far from animating, personifying, or humanising the objects classed as semi-tangible or intangible, appear to have been chiefly struck by the difference between these things and themselves. The extant Vedic hymns were all addressed to certain devatās, and that word exactly answers to our word deity, but in the hymns themselves it never occurs in that sense. In these hymns deva, bright, is one of the epithets applied to a very large class of beings, but if we translated that word always by god we should very often commit an anachronism of 1,000 years. At this infantile epoch gods in our sense of the term did not as yet exist. They, or, what is the same, their names, were slowly struggling into existence. And this is the true worth of the Vedic hymns. While Hesiod gives us, as it were, the past history of a theogony, in the Veda we see the theogony itself, the birth and growth of the gods, the birth and growth of the very word for god, and we also see in riper hymns the after-phases of these Divine conceptions. Out of the three classes of objects, the tangible are hardly represented at all among the so-called deities of the Veda. Stones, bones, shells, and the other fetishes were simply absent. When artificial objects were mentioned they were always such as might be praised even by Wordsworth or Tennyson—chariots, bows, quivers, axes, drums, sacrificial vessels, and the like. They never assumed any individual character, but were simply mentioned as useful, as precious, it may be as sacred. But almost every one of the semi-tangible objects met us among the so-called deities of the Veda. After quoting a number of invocations from the Vedic hymns as illustrative of these statements, Professor Max Müller asked whether the objects thus addressed ought to be called the "gods" of those who offered such prayers. In some passages, he answered, decidedly not. The first prayer which sounded really strange to us in the Vedas was the prayer addressed to these objects, imploring them to preserve the petitioners from guilt. But this was a later thought; for not all that came from the Vedas belonged to one and the same period. Though the Vedic hymns were collected about 1000 B.C., they must have existed long before they were collected, so that there was ample time for the richest growth, as well as for the prophetic anticipations of individual genius. But if we imagined ourselves face to face with the Vedic bards, who called the rivers "mothers," and the sky "father," and implored them to listen, and to free them from guilt, and asked them whether these were their gods, Professor Max Müller believed that they would not know what they meant. It would be as if we asked children whether they thought men, horses, flies, and fishes to be animals, or oaks and violets vegetables. The bards, like the children, would certainly answer No, because they had not yet arrived at the higher generalisation of gods, which was in their time but silently growing, while men were assuming a more and more definite attitude towards these semi-tangible and intangible objects. The search after the Intangible, after the Unknown, which was hidden in all these intangible things, had begun as soon as one or two or more of our perceptive feelers were disappointed in their search after a corresponding object. The intermediate steps were then pointed out which led men from semi-tangible to intangible, from natural to supernatural objects, beginning with the contemplation of fire, seen first in the lightning.

Professor Max Müller summed up a discussion as to the appropriateness or otherwise of using such words as "gods" or "deities" by suggesting that the Sanskrit word Devas should be retained. Deva, as he told us, meant "bright," and it was an epithet applicable to the fire, the sky, the dawn, the sun, and also to the rivers, the trees, and the mountains. It thus became a general term, and there was a continuity of thought as there was of sound between the Devas of the Veda and the Divinity that shapes our ends,

Rough-hew them how we will.

Nature was such that it leads us on, whether we liked it or not, from what we could touch to what we could not touch, from what we could see to what we could not see. There was a way which was to lead us from the Known to the Unknown, from this world to God. The way was long—we had behind us some part of it, but here on earth we should never reach its end. At each station we advanced a little further. As we mounted higher, the world seemed smaller, and heaven seemed nearer. With each new horizon our hearts grew larger, and our view wider. The meaning of our words became deeper, and we learned—if, indeed, we were not afraid to learn it—that the same Unknown, whom the poets of the Veda invoked as Dyaush-pitar, Heaven-father, whom the Greeks called Ζεύς Πατήρ, and the Romans Ju-piter, was and is the same Unknown, for whom we also could find no better name than "Our Father, who art in heaven."

THE CONGREGATIONAL UNION DEBATE ON THE LEICESTER CONFERENCE.

A LECTURE DELIVERED AT THE GREAT MEETING, LEICESTER, BY JOHN PAGE HOPPS, ON SUNDAY, MAY 26TH.

THE most significant fact at the meetings in London was a fact identical with that to which I drew attention at the time when the meetings were held here in Leicester:—the representative ministers put up by the Union to speak for it, the one here as preacher, the other there as Chairman, both point-blank proclaimed the principles, not of the Union, but of the dreaded and denounced Conference. Dr. Maclaren here told us that the Church of Christ was wider than we had been imagining, and that "the presence of Christ, revealed in Christlike men, is the sign of the true Church:" and Mr. Baldwin Brown, the President of the London meetings, gave a picture of the Congregational Body which stood out in strange contrast to the debate and vote which followed it. He said, "I hold very dearly our simplicity of form and spirit, and the freedom with which the light and the fire of God can play through and vivify our organs;" and then his brethren proceeded to shut their windows and doors, so as to prevent the access of any new "light" and "fire!" He said, "The quick response to the word of truth, and to the pleas of charity which I have always noted in our assemblies, is its natural fruit. We move lightly to the inner life around and within, because there is no cumbersome creaking mechanism to hamper it;" and then the assembly began to get out its "mechanism" for the purpose of ejecting men who appealed to a nobler "truth," and pleaded for a wider "charity!" He said, "We have built no outworks, we have encrusted no shell around us through which the higher messages find it hard to reach the inner shrine;" and then forthwith the people he addressed retired behind their "outworks," got into their "shell," and protested that they did it on purpose to get rid of principles and persons whose breadth was incompatible with sound Congregational aims and ideas! He said, "Our Union ought to be the Free Parliament of our Churches;" and then the "Union" voted almost unanimously that it only wished to admit men of a particular theological hue!

Several of the speakers who followed the chairman, but who spoke in favour of the resolution, said that the Congregationalists gloried in having no subscription to any full and formal creed; and this may be verbally true, but they have now plainly declared that a creed is their bond of union; and, in that case, they would be better off if, like the Presbyterians, they fully formulated that creed, and if all subscribed to it. Dr. Parker entreated us to note that he, as a Congregational minister, was not "in a bond house;" but what is the good of saying that, when we see the fetters on his wrists, and hear the jingle of the chains about his feet? What is the good of saying that, when Mark Wilks, and Allanson Picton, and Joseph Wood, are voted down for being too broad? For this is what has been done. The mover of the resolution, Dr. Mellor, asked the Union categorically whether they would allow this or that; and the Union shouted "No." He asked whether they were prepared to allow "religious communion" of a certain specified inclusiveness; and they again shouted "No," and he thanked them for that reply. Then Mr. R. W. Dale supported the resolution just because it repudiated the latitude of the Leicester Conference, and because he held that it would be "the greatest possible disaster" if they even faintly hinted approval of the principles of that Conference. He added that he wanted to test the men of the Conference, to see whether they could bear the burden of the creed proposed, and he concluded by a significant hint that he did not "sail under false colours" or "ask for the moral support" of people who did not sympathise with him, or "have the audacity to restrain their testimony," lest it should leave him isolated!—in other words, he was not like "this publican," Allanson Picton, who did sail under false colours, who did ask for moral support from people who did not want him, and who did audaciously ask those people to restrain their testimony lest it should shut him out! And all this was echoed and re-echoed by the assembly, and confirmed at last by an overwhelming vote! From Mr. Dale, however, this came with the worst possible grace. He, together with at least one other bitter denouncer of the Leicester Conference (Mr. Edward White), denies the natural immortality of the soul, and makes continued existence beyond the grave depend upon some supernatural transformation accompanying a peculiar kind of faith in Christ. Practically, therefore, he gives in to the materialists, and only keeps his hold upon a future life by believing in a kind of magic. For my own part, I regard this as error of a really deadly kind, and one that might fitly call for grave remark from his brethren. Why did not the Union put belief in the immortality of the soul into its little creed? Are we to understand that it is quite allowable to say that millions will die as the brutes die, while it is unpardonable to say that among those who belong to God and are loved by Him, there are millions whom a narrow medieval theology have hitherto shut out?

And yet, in all this, hard and harsh and irreligious as it looks, there is an element of truth, sense, and honour; for it is true that the Congregational Union was founded for the propagation of certain dogmas; it is true that the men aimed at do not hold those dogmas in their integrity, and it is true that men cannot walk together unless they are agreed. The vote of the Union, therefore, was, in one sense, a right one, and men like Mr. Picton ought to go. Where then was the wrong, if there was any wrong in the matter? There was something wrong, and grievously wrong, too; and it all lay in the truly pitiable forgetting or non-recognition of the truth that religion, or that which unites us to God, is one thing and the highest thing, while theology, or that which relates to opinion, is another and a lower thing. But perhaps this could not be recognised by the Union, for is there not at the very basis of it the old superstition that certain opinions are essential to salvation? I put my finger on that at the Leicester Conference; I put my finger on it again, as the root of the whole mischief. It may be said that many of those who still make so much of opinions, and who still make agreement in opinions the condition of religious communion, no longer hold that opinions will save, or the absence of them condemn men; but if this is so, the maintenance of the old exclusions on merely theological grounds, without any recognition of the possibility of reunion on the higher ground of religion, can only be regarded as a mournful survival. These absolute exclusions were all logical and inevitable when people believed that opinions saved or condemned men, but they are unnatural and grotesque when it is held that men holding different opinions may be equally dear to God, and equally well on their way to heaven. Hence the very phrase "essential truth" is to a great extent a survival. In replying to my appeal to the ministers of Leicester, that we should all unite in a devout effort to sustain faith in God and Immortality, these ministers nearly all urged the objection that I did not hold certain other "essential" doctrines. "Essential" to what? I ask. The word comes to us from days when it meant essential to salvation, but I have good reason for thinking that in Leicester it does not mean that now. "Essential," then, to what? To my Congregational brethren, I say:—The answer can only be—Essential to you: essential to your theological system: essential to your Union for theological purposes. But there is something infinitely higher than all that: for you, and your system, and your theological propaganda, are all dwarfed into small proportions now that you recognise that we all may belong to God and find our way to Him together, with all our varying opinions.

It was here that the Congregational Union got astray. It talked as though it still believed that opinions were the great, the highest things. Why did it not rise up to the splendid truth that the life is more than meat, and the body than raiment?—that the people of the Leicester Conference were gloriously right in their recognition of the truth that there was something which bound men to God and to one another, which something was independent of opinion and creed? They might have done this, and yet have held that the Union was not the place for the recognition and working out of that larger thought. They might have consistently said:—You are right and we are right: there is such a thing as a true theology, and we in the work of this Union are engaged in spreading that; there is also such a thing as a religious life in God in connection with all theologies, and we thankfully recognise that in its proper place. That deliverance would have been a true and noble one, and would have been something worth singing the Doxology over.

The Congregational Union, then, is not to be blamed for saying that it can only do with men who agree in certain specified opinions, for it exists to propagate those opinions; but it is to be blamed for talking as though those opinions were the highest thing; as though they were essential to salvation: and, above all, it is to be blamed for failing to recognise the sublime truth that life in God, the life of the soul in the love and service of God, is the highest thing, and a thing as far above the merely theological work of a theological Union as the heavens are higher than the earth. This great truth found ample expression in a "Religious Communion Conference" held beyond the pale of the Union, and evidently in the hands of those who called the Leicester Conference. Notably did it find expression in a paper read by the Rev. W. Miall, who, with the simplicity of perfect insight and strength of grasp, brought into view the transcendent fact that all Christians, of all creeds, recognise that love is not only the fulfilling of the law but the means by which the soul of any one dwells in God. In this he finds the unity of the faith because the unity of life in God. "Herein, then, is the unity of the faith—God is love. All Christians believe that God is love; whether under the form of sympathy with all who thus believe, or of compassion for all suffering ones, or of a benevolent interest in all of their kind, all Christians love. The object is one, the process is one, the result is one. Should there not be some fellowship which furnishes opportunity alike for the realisation and for the advertisement of this unity? If it be really so that all that is essential in the religion of Jesus—essential, that is, to constitute discipleship in Him—and that because there is contained within it that germ of all personal excellence which first the rough weather of earth and then the sunshine of heaven will develop and mature, if all that is thus essential is a perception of the love which God has to us, then surely we have here a basis for Christian fellowship broader than any which now exists, broad enough to satisfy our heart's most earnest craving, and, at the same time, not too broad to be consistent with fidelity to individual conviction or approved by the Highest."

And now I conclude with a word of solemn warning—a warning that found full expression in the speeches of Mark Wilks, William Miall, and Allanson Picton; it is this:—There are hundreds of thousands of naturally bright, brave, devout souls, who are slowly drifting down to blank Materialism and the practical negation of God, simply because they have had Religion and faith in God presented to them in irrational and repulsive forms, and because they have had it impressed upon them that if they cannot accept those forms of faith they must give all up, and be aliens and outcasts from religion. It is this that is doing more real mischief than all the efforts of the Atheists: it is this that is the real infidelity, for it shuts God out from the human soul, and narrows communion with Christ to the starved proportions of a sectarian creed. If they could make that cruel and destroying policy successful, they would stifle religion, and strand the Church beyond the reach of the humblest freshest of the river of the water of life; but our confidence in God and our hope of man forbid us to believe it. Time may be required for it, but as surely as the sweet new bloom comes on the once bare boughs, under the genial rains and sunbeams from above, and as surely as bloom will be transformed to fruit, so surely will the world learn the heavenly truth that all our creeds are only guesses after truth—poor rough charts telling of but partial voyages of discovery in our search for God; and that the real thing, the living, abiding, saving thing, is that within us all which leads us to seek for Him, and makes us love Him. Then will it be understood that Religion is of the soul; that we are all one in so far as we sigh for redemption from evil, and thirst for righteousness; that they are Christ's who have most of his spirit; and that the true Church of God is the spiritual Church, which takes no notice of our dividing lines but includes all who long to know His will and do it.

MINISTERIAL APPOINTMENT.—After a ministry of twelve years at Ipswich, the Rev. J. W. Smith has accepted a unanimous invitation to become the minister of St. Thomas's Chapel, Ringwood, Hants, and will enter upon his new duties at Midsummer.

WALSALL: ENTERTAINMENT AND PRESENTATION. On Monday evening week, a miscellaneous entertainment, consisting of songs, readings, recitations, &c., was given in the Lecture Room of the Young Men's Christian Association Building, under the presidency of the Rev. Peter Dean. The object of the entertainment was to raise funds for the purpose of assisting the Unitarian Church choir, which, of late, through the indomitable energy of Mr. Dean, has been considerably augmented and improved. There was a numerous attendance, the room being comfortably full. The programme was somewhat lengthy, but the performers acquitted themselves in a manner which was highly creditable.

MIDDLESBOROUGH.—On Monday evening, the 20th May, the annual tea and public meeting took place in the schoolroom. The attendance was large. At the public meeting in the evening Mr. W. Fallows, J.P., presided. In his opening remarks, the Chairman referred to the political and social penalties which were the lot of those who formerly held unpopular opinions, but which, thanks to the steadfastness of those who had gone before them, were happily, with but here and there an exception, things of the past. The meeting, which was well attended, was addressed at considerable length by the Rev. Alfred Payne, of Newcastle, upon the present prospects of Unitarianism. He spoke of the signs of earnestness, both amongst ministers and people, throughout our Church, an earnestness which was largely concerned in practical work. He stated that though numbers were not always the test of progress, even in this particular Unitarians were making headway, whilst to the spread of opinions long held by Unitarians was to be attributed that unrest which is noticeable in all the churches. The speaker expressed his belief that liberal opinions were being diffused in other congregations, illustrating his remarks by stating that a Congregationalist minister at Newcastle had attended a meeting of the Unitarian Church there for the purpose of helping them in their protest against the incrustations which had been put round the teachings of Christ. Referring to the position of Unitarianism in the North of England, he said that in spite of the great depression of trade which hung over the district there was still satisfactory progress being made. The Rev. John Page Hopps (who preached the anniversary sermons on the Sunday, and a few passages from one of which appears in our last issue) spoke on the desirability of devoting the energies of the Unitarian ministry and people for a few years to come rather to spiritual work, than combating dogmas which had, perhaps, received too much of their attention of late. The meeting was also addressed by the Rev. W. Luther Spencer, the newly appointed minister of the church; the Rev. W. Elliott, of Sunderland; Mr. Charles Bell, Mr. George Lucas, of Sunderland; and others. Messrs. Marshall and Mackay, and Mr. Hall sang several songs during the evening, Mr. Green accompanying them. After the usual vote of thanks a most successful and pleasant meeting terminated.

THE BATTLEFIELD.

These poor deluded masses that meet
And senselessly shout their wild war cry,
Do they ever think of what it must be
On the field of battle to die:
Ever think of the tortures the wounded bear,
Lying stretched on the cold, dank ground,
With bleeding bodies and shattered limbs,
'Midst their comrades moaning around:
Ever think of the homes so desolate left,
Of the widows and orphans there,
Of the many that mourn for loved one's slain,
And are doomed to sad want and care?
Did they ever once think of things like these,
Oh! they never could have the heart
To jeer, as they do, at the friends of peace,
Who are acting the Christian part.

I. A.

The Unitarian Herald.

FRIDAY, MAY 31, 1878.

CONVOCATION IN A FLUTTER.

Convocation is really going to do something decisive. It is about to sit upon Bishop Gregg and the "Reformed Episcopal Church in England." It has appointed a Committee to perform the operation. What course of treatment the Committee may ultimately adopt—whether they will administer a slow, irritant poison in the form of a resolution declaring that the Reformed Episcopal Church is a thing to be despised by the regular certificated practitioners, or a strong dose of Episcopal strychnine which will at once take the life out of Bishop Gregg and his Church—we do not know. So tender and considerate, however, are the ways of Bishops with "schismatics," that we hope the concoction of the Committee will be of a mild character. But should it turn out to be of a stringent description we shall not be surprised, for a "quack" like Bishop Gregg, who dares to affirm that he is as duly qualified as the regular old family doctors, and who actually persuades a number of people to receive him as their adviser and attendant-in-chief, must be very far gone indeed, and must need a drastic remedy to purge him of his delusions. Whatever the prescription of the Committee may be—it is of small concern, and under no circumstances are Bishop Gregg and the Reformed Episcopal Church likely to make an internal application of it. What interests us most in the case is the earnestness with which Convocation has taken it in hand. We will briefly give the history of it.

Some ten years ago paragraphs began to appear in the papers of the opening, here and there, of a "Free Church" of England. Gradually churches bearing this designation multiplied. People began to inquire what this new denomination was. The answer was what most observers of ecclesiastical "new things" expected. It was a movement intended to meet the wants of districts and parishes where Church-people, disgusted with the practice of Ritualism in their old places of worship and powerless to prevent it, were demanding a "Church of England" purified from Romanism and all that savoured of it. It was ready to provide for such a "house of God," and it prepared a form of worship corresponding to that of the Established Church, with the important exception that from the Book of Common Prayer was expunged each and every one of the well-known passages, expressions, and directions that favoured sacerdotalism. It found a footing in various parts of the country, surest of all where Ritualism prevailed; and, by and by, the leaders of it, most of whom were clergymen who had seceded from the Establishment, began to provide for it an organisation. These audacious beings actually committed the enormity of forming a Convocation; and we have a tolerably distinct impression of having read of the deliberations of this body. All this while the State-ordained "powers that be" were silent, the only allusion to the subject that we recollect being a humorous suggestion of the witty Bishop of Peterborough, who is so much of a man that he has at least a sense of the ludicrous, that the portraits of the Archbishop of Canterbury and the President of a "certain other Convocation" should be painted on the same canvas, and the picture called "Dignity and Impudence."

But the "Reformed Episcopal Church" lacked the one virtue which was indispensable to invest its services with Episcopal authority and validity: it had no Bishop. True, the want of a Bishop may be, to the secular mind, no very serious deficiency, seeing that the twenty-eight or thirty of them who are employed by the State to "govern" the Church of England find, in the present state of things, their powers taxed to the utmost in urging Lord Melbourne's famous question, "Why can't you let it alone?" But, after all, it is only Bishops who can ordain priests and deacons: without the "laying on of hands" these would be no more than "lay preachers" on the same low level as William Gaskell and Charles Beard. And it is only Bishops who can consecrate churches and confer the grace of confirmation. A Bishop, then, the Reformed Episcopal Church must have. One was obtained. The Rev. Dr. Thomas Husband Gregg, vicar of Harborne, near Birmingham, seceded last year from the Established Church, having resolved that he would no longer share in the responsibility in which the excesses of Ritualism involved the Parliamentary religion. He joined the Reformed Episcopal Church, which was looking out for a Bishop. Selected—not, by the way, by our devout and pious Prime Minister—as the "suitable man," he crossed the Atlantic, and was consecrated by three Bishops, who had themselves been consecrated by Bishop Cummins, of the American Episcopal Church. Some doubt exists whether Bishop Cummins had authority to consecrate, in consequence of his having seceded from the American Church about a month before his consecration of the three Bishops; but as he was not formally deposed until ten months after, it is contended that he was a member of the Church until the actual deposition, and that therefore his act of consecration was valid, and remains to this day unimpeachable. We are quite incapable of entering into the intricacies of the interdependence of a Bishop's supernatural grace and ecclesiastical law. We would not attempt the profanity. They are beyond the ken of mortals like ourselves, unskilled in the subtle niceties of the ecclesiastical intellect. It is sufficient for us to say that at present even Convocation is perplexed on the subject, and its Committee before attempting a deliverance has referred the whole matter to the Pan-Anglican Synod which is to assemble at Lambeth in July. Dr. Gregg came back to England a Bishop, made a Bishop by men who had themselves their order from Bishop Cummins. • He speedily set to work in true Episcopal fashion, establishing churches, conducting confirmations, and gathering about him at his services great numbers of people. To the horror of the Bishop of St. Albans, he has built a church at Southend, in that diocese. He has invaded the province of the Bishop of Chichester, and consecrated a church at Littlehampton—an act of audacity which the Bishop aroused himself to protest against. He has—shall we say?—"bearded the lion" of Ritualism in his den: he has gone into the diocese of Lincoln, instituted there six churches which have "numbers of communicants." He has behind him a movement, the ministers of which are at work in the following thirteen dioceses: St. Albans, Chichester, Chester, London, Lichfield, Llandaff, Lincoln, Manchester, Bath and Wells, Gloucester and Bristol, Rochester, Hereford, and Worcester. From the point of view of Bishops of the orthodox make, this is a dreadful state of things. "The mischief that is being done in Southend" the Bishop of St. Albans cannot trust himself to describe. Is it possible that Bishop Gregg is overshadowing the influence of Bishop Cloughton? "The heresy is assuming large proportions," says the Bishop of Lincoln, lamentingly. Is it possible that Dr. Gregg is seriously endangering the hold of Dr. Wordsworth on portions of the diocese of Lincoln? Be this as it may, Bishop Gregg has alarmed the Bishops of the Establishment, and Convocation has determined to pronounce judgment upon his Episcopal claims, and those of the Church of which he is the overseer.

Of course the Committee of Convocation will make it plain that Dr. Gregg is not a Bishop of the regular pattern, and that his congregations have not any title to call themselves the Church of England. But what then? The Archbishop of Canterbury thinks that then "their claims" will not "stand them in much stead with the people of England." The Bishop of St. Asaph seems to fancy that "the people of England" will trouble themselves precious little about it, and that little good will come of establishing the invalidity of Dr. Gregg's ordination. The Bishop of St. Asaph is quite right. "The people of England" don't care two straws whether Dr. Gregg is stamped with the right image and superscription or not; and they begin to think that there is something very queer and irregular in the die itself when it strikes on coins such contradictory impressions as those of Durham and Lincoln. What they will most assuredly note is that Bishop Gregg and the Reformed Episcopal Church owe whatever position they have now, or may attain to hereafter, to the revulsion of the laity from the Romanism of the Establishment. The Bishop of Peterborough tells Convocation that it is intense dissatisfaction with ritualistic excesses which is operating powerfully to the advantage of the Reformed Episcopal Church, and that the real want is not legislation against schism, but the doing away with those excesses. He goes further, and frankly says that the spirit of disloyalty, the contempt of the laws of the Church, the hankering after everything that is Romish, the scorn for everything that is distinctively English, are bringing on, "not merely the disestablishment but, what we fear more, the disruption of the Church of England. That," he thinks, "is certainly coming." And yet Convocation trembles to take these things in hand, though they are the causes of the Reformed Episcopal Church, while it sets seriously to work to condemn Bishop Gregg and his institutions as schismatical. Its course seems to be dictated by some such curious consideration as that to repudiate all connection with certain effects will amply atone for cherishing a close alliance with, and bestowing a fostering care upon, their causes. Whatever dose of Episcopal horror Convocation may administer to Bishop Gregg and the Reformed Episcopal Church, we cannot help thinking that "the people of England" would thankfully see in the Bishops an equal readiness and earnestness to deal effectively with those Roman diseases the unwholesomeness of which has sent Dr. Gregg and his friends where they are.

BOOKS AND AUTHORS.

Handbook of Bible Words. London: Elliot and Stocks.

This is a most useful compendium of historical, geographical, and philological information relating to the Bible. Words which serve as the key to difficult passages, words which are of deep and permanent interest, and words which have been and still are the centres of theological controversy, are here selected from the Bible, arranged in alphabetical order, and explained by means of the original and of the principal ancient and modern versions. The book forms a vast fund of knowledge in the most important words, phrases, and proper names of the Bible, and we can confidently recommend it as a valuable aid to Sunday-school teachers, and to all thoughtful, studious readers of the Scriptures who have not the means of obtaining expensive dictionaries of the Bible. The author is the Rev. H. F. Woolrych, M.A.; and Professor Perowne, of Cambridge, who writes for it an introduction, testifies to the carefulness and accuracy of his work.

The Advertising Art Agency, 120, London Wall, London, have sent out two Chromo-Lithographs, which for tastefulness of design and beauty of execution entitle them to rank as works of art. The one is a splendid group of flowers, of fine colouring, surrounding a tablet upon which certain texts are finely printed in gold and colours. It is a very chaste and attractive production, and makes a beautiful wall ornament. The other is the Lord's Prayer, magnificently illuminated in gold and six colours on a tablet which is bordered by an exquisite arrangement of flowers. We have seen nothing more tasteful than these chromo-lithographs, and the price of them, 1s. 6d. each, post free, is a marvel of cheapness. They give a brightening effect to the bedroom, the nursery, and the schoolroom.

Victor Hugo has just published a remarkable poem which may well draw down upon him fresh execrations from the clerical party in France. It is entitled "Le Pape," and though Pius IX. is not individually assailed, it is one continuous indictment of the Papal system which he represented. Some idea of the poem may be formed from a brief outline of it which is given by the Pall Mall Gazette. The parable is presented in manner of a dream, and the dreamer is in the poet's fancy the Pope himself. For so it was in the night season, when all men are equal before the darkness, and wisdom descends from the ancient stars awakening the better soul of men, that the Pope slept, and there came unto him a vision. And in this dream the kings of the earth came before him and saluted him, and he said to them Peace be with you, O men. But they said, We are kings whom God hath made to be great upon the earth, as the hills are above the plains. And the Pope answered them, In the sight of God the high hills are as the dust of the plain: God hath made no kings. Then the Pope cast off his crown and his vestments, and went forth into the wilderness; and when he returned thence he sought out the forgotten places and the habitations of the poor, doing good to men. And as the lepers and the halt and the blind, and all that were despised of this world, came round about him, one mocked him, and said, Old man, what dost thou there? And he answered him, I lay up treasure. And the Pope found men building a Church, and an archbishop governing the builders, who commanded that they should make the glory thereof greater than Solomon's with all manner of imagery, and with brass, and with gold, and with precious stones. But after all his words were done, the Pope spoke one word to the builders, and commanded them to set beds therein for poor men's rest in winter time. Moreover, when the Pope saw men set in battle, and made ready to slay one another, he rebuked their princes and rulers, and entreated them till they were at peace again. And when he had gone through the world doing these things, he entered into Jerusalem, and all the people blessed him.

And so the Pope awoke in his chamber at the Vatican, crying, What monstrous dream was this? In the course of his work the poet gives vent to his well-known feeling against capital punishment, which he denounces with no less fervour than tyranny and civil war. While the lines of an ideal priesthood, who should be the pilots of the people and lead them to the light, are clearly and delicately traced, he pours out no unmeasured invective against those who are not the true pastors of the Church as they should be, true servants of God, but who make long processions, and burn candles, and dress up waxen dolls in purple and gold, while the poor starve in ignorance and vice. And in the part referring to Papal Infallibility, the heavens are passionately called upon to bear witness to the vanity and folly of dogmas and Councils.

LONDON DOMESTIC MISSION.

THE annual meeting of this society was held on Monday evening last, at University Hall, Gordon Square, under the presidency of T. SMITH OSLER, Esq. The attendance was large, and the proceedings were commenced by the TREASURER (Mr. P. M. Martineau) reading the financial statement of the society.

THE COMMITTEE'S REPORT

was next read as follows:—

There is little fresh to report this year of the Spicer-street Mission, but your committee see with great regret that the Sunday work there and its influences are not what they used to be. The difficulty of getting Sunday-school teachers increases, so that Mr. Corkran has been for some time past quite short-handed. This reacts on the taught. It also has its influence on the Sunday services, and to some extent on other operations of your Mission. The day schools there keep up their numbers. The Inspector's report on them is as follows:—"Girls' School: This school has passed a poor examination, especially in arithmetic. Infants' School: This is a well-managed and carefully taught school." It has been necessary to make a change of mistress in the girls' school. The report of the Inspector for 1876 was not altogether satisfactory, and that for 1877 it will be seen was by no means so. The Inspector, at the request of your committee, very kindly gave some further subsequent attention to this school, and in the end they felt it their duty to part with their mistress, who, good as she was in many ways, certainly had not kept the school up to the mark. They have engaged in her place a lady who will, they trust, raise the school again into the excellent repute it used to hold in this district; but they have been obliged, with this end in view, to strengthen temporarily their teaching staff, and this at some considerable expense. The infant school, under Miss Spurgeon and her capital assistants, is as vigorous and flourishing as ever. Mr. Corkran this year does not read a report to you, but your committee can assure you that his monthly reports to them have always been of interest and value, and that under his anxious care the general work of the Spicer-street Mission has been carried on to their satisfaction; indeed, with the above qualification as to the Sunday work, they believe that its influences for good were never greater than they are now, and that it was never more generally respected in its own neighbourhood. The Inspector reports as follows of the Chapel-street Schools:—"Mixed School: The school is well organised; the standard elementary work is thoroughly good. Geography is well taught, except to the third standard. Needlework is well taught. Infants' School: The school is well organised, the children are very fairly grounded." These are early times to say much about the schools, or their new locality; but your committee gladly take this opportunity of thanking all the Chapel-street staff for the excellent way in which they have carried on their work, though a very trying and exceptional year. Since the last annual meeting Mr. Heywood's station has been moved from Chapel-street to George's Row, St. Luke's. Your committee do not intend to enlarge on this important step in this report. Mr. Heywood will also to-night give you many particulars of the new station and his work there. But your committee wish to say for their part that they are well satisfied with the new house, and believe that it already has given fresh life and opened a wider field of usefulness to this branch of your Mission. They had hoped that the spare piece of ground which they rent there would have been turned to some purpose beneficial to the mission-houses for the poor, a working men's club, or such like. An effort was made in this direction, but it has come to nothing, and they must now put it on the market, taking care, however, to guard against its being used in any way that would prejudice their own building. Mr. Heywood has been most helpful; though a very arduous time, he has been emphatically the right man in the right place. Financially the year has been altogether exceptional, and your treasurer has thought it best to furnish two reports; one, the usual one of the year's current receipts and expenses, the other a capital account of the Chapel-street and George's Row matters. By the former it will be seen that the subscriptions, donations, and collections exceed those of the previous year, and to that this side of the account benefits by Mr. Needham's legacy, which was spoken of in the 1876 report. On the other side of the account it will be seen that while the outlay for several purposes has been much what it was, and the Spicer-street expenditure less than it was last year, the Chapel-street expenses have been higher. The result is that although the debt to your treasurer has grown from £150. 17s. 11d. to £193. 18s. 1d., there is this meagre satisfaction, that while last year your society spent £219 more than their income, this year they have only spent £43 more. They are bound to add that in the immediate future they see causes on which they do not wish at present to enlarge for further necessary charges on your funds, and earnestly trust that those who have the welfare of the mission at heart will not be behindhand with help. They make no special appeal this year, because they have lately been paid the Nelson legacy which they told their subscribers of in a previous report. The receipt of this sum, amounting with referred interests to £1,048. 2s. 2d., induced them to spend rather more on their new station at George's Row than they would otherwise have done, for they had not lost sight of the fact that the ground rent there is very much heavier than it was at Chapel-street, and that this extra outlay, had it not been for the Nelson bequest, needs must have been provided for by capitalising some of the money got from the sale of the Chapel-street property. Your society has lost one of its oldest subscribers and truest friends, Miss Carpenter, of 24, Regent-street. She has bequeathed to your society £100. Miss Dorothy Parker and Miss Phillis Parker have each left it a legacy of £50. These sums do not appear in the account for 1877. The Chapel-street and St. George's Row "capital" balance sheet will speak for itself; but it should be observed that out of the balance in hand of £152. 19s. 1d., a sum of £58. 13s. still owing to the builders must be paid, and also the architect's and lawyers' fees. In concluding their annual report, your committee have to tell you, with deep regret, that the hand which has penned it for the last fifteen years is at their command no longer. Ill-health has obliged Mr. Enfield to resign the post of secretary. None can know, as your committee know, how much he will be missed and how next to impossible it will be to fill his place. Your secretary's work years ago was comparatively but a small matter. It has grown year by year. The government requirements about the school are ever fresh and almost endless, and demand from your secretary not only hard work, but great readiness, tact, and intelligence. Mr. Enfield kept pace with this ever-growing work, and gave to it and to all the other objects of your Mission his time, his thought, and his whole heart. He was an indefatigable secretary, and more, that he was the ready adviser, the constant and wise friend, with the specially happy faculty of being able to pull well and make his way with all, whether missionary or teacher, gentle or simple, subscriber or fellow-committeeman; indeed, what we your committee, what you our subscribers, owe to him, we believe to be beyond words and past thanks. Bearing on this subject is the following resolution, which was passed at the last meeting of your committee: "That the committee regard the appointment of an eligible successor to Mr. Enfield a matter too important to be disposed of without much serious deliberation, and therefore suggest to the annual meeting that its consideration be referred to the new committee, and that they be requested to make provision for the performance of the duties of the office during the ensuing year."

The Rev. J. HEYWOOD then read his report, of which the following is an abstract:—

MISSIONARY'S REPORT.

Mr. J. HEYWOOD began by noticing the interference his ordinary duties had necessarily met with during the past year, arising from the branch of the Mission over which he presides having first, at Midsummer last, to remove from Chapel-street to small, temporary premises hired by the committee for five months in Ropemaker-street, and then again, at the end of November, from Ropemaker-street to their new building in George's Row, St. Luke's, where now their various institutions are once more in operation. Mention was next made of the two final, very successful gatherings, one of a social the other of a religious character, of friends who, from childhood to mature age, had grown up in connection with the Mission, both meetings bringing into bold relief the strong attachment felt by many for premises which, erected primarily for a granary, and plain and heavy almost to ugliness, as well as being inconvenient, had yet served for over forty years wherein to do much good work, both educationally and religiously. At the latter of the meetings named a collection was made by the congregation and friends assembled, amounting to the sum of £4. 4s. 2d. (since made up by them to £6. 14s.), for the purchase of a minister's chair and reading-desk cushion—both the best they could procure—to be presented to the new chapel in George's Row, as mementos of the old. At Ropemaker-street the main branches of the Mission were carried on as best they could be, suffering no suspension, only inconvenience from the unsuitability of the rooms. Beyond the steady procedure of the schools and organised religious work, the chief event at Ropemaker-street was the summer excursion of the scholars and congregation to Hadley Wood, near Barnet, Herts, on Tuesday, July 10th, when on that lovely day very nearly eleven hours were most happily spent in the fields, woods, and near villages of the district, the excursionists, about 220 in number, paying £9. 12s. 7d. of the day's expenses. An old Chapel-street neighbour, more orthodox than charitable, and not appreciating the unsectarian basis of the Domestic Mission, once, when the children were starting for their excursion and the morning happened to be wet, was heard to say, "Aye, they're Unitarians; it always rains when they go for their excursion!" But Mr. Heywood remarks that now for thirteen years he has had the pleasure of accompanying his Mission people, old and young, on these health-giving day-in-the-country occasions, sometimes, when funds have allowed, two being taken in the same year; and on but three occasions have they had rainy days. The balance, therefore, if in orthodox eyes it may be estimated so, is decidedly in favour of the unfettered theological position of the Mission. The new Mission station in George's Row was opened for Divine service on the evening of Sunday, 25th of November, when the devotions were led by Mr. Heywood, and the Rev. D. Maginnis, of Stourbridge, preached the sermon. The congregation was large. On the following night there was a tea party and public meeting, when some 350 friends came together, and standing room could scarcely be had. The meeting was in every way satisfactory and successful. Both occasions proved how well the new chapel is suited to musical services and public speaking.

ing. Since then the various institutions have been gradually reorganised. At Christmas the several school and congregational parties were largely attended and passed off very pleasantly—helping in an agreeable manner to unite in very harmonious relations the friends, young and old, who had come (in consequence of their own chapel having to be pulled down) from St. John's Square, Clerkenwell, to join the former Chapel-street friends in their new home at the new Mission station. It is gratifying to state that the Mission has been received in a very kindly spirit in the new neighbourhood; and it will be satisfactory to its supporters to learn that the new premises, after an occupancy of some months, are found to be in most respects as commodious and convenient as could be desired. Numerous valuable gifts have been made by many friends to add to their comfort, better appearance, and prospective usefulness. All the more prominent agencies have been benefited by the removal—as the day, evening, and Sunday schools, and Mission congregation, which are all in a healthy condition. A course of weekly Monday evening free lectures and high-class entertainments at a cheap rate, in which Dr. Carpenter, Mr. T. C. Clarke, Professor H. Morley, Rev. T. W. Freckleton, and other gentlemen took part, in February and March, were successful in a marked degree, the attendance, mainly of working men, being from 150 to 220 each evening; whilst at the social meeting, bringing the course to an end, the numbers were so large as to call into requisition all the rooms of the building. For the re-establishment and full working of the numerous “self-help” agencies time is required, for in their nature they are rather the fruit of a growing confidence in the people around than the immediate result of zeal and activity on the part of workers within the Mission. The new district, the missionary finds, is, as was the old one, in crying need of increased and of better house accommodation. Small self-contained cottages, of from four to six very confined rooms, such as a working man and his family would, and ought to, desire to keep himself, let at rents varying from ten to fourteen shillings a week, depending on their condition and situation. The consequence of these high rents is, many of the even small houses are let off by middlemen in single rooms, for which exorbitant rents are charged; or, where more rooms are taken by a family, the additional ones are used as workshops by those members of the household who are occupied at home in work which, when finished, is taken to city warehouses. Not a few of even the better-off thus occupy the same rooms day and night, as the rooms occupied as workshops during the day must serve for bedrooms at night also. There are in the new neighbourhood large bodies of well-paid skilled artisans, but the report cited cases of sad loneliness and hard pinching distress coming under the missionary's personal observation, in illustration of wide-spread poverty in the district as well. For some years past individual members of the Mission Committee have expressed earnest wishes that something more direct might be done to reach the habits and lives of working men. But there was not accommodation in the old building for starting new additional institutions. Mr. Heywood hoped that on removing to the new station a further building might be erected on the land the committee were under an obligation to take more than they really needed, and that this further building might be so constructed as to give accommodation to a higher-class working men's club and some model dwellings. The suggestion was warmly taken up by several gentlemen, earnest friends of the Mission; and if the scheme had been practicable but little difficulty would have arisen to prevent the necessary capital, apart from the Mission funds being obtained for the purpose of carrying it out. The bit of land at the committee's disposal, however, was found to be too valuable as frontage and too limited in size to well lend itself to the erection of a club and dwellings. In the face of practical difficulties to be surmounted, the scheme, therefore, which all who had considered would have been glad to have seen realised, had to be with reluctance abandoned. An experiment is being made within the Mission building itself to maintain a youths' club, and thus to do something to counteract the prevalent gambling and other evils of the streets among lads from thirteen to eighteen years of age. It is, however, but an experiment, as, here again, practical difficulties arising from the rooms of the Mission being furnished for widely different objects may be too serious to be permanently overcome. The report next proceeds to point out the advantages the new neighbourhood possesses as being not too far from the old one; as being within easy reach also of many of the suburbs whence the missionary may expect to receive much personal help in lectures, entertainments, teaching in the schools, &c.; and, further, as being the very heart of a dense population, where in years to come much good may, it is reasonable to suppose, be done by one and all the numerous agencies the Mission has in operation. Mr. Heywood concludes with an expression of deep regret at the heavy loss the Mission Society and he himself personally will sustain in the resignation, through severe illness, of Mr. Enfield, who for so many years has filled the office of honorary secretary; but he trusts that if it be the Divine will to restore Mr. Enfield to a fair share of his former health and strength, the Mission may still be favoured for many years to come by his wise counsel and encouraging presence as a member of its committee, and also have Mrs. Enfield continuing her admirable and kind connection with the Mission schools. One of the annual sermons on behalf of the Mission Society, preached on Sunday last by the Rev. Charles Hargrove, M.A., of Leeds, was delivered in the evening at the new station, George's Row, and the collection afterwards, it is gratifying to say, amounted to the sum of £10. 0s. 11½d.

ADOPTION OF REPORTS.

The CHAIRMAN said: Ladies and gentlemen.—It now becomes my duty to move that the reports of the treasurer and committee be received, approved, and adopted, and, together with the reports of the missionaries, be printed and circulated. It is not necessary, I am sure, to say anything in support of such a resolution as that. I will simply take the opportunity in the fewest possible words of giving utterance to one or two of the considerations that have occurred to me in listening to the very interesting reports that we have heard. With one very great exception I think that I may very fairly congratulate the society and friends of the Mission on the general tenour of the reports that we have heard and upon the present position of the Mission. The great exception to our congratulations has been alluded to already, and no doubt will be referred to again. Although I have not myself been concerned in the active work of this Mission, and have not had the opportunity of seeing how Mr. Enfield has worked there, yet I know perfectly well, because I have worked with him elsewhere, how thoroughly and efficiently he must have discharged the duties of his office. There is one thing which may be said of him. I recollect, soon after the death of a very eminent scientific man some years ago, I saw it remarked in regard to the late Mr. Sheepshanks, that if anything was to be done for the benefit of astronomy you might reckon upon Mr. Sheepshanks' assistance, as if it were a law of nature. So I think we may say of Mr. Enfield, if there is anything to be done for the benefit of humanity, and he can do it, my experience is that you have only to go to him and ask for his assistance and he will in the quietest possible way, without any delay and without any bustle or fuss, do all in his power to further your object. In short, you may reckon upon it like a law of nature that he will do what he can to assist you. (Laughter and applause.) Hence I most sincerely sympathise with those who have lost such valuable assistance as I am sure Mr. Enfield has rendered since his connection with the society. In other respects I am sure we have abundant ground for congratulation. It is always matter for congratulation with a society of this kind when we see that it is putting forth new energies and signs of progress and vitality till we are assured it will not only maintain the ground which it already occupies but will extend its area of usefulness. The effort that has been made to found a new branch for the Mission in the place of the one it was found necessary to give up is, I think, most encouraging, while the success which has attended that effort shows that we have not at all exhausted the springs of energy and vitality, which originally founded this Mission, and which have since carried it on to the present time. I confess that I was very sorry to hear that it was necessary to part with the vacant piece of land adjoining the chapel in George's Row without providing for one of the objects that have been referred to by your missionaries. I have no doubt that those objects have been most attentively considered by those whose duty it was to consider them; but I must say that when Mr. Heywood was enumerating the advantages that might be derived from the possession of youths' and men's clubs, and knowing how difficult it is to get land for a public purpose in London, I did feel considerable regret that this land was to go upon the market, without being utilised for any of the purposes the society had in view. I have no doubt, however, that this has been most maturely considered, and we can but accept the unfortunate necessity which compels us to part with the land. I think, perhaps, it may not be out of place, if, whilst we are congratulating ourselves on the new energies which our mission is displaying in George's Row, we remember rather specially on this occasion that the old mission in Spicer-street, is in existence, and I am quite sure that the society are not likely to forget their obligations in regard to the Spicer-street Mission. Our minds are naturally at this moment rather full of the new effort, but I think we ought to take especial care that the old Spicer-street Mission does not suffer upon that account. I am very sorry to hear, although it is a rather barren sorrow that myself and those other friends express, for we have done nothing to soften that regret—I say I am very sorry to hear that Mr. Corkran has had so lonely a life in Spicer-street Mission. It is for those who feel that they can help him to come forward and to press others into the service in a way that one who has done nothing in the field of co-operation cannot do. I can only express my sincere sympathy with what I have heard, and I think we are doubly bound to bear that consideration in mind when we are full of interest in regard to the new branch of the mission. I will add but one word in conclusion. I have been considering during the reading of the reports the various topics of hope and consolation that they bring before us. I think it says a great deal for the energy and faith of true philanthropic spirit of our missionaries and those who prepare these reports that they are able to speak with this ever-springing hopefulness of the results of their efforts among our labouring population. Mr. Heywood has spared us a great deal, that I have no doubt he could tell us of cases—pathetic cases of sadness poverty and distress that have come under his notice. When we come to these realities, of which he has just given us a glimpse, we see after all how little even the best directed efforts can effect in the amelioration of the mass of sorrow, poverty, and crime that surrounds us. I think, therefore, it shows that we must be proceeding upon the right lines when those who are in closest contact with this sorrow and distress speak hopefully of the future, and I trust we shall follow their example in this that we shall never allow ourselves to despair and our energies to be diminished by the at times almost overwhelming thought of the greatness of work which has to be done. (Applause.)

The Rev. P. W. CLAYDEN, in seconding the resolution, echoed the regret expressed by the chairman at Mr. Enfield's resignation of the position of secretary, and in terms of high eulogium referred to the invaluable services rendered by that gentleman during the long period of his connection with the society. The special feature of the reports, and that which naturally monopolised the greater part of their attention and interest, was the removal of one branch of the Mission to another locality. The society was to be deeply congratulated upon the success which had attended that removal, and the indications of its being fruitful in future advantage to that station. On previous occasions Mr. Corkran had deplored the ill-success which attended the holding of Sunday services at his mission station in Spicer-street; but he (the speaker) was of opinion, and he believed it was the opinion of the great bulk of the subscribers, that after all the Sunday services were not the main points to be considered. This was essentially a domestic mission—a mission whose endeavour was to relieve that hopeless sorrow, that oppressive anxiety which must rest upon homes such as Mr. Heywood had described. (Hear, hear.) Now if the object of this Mission were to raise up congregations at these two mission stations the question would be raised as to whether the preaching of a purely anti-theological religion could have any result other than that of failing to draw people together. It certainly seemed to him perfectly hopeless to endeavour in the present day to build up a congregation, whatsoever its character, unless the minister could give the men and women who came to him definite religious ideas. At the same time he heartily appreciated the unsectarian front taken by the Mission, and warmly approved the real practical missionary work carried on by Mr. Heywood and Mr. Corkran.

The resolution was then put, and carried unanimously.

DR. MARTINEAU ON THE INFLUENCE OF MISSIONS TO THE POOR.

DR. MARTINEAU had much pleasure in proposing—“That this meeting desires to assure their missionaries that it feels a hearty interest in their work, and thoroughly appreciates the devotion they continue to show to it.” Speaking as a mere spectator of the work of the missionaries, he did not know that they could have a more sincere assurance of the sympathy of the meeting than in the expression of this penitence which they (the subscribers) all felt at keeping at such a distance from the field of mission work. Every time their attention was called to the interests in the charge of the missionaries; every time that they had to listen to the pathetic record of their experience their hearts were again moved, and they felt the value, the dignity, and the nobleness of their work; they felt ashamed of having so little to do with it, and Mr. Heywood and Mr. Cockran might be assured that in that mood at least the subscribers' expression of sympathy was truly deep and sincere. (Hear, hear.) At the same time he regretted it did not take a more effective and practical form, and while explaining that his age and numerous other duties precluded him from responding to the invitation held out in Mr. Heywood's report, he made an earnest appeal to the younger members of the community to delay no longer, but at once to attempt to do what they could to assist their missionaries in the arduous labours of their position. The work executed at the mission stations appeared to him to be in perfect harmony with the spirit of the times. He did not think this was an institution which had outlived its beneficial effects; on the contrary, it appeared to have a greater tendency than it ever possessed before to meet the specific evils of the day and to address itself to what was clearly and unmistakably the sentiment of our own times. No thought or conviction swayed the minds of all thoughtful persons more strongly at the present moment than that feeling of blank despair at the depth and vanity of human misery, sin, and wretchedness which underlaid human life. It seemed to him that an institution which had the courage to enter into the field with some of those evils, and sincerely to grapple with them, was an institution which was calculated by its operations both to clear away the evils themselves and to dissipate the morbid feelings which they created. (Hear, hear.) It was only the dreaming, speculative pessimists who moaned over the evils of the world as irremediable; those who went down amongst the sin, and sorrow, and crime with earnest, strong hearts to do all in their power to leave the world better than they found it, were invariably animated with a better and more hopeful feeling. He should say, therefore, to anyone who fell into a despondent frame of mind, “Be up and doing, and try yourselves to cure some one of these evils; a single conquest will give you hope to make another, and yet another.” (Hear, hear.) To the question so often asked, whether they made progress, whether they gained upon the evils around them, he would reply he did not believe they would ever have reason to boast of any complete conquest; if they could only prevent the evils that afflicted humanity, from becoming worse, they would have won the greatest victory that would ever reward their exertions. And could any one doubt that they were preventing them from becoming worse? Did any one imagine for a moment that the two mission stations of the society, together with all the other influences for good of every character were to disappear from the face of the world, the state of things would remain as now? For his part he regarded with satisfaction the leavening influences such labours had wrought, and would continue to effect among the poorer masses of the population. Among the many agencies to which they might look in hope of improving the condition of the lower classes of society he believed there was none which was so powerful and so wholesome as the permanent, familiar, friendly, and affectionate presence of those who were able by their character, by their intelligence, and by their labours to serve as the representatives of the higher attributes and possibilities of human nature. The contact of such with the poorer classes—of men of intelligence, of experience, and earnest piety—of men like Mr. Heywood and Mr. Corkran exercised a saving effect that it was impossible to over-estimate. (Hear, hear.)

The Rev. C. WICKSTEDD had much pleasure in seconding the resolution, which was then put and carried unanimously.

Mr. COREKRA, in acknowledging the compliment on behalf of Mr. Heywood and himself, said: My respected colleague's very full report for the past year renders it necessary that, according to custom, my own should be restricted to narrow limits. I don't regret this, especially as the state of the Mission at Spicer-street in some of its important branches is far from encouraging. I cannot for instance speak as was my wont in former years of a large and prosperous Sunday school. That exists no longer. The want of personal help, of which I have complained so often, continues. I have lost several teachers in the past year—two from ill-health and one of the most constant and devoted by death, under sad circumstances which do not admit of detail. The school continues to decline, and I see but little hope of its revival. The attendance at the Sunday evening service is also lower. The causes which have unfavourably affected these branches of our Mission I have dwelt upon in recent reports. The various funds raised at the Mission itself have suffered a decline, mainly owing to the depressed state of trade. On the other hand, several branches of the Mission are in an active and healthy condition. The day schools for girls and infants are well maintained, and considerable improvement has taken place in the former under its new governess, Miss Morgan, and her temporary assistant, Miss McGregor, aided by the staff of pupil teachers. Owing to the non-attendance of a sufficient number of scholars I thought it right to close the evening school, and substitute, first, a recreation class for the practice of singing and recitations, which has proved much more popular. I personally conduct other evening classes which fairly maintain their numbers. The following details give a favourable view of other branches of the Mission. In the year ending April 30, 1878, 110 persons, including children, enjoyed the usual rest and recreation afforded by the Convalescent Rooms at Hampstead, Stoke Newington, Morley's Cottage, Woodford Bridge, and rooms at Eastbourne. The annual excursion of scholars (148) and parents and friends (96) to Epping Forest took place in July, 1877. The day was fine, and was spent very happily. There were also three school tea parties. The library now embraces 1,700 volumes, and more than 180 readers. With regard to the popular lectures and entertainments, we are much indebted to a friend (H. M.) for a donation of £5 towards payment of lecturers and cost of lectures. Of these we have two courses. We have also had several "lay and song evenings," held on Saturdays. These means of combined instruction and amusement have afforded much enjoyment to varying audiences.

On the motion of the CHAIRMAN, seconded by Mr. DRUMMOND, the members of the committee and other officers of the society retiring by rotation were re-elected.

Mr. A. PRESTON moved that the thanks of the meeting be presented to the Rev. C. Hargrove for preaching the annual sermons on behalf of the Mission, and to the chapels at Hackney and at other places for allowing collections to be made on behalf of the Mission.

Mr. WORSLEY seconded the resolution, which was then carried.

On the motion of Mr. C. CLARKE, seconded by Dr. SADLER, a resolution was passed with acclamation expressive of regret at the resignation by Mr. Enfield of the office of honorary secretary.

A vote of thanks to the chairman terminated the proceedings.

COLNE.—We are glad to hear that the congregation here is in a hopeful condition. The attendance averages fifty, the Sunday school is prospering, and people and minister, the Rev. W. Matthews, are working heartily together. The church is in course of erection, and the ceremony of laying the memorial stone will shortly be announced. The building and fittings are expected to cost about £2,000, towards which the congregation are contributing £200, and the British and Foreign Unitarian Association and the East Lancashire Unitarian Mission are making substantial grants.

CROYDON: WELCOME TO THE REV. E. M. GELDART.

On Friday evening about 300 persons, members of the Croydon Free Christian Congregation, with many friends, assembled at the Public Hall, for the purpose of welcoming the Rev. E. M. Geldart, who is now accepted as their minister, and is living and working amongst them. The gathering was not of a formal public character, but was more like an evening party of young and old who, having outnumbered the limits of an ordinary house, had sought a public building. It was certainly a very agreeable way of welcoming their new guide, and no doubt made him feel that he had their confidence, that he was at home, and not like a stranger in a strange land.

After tea a choir from the Royal Normal College for the Blind, Upper Norwood, went through a short programme of music. After the singing the platform was taken possession of by about twenty of the gentlemen.

The chair was taken by Mr. JESSE FAGG, who said they had met to wish Mr. Geldart and his family health, happiness, all kinds of prosperity, and a long residence amongst them. They wished to offer him their support and sympathy in the arduous and high duty he had undertaken. It was a duty that would not allow itself to sit lightly on the heart and conscience of any high-minded and earnest man. In these days of unfettered criticism, when the axe was laid at the root of every tree, however venerable or widespread the grateful shadow of its branches, when something had to be planted in its place, with hope, with high hope indeed, of its ultimate triumph, yet with pain and disappointment and many apparent failures, the necessity that was laid upon him of keeping abreast of the thought of the age must at all times be a severe strain upon the health and endurance of the minister, and it seemed to him the smallest service his friends could render was to smooth the way for him by doing what they could to prevent the occurrence of those small causes of irritation which, though apparently trivial, did so much to render the minister's position an unhappy one, and to unfit him for his best and highest work.

Mr. TEULON then moved a welcome to Mr. Geldart, and referred to their former minister, Mr. Suffield, as being a particularly sociable man, who could mix with high or low with advantage to both. Circumstances had arisen which had rendered it necessary for him to leave them; and fortunately for them Mr. Geldart arranged to take Mr. Suffield's place in a temporary manner until they could see their way to making another appointment. Since Mr. Geldart had been with them there had been a steady increase in their numbers, and certainly they had no reason to regret his arriving among them. He believed the time was not far removed when they would find that their present modest building would not contain the congregation. The increase in their numbers was a most satisfactory proof of Mr. Geldart's ability to fill the place of his predecessor.

Mr. SLACK said he had great pleasure in being one amongst them to welcome Mr. Geldart on his becoming their minister.

Mr. HENRY MOORE followed, and in the course of some remarks said man needed a minister as much as he needed anything. He wanted a larger power outside himself, to show him what was his best interest and to keep him to it. He hoped Mr. Geldart would consider himself pledged to nothing, but that he should give them his best self.

The Rev. E. M. GELDART, in replying, thanked them for the opinions and hopes so kindly expressed from the platform, and so kindly welcomed by them. If ever he half deserved them he should be happy indeed. He thanked the brilliant company there assembled for their presence. He thanked those who would have come had they not been prevented, amongst whom, in addition to the names referred to by the Chairman, he might mention the illustrious name of Professor Max Müller, of Oxford—(cheers)—whom he had taken on himself to invite, and who would certainly have been present had he not been precluded by a previous engagement. But amongst all the honours and favours which had been lavished upon him greatest by far was that which was at the root of the rest—his election as minister of a Free Christian Church. (Cheers.) He trusted they would not take it as an omen of a lengthy discourse when he said his subject naturally divided itself into three heads. (Laughter.) At all events they must remember that he had not chosen his text on this occasion, but his text—the Free Christian Church—had chosen him. (Cheers.) But if he had chosen his text he could not have chosen a better one or one more exactly to his liking. And this brought him to the first of the three heads, "The Church." By "The Church" he understood not only a congregation of inquiring minds, but likewise a society of seeking souls, a meeting of men and women, yes, and of children too, drawn together by a common aspiration not only after clearer knowledge, but after a higher and holier life. In the second place, their Church was not only a Church; it was a Christian Church. They might ask whether this was their latitude, and he could only answer that it was. It was true that it was not the latitude of Timbuctoo, but it was the latitude of Greenwich. Geographically and historically they were Christians, if they were to have a name at all. As a matter of fact he liked it very much. He believed the Christian name was the broadest under Heaven. Practically, if not grammatically, it was far broader than that of Theism. It included every grade of religionists from the fetish worshipper to the philosopher. There was even a Christian Pan-theism, but the phrase, "Theistic Pantheism," had a strange unlikely sound. If he thought that the name of Christian could by any possibility be interpreted as having a sectarian significance, or as implying the imposition of a creed, he should be amongst the very first to protest against its retention, but he thought they had an adequate provision against any such contingency as that. Their Church was not only a Christian Church—others called their churches Christian churches—but theirs was a Free Christian Church. The order of the words showed the sense in which they were meant to be taken. It was not a Christian Free Church, but a Free Christian Church, the adjective "Free" qualifying the adjective "Christian." It was not free in so far as it was Christian, but it was Christian only in so far as it was free—(applause)—free as the mind of man; free as the atmosphere of heaven; free as the Spirit of God; free to declare with the Theist, "I know in whom I have believed;" free to avow with the Agnostic, "I believe in the Unknown;" free to recognise in Nature's kindness the face of a Father and a Friend; free to acknowledge, in universal order, suggestions of Intelligence and Will; free to confess how inadequate is all human language concerning the Infinite Unseen, whose counsels were indeed unsearchable, and whose ways were past finding out; free to maintain that man by the exercise of volition worked out his own salvation; free, nevertheless, to admit that it was God who worked in him both to will and to do of his good pleasure; free to seek in all their yearnings and longings for perfection the earnest of immortal life; free to find that immortal life either in the perpetuation of one and the same individual through the ages of eternity, or in the merging of single personalities in the chain of unbroken existence; free, in a word, to give vent to every phase of feeling or of thought (whether permanent or passing) that was serious in intention and reverend in tone; free to utter the clearest convictions of the most defined belief; free to fall back on the mystery of an Indefinable Presence—the might and majesty of whose unfathomed Being was hymned by the lyre of one who, if he sinned with David and erred with Solomon, had, like David, his moments of contrition, and, like Solomon, his hours of insight.

The rest of the evening was spent in amusement.

NEWS OF OUR CHURCHES.

NOTICE.—Our friends would oblige if they would kindly send their news paragraphs so as to arrive never later than Wednesday morning, otherwise we are compelled to cut them down.

ASTLEY.—On Sunday, the 19th instant, the annual sermons were preached to this congregation by the Rev. J. McDowell, of Pendleton. Friends were present from Bolton, Croft, Chowbent, and Leigh. The collections amounted to upwards of £23.

BURNLEY.—Special services were held on Sunday last in aid of liquidating the debt of £50 on the new organ. The preacher was the Rev. S. Fletcher Williams, of Liverpool. The service of song was very well rendered by the chapel choir, Mr. Thomas Pollard, organist at Brunswick Methodist Chapel, a locally well known instrumentalist, presiding at the organ, which is a beautifully-toned instrument. Notwithstanding the strike existing in the town and district, which affects religious as well as commercial activities, the collections and donations amounted to £28—a sum which exceeded expectation. The minister-elect, the Rev. Thomas Leyland, of Moneyrea, will begin his labours in July, and we have no doubt that his ministry, which has been useful elsewhere, will prove a substantial service to this hard-working and energetic church.

HEYWOOD.—On Sunday last the Sunday-school anniversary sermons were preached to overflowing congregations by the Rev. Douglas Walsley, B.A., of Bury, when the collections far exceeded those of any previous anniversary, amounting, with subsequent donations, to £42.2s.

LONDON: UNITY CHURCH.—On Friday last there was a service of praise at this church. Unfortunately the evening proved wet, and the attendance was small. The order of service was as follows:—Organ, andante No. 3 (H. Smart); hymn, "The world may change from old to new"; tenor solo and chorus, "Turn thy face from my sins" (Attwood); hymn, "He sendeth sun, He sendeth shower"; organ, andante No. 2 (Wely); soprano solo, "Agnus Dei" (Mozart); canticle, Psalms 136 and 148; anthem, "O Lord, my God" (Wesley); organ, Grand Offertoire, in D minor (Batiste); hymn, "God, my king, Thy might confessing"; trio, "Ti prego, O padre eterno!" (Kurschman); hymn, "Say not the law divine is hidden from thee, or far off removed"; the Lord's Prayer; organ, "The Heroes' March" (Mendelssohn). We understand that the thoroughly devotional tone of these services is much appreciated, and that the next will be held on Friday the 14th June, by way of closing the various anniversary meetings held in London in that week.

MANCHESTER DOMESTIC MISSION: EMBDEN-STREET.—The annual sermons in connection with the Mission were preached on Sunday, May 12th, by the Rev. S. Fletcher Williams, of Liverpool. The congregations were good; and the hymns and chants selected for the occasion were pleasingly given. The collections were a little in excess of those of last year.

MANCHESTER: "MIDDLEMARCH."—On Monday evening there was a large attendance at the Memorial Hall to hear a lecture by the Rev. C. C. Coe, on "Middlemarch," in connection with the Beard

Memorial Union. The Rev. William Gaskell, M.A., presided; and there were present—The Revs. E. Tarland, Joseph Freeston, Jas. Black, M.A., W. G. Cadman, George T. Walters, E. C. Towne, J. Odgers, Edward Golland, Harry Rawson, G. H. Leigh, Dr. Marcus, and others. Mr. Coe gave a long and most carefully-prepared analysis of the characters depicted in the work, and expressed the opinion that if not the best of George Elliott's works, it was at least the most popular. All present enjoyed the paper very much, and at its close, on the motion of the Rev. E. Tarland, seconded by Mr. John Dendy, junr., a very cordial vote of thanks was accorded to Mr. Coe.

NORWICH.—On Sunday evening last, the Rev. H. W. Perris delivered a lecture at the Octagon Chapel, Colegate-street, on Congregationalism on its Trial. There was a full congregation, and the lecture was listened to with great interest. The subject being one which has been prominently brought to the front by the proceedings at the recent meetings of the Congregational Union in London, is reported at considerable length in the Norwich Mercury.

OVER DARWEN.—On Sunday last there was a special service for the children in the evening. The room in which service is held was tastefully decorated with spring flowers and ferns, which had been gathered by the teachers and elder scholars on the Saturday afternoon. Some hothouse flowers, sent by a member, added to the brightness of the effect. There was a good congregation both of young and old folk. When service was over the flowers and plants were taken home by the children. A sewing class has been commenced by Mrs. Osler, and a class for writing and arithmetic by the Rev. C. H. Osler, which is held on three afternoons each week while the strike lasts. The classes which consist of persons of all shades of opinion, and which are on a perfectly unsectarian basis have been extremely well attended over a hundred being present on each occasion. The classes have now been going about three weeks. It is feared that the class for sewing will have to be discontinued as it has already entailed considerable expense, and more money is required. This is a pity as there can be no doubt that it is doing much good.

PENDLETON.—On Sunday last the annual sermons were preached by the Rev. Wm. Binns to large congregations, when the offertories amounted to £18. 8s.

STOCKPORT.—On Tuesday evening, the 21st inst., the members of the Bible class, with their friends, held a social meeting in the schoolroom. There were about sixty persons present. After tea a number of songs and recitations were pleasantly rendered, and games were entered into with zest. This class was instituted last Christmas by Mr. W. R. Shunkes, student, and has been very successful, from ten to twenty members attending its meetings. At the close of the entertainment votes of thanks were passed to a friend who had kindly lent a piano for the evening and to the teacher of the class.

SWINTON.—The annual sermons were preached here on Sunday last, by the Rev. Wm. Gaskell, M.A., when the collections amounted to £22.

RIVINGTON.—The collection on Sunday last, after the school sermon, preached by the Rev. James Harwood, B.A., of Liverpool, amounted to £36. 14s., which, considering the state of trade in the cotton district, was highly satisfactory. At the close of his excellent discourse Mr. Harwood made a graceful and affectionate allusion to his old friend and preceptor, the Rev. J. S. Gilbert, whose ill-health has compelled him to rest from ministerial work for a few months.

CORRESPONDENCE.

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Letters, articles of intelligence, &c., should be addressed to the Unitarian Herald Office, New Cannon Chambers, 55, Market-street, and not to the private addresses of the Editors.

No anonymous letters inserted: the writer of every letter must append his name for publication. No letter should be more than half a column.

THE SCHOOLS IN THE WESTERN DISTRICT.

To the Editors.—In your report of the paper read at the spring meeting of the Western Union, held at Trowbridge, you give a tabulated statement which has called forth some criticism. With regard to the population, my authority was the last census for 1871, and the number given was the only one I found in connection with the places in question. This may in some instances have been the population of the town and neighbourhood. To have given "the parish populations in every place in the Western Union where there is a Unitarian congregation" would have been in "danger of being misunderstood," as in some instances our churches are within easy reach of several parishes. I am very willing that all honour "due to Crewkerne" in this particular should be rendered, and regret that with an allowed "actual population" of 4,869, all that can be claimed in the direction of Sunday-school work is "a class held at the minister's house every Sunday afternoon." With regard to the report of schools, my authority was the annual return published by the Sunday School Association for 1877, in which the name of Devonport does not appear. I am heartily glad to find that there has been a school there for two years, and wish it had been reported along with our other schools, as very little trouble is given in this matter, a circular for filling up being sent ready stamped and addressed for return.

With the sources of information at my disposal, I could not, and did not profess to do more than give some general view of the Sunday-school work in the district comprised in the Western Union, and I may repeat, "taking the report as only an approximation to the truth, and putting the best construction we can upon facts and figures, the Sunday-school work in the district does not seem to be in as healthy and satisfactory a state as we could wish it to be." I have received many thanks from all parts of the district for calling attention to the subject, and if only some plan can be adopted for aiding the Sunday-school work, much good may result. And I will conclude with two lines from a quaint little poem, written either by one of the Scottish exiles in Germany, or by a Dean of Westminster, in the reign of Edward VI., and quoted by Dean Stanley:—

"Say well" from "do well" differs in letter,
"Say well" is good, but "do well" is better.
Faithfully yours, JOHN BIRKS.
Park Terrace, Taunton, 28th May, 1878.

CONGREGATIONAL SINGING.

To the Editors.—I have read with much pleasure and interest the various letters which have appeared in your paper during the last few weeks, and I think that a great amount of good may arise out of them. There are two or three things, however, which I think are most essential points to be observed in order to arrive at the desired end in view. In the first place, I would suggest that, as far as practicable, the person in charge of the choir should select tunes which do not range higher than the top space in the stave, for my experience shows me that the great bulk of the people in our congregations cannot sing with any degree of ease higher than E. I may be told that there are very few tunes of such a character; true, but in order to meet that objection, I would say that choirs should not be limited to one set of tune books. In the second place I quite agree with Mr. Phillips that due regard should be given to the fixing of tunes suitable to the sentiment of the hymns. My third point, and which appears to me to be the most essential, is that of placing the choir in such a position as to command the most powerful control over the congregation. At many of our churches the choir, as your correspondent very properly stated last week, is far back in a gallery, or in a place screened off specially for them in a corner. This seems to me to be both objectionable and a great drawback to the singing. My own impression is that the choir should be placed right in front of the congregation, and until this is done I am convinced there will never be that hearty and soul-stirring singing which we so much desire. I could name a number of our churches where the three points I have named are strictly adhered to, and the effect is most pleasing and satisfactory.—I am, dear sirs, yours respectfully, H. SUTCLIFFE.
Gateshead, April 23, 1878.

INTERCHANGE OF ANNIVERSARY MUSIC.

To the Editors.—May I suggest, through your columns, the advisability of an interchange of anniversary music between the choir masters of our churches. Such a plan would not only lighten our labours, and prevent the necessity of falling back upon old tunes, but it would give practical effect to some of the suggestions which have appeared in your columns relative to congregational singing. I shall be grateful to anyone who will exchange with me.—Yours truly, W. HAILING.
2, Ormond Villas, Montpellier, Cheltenham.

THE YOUNG PEOPLE OF OUR SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

To the Editors.—In the report of the Newcastle-on-Tyne annual meeting, in your paper, I notice that the minister, the Rev. A. Payne, referred to a new institution called the Young People's Friendly Alliance, which they have recently established to serve as a link between the school and the church. He says "a difficulty was widely felt with respect to retaining the young people after they left the Sunday school; the Alliance provides a sphere of operation for them during their period of transition." We all know the difficulty sadly and full well. I have sometimes thought that Bands of Hope and Bands of Faith might be made available as remedies, but have always, by way of conclusion, doubted whether these bands were likely to bridge the chasm,—the former being generally looked upon as juvenile teetotal societies, and the latter savouring somewhat of propagandism, they will scarcely become universally popular. The Newcastle society lately instituted, is intended for young men and women, and the plan deserves attention in other places. I think, however, that the advantage might in every instance be extended to the whole school, and might be secured in the following manner:—Let every one of our schools establish a Young People's Friendly Alliance (under this name or a similar one), and let it arrange for and provide recreation, mutual improvement classes, reading-rooms, outdoor and indoor games, social entertainments, &c., everything, in fact, except the teaching. Let attendance at Sunday school carry with it membership of the Alliance; in this way all would grow up interested in and connected with the institution, and slips as to joining would be avoided, because many who meditate leaving do not care to join anything! The Alliance might be managed by the minister as president, the staff of teachers and the pupils of the senior classes as committee members and officials, each to engage in useful operations, and the juveniles might be asked to help in various ways until in their turn they reached the senior classes. One official should be appointed to obtain subscribers for Young Days and other papers, the Herald included. At present many of our schools overlook this matter; and, as I have no pecuniary interest whatever in the sale of Young Days, I am free to say that more ought to be done to ensure its success. The objects advocated by Mr. Reynolds in his paper, read on Good Friday, were fully approved, and he showed that our schools ought to meet the recreational requirements of the young people instead of being closed throughout the week. The Association will doubtless consider the subject in relation to this district, but it is one of more than local importance, concerning as it does every Sunday School in the country, and it certainly calls for full and world-wide consideration.

May I just refer to another kindred subject by saying that I was glad to see in the Herald of 19th ult., that Mr. Gill, the visitor to the Midland Sunday School Association, in his report states that three schools in that district hold a religious service for the young instead of morning school (partly in consequence of the lack of teaching power) and, what is still better, to find "that such a service seemed to him one of the most helpful means for religious training, and that he could not but think that it is in this direction we must look for the solution of some of our difficulties.—Yours, &c. THOS. ELGOOD.

VIRCHOW ON SCIENTIFIC DOGMATISM.

To the Editors.—In the article on "Virchow and Scientific Dogmatism," which appeared in the Unitarian Herald of April 19, you mention the now celebrated address of the Professor as having been delivered in November last, whereas it was on the 22nd of September, and Dr. Hæckel's, to which it was somewhat of a reply, was delivered two days previously. Verbatim reports of each of them appeared in Nature on October 4 and following numbers, and as they have been misunderstood and misrepresented by some religious journals—the one as being ultra-materialistic, and the other as advocating strongly the religious side—I was glad to see that you gave the statement of the case in Professor Virchow's own words, as simply "a protest against attempts to proclaim problems of research as actual facts and opinions of scientists as established science." The theory of evolution certainly does assist in the study of science in general, and, as Mr. Clodd has shown, of religion also; and however strong may be Professor Hæckel's own belief of its full truth, I did not see in my cursory reading of his address that he advocated its being taught in schools other than as a theory which would assist in a better understanding of many sciences.—Yours truly, HENRY H. SHORT.
Moretonhamstead, Devon, April 28, 1878.

COMING WEEK.

AINSWORTH.—On Sunday, afternoon and evening, sermons by the Rev. J. T. Whitehead.
BLACKPOOL.—On Sunday, morning and evening, the Rev. A. Rushton will preach.
IDEL.—On Sunday, afternoon and evening, school sermons by the Rev. Joseph Freeston.
LONDON.—HACKNEY.—On Sunday, annual sermons. Preachers: Morning, Rev. Charles Wickstead, B.A.; evening, Rev. C. Perry.
MANCHESTER.—CROSS-STREET CHAPEL.—On Sunday evening, lecture by the Rev. Wm. Gaskell, M.A., on "The Christian Sunday not the Jewish Sabbath."
SHEFFIELD.—UPPERTHORPE.—On Sunday, school sermons, by the Rev. R. A. Armstrong, B.A., morning and evening.
WARRINGTON.—On Monday, welcome meeting to the Rev. Richard Fletcher, B.A.

DEATHS.

ARMITAGE.—On the 29th inst., aged 87, Ann, relict of the late Enoch Armitage, of Currier Lane, Ashton-under-Lyne.
CLARK.—On the 20th of May, at Adelaide, South Australia, aged 48, John Howard, third son of the late Francis Clark, formerly of Birmingham.
MC'CAW.—On the 21st inst., suddenly, at his residence, Barrack-street, Newry, Ireland, John Mc'CaW, in his 74th year. His remains were interred in St. Patrick's churchyard May 24th.

UNIVERSITY OF LONDON.—Notice is hereby given that the NEXT HALF-YEARLY EXAMINATION for MATRICULATION in this University will commence on Monday the 24th of June, 1878. In addition to the Metropolitan Examination, Provincial Examinations will be held at Owens College, Manchester; Queen's College, Liverpool; Queen's College, Birmingham; St. Cuthbert's College, Ushaw; Stonyhurst College; St. Patrick's College, Carlisle; St. Stanislaus College, Tullamore; and University College, Bristol.

Every Candidate is required to transmit his Certificate of Age to the Registrar (University of London, Burlington Gardens, London, W.) at least Fourteen Days before the commencement of the Examination.

WILLIAM B. CARPENTER, M.D., Registrar.
May 21st, 1878.

POLISHED GRANITE MONUMENTS.
Tasteful designs, carefully executed in select material (Red or Grey): terms moderate.—Send for drawings and prices to J. TAYLOR, Monumental Yard, Leadside, Aberdeen.

RUPTURES.—Exhibition Prize Medal, 1862, was awarded to R. WESTBURY, inventor and sole maker of the IMPERCEPTIBLE CURATIVE TRUSS.
Deformity Instruments, Artificial Limbs, Crutches, Elastic Stockings, and Ladies' Supporting Belts, Chest Expanders for round shoulders, &c., 26, Old Millgate, Manchester.

Printed for the Proprietors by WILLIAM EVANS, of Apsley Villa 377, Waterloo Road, Cheltenham Hill, at his Printing Offices, No. 3, Cross-street, Parish of Manchester; and Published by JOHN PHILLIPS, at New Cannon Chambers, 55, Market-street, in said Parish of Manchester.—London Agents: Messrs. Smart and Allen, 2, London-house Yard, Paternoster Row.—Friday, May 31, 1878.

The Unitarian Herald.

EDITED BY

REV. JAMES BLACK, M.A., & REV. S. FLETCHER WILLIAMS.

Vol. XVIII.—894.

FRIDAY, JUNE 14, 1878.

Price 1d.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE.
Doing and Saying	200
American Notes	200
Books and Authors	201
Thoughts on Religion	201
De Quincey on the Atonement	202
A Layman's Healthy Word	202
Tottings	202
Fireside Readings: Childhood	202
Sing with the Understanding	202
Trudie's Pocket	202
Curiosities	203
General Baptist Assembly	203
Sunderland	203
Stanzas	204
British and Foreign Unitarian Association	204
The Pope's Liberal Policy	204
Principal Tullock	204
The French Assembly	204
The French Reactionaries	205
The British and Foreign Unitarian Association	205

CHARGE FOR ADVERTISEMENTS.

Ten lines and under.....6d. a line.
After the first ten lines.....5d. a line.
For 6 consecutive insertions, a reduction of.....25 per cent.
For 13.....".....50 per cent.
Half column.....".....41. 6s. od.
For all insertions of "Births" or "Marriages" a uniform charge of 1s.
Post-office orders to be made payable to Mr. JOHN PHILLIPS, 20, Cannon-street, Manchester, to whom all orders and business communications should be addressed.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.—Applications for Supply of Pulpits by Students of the Home Missionary Board, and other letters for Mr. BLACK, are to be addressed to him at HEATHLAND COTTAGE, SHAWHEATH, STOCKPORT.

BLACKPOOL UNITARIAN FREE CHURCH.—On Sunday next, June 16th, the Rev. HENRY HILL will conduct the services. Morning, to 45; evening, 6.30. Collections.

PRESCOT-ATHERTON STREET CHAPEL.—ANNUAL SERMONS, June 16th. Preacher: The Rev. S. FLETCHER WILLIAMS. Afternoon service at 3; evening, 6.30. Collections in aid of chapel funds.

LONDON.—MALL IRON CHURCH, NOTTING HILL.—SERMONS in aid of the Church Funds will be preached in the above church on Sunday, June 16th, by the Rev. H. W. PERRIS, of Norwich. Morning service at eleven; evening at seven o'clock.

HUDDERSFIELD.—FITZWILLIAM STREET CHURCH.—SCHOOL ANNIVERSARY, Sunday next but one, June 16th. Preacher: The Rev. JNO. THOMAS, B.A., Minister of the Church. The musical portion of the service will be enriched by the addition of the orchestra of the Philharmonic Society attached to the school, numbering 40 performers. Morning, commence at 10.45; evening, at 6.30.

MIDLAND CHRISTIAN UNION.

The ANNUAL COLLECTIONS in aid of the Funds of the Midland Christian Union will be made as under:—
Birmingham: Church of the Messiah, June 16th.—Rev. H. W. CROSSKEY.
Coaley: Old Meeting House, September.—Rev. HENRY FACHUS.
Coventry: Great Meeting House.
Cradley: Park Lane Chapel, November.
Evesham: Oat Street Chapel, June 16th.—Rev. C. H. WELL-BELOVED, York.
Kidderminster: New Meeting House, July 28th.—Rev. W. E. MELLONE.
Lye: Unitarian Church, September.—Rev. T. B. BROADRICK.
Oldbury: Unitarian Meeting House, June 16th.—Rev. HENRY MCKEAN.
Stourbridge: Presbyterian Chapel, June 16th.—Rev. D. MAGINNIS.
Walsall: Unitarian Free Church, July 28th.—Rev. P. DEAN.
West Bromwich: Lodge Road Chapel, June 23rd.—Rev. J. HARRISON.
Whitchurch: Highgate Church, June 16th.—Rev. W. C. WALTERS.
Wolverhampton: Free Christian Church, June 16th.—Mr. JOHN MOORE.

STAND.—THE SCHOOL SERMONS will be preached on June 23rd. Morning, to 45, Rev. G. H. VANCE, B.D.; evening, 6.30, Rev. R. L. CARPENTER, B.A.

HALE CHAPEL.—THE ANNUAL SUNDAY SCHOOL SERMON will be preached on Sunday, June 23rd, by the Minister, Rev. T. LLOYD JONES. Service at 3 p.m. Collection in aid of the School Funds.

FAIRFORTH.—DOB LANE.—On Sunday, June 23rd, SERMONS in aid of the Day School Funds. Morning, to 45; evening, 6.30. Preacher: Rev. F. H. JONES, B.A., of Oldham. Children's service in the afternoon at 2.30, conducted by Mr. JOHN REYNOLDS, of Hyde.

GORTON.—BROOKFIELD CHURCH.—The ANNUAL SUNDAY SCHOOL SERMONS will be preached on Sunday, June 23rd. Morning, at 10.45, by the Rev. G. H. WELLS, M.A.; evening, by the Rev. H. E. DOWSON, B.A. Collections will be made on behalf of the School Funds.

SALE UNITARIAN CHAPEL.—The ANNUAL SUNDAY SCHOOL SERMONS will be preached on Sunday, June 23rd, 1878. Morning, at 10.45, by the Rev. CHARLES WICKSTEED, B.A., of London. Evening, at 6.30, by the Rev. T. LLOYD JONES, of Hale. Collections in aid of the School Funds.

STRANGEWAYS UNITARIAN FREE CHURCH.—SCHOOL FESTIVAL, Sunday, June 23rd.—SERMONS will be preached, morning and evening, by the Rev. ALFRED PAYNE, of Newcastle. In the afternoon Mr. WM. HOUGH will give an Address to the children. Special hymns will be sung, and the church will be decorated with plants and flowers. Collections at each service.

BRITISH AND FOREIGN UNITARIAN ASSOCIATION.

The READING ROOM (adjoining the book room) having been kindly given by Mr. Ainsworth into the charge of the committee for the use of the Association, they desire to inform the members and friends of the Association that it is placed freely at their service. Daily and weekly papers, periodicals, materials for writing, &c.
HENRY IERSON, Secretary.

MANCHESTER NEW COLLEGE, UNIVERSITY HALL, GORDON SQUARE, LONDON.

The ANNUAL EXAMINATION will be held in the Hall on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday, the 24th, 25th, and 26th June, 1878.

The Rev. CHARLES BEARD, B.A., will deliver the Address to the students on Wednesday, 26th June, at four o'clock p.m.

The ANNUAL MEETING of Trustees will be held in the Library on Thursday, 27th June, at eleven o'clock, a.m.

A Valedictory Religious Service, dedicating to the Christian Ministry the Students who have completed their Course of Study, will be held at 8 p.m. on Thursday, 27th June, in Little Portland-street Chapel.

R. D. DARBISHIRE, } Secs.
CHARLES BEARD, }

MANCHESTER NEW COLLEGE.—The

ANNUAL DINNER of the Students (Past and Present) will be held on Wednesday evening, June 26th, at "The London," Fleet-street, at 7.30 p.m. Tickets, 5s. each. Friends may be invited.

MISSIONARY CONFERENCE.—The

ANNUAL MEETING will be held in the Memorial Hall, Manchester, on Thursday and Friday, July 4th and 5th, commencing at 10 a.m. each day.

JOHN G. SLATER,

Mossley, nr. Manchester.

Secretary.

PROVINCIAL ASSEMBLY

OF
PRESBYTERIAN AND UNITARIAN MINISTERS AND CONGREGATIONS of Lancashire and Cheshire.

MEETING for 1878.—The ASSEMBLY will meet in Southport on Thursday, June 20, 1878. The RELIGIOUS SERVICE will be held in Portland-street Church, at half-past ten o'clock, the Devotional part being conducted by the Rev. C. C. COE, F.R.G.S., and the Sermon being preached by the Rev. J. C. LUNN. Lunch will be provided at the Prince of Wales' Hotel at half-past twelve.

The MEETING for Business will be held in the Church at two o'clock, and will be opened with the delivery of the President's Address. A substantial tea will be provided in the Prince of Wales' Hotel, at four o'clock, at a charge of 2s. 6d.; after which

A MEETING will be held in the Town Hall, WILLIAM A. JEVONS, Esq., in the chair. Addresses will be delivered by Rev. W. Binn, of Birkenhead; Rev. C. C. Coe, F.R.G.S., of Bolton; and Rev. J. Wright, B.A., of Bath.

WILLIAM GASKELL, President.
H. ENFIELD DOWSON, Secretary.

KING'S LYNN FREE CHRISTIAN CHURCH AND SCHOOLS.

	Amount already advertised.	£	s.	d.
Miss Tingcombe, Bath	£240. 17s.	5	0	0
The Mayor of Manchester		5	0	0
Miss Henry, Oswestry		1	0	0
Mr. Eveleigh, Peterborough		0	5	0
Mr. R. Spiller, Islington		1	1	0
S. S. Tayler, Brixton		1	0	0
R. Pincock, Esq., ex-mayor of Newport		1	0	0
Rev. R. Shaen, Royston		1	0	0
Herbert New, Esq., Evesham, president of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association		1	1	0
Rev. C. C. Coe, Bolton		3	3	0
Mr. Horatio Bolingbroke, Norwich		2	2	0
Birmingham Fellowship Fund		10	0	0
Mr. Thomas Meggitt		0	5	0
Mr. Robert Poolles		0	2	6
Miss Cooke		0	10	0
Mr. J. Henry Baker		0	10	0
Mr. Samuel Pilley		0	5	0
Mr. Charles Wright, senr.		0	5	0
Mr. John Ingoldby		0	10	0
Mr. W. H. Baker		0	5	0
Mr. Wedd Luxford		0	2	6
Mrs. Watson		0	2	6
A Friend		0	10	0
Mr. John Maltby		0	5	0
Mrs. Henry Harwood		0	10	0
Mr. A. Kenne		0	10	0
Mr. James Whitton, Lincoln		1	0	0
A Working Man, Colmington		0	1	0

	£	s.	d.
Mr. Joseph Wright	0	10	6
Mr. Henry Heymann	5	0	0
Mr. Charles T. Jacoby	2	0	0
Messrs. Woodard and Clarke	1	0	0
Mr. W. A. Richards	0	10	0
Mr. F. W. Farnell	1	1	0
Mrs. Farnes	0	10	0
Mr. J. Black	0	10	0

LEICESTER—
Messrs. Atkins Bros. 0 10 6
Mr. T. Fielding Johnson..... 2 2 0

BIRMINGHAM—
W. Kenrick, Esq. (Mayor of Birmingham) 2 2 0
Joseph Chamberlain, Esq., M.P. 5 0 0
H. P. Osler, Esq., 1 1 0
Thomas Gladstone, Esq., 1 1 0

ABERDARE: ENGLISH UNITARIAN APPEAL.

	£	s.	d.
Charles Thompson, Cardiff.....	2	2	0
Church of the Messiah Fellowship Fund, Birmingham, per Mr. G. H. Kenrick	5	0	0
S. Sharpe, Esq., 10	0	0	0
Liverpool—Fellowship Fund, per Mr. D. P. Carr	5	0	0
F. Nettlefold, Esq., London	5	0	0
Miss Henry, Oswestry	2	0	0
Mr. H. J. Morton	1	0	0
Herbert Thomas, Esq., Bristol	5	0	0

Mr. George thankfully acknowledges two parcels of clothing from Mrs. Dunkerly, Bowdon.

A Highly-respectable, thoroughly domesticated person Desires a Situation as HOUSEKEEPER, or any position of trust: understands the care, and is fond of, children: is also a good needlewoman.—Address A. B., Post-office, Todmorden.

SOUTH SHIELDS UNITY CHURCH.—PULPIT will be VACANT after the 9th of June.—Particulars given by T. Hornby, 10, King-street, South Shields.

THE Belfast Unitarian Missionary Association need the SERVICES of a MINISTER.—Applications to be made to Rev. J. C. Street, Rowellan House, Belfast.

WANTED, a GENERAL SERVANT: one fond of children: must be able to wash.—Address E. D., Mrs. Scholes, 4, Hilton-street, Oldham-street, Manchester.

THE Head Master of the Salt Schools, Shipley, Yorkshire (Mr. A. M. Worthington, M.A., Trin. Coll., Oxford, late assistant master at Clifton College), intends taking a small number of BOARDERS into his own house after Midsummer.—Saltaire, Shipley

WANTED, after Midsummer, a DAILY GOVERNESS, to teach Young Children and take charge of them out of school hours: thorough English, French, and Music required.—Apply to Mrs. J. ARTHUR KENRICK, Fallowfield, Edgbaston.

KINDER GARTEN AND PESTALOZZIAN SCHOOL, Argyle House, Shakspeare-street, Nottingham. Miss LEWIN RECEIVES several little Boys and Girls as BOARDERS.—Miss Lewin has also two vacancies for girls desirous of attending the Nottingham High School.

BROOK HOUSE, KNUTSFORD, CHESHIRE.—BOARDING SCHOOL FOR GIRLS, conducted by Mrs. FRANK SHAWCROSS, assisted by Resident English and Foreign Governesses. Teachers of eminence attend for instruction in Music, Singing, Harmony, Drawing, Dancing, &c.—Prospectus and references forwarded on application.

MOUNT VERNON HIGH SCHOOL,

NOTTINGHAM.—Established 1864.
Mr. EDWIN SMITH, M.A., with competent assistance, thoroughly prepares Boys for College, the University Local Examinations, or for Business.—For prospectus address Sandy Knoll, Forest Road, Nottingham.

YORK: 26, HIGH PETER GATE.—Miss AMY HERRING begs to announce that she has OPENED, at the above address, a SCHOOL for the Instruction of Young Ladies in all branches, comprising a first-class education with liberal views. References kindly permitted by the following:—Rev. Dr. G. Vance Smith, The Parade, Carmarthen; the Rev. C. Welbeloved, 38, Monkgate, York; Miss Swaine, 1, The Crescent, York.—Terms on application.

Pupils are prepared for the University Examinations, several having passed most successfully.

HIGH SCHOOL, COVENTRY.

(Established 1865.)
Rev. G. HEAVISIDE, B.A. (Lond.), Principal.

The above School will shortly be REMOVED to "The Hollies," Stoke Green, two miles from the centre of Coventry, and standing in grounds of nearly five acres.

The Principal is building a wing, so as to provide spacious school room and dormitories for an increased number of Boarders. The whole will be completed by September 16th, when the Autumn Term commences.

It is confidently believed that the charming situation, salubrity of air, beautiful gardens, scope for cricket and other out-door sports, will be appreciated.

MISS BROOKS, 6, Barton Arcade, and 59, Deansgate, Manchester, is now Showing the Choicest GOODS in Millinery, Straw Hats and Bonnets, Flowers, Feathers, Laces, Ribbons, Ties, Gloves, &c., and will have through the season all the most approved styles. An inspection is respectfully solicited.

BLACKPOOL.—CHANNING HOUSE, 39, QUEEN'S SQUARE.—Visitors will find here every home comfort. Tariff sent on application.—Mrs. JOHN MARSDEN, Proprietress.

BRIGHTON.—CHANNING HOUSE, ALBANY VILLAS.—To visitors requiring 13-roomed house, 18 guineas monthly: close to sea: or apartments, 3 guineas weekly.

POLISHED GRANITE MONUMENTS, tasteful designs, carefully executed in select material (Red or Grey): terms moderate.—Send for drawings and prices to J. TAYLOR, Monumental Yard, Leadside, Aberdeen.

BOARD and RESIDENCE for those seeking a Delightful Country Health Resort may be had at Cap. 1 Lodge, near Folkstone: extensive grounds: house overlooks the channel, and is high above the sea.—For terms apply as above.

DOING AND SAYING.

Her Royal Highness Princess Louise and Earl Granville have joined the ranks of the total abstainers.

Canon Farrar has been preaching a temperance sermon in Westminster Abbey, and the Eastern Morning News describes it as "one of the finest pieces of oratory ever heard in the Abbey."

A profane critic once remarked on some rather flowery sermons on the doctrine of an eternal hell: "If it is a question between brimstone and treacle, by all means let it be treacle."

Father Ignatius speaks thus of "poor" Professor Tyndall: "Oh! there is a specimen of a poor creature gazing down. He can grovel in the dirt, and drag you in his dirt, but he cannot gaze up."

Dr. Richardson says that persons over forty years of age, who have been partakers of wine in moderate quantities, require from three to four years for their organisms to be completely adapted to total abstinence.

Maidstone has set a praiseworthy example. On Sunday afternoon, by decision of the Corporation, the town museum and library were opened to the public. Upwards of 1,000 visitors passed through the various rooms, to the evident satisfaction of all concerned.

It is rumoured that the Rev. Baldwin Brown will resign the chairmanship of the Congregational Union. The reason assigned is that Mr. Brown is deeply disgusted at the attitude assumed by the Union at its late meetings towards Mr. Mark Wilks and his friends, and a serious split in the Union is anticipated.

The Peabody trustees are building every year in London a block of buildings for 2,000 persons. One having been put up in the parish of Canon Fleming, he wrote to the trustees pointing out that they ought to provide in each case the stipend of an additional curate, but the answer he received was that Mr. Peabody had specifically prohibited the employment of any religious agency by his trustees.

Dr. Vaughan, the Roman Catholic Bishop of Salford, has been preaching on Socialism. The Bishop attributed the growth of this movement to the breaking up of Christianity into hundreds of sects, and took a somewhat gloomy view of the possible results of the development of Socialistic ideas in this country. If Socialism becomes a danger to England, the blame, according to Dr. Vaughan, will rest not with the labourer but with the capitalist.

A curious incident occurred in connection with the Voltaire centenary. For the first time since May 30, 1778, the windows of the room in which Voltaire died were opened. The house, which forms the corner of the Quai Voltaire and the Rue de Beaune, belonged to the Marquise de Vilette at the time of Voltaire's death; and, in memory of the great philosopher, she caused the windows to be closed immediately he expired, and a special clause in her will ordered that they should not be opened until a hundred years had elapsed from that date.

The University of London having obtained its charter for admitting women to degrees, University College at once takes the step for which it has been steadily preparing during the last ten years; and next October classes in all subjects of instruction within the faculties of arts and laws and science will be open to both male and female students, who will be taught in some classes together, and in others separately. For several years past about 400 individual students have been in each session attending ladies' classes held within University College.

On religion George Combe and his wife were one. Prior to the marriage "she wrote me," he says, "that she had seen doctrinal religion do so much harm to the character that she had shut her mind against it, and endeavoured to do only what is right and trusted in God. I told her that this was exactly the result I had reached by philosophy; that I could subscribe to the articles of no Church, but admitted all the practical duties of Christianity to be of divine authority, because they are founded in nature. I acknowledged the advantage of public worship, and offered to be a hearer in any church where she could find most practical sense and least doctrine preached."

The Rev. Silas Farrington, writing in the Christian Register on the personnel of the recent co-operative congress at Manchester, says: "Here, too, is our brother Steinthal, who is as ubiquitous as reform itself. To attend any meeting, congress, conference, or committee, without finding Rev. S. A. Steinthal prominently before us, would be like hearing Hamlet with Hamlet left out. Here as well is Miss Becker, the only man of the female sect, upon the platform. We have sometimes felt in listening to her that her spirit is competitive rather than co-operative; that she goes for woman as against man, though, of course, from the conviction that man from his first rise above the ascidian has gone for himself as against woman."

It is Mr. Spurgeon who speaks as follows: "I think some spiritual power is lost by many of our preachers not preaching in the English language. There are half a dozen sets of languages in this country, and there is a certain stratum of language which is nearly all Latin, and that happens to be the peculiar lingo of a large number of my brethren. Depend upon it our power over the masses will be in our speaking so that we can be understood. They make fearful blunders over what we say when we speak plainly, but if we use hard words they will not know what we mean. We must try and cut long words right in halves, and when we have done so we must burn the two pieces. Take the common Saxon tongue. 'But we should be vulgar,' says one. Well, be vulgar. They used to make the sponsors at baptism promise that they would see that the child was instructed in the 'vulgar tongue,' and we have to make the people comprehend the Gospel, not to reverence us for our Latin."

At the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in Ireland, held in Mary-street Church, Belfast, last week, Professor Shaw tendered his resignation of the chair of metaphysics and ethics in Magee College, and the Rev. H. Clarke Graham was elected his successor. Some munificent gifts have been made during the past year. The Misses Brooks have presented £5,000 to the Sustentation Fund, and an unknown donor, through Dr. Porter, having promised the sum of £10,000 to one of their colleges, it had been fully secured by compliance with certain conditions laid down by the donor. Professor Witherow, the new Moderator, congratulated the General Assembly that it had neither to make a creed nor to correct an old one. A controversy, very perilous and profitless, raged early in last century about confessions, for they could speak of little but creed-imposing, creed-opposing, creed-evasion, and creed-destruction. At last they settled down to the Westminster Confession as the creed of their Church—and it was a matter of devout gratitude there was now no taint of heresy in their borders. Not a word has he to say of modern intellectual unrest. Like some others he does not seem to comprehend the value of unfettered thought outside the Westminster Confession and the Irish Presbyterian Church.

The "Oldest City in the World," which has kept up its business connection until quite recently, would seem to be now fairly in the way of taking its place among ruins. Damascus is the seat of the Government of Syria; it has a population of from 100,000 to half as much again; it has been a flourishing emporium for European goods, and a halting place for Persian pilgrims on their way to Mecca. But now we learn from a Consular report that the Bagdad overland trade is virtually extinct, the Suez Canal having diverted the route formerly followed by caravans of European goods. Even the pilgrims have deserted it, preferring to avoid the consequences of Turkish misrule by taking the sea route by way of the Persian Gulf. A few years ago as many as 3,000 of these pilgrims brought with them annually large quantities of merchandise for sale, and purchased in return goods with which to traffic in the Holy Cities; but they have gone, and now nothing but desolation has settled down upon the once famous town. The Turkish authorities have, as is their wont, failed to pay interest or principal upon the local debt of £600,000, and all the capitalists, both Christian and Jewish, have thereby been reduced to penury; while war taxes, forced loans, and "voluntary" contributions in aid of the Turkish Treasury have well nigh exhausted the resources of both rural and urban populations. Thus oppressed on every hand, the population is unable to buy or to sell, and almost forbidden to hope for a better day.

AMERICAN NOTES.

COMING OVER FROM ORTHODOXY.

THE Meadville correspondent of the Christian Register reports that the Rev. C. S. Vincent, of Sinclairville, New York, of the orthodox Congregational Church, is about to unite with the Unitarian body. Mr. Vincent is described as a man of pure and beautiful spirit, and devoted to Christian work. Rev. C. W. Steck, of Indiana, Penn., of the Lutheran Church, is also about to join the Unitarian Church, and enter its ministry. Mr. Steck is a cultured and an eloquent preacher. Another convert to Unitarianism, of recent date, is Rev. James A. Savage, of Poultney, Vermont, who has just withdrawn from the Troy Conference in peace and brotherly love, and who is going to Meadville to study two years. Surely our sun is rising, not setting.

THE PHONOGRAPH AND RELIGION.

THE use to which the phonograph may be put, says the Chicago Alliance, are of moment in their application to religion, for a veritable talking-machine is what the churches need; and then it can answer questions so accurately. Put an Edison's phonograph through a three years' course in the seminary and let it cram up on doctrines, and then grind them out according to rule, and we have a model preacher. It may be that by some inspiration the people have predicted the invention of the phonograph by such words as "machine preacher" that cluster around some men's reputation. A regular shop where they make Presbyterian preaching machines, or Unitarian phonographs, or any kind of such pulpit ornament to order will be the next thing to order. For instance:—

Chicago, Oct. 21, 1890.

(To the Universalist Preaching Machine Shop.)

Enclosed find ten dollars for one modern preacher. Must articulate well and have a plaintive voice. Send one that can preach three thousand sermons, twenty-nine hundred of which must be on aiouion. The Baptists near us have one devoted to baptizo that has done their services for fifteen years and is still popular. If ours prove satisfactory, will recommend it to the Methodists, who want one with steam colliope attached. The machine must be warranted to do service for twenty-five years.—Yours, &c.

Thus the idea of a live original preacher, who is a power in the community by what he is rather than by what he says, will be out of date, and machines will supersede them. Surely the invention of the phonograph marks a new era in the world's history.

"There is a distinctly broad church party in more sects than one: a broad church party among the Presbyterians even, though a small one; among the Baptists, though again a small one; larger among the Episcopalians; larger yet among the Methodists; perhaps most marked among the Congregationalists. Who are the most popular preachers of the day? There can be no doubt; such men as Beecher, Murray, Swing, Phillips, Brooks. Or, again which are the most popular religious papers? Those broadest in their sympathies and most free in their orthodoxy. Ask the young ministers who from time to time give up the Orthodox Congregationalist pulpit to enter the Unitarian, about the men they have left behind them, and they will say: 'I can name you ten, twenty, fifty ministers thinking just about my thoughts.'—W.C.G.

Mr. Emerson gave a lecture in Boston the other night which was an argument for temperance in language. "Superlatives," he said, "are diminutives, and weaken. The positive is the sinew of speech; the superlative the fat."

Dr. Felix Adler, in a recent lecture, asked his hearers to notice that the teachings of the dominant creed not only affected the moral character of the people, but were also the greatest obstacle to our intellectual progress. The public schools were free from sectarian influence, but what had been secured for them had not been secured for the colleges and higher institutions of learning. These were usually managed in the interest of specific doctrines, and entirely under sectarian control. The result was that, although many of them had been endowed with large sums, they were far in arrear of the advanced sciences of the age, and unable to join in sweet fellowship without keeping step. Two can walk together and have delightful conversation, without both having their hands in their pockets. Cannot two walk together, and make glorious progress towards the gates of the Celestial City, while singing different songs or whistling different tunes? Two can walk together and work together, with advantage to both, while cherishing opinions greatly diverse, if only they will keep their hearts open to the sweet spirit of charity. "Love covereth all sins." Is not a sin worse than a mistaken opinion? How often must Congregationalists be told that the heretic of to-day is the martyr of to-morrow and the sainted hero of coming ages?"—Pamphlet Mission.

BOOKS AND AUTHORS.

The University Magazine for June. London: Hurst and Blackett.

THIS number is an admirable combination of the qualities of a magazine intended for a permanent place on the shelves, and one which may be bought for the occasional reading of a visitor at the sea-side, or a traveller by train. The University usually contains articles like those to which Mr. Conder's name is affixed, written by students of special subjects, and to which the student and the general reader may often have occasion to refer. In the present number there are three papers of this kind—one on "The Functions of Free Science," one on "Maurice and the National Church," and a review of Mr. Drummond's Jewish Messiah. Of these we may specially refer to Mrs. Boole's sketch of the character of Prof. Maurice. We have our doubts as to the—shall we say propriety? of the publication of the results of a study made so close at hand, and in the intimacy of private life; but, these apart, there can be no doubt about the value of the information here given about Mr. Maurice's characteristics as a clergyman and a friend. If it is right to make one's friends the subject of "a little practice in psychological analysis," and then to give the results to the world—and it is about that that we feel some scruple—it could not be done more carefully, or the results disclosed in a more interesting way, than that in which the authoress has depicted Mr. Maurice in his strength and his weakness in this very well-written paper. We commend to our readers a passage on p. 722, in which Mr. Maurice's utterances, and the reception which they met with, are compared to an old-fashioned flower called by some people "love in a mist," and by others "devil in a bush." The paragraph seems to us to contain the best account of Mr. Maurice's somewhat perplexing characteristics with which we have ever met.

In addition to the articles to which we have referred, University for June contains "Notes and Reminiscences," by W. H. Harrison, a set of sketches of men like Thackeray, Hogg, Prout, and Croly all interesting, and some containing new stories and incidents in the lives of Mr. Harrison's friends; and "Vera Sansulitch and Constitutional Aspirations in Russia," by Karl Blind, the best account yet given of the political tragedy which directed so much attention to the way in which the Russians are governed, and the spirit of revolt which the despotism of the Czar excites.

The contemporary portrait, No. 6 of the series, is that of Charles Reade, and is accompanied by a lively and interesting account of the great novelist's career, which will be welcomed by readers of his works.

When we say that in addition to all the articles we have mentioned there are several short articles, four letters from the Universities, and some pages of brief critical notices, with three poems, one accompanied by music, our readers will feel that in the University Magazine for June they have a number of varied interest, with much that is of permanent value.

The Pamphlet Mission, in noticing Brooke Herford's "Story of Religion in England," says it has reason to hope that an edition will be issued in America.

The catalogue of the printed books in the Bodleian Library is now completely finished. It makes 719 volumes, not including the catalogue of the Bibles, the slips of which are in the course of being laid down. They will fill two more volumes.

M. E. de Pressense, writing on the Voltaire Centenary, mentions that a very important work has just been published on the History of the French Catholic Church in the 18th century—L'Histoire de l'esprit Révolutionnaire avant la Révolution, by M. Félix Rocquain. This shows how, whenever there was a general assembly of the clergy of France, it voted to the monarchy a gratuity of some millions of francs taken from the general taxation, on the sole condition that the Government should aid and abet the persecution of the Jansenists and the Protestants, and should consign to the flames the writings of the philosophers. The same book shows us how intense was the indignation and hatred excited by this ecclesiastical policy. This hatred naturally fell also upon Christianity itself, which in the France of that day was indistinguishable from Catholicism. Voltaire was the powerful exponent of these irritated feelings, and he brought to the cause all the resources of his brilliant and versatile genius.

THOUGHTS ON RELIGION.

DO WE LEAVE CHRISTIANITY BEHIND US?*

How far is the popular view identical with real Christianity? In differing from it do we cease to be Christians? Do we leave Christianity behind us? Evidently there is no reason why we should. Against popular Christianity the religious men of almost every generation have protested, declaring that it was not genuine Christianity, but a corruption of it. We may do the same, and represent that our ideas are all Christian, and lie hidden in the original documents of the faith. Are we prepared to do this?

Certainly not altogether. It is evidently contrary to our conception of the Deity, as the Eternal Power of the universe, to imagine that His revelation of Himself could be confined to one country and nation. If this seems here and there to be asserted in the Jewish and Christian Scriptures, we ascribe it to a narrowness which few nations—and our own less than most—are free from. We regard the religion which lies at the bottom of civilisation as containing elements almost unknown both to ancient Judaism and to primitive Christianity. The scientific impulse is foreign to both, and not less the artistic; and these have come to us from quite other sources. Yet even here, as we have had occasion to remark, the new elements are only additional, not in any way incompatible or discordant with the old. The spirit of joy and nature-worship finds no asceticism to combat in the original religious tradition. It finds the Founder of Christianity separating himself in a pointed manner from asceticism, and dropping at times words which a lake poet might take for his motto. It finds the prophets of Judaism describing nature with free enjoyment. And the zeal against anthropomorphism, though it did not in the Hebrew race lead to science, is yet strikingly in harmony with the scientific spirit. If our men of science wished to give to their favourite conviction about the Unknown and Unknowable an imaginative form in which it might work upon the popular mind, they would find that the work has already been done for them in an incomparable manner by the prophets of the Old Testament. But beyond this, and some rude outlines of a philosophy of universal history which are to be discerned in the prophetic books, it is plain that we do not draw our science or our art from the sources from which we draw our Christianity. It is plain, also, that neither art nor science has flourished freely where Christianity has been regarded as the one source of spiritual life. But to avow this, and to assert that we cannot do with Christianity alone, is not to abandon Christianity, nor is it to assert that within its own province anything can come into competition with Christianity, much less supersede it.

That province is the province of morals, of man's struggle towards his ideal. Assuredly here, too, it is contrary to our principles to imagine that the Eternal exhausted Himself long ago, and for many centuries has had nothing more to reveal. We believe that those who assert this in words deny it unconsciously in their actions. Else why do they read new biographies with such interest? Why do they crowd with such enthusiasm in every generation round new objects of admiration, the hero, or the saint, or the adored teacher? The ideal of humanity is not so revealed once for all, but that it needs continually to be presented again, that we may see its bearing in the midst of the new conditions into which mankind are brought. But we hold at the same time that it was by and in Jesus Christ that man was aroused—that is, in these western regions—to the worship most necessary to him, to the religion which gives life to morality, and that the introduction of this highest worship was both so made and so recorded that the record is the most precious among all the heirlooms of our race. We hold that though there may arise by chance a Zoilus who has the courage of his stupidity, and will tell the world boldly that he doesn't see it, yet few people would listen to him if their minds were not irritated by the professional pedantry with which the subject has been handled, and if the origins of Christianity were not contemplated through a vista of centuries, in which it was barbarised, and in which it became at times a wild superstition or a childish mythology, though not losing, even in these perversions, its original elevation and tenderness; at times a merciless, though even then, it may be, a necessary and beneficial theocracy. So far from having gained an accidental importance beyond its desert, nothing has been so unjustly misrepresented, so unfairly judged, or mixed up with so much that it has no concern with, as Christianity; and yet, in spite of all this, it remains the core, the best and most precious part of that religion of modern civilisation which we have described as extending beyond it. To pretend to be able to dispense with it would be a folly as well as an impiety, even if all the sacerdotalism and spiritual tyranny which have gathered round it could fairly be laid to its account. But the charges against it fall to the ground when we look back to its original character, and see how deeply penetrated it was with the idea of progress. If the religion of modern civilisation is not quite the same thing even in its moral part as the religion of the New Testament, if it has grown larger and richer with the process of time, we may fairly say that it is all the more Christian on that account. It is what Christianity would be if it had been allowed to develop itself in the spirit of its founders, and of their precursors, the prophets. For in the original plan it is assumed, what sacerdotalism denies, that new light is ever to be expected, and that the divine revelation of one age gives place in due season to the larger revelation of another. With what a singular mixture of reverence, and the sense of superiority, does the young Christian Church look back upon its Jewish parent! It is an inimitable model of the way the ages should behave to each other. There is no touch of rebellion, and yet there is the calmest assertion of freedom. There is no depreciation of the old truth, no denial that it was divine, and yet the firmest assertion of the new truth as divine also, and still more divine. Who can doubt that that Apostolical Age which so treated its predecessors, desired and expected to be so treated in turn by its successors? Who that reads its glowing expectations of the future can fail to see that it did not look forward to a Christianity of timid repetition, a commentatorial age of religion, but to an unheard-of increase and diffusion of the spirit of prophecy? Who that knows the ring of original Christianity does not hear it in those words of Milton: "In that day it shall no more be said as in scorn that it was never yet seen in such a fashion, when men have better learned that the times and seasons pass along under Thy feet, to go and come at Thy bidding?"

*From Essays on "Natural Religion," in Macmillan's Magazine.

DE QUINCEY ON THE ATONEMENT.

IN Mr. Page's Life of Thomas de Quincey is a letter from the Rev. Francis Jacox descriptive of a visit paid to the great Essayist at Lasswade. The following is an extract from it:—"He (De Quincey) expiated with unprecedented animation on German theology of the advanced school, and freely recognised the 'enormity' of the difficulties which rigid orthodoxy had to confront. Passing on to speak of practical difficulties he said, 'Frightfully perplexed I am, to this hour, as to what constitutes the so-called appropriation of the benefits of Christ's death. Never could I get anyone to clear it up to me. Coleridge was utterly vague on the subject. He talked all about and about it, but never talked it out, that I could discover. Often have I discussed the question with my mother, a clear-headed and thoughtful woman, devoted to the Evangelical system, . . . but she would utterly fail to comprehend my difficulties. "My dear child," she would repeat, "You have simply to trust in the blood of Christ." "Very well," I would reply, "and I am quite willing; I reverence Christ; but what does this trusting mean? How am I to know exactly what to do? Upon what specifically am I to take hold to support me when flesh and heart faileth, in the hour of death, and at the day of judgment?" Countless different schemes there are to expound this doctrine of trust and appropriation; but they remind one of the ancilia at Rome, the eleven copies of the sacred shield or palladium: to prevent the true one being stolen, the eleven were made exactly like it. So with the true doctrine of the atonement: it is lurking among the others that look like it, but who is to say which of them all it is?"

"A LAYMAN'S" HEALTHY WORD.

IF Canon Farrar's Westminster sermons were somewhat rhetorical, as many of his critics insist, the rhetoric has proved more effective than all the careful and well-restrained writing and preaching on the subject of future punishment that had been going on before. Commend us to an orator who can force the world to listen. The Contemporary Review of this month contains the last of a series of papers on the reprint of those sermons, with Canon Farrar's reply. In all that has been written on the subject, there is nothing so trenchant and so much to the purpose as the paper by "A Layman." Being a layman, he estimates the criticism of single words and texts at a much lower value than the clerical mind is disposed to do. In the case of a doctrine so awful and of such overwhelming interest to every man, woman, and child, can it be possible that all should turn upon the rather doubtful meaning of a verse here and there in books, many of which are of uncertain "authorship?" This is how he appeals to the teachers and critics who yield up their better thoughts of God to the supposed authority of texts:—

You, the Anti-Universalists, have been arguing, page after page, about the rendering of a Greek adjective, and the reading of certain sentences in certain ancient writings. Now, I will ask you, not as commentators nor as clergymen, but simply as honest men, who would not cheat me in a bargain, or tell me an untruth—do you really dare to look me in the face and tell me that you think the evidence for the claims of those documents will bear that strain? Do you? Will you maintain this—to men who have thought for themselves, after Lessing and Baur and Keim, and the greater French and English critics—on the negative side? Never mind whether they are right or wrong: my question is—whether evidence which can be so "shaken in cross-examination" will bear that strain? Pick out of the foulest kennel of history the most malodorous wretch; lift up Cæsar Borgia, with all his stench about him; strip him, poor worm! of his illusions; conceive his soul naked to the heavenly glory, and quick with sense of doom. How many thousand years of writhing in remorse would you allow to pass before you would be ready to die to help him? You don't know. Did you ever have an hour's real remorse, yourself? Nay, did you ever see a dog crushed by a cart-wheel? Oh, wait! wait! till your next hour of agony for sin, and then pause in your pain to recall what it is you ask me, upon such evidence, to believe of that awful Being who made mother's milk and mother's love, as well as the bands of Orion.

FIRESIDE READINGS.

CHILDHOOD.

'Tis a joyous sight to see
Children dwell in amity;
With their beaming eyes as bright,
As the twinkling stars of night.
Skipping o'er the meadow green
In the balmy summer e'en;
Laughing, singing, blythe and gay,
As the bird upon the spray.
Gath'ring flow'rs adown the dell—
Daisy, primrose, sweet blue-bell,
Ferns and leaves of varied hue,
Sprinkled with the pearly dew.
Dancing in the merry ring,
Upward swaying on the swing;
Drive they all care from hence
Happy in their innocence.
Gliding down the west, the sun
Warns them day is nearly done;
Homeward then the little band
Hie together hand-in-hand.
When their pillows they have press'd,
Happy visions fill their rest,
Then they view again the scene
Where their pleasures all have been.
Who in manhood's busy strife,
On the battlefield of life,
Who in after years of pain,
Would not be a child again?

"SINGING WITH THE UNDERSTANDING."

WE ought, rather, to sing with the soul. Music transcends the understanding. Melody and harmony are not handmaids of logic. The language of music begins where that of words become powerless. Music is the natural expression of sentiment, and so is the handmaid of religion, expressing, as nothing else can, the deepest meaning of religion. Sermons, uttered prayer, sacred sculpture, and painting cannot perform its function. It is distinctively the divine art.

To sing with the understanding is more objectionable than to worship with the understanding, inasmuch as the highest form of worship is in music. We should sing with understanding (omitting "the") so far as that refers to an intelligent arrangement and rendering of the piece. The words should be subordinate. In the violation of this principle consists the chief error of Mr. Sankey, and, as it is alleged, of Wagner. In Wagner's later and more characteristic works, the vocal part is composed almost entirely of accompanied recitative. "Die Walkure" is an example. So with Mr. Sankey's revival songs, in which he strives to make the words and intellectual meaning distinctly intelligible. It is singing with the understanding, whatever may be quality of what is understood. It is depriving the music of its rhythm for the sake of speech. It is depriving the words of their rhetoric for the sake of a slight musical embellishment. It is calculated to produce a sensation, but not sentiment. It is music demoralised, which is inexcusable except in rare cases, and is always of a low order. When the words are in a native tongue, and the hearers have no copies before them, they should be, for choir uses, carefully selected from choice and familiar gems of sacred literature. What gives to the singing of familiar words so great a charm is that the understanding is tasked, and hence the soul may ascend unimpeded in its devotion.—J. O. C. in Christian Register.

TRUDIE'S POCKET.

GRANDMA could not help smiling as she shook out the little frock, and saw the bulging pocket so crowded that the top layer of doll's waterproof stuck out at the top in a little frill of black and blue plaid.

She pushed back the smile, and turned a grave face towards the bed, where Trudie hastily shut her eyes, that she might seem to be asleep.

"One, two, three—nine articles in your pocket, Gertrude, and your dress-skirt torn down three inches in consequence."

"Yes'm," said Trudie, meekly, as grandma pulled out the doll's cape, a nibbled cooky, a ball of red worsted and a square of canvas, a piece of chewed rubber, a box of beads, half an apple, a bundle of patchwork calico, and three sticks of cinnamon in a paper.

"And no pocket handkerchief," said grandma, severely.

"It was on top. Maybe it fell out," suggested Trudie.

"I don't know what I had better do, Gertrude; I have spoken to you so many times, and you never remember."

"You may have two pockets in my dress, and then 't wouldn't be so crowded," said Trudie, brightening up a little.

"I am more inclined to sew this one, and let you have none," said grandma, taking away the little frock to be mended, while Trudie turned over in bed with a groan of dismay.

She was a very careless little girl. Grandma tried hard to teach her to keep things in their proper places, but Trudie found her pocket so convenient! And into it went the queerest things that ever a pocket held.

She got up the next morning, and unfolded the clean frock awaiting her by the bed with an anxious heart; but apparently grandma had decided to try her again, for her pocket was not sewed up; and Trudie plunged in her hand, rejoicing.

"I mean to be just as careful to-day!" she said to herself.

And she did mean it.

But when she was running a race with Fido, her pretty new scarlet hair-ribbon blew off, and as she could not tie up the thick brown locks herself, she tucked the ribbon into her pocket, thinking—

"It is only until I go into the house."

However, she did not return at once, for Nannie Jewell called to her to come across the street and play tag. So away rushed Trudie. It was vacation, and she and Nannie had standing permission to visit across where no tasks were set for them at home.

Tag was a great frolic, and when they were tired of it, they sat together in the swing in the old barn and rested.

"Cripple-crown has laid an egg," said Nannie, as a complacent cackle was heard on the mow above their heads. "Come and get it. I haven't hunted any eggs to-day, either, so there will be others. But Cripple is my hen."

The little girls poked about in the hay, crept under beams, and groped in barrels, gathering up seven eggs, of which number Trudie found four.

You wouldn't believe she would put two of them into her pocket, of course; but she did.

And then she and Nannie got down from the beam to the barn floor.

What always happens when children are careless? Mischievous.

In this case the mischief was that Trudie's pocket came next to the beam, and when she gave a final jump to the floor a queer yellowish damp spot appeared on her clean frock, and the sticky trickle of eggs ran down her skirts.

"What a mess!" cried Nannie; and Trudie ruefully agreed, as she turned her pocket inside out, and saw its contents.

There was always something belonging to her doll in Trudie's pocket, and now it was Blanche's best silk mantilla that was ruined along with the new hair-ribbon.

"Very well," said grandma, as Trudie walked slowly in and explained matters. "Very well; you can wear your faded hair ribbon for another month, and you know I never let you have more than a clean frock every other day."

"Oh, dear!" groaned Trudie, who, for all her carelessness, hated to look shabby and soiled. "If I was a girl in a book I should be cured now, and never use my pocket so again; but I'm dreadfully afraid I shan't remember. I mean to try—only pockets are so convenient things!"—Youth's Companion.

CURIOSITIES.

Our ancestors, the monkeys, couldn't have been so ignorant, after all. They were all educated in the higher branches.

The new form of the "Jingo" rhyme is pithy and sententious:—
We don't want to fight; but by Jingo if we do,
We won't go to the front ourselves, but we'll send the mild Hindoo.

The devil is said to have appeared to Cuvier and threatened to eat him. "Horns? hoofs?" said Cuvier, "Graminivorous, can't eat me." "All flesh is grass," replied the devil, with that fatal habit of misapplying Scripture which has always clung to him.

A Minister's wife once asked the late Dr. Eadie in company, how he became attached to the Secession Church when his father was a member of the Relief. "Oh," said the doctor, "I can easily explain that! Some of the children went with my father and some with my mother; but my father took nothing in his pocket for the 'interval,' while my mother always took bread and cheese,—so I went with the bread and cheese!"

A poor man who had a large family broke his leg, and, as he would be for some time destitute of the means of grace, it was proposed to hold a prayer-meeting at his house. The meeting was led by Deacon Brown. A loud knock at the door interrupted the service. A tall, lank, blue-froked youngster stood at the door with an ox-goad in his hand, and asked to see Deacon Brown. "Father could not attend this meeting," he said, "but he sent his prayers, and they are out in the cart." They were brought in, in the shape of potato, beef poke and corn. The meeting broke up without the benediction.

A carping old woman once said to her pastor: "Dear me, ministers mak' muckle adae aboot their hard wark. But what's twa bits o' sermons in the week tae mak' up? I could do't mysel'." "Well, Janet," said the minister, good-humouredly, "let's hear you try't." "Come awa' wi' a text, then," quoth she. He repeated with emphasis: "It is better to dwell in a corner of the housetop than with a brawling women in a wide house." Janet fired up instantly. "What's that you say, sir? Dae ye intand onything personal?" "Stop, stop!" broke in her pastor: "you would never do for a minister." "And what for no?" said she. "Because, Janet, you come ower soon to the application."

JOTTINGS.

The People are always for peace, the Rabble for war.—Ivy Leaves, in Fraser.

A visible work of art is the harmonious expression of the invisible thought. Thus the art of life is the harmony between our actions and our beliefs and principles.—Heine.

The fiercest theological antagonists are essentially like-minded men, basing themselves on conventionalities and irrationalities. Hence no changing of sides among them is to be wondered at.—Ivy Leaves.

Now that hell in the next world has been made to give up the ghost, we should like to have some of our Universalists or other sweet cherubic doctors, tell us how to bring it to pass in this country.—Silas Farrington.

Few of us can believe in the spiritualism of the so-called Spiritualist; but we can all believe that we should live more happily and certainly more truly and nobly if we kept this maxim always in mind: "Never at any moment even to think, much more to say or do, what Loved Ones would shudder to know or hear." It were no superstition to make of their dear memories a band of Guardian Angels.

GENERAL BAPTIST CHURCHES.

THE General Assembly of ministers and members of the General Baptist Churches was held on Monday and Tuesday last, in Worship-street Chapel, Finsbury, London. The first sitting of the Assembly took place on Monday afternoon, when the purely formal business connected with the gathering was disposed of. Mr. A. J. MARCHANT occupied the chair, and among those present were the Revs. T. B. W. Briggs, J. C. Means, J. Ellis, J. Marten, T. Rix, W. H. Smith; Messrs. T. N. Dyer, J. J. Marten, &c.

The proceedings were commenced by the roll being called. Following this some of the churches' letters were read by the Secretary, Mr. J. J. Marten. The remaining business included the appointment of Messrs. S. Coleman and J. Bainton as moderators. In the evening the jubilee meeting of the Juvenile Fund was celebrated. The attendance numbered about twenty.

On Tuesday morning divine service was held, the devotional part being conducted by the Rev. Dr. Sadler, of Hampstead, while the sermon was preached by the Rev. John Clifford, M.A., LL.B., B.Sc. "Christ and his Church" was the subject, and he selected his text from Matthew xvi., 18—"And I say also unto thee, Thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it."

The business of the Assembly was resumed in the afternoon; Mr. A. J. MARCHANT in the chair. The attendance included those present the day before, and the Rev. J. A. Brinkworth and Messrs. J. Howard, J. Stupel, &c.

The Secretary read the committee's report, which stated in the first place that the instructions given at the last gathering as to the printing of the proceedings had been duly carried out. The substance of the political resolutions of the Assembly had been embodied in two petitions and presented to Parliament—that on the Burials Bill to the House of Lords by Earl Granville, that on the Eastern Question to both Houses by Earl Granville and Professor Fawcett respectively. The grants made from the Assembly Fund during the year had been as follows:—To Dover, £35; Headcorn, £15; Long Sutton, £10; Nottage, £10; Peckham, £15; amounting in the aggregate to £85. The reserve fund raised in accordance with the resolution of the Assembly of 1875 was now completed, and had been invested in the purchase of £60 in Consols. The case of the Honiton Chapel and endowments had not reached the final settlement. Soon after the last meeting the scheme of settlement had been abandoned, and a claim had been made for the Assembly on its own merits. The case came on for hearing before the Chief Clerk on 21st March last, when judgment was delivered against the Assembly on the ground that the trust deed of 1739 limited the trusts to those who held the doctrine of the necessity of adult baptism by immersion and faith in the Lord. The Unitarians who did not practice baptism by immersion could not therefore be entitled, while their belief in reference to the Lord's divinity would also exclude them. To this judgment the committee had instructed their solicitor to reply that Unitarianism and baptism were not incompatible forms of belief, and that the requirement in the trust deed of "Faith in our Lord Jesus Christ," was simply the requirement of what baptism had always been taken to involve. In addition, the Court required to know by what means the Assembly, either singly or in conjunction with the New Connection, proposed to carry out the trust in the event of receiving judgment in their favour. To this the committee had replied that in their opinion they would, by association with the more liberal part of the New Connection, be able to reopen the chapel and gather a church therein; and they had followed up this reply by nominating as trustees six members of their own churches and six members of the New Connection. This information would shortly be before the Court, and the matter awaited the Court's further decision. In conclusion the Committee expressed their deep regret at the death of the Rev. Samuel Martin, and in doing so paid a high tribute to the memory of their departed brother.

The Rev. T. B. W. BRIGGS moved, and the Rev. J. ELLIS seconded the adoption of the report, which, on being put, was duly carried.

The Rev. J. C. MEANS, in touching and eloquent language, reviewed at some length his connection with the late Rev. Samuel Martin as fellow messenger and officer of the Assembly during a long series of years, and mentioned many deeply interesting details connected with that gentleman's public and private career as a Unitarian Baptist minister. In conclusion the speaker moved the following resolution:—

That we desire to express our high estimate of the value of the ministry, so earnestly and faithfully exercised in our church at Trowbridge, for half a century, by our dear brother Samuel Martin, and our consequent sense of the loss sustained by our body at large, and especially by the Trowbridge church, in his lingering decline and death; that we would reverently cherish his memory as an example and a stimulus to the like devout and faithful discharge of our respective duties, and that we offer our sincere condolence to his bereaved family and church; that the secretaries be directed to send a copy of the foregoing resolution to Mrs. Martin and family, and to the deacons of the Trowbridge church, with the further expression, in the case of the church, of our hope and desire that they may soon be guided to the choice of a pastor worthy to take the place of our lamented brother.

The Rev. J. ELLIS seconded the resolution, which was then passed unanimously.

On the motion of Rev. C. HODDINOTT, seconded by the Rev. J. A. BRINKWORTH, the Rev. T. B. W. Briggs was appointed messenger of the churches to fill up the vacancy caused by the death of the Rev. S. Martin.

On the motion of the Rev. Mr. BRIGGS, seconded by Rev. J. ELLIS, the thanks of the assembly was accorded to the Rev. J. Clifford, the preacher of the morning's sermon.

The Rev. J. C. MEANS next moved, the Rev. J. MARTEN seconded, and it was resolved—"That we desire to express our thankfulness to Almighty God that in his good providence our nation has been preserved from the guilt and misery of war, and that we are enabled to hope that the so-called Eastern Question will receive a righteous and abiding settlement; and we would further express our hearty respect for Mr. Gladstone, and our thankfulness to him for the course he has pursued in this matter, and our satisfaction with the attitude so unanimously maintained by the English Nonconformists."

A resolution was next passed re-electing the officers of the Assembly for the ensuing year, with the addition of Mr. W. H. Smith to their number.

Some other business of a purely formal character was then disposed of, and the proceedings were brought to a close by a prayer offered by the Rev. J. A. Brinkworth.

In the evening the Communion of the Lord's Supper was celebrated, at which the Rev. C. Hoddinott presided, the Rev. R. Spears delivering the address.

SUNDERLAND.

WELCOME TO REV. WM. ELLIOTT.

ON Monday, the 11th inst., a welcome tea was given by the Sunderland congregation on the settlement of the Rev. Wm. Elliott there. One hundred sat down to tea, which was presided over by Mrs. Johnston, Mrs. Greenfield, Mrs. Metcalf, and Mrs. Lucas. After tea a meeting was held, and the chair was taken by Mr. George Lucas, who gave a brief retrospect of the vicissitudes of the Sunderland congregation during the last 20 years. He referred especially to the labours in Sunderland of the Rev. Robert Spears, by whose wise arrangement and self-denying zeal the church was placed in a position which has proved to be the foundation of its future success. The chairman then referred to the recent arrangement by which they had secured the services of Mr. Elliott, and welcomed him among them as an able and faithful minister of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, and as an earnest pastor, who would prove a great blessing to them in their homes. The words of welcome were continued by Messrs. Brown, Johnston, Fothergill, Mc.Nab, Hunter, and Dr. Gammage, who spoke of the services of Mr. Elliott, during the two months he had been in Sunderland, in terms of the highest approval, and as supplying a foundation for the brightest hopes.

The Rev. Wm. Elliott responded, expressing his great gratification at the manner in which his services to the church had been spoken of. He only hoped he might prove himself worthy of all the kind words which had been uttered; but no one knew so well as himself how much his best endeavours fell below that service he would rejoice to give to the cause of truth and righteousness. It would be his chief purpose to strive, with his friends at Sunderland, to show to all who came under his influence that the doctrines of Christ were worthy of their intellectual acceptance, and would prove an unspeakable blessing to all who made them their great purpose of life.

The meeting was also addressed by the Revs. Joseph Lee (Barnard Castle), W. J. Taylor (South Shields), Mr. Metcalf and Mr. Fotts, of Sunderland. The proceedings were varied by pieces of music, admirably presented by Mr. Manning, Miss Mary Metcalf, and the choir. The usual votes of thanks terminated one of the most pleasant meetings held in the church at Sunderland.

STANZAS.

We are too passionate: we strain
The utmost tether of our strength
And fain would stretch to our own ends
God's measur'd length.

Too anxious for the many things
Which follow'd—but which are not Christ,
And from the standard rais'd by him
Too soon entic'd.

We ape too much, and live withal
A life distracted and untrue;
We build on false foundations, and
God's own eschew.

We live too little, and we think
Too constantly, and weakly dream,
All through life's real things that are,
Of those that seem:

And give God's baptism of peace
A universal, head-strong "nay,"
And set ourselves, alone, to find
Some other way—

Some fifty other ways, and lo!
They are but labyrinth's that tend
Through difficult and unguess'd routes
To the same end.

He wills it not that any tower
Of Babel should His heights attain,
Who stretched His bow of promise'd good,
O'er earth's great plain:

And breath'd good-will and spake of love—
He wills it not that we should rate
The life He gave a thing so hard
And complicate.

Some clear, straight path there is that lies
Right close to God, wherein the din
And dust and turmoil that we make
Are strange as sin.

Some way God's fair simplicity
To re-acquire and to pursue,
Some road wherein He would with peace
Our souls imbue.

NOTICE.

CHANGE OF OFFICE.

The Office of the Unitarian Herald is REMOVED from 55, Market-street to No. 20, CANNON-STREET, MANCHESTER. Post-office orders to be made payable to Mr. JOHN PHILLIPS, 20, Cannon-street, to whom all orders and business communications should be addressed.

The Unitarian Herald.

FRIDAY JUNE 14, 1878.

A purer Christianity, however slowly, is to take the place of that which bears but its name. Cannot we become the heralds of this better day? Let our hearts bid it welcome! Let our lives reveal its beauty and its power.

WILLIAM ELLERY CHANNING.

THE BRITISH AND FOREIGN UNITARIAN ASSOCIATION.

THE fifty-third report presented to the annual meeting held on Wednesday last is one of the most encouraging we remember to have read. The intimate acquaintance and the common action which are extending year by year between the Association and our local missionary organisations form a guarantee for the future usefulness of both parties. It is a matter for sincere congratulation to find that over the year 1876-7 the year 1877-8 shows an increase in subscriptions of over £808, so that while opportunities open through our local associations for mission work, the means to do it are increasing, and a wider constituency is included than in former years. Not the least encouraging feature of the active work of the Association is the cordial feeling between it and liberal societies abroad. Again, the successful effort to distribute our literature must in time do its leavening work—as we know, indeed, it has been doing, and sometimes in unexpected quarters. The list of old friends and staunch supporters who have passed away is larger than usual; while deeply regretting those losses, we can only hope that our young people will show a willingness to fill up the ranks, and give renewed strength to the cause of "civil and religious liberty." We trust and believe that our churches will gather new inspiration from the tone of this report, and rejoice to note the absence of any element that might tend to weaken our Central Association in its endeavours to aid the progress of the Spirit of Truth and the growth of Holy Living.

THE POPE'S LIBERAL POLICY.

THE war which the POPE is waging against the Intransigent faction of the Cardinals promises to terminate favourably for his Holiness. Plenty of rumours have been current that LEO XIII. had broken down under the conflict. One correspondent described most pathetically the physical change which had been wrought in the vigorous and well-preserved Cardinal PECCI by the trials which he had undergone since his election to the supreme position of the Church. But unless he be belied, the present POPE is not made of the stuff which breaks with a little pressure, and the most successful portions of his active life have passed in stubborn conflicts with nobles and even with brigands. The Jesuit Cardinals, therefore, have now to deal with a man of very different metal to PIUS IX. In the first place, it is believed that the POPE has determined to abandon the "Prisoner in the Vatican" idea, and to go for the summer to some more agreeable and healthy residence than his great Roman Palace. He further desires, according to common report, to place the Papacy en rapport with the Governments of Italy and Germany, and so renounce the "irreconcilable" attitude of his predecessor. A Congregation is considering the latter subject, and Cardinal GUIBERT has been summoned to join it, presumably to strengthen the hands of the POPE. The result of the deliberations will shortly be made known by a circular to the bishops of the Church, instructing them in the line of conduct to be pursued towards the various Governments.

PRINCIPAL TULLOCH: FANCY AND FACT.

PRINCIPAL TULLOCH's valedictory address from the moderator's chair of the Assembly of the Established Church of Scotland was a characteristic production. The Principal admitted the moral grandeur of the act of those who went out at the Disruption, which would "always be deemed heroic in the history of Scotland;" but he claimed still greater credit for the men who, like NORMAN MACLEOD, withstood the infection of enthusiasm, and had the courage to remain within the national Zion. Their superior wisdom and devotion, he contended, had received its appropriate reward. The Established Church has now learned to appreciate the conscientiousness of those who differ from her, and is filled with a sweet spirit of toleration. At the same time she has become more wise and tolerant in dealing with differences within her own pale. The practical results of all this light and sweetness are—what? "More than a generation has passed away," says Dr. TULLOCH, "since that unhappy time (the Disruption), and the results are seen to-day in the renewed prosperity of the Church through all her borders; in the earnestness of her pulpits and the activity of her parochial organisations; in the glow of 'Christian life' and the vigour of the 'Christian work' which she has diffused alike in town and country; in her churches formerly weakened or deserted, now again crowded; and, more than all, in the large and annually-increasing addition which she has made to her territorial strength and efficiency." Unfortunately, on the afternoon of the same day in which he drew this attractive picture, it was Dr. TULLOCH's duty to lay a report before the Assembly as convener of the committee on deputations to the Highlands, and then he had a doleful story to tell, which it is difficult to harmonise with the rosewater sketch. He gave an account of scores of churches and mansees which are out of repair; of infirm ministers, of eighty years and upwards, who are left by their churches to minister unsupported to parishes a dozen miles in extent; and of congregations which you may number on the digits of your two hands. This report proved that the learned Principal's valedictory address was a fancy picture.

THE FREE CHURCH ASSEMBLY.

DISESTABLISHMENT IN SCOTLAND.

FOLLOWING in the wake of the United Presbyterian Synod, the Free Church General Assembly, which recently met in Glasgow, had a long discussion on disestablishment in Scotland. The result was a great discomfiture not only of Dr. BEGG, but of Sir HENRY MONCRIEFF. Dr. BEGG and his party, who have been secretly negotiating for a return to the Establishment, and who have been cut to the quick by the conduct of the Presbyteries throughout the country in denouncing their trafficking with the Government, received only 50 votes. This is but one half the number given last year in favour of the maintenance of the Establishment, and it clearly shows that Dr. BEGG and his friends have become a ridiculous rump. Sir HENRY MONCRIEFF, who wants delay till he can see the prospect of a settlement satisfactory to himself, got 134 votes; while no less than 400 members of the assembly gave their support to Dr. ADAM, who proposed a clear and uncompromising resolution in favour of disestablishment. The result is said to have caused great perturbation in the "auld kirk" Synod, the sittings of which took place simultaneously in Edinburgh. At any rate the day after the vote, the Established Assembly had occasion to refer to the churches outside its pale in connection with the report of a committee on union, and the tremendous display of bunting which took place can be accounted for only by the theory that the reverend court had been seriously disturbed by the reverberation of the guns from the West. One after another spoke in the most tetchy way of the Free Church, and although it was again and again asseverated that the Establishment was never more strong, and never more certain to destroy all enemies, yet it was easy to see through all this big talk a secret anxiety about the future. The courage professed was obviously of the Dutch sort.

Some facts and figures show how little need there is for that preliminary inquiry which Mr. W. HOLMS, M.P., insists upon. The income of the Free Church this year is £575,718, being £30,000 above what it was last year; while the Established Church, with all its vaunted members of wealth, has only raised £370,000, or the immense sum of £200,000 less than the neighbour it tries hard to despise. The foreign missions of the Established Church are on a small scale, and yet the complaint is made this year of a sadly diminished income. On the other hand, the Free Church, which is weighted with the support of its home ministry, not only provides that support in a liberal way, but carries on enterprises abroad on a scale of magnitude. For the sustentation of its ministry the Free Church has contributed to the Central Fund £177,659, and £99,680 for missions and education. The average income of its ministers is considerably above £200 a year with a manse, and it maintains over a thousand of them. No Commission is required to discover these facts.

PROFESSOR SMITH'S CASE.

The greater part of the sittings of the Free Assembly was taken up with the charges against Professor ROBERTSON SMITH, of Aberdeen. The case is now pretty well known. Professor SMITH has published opinions upon the inspiration and composition of the Scriptures, especially of the Pentateuch, which are regarded by many as either heretical in themselves, subversive of the doctrines of the Confession and Faith, or dangerous in their tendency. His own Presbytery (that of Aberdeen), however, cleared him by majorities of both charges, and now the question raised was whether the Supreme Court should affirm or reverse their decision. There were seven counts against him. On five of them the judgment of the Presbytery, acquitting the Professor of heresy, was adopted as the judgment of the Assembly. One count was sustained by the narrow majority of twenty-three, viz., that relating to the date and authorship of Deuteronomy. The remaining count was that of promulgating opinions of a dangerous and unsettling tendency, and of using language so rash and unguarded as to be mischievous. It was allowed that somewhere in this count there was matter which might legitimately be made the basis of libel; but it was also universally admitted that the count was badly drawn. Ultimately a motion by Principal RAINY was carried, appointing a committee to amend the same, and report at a future diet. The case now stands thus: The charges have been reduced in number to two, and these, having been found relevant, have been remitted to the Aberdeen Presbytery, there to be re-discussed. Professor SMITH is accused (1) of teaching unorthodox views of the Pentateuch, and (2) of promulgating his speculations in a way calculated needlessly to shake the faith of his students and others. Until this matter is disposed of his suspension from professorial work will continue; and unless he himself grows weary of the warfare and resigns, the whole case is sure to come up again in some shape at the next General Assembly. It is too much to hope that Professor SMITH will be left for the future unmolested in his learned researches: the Assembly seems resolved to prevent true Biblical criticism by its rigid rules of interpretation.

THE FRENCH REACTIONARIES.

THE reactionary conspiracies in France have not been entirely rooted out, and the utter defeat of the 16th of May attempt does not seem to have taught wisdom to the irrepressible politicians of the Right. The prospect of manipulating the Senatorial elections has proved too tempting for the prudence of MM. DE BROGLIE and BUFFET, and during the last few weeks there have been indications that a final and desperate effort would be made to kill the Republic. It is, of course, clear to these unprincipled politicians that if the coming elections are conducted impartially by the Republicans, the hopes of both monarchy and empire are doomed in France. They therefore wish to apply to the contests for the Senate or Upper House a little of the superfluous vigour which has remained to them since the general election for the Chamber. Fortunately, the destinies of the nation are now in the keeping of wise and moderate men, whose sincere patriotism may be trusted to guide the country through these last dangers which threaten it. The spleen of a band of clumsy and defeated conspirators may fret the nation, and may once more awaken hot party strife. But liberty has now been too firmly clasped, and the hands which hold it are too skilful for the subtlety of DE BROGLIE, the brutal recklessness of DE FOURTOU, or the heartless cynicism of BUFFET, to succeed in shaking of the grasp.

BRITISH AND FOREIGN UNITARIAN ASSOCIATION.

FIFTY-THIRD ANNUAL MEETING.

THE annual meeting of this Association was held in Essex-street Chapel on Wednesday last. There was a good attendance, and the proceedings commenced with service, the devotional part being conducted by the Rev. R. A. Armstrong, B.A., and the sermon which was on "Some Fundamental Religious Ideas, interpreted in their Relation to Modern Thought," was preached by the Rev. William Binns, of Birkenhead. His theme was

RELIGION AND MODERN THOUGHT.

The following is an abstract:—There were three fundamental religious ideas, viz., God, Communion between God and Man, and Immortality. Although these ideas were metaphysical, they were by no means metempirical, and they were all capable of being verified. He proposed, therefore, to put them in the witness box, and subject them to a friendly cross-examination. Other religious ideas besides those which he had mentioned might all be regarded as offshoots from these three. It was natural that in early times we should find primitive religion dressed in rude attire, and the garments of primitive science were equally ragged and unfit for modern wear. A brave curiosity had endeavoured to discover the origin and earliest history of religion. In the last century hot-headed free thinkers fathered religion on the invention of priests, and forgot that this convenient theory did not account for the capacity of man to believe in religious ideas. We were religious for the same reason that we were artistic and scientific, and lived in societies, and formed political governments; and trying to explain religion without admitting its naturalness to start with was trying to make bricks without straw. Even the earliest history of it was too far back for us to reach, and when we made acquaintance with it it appeared before us a fully developed spiritual organism. The religious spirit was present in the earliest literary monuments of all nations. But whatever might be the origin and early history, they did not determine the present value of religion; and we should as soon think of throwing society back to the stage of fishers and hunters, as determining the significance of religion now by what it was in our most distant ancestors, or when, perhaps, the hairy animals with long ears and a tail first felt semi-human yearnings throbbing in their wild hearts. It was religion in its highest form which best showed us what religion was worth. God, Communion between God and Man, and Immortality, required to be interpreted in such a fashion that modern thought could gladly accept them without doing violence to its rational privileges and its scientific achievements.

God was the One Intelligence and Will who was the indwelling life and soul of the universe, and His relation to Nature had been expressed by the Persian poet—

"Over space the clear banner of mind is unfurled,
And the habits of God are the laws of the world."

There was communion between God and man when we felt ourselves in direct contact with a Universal Reason and a Sovereign Righteousness, which were not our own, so that we knew necessary truth and a morality which must be the same in all worlds. Our experiences of religious rapture were illustrations of the same idea. The communion was latent in every healthy soul, and wherever it was realised it was what was meant by the apotheosis of man and the Incarnation of God. Immortality was a necessary corollary from the idea of God, and the capacities and moral aspirations of mankind.

In the present age this statement was met by objections of various sorts. Positivists maintained that it was a theological version of religion which would die to make room for something better. Agnostics maintained that these ideas transcended the limits of the human mind. The popular theology complained that they ignored, if they professed to be sufficient, important spiritual facts which were needful to exhibit the full force of religion. And there were alienated multitudes who maintained that religion failed to furnish that powerful impulse to social progress which was our greatest want. These objections must be frankly met. A thoughtful examination of the history of religion and of the influence which it had exercised, showed that it was not at all a dying cause, for civilisation in every form, including painting, architecture, and poetry, had always reached the highest level under religious inspiration. We knew the signs of dying ideas and systems, but instead of finding any of them in religion, its pulse was strong, its step firm, its eye bright, and its voice rang cheerfully. Transformation and progress there would be, as there had been, but no night would come to permanently close its long and glorious day.

There was reason enough, however, in the agnostic objection to minutely detailed theological dogmas, and it was not by constructing all-inclusive systems, and applying analysis and synthesis to God, and making ordinance surveys of heaven and hell, that we could either enter the holiest shrine of religion ourselves or lead thither our wandering fellow-men. But side by side with our necessary partial ignorance there existed a large measure of knowledge. There were historical facts and present facts of consciousness; and science, which was both physical and metaphysical, was bound to furnish a rationale of religion on pain of being condemned for one-sidedness. Infinitude was pressed upon us in each point of space, and eternity in each moment of time. God presented Himself to us in infinitude and eternity. That was the objective side of religion; we represented God—that was the subjective side; and the science of religion was the history, classification, and interpretation of objective presentations and subjective re-presentations. So thorough-going agnosticism said "Ignoramus" too soon.

At the same time, while we insisted on our consciousness of the Infinite and Eternal as our rudimentary knowledge of God, we must not thrust religion and religious ideas into an uncongenial sphere. It belonged to physical science to explain the processes of creation, and the connection between man and the lower animals, and the universality of law; and we should be unwise if we put in any plea for genesis, or miracles, or a peculiar divine fiat when man came into the world. In these matters we must take the facts from investigators who knew them. Physical science must not presume to lord it over religion, nor must religion trespass on the domain of physical science. The new coinage of agnosticism was a great improvement on the base metal formerly issued from the mint of atheism, and no men who were at once scientific thinkers, and possessed any philosophical insight, now professed to believe in atheism. Herbert Spencer, Tyndall, Huxley, and even Comte, all poured scorn upon it, and were religious in their own way, though they could not confess to definite religious ideas. Men said they were agnostics on immortality. We were all so, for, strictly speaking, knowledge was limited to the present consciousness, and both yesterday and to-morrow, memory and hope, had to depend on belief; and our belief in immortality was reason, and faith, which was the sublimation and not the contradiction of reason, prolonging lives on through an endless series of to-morrows. Men said they were agnostics as to the Personality of God. Here there was a wide gulf, but everything depended on how we defined Personality. We must not define it in too human a fashion. Certainly we could give no shape of any kind to the Infinite. Let them be content to say God is the Sovereign Reason, the Sovereign Righteousness, and the Sovereign Love, and that these constitute His personality. But let them add this is but a portion of His ways, yet the thunder of His power who can understand?

While, however, there was to some extent an intellectual quarrel between free religion and some phases of modern thought, there was no moral quarrel, and agnostics admired the grandeur of the ideas which they were unable to accept. On the other hand, between modern thought and the popular theology there was both an intellectual and a moral quarrel. They could not smoke the pipe of peace, or bury the tomahawk—war was their state of nature. As science and modern thought could not yield to the popular theology there were only two courses open: the popular theology must either die altogether, or it must allow a free, and what Mr. Matthew Arnold would call a "literary" interpretation of its language. Suppose such an interpretation. Let it be said that the assumption of complete knowledge either in the mind or in a book is met by the history of change and progress, that the Hebrew belief in tribal and national gods prepared the way for belief in One Omnipotent Spirit, that miracles, incredible in themselves, are the dawning of a perception of the life of God immanent in nature; that incarnations are a testimony that God builds his holy of holies in human souls; and that resurrections are the songs we sing of our belief in immortality. In this way they would hasten the era of humanity and a new advent of God, and to something like this the popular theology was plainly coming.

There remained only the alienated masses, and we should still have to deal with them after we had asserted the right of religion to live and rule, and appeased agnosticism, and transformed the popular theology. These masses were alienated partly by the opposition between scientific facts and Biblical records, partly by pretension of omniscience which had kept pace with ignorance, partly by immoral heartless and cruel dogmas, and partly by social phenomena which fell below the demands of the enlightened conscience and which comfortable religionists left to be rectified for the sufferers in another world while they preached pious contentment in this. The first three causes were gradually ceasing to be influential, and in the evolution of religion they were certain to drop entirely away. The social causes would be encountered successfully when we believed in God and immortality as the help to practical righteousness, and found in the spirit of life which was in Jesus Christ our personal inspiration to go and do likewise.

These were the fundamental religious ideas which it was our function to interpret, in their relation to modern thought. Breathing their inspiration we had to meet science in friendly encounter and offer this as a supplement to the facts science discovers. We had to show that only God makes nature intelligible, and that our intellect and our mind and our moral sense are not the flowerings of matter but have their origin in Him and correspond to Him. We had to help the popular theology through the throes of a new birth, and persuade it to receive fresh influxes of life from above. We had to welcome the co-operation of literature, art, and philosophy, and to consecrate religion to life, and besides hoping for the kingdom of Heaven hereafter to seek to establish it here. Finally, we had to keep the sacred altar fires burning for ever in our souls, and there worship at the temple's inner shrine Him from whom we come, Who is our daily companion, and to Whom we go.

The collection at the close of the service reached £34. 1cs. 10d.

THE BUSINESS MEETING

was held after a short interval. The chair was occupied by Herbert New, Esq., the president, and among those present were the Revs. William Binns, of Birkenhead; R. A. Armstrong, B.A.; A. Gordon, M.A.; J. T. Marriott, Goodwyn Barnby, R. E. B. McClellan, T. W. Freckleton, R. Spears, T. Dunkerley, B.A.; J. C. Street, T. L. Marshall, J. Ellis, Messrs. J. Hoppood, S. S. Tayler, T. C. Clarke, H. S. Bicknell, C. J. Eiloart, J. Glyde, R. Bartram, T. Reed, &c. The attendance, though rather less than that at the morning's service, was still large, and included many names well known in Unitarian circles.

The PRESIDENT was warmly greeted on rising to address the meeting. Before calling upon the treasurer and secretary to read their reports he desired to say that he could not stand in his present position without reminding himself at least that it was now twenty years since he had first undertaken the duties of president of the Association. (Applause.) His experience of that office was one of a widely different character in regard to the year 1858 and the year 1878. Twenty years ago it had been the honour of the president to appear before the members at the annual meeting and to conduct the business, with which he might or might not be acquainted. That day it was the privilege of the president to have attended nearly all the meetings of the committee and of the Council during the year which preceded his public appearance, and he must say that the advantage of that experience was very great indeed. He himself felt that he knew more about the affairs of the Association than he had ever done before, and he also felt that the Association was in a most hopeful condition. (Applause.) There were larger and wider activities now at work under the auspices of the Association, and under its knowledge and assistance, than had ever been the case before. There was a much larger incentive—a double incentive in regard to the Council of the Association, both of them being extremely active. In the council meetings they had had very large gatherings, and the result of the change in the management of the Association was this, that the whole of England, and a great deal of Scotland and Ireland—in fact, all those places in the United Kingdom where the interests of Unitarians were most deeply and highly regarded—were now fully represented by the action of the Association. The existence of the system of co-operation between the central and local organisations had been productive of great good in the past, as would be seen from the report, and he hoped its value and importance in the future would be of a still wider and more beneficial character. (Hear, hear.) Having thanked the meeting for electing him, twelve months ago, once more as president of the Association, he concluded by saying that he should now retire from office with a deep and heartfelt sense of satisfaction at the pleasure and profit he had derived from his long connection with the Association. (Cheers.)

The Treasurer, Mr. S. S. TAYLER, prefaced the reading of his report by congratulating the meeting upon the improved financial condition of the Association. During the past year the annual subscriptions had been almost doubled in amount. Mr. Tayler, having referred with regret to the retirement of their late treasurer, Mr. Nettlefold, then proceeded to read the accounts.

The Secretary, Mr. H. IERSON, next read the committee's report, as follows:—

THE FIFTY-THIRD ANNUAL REPORT.

The committee present the fifty-third report of the year's work of the Association with encouragement and hope. While in our own country, as among all civilised nations, the human mind is passing through a crisis of change in religious thought, there is obviously a grand opening for the labours of such an Association; and they trust that the requisite means for carrying them on successfully will be even yet more largely furnished. The demand that has been made for increased resources is not a novel one, but the circumstances of the present time give to it a new and pressing force. In many past years have such appeals been made, because it was always felt that even in times of greater hostility in public opinion to Unitarianism much more good might have been done had the Association possessed the means of doing it; but the movement of opinion is now to a great extent in the liberal direction, and men are more or less prepared to embrace the principles of Unitarian Christianity if the needed funds are supplied for making them more widely known. The subject, therefore, of its financial position, as one of imminent importance to the Association, has much occupied the attention of your committee.

CANVASSING, COLLECTIONS, AND FUNDS.

In the beginning of the year 1877, a statement had been laid before the council, which showed that the expenditure of the Association, chiefly in assisting missions and poorer congregations, was in excess of its income. The council accordingly agreed that it was necessary to reduce the grants from midsummer until at least the end of the year, but that an appeal should be made to the Unitarian body for more effectual support. The statement was accordingly published, besides being sent by private circular to a large number of subscribers and friends, but the result, though favourable, was not sufficient to justify the hope that the grants could be continued without reduction, and at the last annual meeting a resolution was passed, instructing the committee to organise a canvass for further subscriptions in the large centres of population throughout the United Kingdom. This instruction has been carried out, as far as local encouragement has warranted the committee in making the personal visits recommended. Valuable help has been given by friends in some towns, as at Brighton and Northampton; and visits have been paid to Bristol, Bridgewater, Tavistock, Exeter, Plymouth, and Leicester, as also to a number of towns in connection with the Manchester, East Lancashire, and East Cheshire Associations. In preparation for the canvass in these three important districts, the local societies united in inviting the Association to a meeting of welcome, which was held in the Free-trade Hall, in Manchester, on the 30th of November, 1877. This meeting, of more than 3,000 persons, was a most successful one, and on the following day a large and influential local committee was formed, for the purpose of assisting in the canvass which immediately followed. The result of this effort has been a very serviceable addition of £324 in subscriptions, with £113 in donations. This encouraging expression of confidence in the Association which the committee are happy to report, does not, however, suffice to meet the requirements which were made known in the circular issued in the earlier part of the year. The reductions of the grants have been greatly modified, but stock will still have to be sold to satisfy the demands of the year. The total of the new and increased subscriptions to the end of 1877 was £504, with donations of £315. 9s. 6d. There is an addition besides of £304. 10s. for the year 1878, so that the total increase in subscriptions to the present time is £808. 10s. The income from annual subscriptions was in 1876, £914. 19s. 6d., with donations amounting to £52; the subscriptions to the present date are £1,635. Had no losses occurred by deaths and otherwise, the income would have been about double that of 1876. The committee acknowledge with pleasure the cordial welcome with which they have been met wherever their canvass has been made, while they could not but admit the force of special difficulties which have presented themselves in some towns which they have been advised to defer canvassing for a time. Collections have been made for the Association by the congregations at Hampstead and Stamford Street in London, Shepton Mallet, Godalming and Guildford, Horsham, Mountpottinger in Belfast, South Shields, Kingswood, Newhall Hill in Birmingham, and Stourbridge. The committee hoped that their request for such collections would have been more extensively complied with, and that more friends would have undertaken the collection of smaller sums at places where at present no local treasurer is appointed.

THE ASSOCIATION AND LOCAL AID.

It is now no longer necessary to call attention to the fact that the Association does not limit its range of action to the metropolis. Indeed, the aid given by it to the London Association is but small in proportion. But one of its duties is to encourage local activity, and to unite the labours of the various local societies in London and the country generally. In their relations with the provincial societies the committee have acted upon a principle which experience proves to be in general a sound one. Whenever applied to for help by individual congregations, or by friends who desired to render some special service, they have consulted with the local committees, and have usually entrusted to their charge whatever grants were made. It has not been possible to adhere invariably to a stringent rule in such cases, but two things they always strive to impress upon those who look to the Association to undertake and carry through every useful work that may be thought of—first, that their resources are limited, and must be used with care and discrimination; and, secondly, that their duty is not to undertake the work of the whole body, which is better done by individual and local exertion, but rather to fulfil the more modest function of stimulating and giving help where help is most needed. Assistance is given in this way by your Association to congregations, and to the societies which help congregations and maintain missionaries, in many places where otherwise the possibility of upholding Unitarian worship does not exist.

MISSION MOVEMENTS.

Ten or twelve years ago the Association had but three missions. It assists in supporting at the present time a considerable number of missions throughout the country; and your committee observe with satisfaction that at the annual meetings of the various societies the help which the Association gives to their work is acknowledged with grateful appreciation, and the disposition is increasingly shown to co-operate with you in every possible way. In the Northumberland and Durham district, the Association, with your assistance, mainly supports the ministry at South Shields and Middlesborough. To your latterly reduced grant to this Association, an addition has been recently made for the support of a missionary for Barnard Castle and Darlington. In consequence of the general appeal of your committee in the spring of last year, the congregation at Sunderland resolved to relieve the Northumberland and Durham Association of the amount granted to it in previous years, and since last October this congregation has become entirely independent of the mission. Help is given by the mission in the services at Choppington and at Crook, where it is thought another missionary would be well placed if means could be found for his support. At Stockton in this district, by aid of a grant from your funds, a small balance of debt upon the chapel has been paid. The grant has been continued to the East Lancashire Unitarian Mission in aid of their support of the ministry at Accrington. This Society, which has subsisted for eighteen years, gives largely towards the maintenance of worship at Bolton (Commission-street), Burnley, Rawtenstall, Colne, and Darwen. At Darwen an iron church is to be erected. Towards the building of a church at Colne a grant of £380 has been made from the jubilee fund. A parcel of books was sent to the bazaar which was held at Bolton, to clear off a debt of £650 upon the building. This effort was completely successful. A grant has been made to this mission with the view of helping to secure the services of a stated minister at Blackpool. With your help the debt upon the chapel at Padiham has been entirely removed. The new church at Oldham, to which the jubilee fund had contributed, was opened last November, not however entirely free from debt, as had been hoped. Nearly the whole of the large sum which has been expended upon the building and organ, and in refitting the old chapel for school and lecture uses, has been raised without any public appeal, and it may be trusted that the burden will not be suffered to remain long upon the congregation. The Manchester District Unitarian Association was founded in 1859. It largely supports the services at Miles Platting, Swinton, Middleton, Dob Lane, Failsworth, and Ardwick. To Middleton a parcel of books was sent for a sale of work to clear a small debt upon the chapel. The new church at Fails-worth, for which a jubilee grant was made, is now in course of erection, the foundation-stone having been laid last month by Mr. Harry Rawson. At Ardwick also a church is to be shortly built, where, with the aid of your grant, the Manchester Association has established a settled minister—the Rev. E. C. Towne. The West Riding Unitarian Mission Society is an old organisation. It supports services with your help at Doncaster and Thorne, and besides at Pudsey, Dewsbury, Elland, Pepperhill, and Keighley. At the desire of its committee, a special grant was made to enable them to carry out a scheme of lectures in connection with their missions. The foundation-stone of the new church at Rotherham, which is to be erected with help from your jubilee fund, was laid by Mr. John Hobson on the first of last month. The new church at Scarborough was opened last August, the Rev. J. Page Hopps preaching on the occasion. Towards the support of the ministry, for which help had been previously given from your ordinary funds, a grant has been made from the jubilee fund of £300, to extend over four years, and the newly-appointed minister—the Rev. Dendy Agate, B.A.—has recently entered upon his duties. A grant was made to help in defraying the cost of repairs of the chapel at Malton, which was reopened at the commencement of the year. The former grant to the East Cheshire Christian Union has been renewed. The committee were glad to learn that through special local exertions the union was not allowed to suffer through the temporary reduction of the latter half of last year. This society, which was formed about eighteen years since, supports three missionaries. The recent loss of the excellent missionary at Glossop, the late Rev. F. Ashton, is a subject of deep regret. The work is being carried on for the present by the help of neighbouring ministers. In Liverpool and its neighbourhood, lectures have been delivered, with your aid, by the Rev. S. F. Williams, at Walton and Kirkdale, also at Bootle, where it is hoped that a permanent congregation may be established. The North Midland Presbyterian and Unitarian Association was formed by the union of two societies, one dating back seventy-eight, the other twenty-one years. A grant was made through this society to assist the Free Christian Church at Leicester in obtaining the services of a minister, with whose help it is now in contemplation to resume Unitarian worship at Hinckley, where the chapel has been closed for several years. A grant has been made to aid the effort which this society is now making to settle a missionary in Newark. The Midland Christian Union was formed in 1866. With your aid it gives large support to the congregations at Walsall, West Bromwich, and Whitchurch, besides assisting those at Lye and Wolverhampton. For the last-named place a special grant has been made to enable the union to secure the services of a minister. To Lye a present of books was made for a bazaar, which was very successful in clearing a debt of more than £150 upon the chapel. At Whitchurch, with your assistance, an iron church has been erected, which was opened for worship last August; help has also been given in maintaining the ministry at this place. The Midland Union have given great attention to the distribution and sale of Unitarian works in the book store which they have opened in a prominent position in Birmingham. At Cheadle, in this district, lay services have been regularly carried on since last July. Tracts have been sent to aid the friends there in their work. To the Eastern Unitarian Mission an increased grant was made to enable them to settle the missionary at Chelmsford, where he has conducted regular services since last October. He has lectured also on week-days at Colchester and other places. Help has also been given in this district for the ministry at King's Lynn. At Cambridge, two services have been regularly held every Sunday since last July. As the ministry at this place, which has for one of its chief objects the endeavour to influence the constantly fluctuating body of students in the university, could not be considered otherwise than of a missionary character, a special public subscription was asked for by the Cambridge committees. To their appeal a fair response was made in subscriptions promised for three years, but more are urgently needed to secure the permanent success of the work at Cambridge. The Western Unitarian and Free Christian Union is an old society. To this union your previous grant was continued last year for the congregation at Devonport, where the congregation have taken an important step towards ultimate self-support by endeavouring to free themselves from the burden of a ground-rent. Lectures have been given in this district, with your help, at Fairford and Malmesbury, by the Rev. Henry Austin; and a grant was made towards repairing the chapel at Colyton. The new church at Reading was begun last summer, the memorial-stone being laid by Sir J. C. Lawrence, Bart. It was opened for public worship in December last, the sermon being preached by the Rev. William Binns. A grant of £300 has been recently made, to extend over four years, in aid of the ministry of this church. The new church at Guildford was opened last October, when the sermon was preached by the Rev. Charles Beard, B.A. The grant towards the support of the ministry is continued. The Southern Unitarian Society has received as yet from the Association only a grant of tracts. It has been mainly occupied since its re-constitution in the endeavour to re-open several chapels in the district which have long been closed. Help is being given by the Association towards the ministry at Poole, and at Ringwood. The congregation at Southampton trusts now to its own resources. The Kent and Sussex Unitarian Association is an old society, dating from a period when the district was more largely inhabited by Unitarian families than at present. The number of congregations in the district is limited, and it is chiefly through means furnished by your Association that any missionary work can be carried on there. In this way assistance has been given towards the expense of lectures at Chatham, and for services at Battle, Northiam, and Canterbury, where Unitarian worship is maintained by help from neighbouring ministers, but chiefly by services rendered gratuitously by students of Manchester New College. The effort to establish a congregation at Sittingbourne was found to be hopeless unless a church could have been built, the expense of which the society was not in a position to incur. The mission at Ashford is maintained with your help, and the congregation there appears steadily increasing. The London District Unitarian Society was established twenty-eight years ago. With your aid it mainly supports the ministry at Stepney.

SCOTLAND, IRELAND, AND WALES.

